Lining up under the open air, the main street was giving off a feeling of being as busy as ever. A tide of people ebbing in and out with a great vigor not inferior to the last time he saw it. A great variety of races were mixed in, the hair styles were all eccentric, appearances overflowing with brilliant colors.

In my previous world I looked pretty average and could blend into a crowd, here it seems like black hair is rather unusual, looking out over the crowd I couldn't find anyone else with it at all. The most common hair color seems to be blonde, with white and blue as runner ups, the number with green hair was a lot lower, and there were only one or two with pink hair.

As I suspected, among all these people I couldn't spot a single one with shining silver hair.

In summary, on this bustling street Subaru stood out like a sore thumb. An usual pair, one with with black and the other with silver. On top of this those two were…

"S-Say, Emilia-tan… I know there are a lot of reasons but, could we stop doing this?"

Subaru proposed nervously, a cold sweat running down his brow while the other smiled in a pleasant mood. What he was reFerrisng to, was their hands firmly grasped together as they walked along.

The pair walked through the crowd of people, hand in hand. Looking at them as a strange they'd seem like an intimate couple. Normally this is something Subaru himself would flair his nostrils at, but

"Absolutely not! Since it's Subaru, if I leave my eyes off you you're definitely going to go off and do something ridiculous again. While we're in the capital I absolutely won't let you act on your own. Understand?"

"I'm sorry for being stupid on the carriage! I'm super-reflecting on it! Harsher than the seas, more dynamic than the mountains! But, but, but! If we keep this up my anxiety is going to go Mach 1!"

There was zero trust reflected in her eyes as he swung her hand up and down while pleading. Thus even now they were holding hands, his heart was on the verge of exploding. His joints throbbed in pain from his nervousness, he couldn't help but worry that his palm was covered in perspiration and sweat.

Following Subaru's attempt to disembark the carriage midway, the unconscious Subaru woke up to the tender sensation of being protected in someone's lap.

Directly above, was the owner of said lap, Roswaal. Subaru spit out when he realized who he was receiving affection from. What had retrieved the falling Subaru from the air was Rem's morning star (It's amazing she could do this while in the midst of traveling at such high speeds. For this girl secretly coveting praise he commended her for saving his life.) After retrieving Subaru, the one to look after him was Roswaal, it was during this time that Emilia's mood took a nose-dive. When Subaru woke up, "over there, sit" Emilia commanded and launched into a very very long lecture.

And above all,

"It was a complete 180° after getting disconnected from the divine protection; from then on he wasn't protected at all, it was quite troubling. Dealing with that speed and vibrations for an hour and a half… I've spilled out all my stomach's contents."

As a result of his secret midnight visit to the kitchen the night before, all that came out was mayonnaise. And after that Emilia's lecture filled his head to the point nothing more could fit in, from that he was truly and sincerely made aware of his actions. Subaru had fallen into a mostly groggy state. Because of this, no matter what you asked him his response would always be "yes, fall in love", causing the party members to decide on a resolution, which leads us to Subaru's current predicament.

"I can accept being accompanied by a guardian since I've acted rash on a number of occasions… but, at least could we stop with this hand-to-hand please?"

"Hmph, so that's what you have to say. Even though back in the village you were so desperate about that date thing and getting me to hold hands with you."

Amused by Subaru's groveling Emilia looked like she was enjoying his reaction as she teased him. Presented with the aforementioned scene a few days ago Subaru groaned out 'uguu',

"That's different! That was like, back then my manly power was overflowing. But now my gauge is completely empty, I'm weak, I'm useless."

Covering his face with his other hand, Subaru ground his teeth cursing his own inability to eat the meal set before him. That aside, the fact that he was being forced to reflect on his actions weighed heavily on his mind. As a result his inner thoughts were jumbled, his pitiful figure hard to look at.

"Well moving on from that…"

Subaru easily abandoning his inner turmoil as Emilia looked around at the bustling crowd. Taking her free hand Emilia adjusted her hood to further hide her face, not forgetting to distance herself from her surroundings and prevent any recognition.

It was a little bit of a nervous act but there really isn't something as being too careful. After all, there was the one case where she'd had her insignia targeted in the past. Since the location was the same it wasn’t all that unreasonable for her to be wary and stay on guard.

“Subaru, can you remember where the store you were talking about is now?”

“Yeah somehow or another, since we’ve come this far. I think we’re supposed to take a right here, probably.”

Shifting his attention away having his hand held, he tried to ignore the crisis going on with his sweaty hand. Like that he nodded at what Emilia’s words, gazing at the crowd of people he tried to shake his memory awake. Honestly, just from passing by familiar looking scenery he more or less had a grasp, although he couldn’t say with conviction. Even so, this was now the fourth time they’ve come down the same street. Pulling her hand along as they walked, his hesitation faded as they passed countless streets, each giving off a vague sense of familiarity.

Following his memory as they approached near the store, the unclear memories Subaru was fumbling with became clearer. The store’s entrance was plain and weathered by the years, with no distinguishing features to draw the eye it was buried in the throng of people. However there was one part that stuck out among the bustle, painted with striking colors the signboard appeared to have been redone with an extremely fresh layer of paint.

Last time Subaru saw the signboard he couldn’t see the words as anything but a child’s scribblings, now that he’d learned how to read this world’s letters he could tell that ‘Kadomon’ was written on it. Was is someone’s name or something? Subaru wondered about the store’s name. In any case,

“Safe and sound, we’ve arrived”

“Here?”

“Yeah. What, this is way more emotional for me than I thought oi.”

Barely managing to reach the store after so much difficulty, Subaru nodded and responded to Emilia’s quite comment.

Sticking their faces through the entrance, the two noticed the shopkeeper working busily inside. Turning his head, the man looked over at us. Seeing his face Emilia squeezed Subaru's hand a little bit harder.

Subaru smiled wryly at Emilia's easy to understand reaction. Certainly this person's appearance leaves quite a bit of an impact. That she'd be on edge was something that was unavoidable. After all, running down the left-side of this middle-aged man's face was a long scar that reached all the way to his chin, along with his bulky and muscular build it was hard to picture him as being involved in any sort of respectable line of business.

"Man, even though he tries to sound pretty rough, he's actually a scar-faced tsundere character who'll end up looking after strangers unintentionally"

Each time he looped, four times in this case, this person's face was what greeted him each time he returned. Even though this person had sometimes treated him quite coldly, Subaru knew from personal experience that despite his looks he was a really a good person.

Thinking back on it, you could really say that this man was really his starting point in this world. Thinking about how this person was technically the first person he met after coming to this world, it caused his heart to be filled up with emotion.

"Welcome!"

Deeming the pair as customers, the shopkeeper raised a shout and turned his delinquent looking face to them with a smile. Their eyes met. Suddenly all sound cut off from the outside world, he could feel the passage of his time slowly on his skin. As if space itself had been cut off, Subaru felt isolated like only the shopkeeper and himself were left in the world.

Then,

"Do you remember me?"

The question fired off from his trembling lips contained both anxiety and expectation.

The shopkeeper was surprised by Subaru's words; eyes narrowing as he stared at him, searching his memories. Peered at by deep dark brown pupils, Subaru felt almost like he was being drawn in while he waited silently for his reply. Tightening up, Subaru's tension was passed on to Emilia through his hand; swallowing her saliva she looked on at what these two would do next.

Slowly opening his lips, the shopkeeper put voice to his words.

"Nope, don't know. Who are you?"

So easily, Subaru was thrown away and forgotten.

2

One of the reasons Emilia accompanied Subaru as they walked along in the capital was so that he would earnestly work to fulfill the promise they made. They were able to stop him the first time he tried to follow along with them, but faced with Subaru's unyielding nature this was the compromise they came to.

With that sequence of events Subaru managed to receive permission; he was in high enough spirits that he might very well start flying soon, but was shackled by the promise he made in carriage (of which his memory was rather fuzzy from all his vomiting) independent action was forbidden, causing him misery.

As a result, he was now bringing along Emilia, or rather, being brought along by Emilia. Tormented by stress, his heart felt like it would explode with embarrassment; this was what the so called 'fulfilling his promises' came down to.

Even though his anxiety had been piling up, faced with this reunion event flag that was unexpectedly broken Subaru crossed his arms in outrage.

"I'm over here trying to hold up my side of the bargain and this is how you treat me! I firmly request a better treatment!"

"Even if you tell me that, bro."

Weary towards Subaru's face swelling with indignation the shopkeeper flashed a bitter smile. While looking at Subaru like some annoyance,

"Two weeks ago, and we only spoke briefly you say? Now that you mention it, I do vaguely remember something like that…"

The shopkeeper shut his eyes, tracing his scar with his finger while he searched through memories. Apparent that he was trying with great effort to remember, from how sincere he was you could tell that this shopkeeper was a good person; Subaru still in a state of shock didn't recognize this person's virtues. Seeing Subaru was still absorbed in his own thoughts Emilia called out to the shopkeeper in his stead, "please don't push yourself."

Seeing the shopkeeper open his eyes she corrected her posture, her voice dropping as she knit her handsome eyebrows together

"Sorry, he's always saying such unreasonable things. I didn't think it was such a one-sided promise he made…"

"Hey hey, Emilia-tan, that's obviously an excuse he's using. It was a vow exchanged between men. No matter what conditions it was exchanged under, if men didn't do everything they could to uphold it then they'd go out of fashion… really, this is the Stalingrad of a man's spirit."

Subaru kept deprecating the shopkeeper incessantly. Seeing Subaru like this Emilia glared at him to shut him up, puckering her lips like she was angry.

"Subaru stop having such strange expectations. You met with this merchant person once for how long? This is the capital, not some village shop near the mansion."

"Oi oi, don't act so pretentious old man. With a face as scary as yours there's no way you'd have a thriving business… ouch ouch, I'm sorry!"

Finally, Emilia punished him for his rude outbursts. Having his ear pinched Subaru immediately raised the white flag; the shopkeeper looked at her in admiration, letting out a sigh.

“Bro, just how much of a rude brat are you… ah I remember!”

As if he’d come to some conclusion he swung his hand abruptly, pointing over at us.

“You’re the kid that was flat broke. You left without even buying anything, you ungrateful little…”

“I promised to buy an appa next time didn’t I? Right? Right?”

Subaru was happily jumping around from being remembered, taking Emilia’s hand that was pulling his ear he held both her hands as he started to dance. Emilia was thrown off by these unfamiliar steps Subaru took the lead drawing her closer; the shopkeeper showed off his teeth in a wide grin,

“That’s right, that’s right.”

“I see, you’ve got quite the sense of obligation. So you came all the way out here to buy some things. Alright, I’m in a good mood so I’ll throw in a special! How’s 1 appa for 2 copper coins, and 20 appa for 38 copper coins sound to you?”

“Oh wow, what a deal! Then if we bought 200 it’d be 380 copper? This is amazing Emilia-tan!”

“That’s only if we buy 200… And don’t make me dance in public, it’s embarrassing!”

Subaru was overdoing his sales-pitch. Shooting it down, Emilia pried her hand from Subaru and interrupted his dance. But, immediately after, as if rethinking it she grabbed his hand again; truly an earnest personality.

“Man, let’s leave it at that. I’m gonna have you buy some appa though. I’m already looking forward to it… well I’ve already eaten a few already.”

Each time he’d looped he came face to face with it and would always end up having one for breakfast. There was no avoiding it.

By the way, an appa is an apple, he'd tried it once and there was no difference. The only change was the minor difference in naming.

While Subaru was off in his own world dreaming like this the shopkeeper brought out a crate filled with appa, taking out a sack to signal that everything was ready. Leaving the other's impression aside, the trader had the view that as long as he could do business earnestly everything was fine.

"So in the end, how many will you be buying?"

"We'll go with 10 big ones. I'm paying our promise well in excess."

Smiling at Subaru's generosity, the shopkeeper started stuffing the red fruit away in a sack. Subaru thinking it was about time to pay started making his preparations. Regretfully he had to let go of Emilia's hand (he'd grown quite fond of it by now), turning to her he noticed she was unexpectedly fidgeting around in with her breast pocket.

"What are you doing trying to take out your wallet, Emilia-tan?"

Taking out a leather bag from her clothes, Emilia inspected its contents; hearing his words she cocked her head in a confused look.

"What do you mean… If I don't take out money how are we going to pay for it?"

"That's wrong, wouldn't it be weird for Emilia-tan to pay? It's my shopping, so it's only natural that I'd… hey Scarface, what're you doing giving me that look!"

At his insistence that he pay in Emilia's stead, for some reason the shopkeeper's eyes glazed over.

Brushing off Subaru's accusation he shook his head,

"I'm pretty certain I said to come by when you made some money… bringing along this girl with money to pay for you, can't say I approve."

"Didn't you see our lover's quarrel just now! I just said I'd pay!

Really, I did!”

“Even if you say so, I haven’t seen you practice takin’ out your wallet much. I bet you’re one of those types, pretend like you’ll pay when you’re in front of a girl to keep up appearances.”

“I was only slow, what’s with that evil explanation! I’m not so ill-natured that I’d let myself be spoiled to that extent!”

Complaining about the shopkeepers prejudiced opinion, Subaru rushed to take out his wallet. He really wasn’t supposed to get paid for another few days but while they were still traveling to the capital Roswaal gave him an advance so he could have some extra spending money. It was quite a sizeable amount, as expected of a noble. Subaru shuddered at how high his wages were.

Then again, it could be that this times’ wages were factoring in Subaru’s contribution to resolving the forest witchbeast incident, he wouldn’t put it past Roswaal to do such a thing. This world didn’t have something like direct deposit banking so he couldn’t confirm it, but in reality Subaru was stealthily amassing a small sum of money. Although the person in question doesn’t know about it.

“If 1 appa is 2 copper coins… then would 10 appa be 2 silver coins?”

“Oi oi, don’t tell me you don’t know the exchange rate between currency? Right now 1 silver coin goes for 9 copper ones.”

“Let’s see here… so that’d make it 2 silver coins and 2 copper coins. Here.”

The coins jingles as he took them out of a leather pouch and handed them to the shopkeeper. As the shopkeeper stared in amazement, Subaru tilted his head in puzzlement at the shopkeeper’s behavior.

“What’s wrong?”

“I’m going to say this myself. Bro, you better not trust strangers so easily. The fluctuation in currency exchange rate is listed at the market’s entrance, written on the billboard there. You came here without even reading that… you’d be prey to a less scrupulous merchant."

The shopkeepers warning, rather than honest, it was more like worried. Hearing this Subaru nodded his head in understand,

"Aah."

It's true that he'd believed him just like that and was about to pay up. In his previous world things had a definite price that you could have confidence in when buying and selling, it seems like he'd been far too trusting. Back in the stores around the village, the people were all quite insular so the idea of conning didn't really exist, but like it or not this is how it was in the capital. The biggest city in the entire country. Of course that means there are also people with evil motives, nothing strange about it.

"Pops, you're a really good guy after all."

Smiling ear to ear, Subaru showed he thought highly of this scar-faced character.

He waved his hand violently, "cut it out".

"It's not something I did on purpose. It's just that when a customer goes out of their way like this to hold up a promise it'd hurt my sleep if I knew they were keeled over dead-broke in an alley somewhere. Get it?"

"I've got it, you're a male-tsundere."

"Hurry up and take this and get outta here, scram! This is the exact change, thanks for the business!"

The first half was a rude statement, the second half was treating the customers as gods. Seeing the shopkeeper like that Subaru laughed from the bottom of his heart as he took the bag of appa. Leading Emilia by the hand they departed from the shop. We've stayed a bit too long I think, any more and we'd be obstructing his business.

"Thanks, old man. Let's meet again if our fates allow it"

"If you buy something again you're welcome anytime. Live carefully.”

He waved his hand lethargically at us, as if to drive us off. As we drew further away the crowd gradual began to obstruct our view until the figure of the well-natured shopkeeper completely disappeared.

Subaru checked the sack again, and turned to face Emilia who had been silent up till now.

“Huh, what’s wrong Emilia-tan?”

“…”

“Are you really that angry that you didn’t get to pay? You know letting you treat me there would have looked bad. I’d be some guy who mooches off women… wait a minute. Would that be amazing if we both spent money on each other and bought gifts? Damn! I should have let Emilia-tan buy the appa and then I could have bought something stylish for her.”

Like a ring, or a bouquet of flowers, or… the only things that filled his head were overly excessive things that’d pop up in bishoujo-games. While Subaru was off fantasizing Emilia-tan shook her head no.

“Subaru… you’re really quick with calculations.”

“Eh?”

“When you were talking with that scary-faced… Ah, sorry. When you were talking with that merchant about money, you did your calculations instantly. I knew the answer to it too, but that was still incredible.”

“So your true thoughts come out, I can understand just how deeply you were impressed. Hmm… so I’m unexpectedly good with arithmetic.”

This was quite beyond expectations. Subaru didn’t think of himself as all that smart, but it seems that’s not the case.

This is the difference between the educational standard here versus modern day Japan. He'd heard something like this in his former world too, that Japan was comparatively pretty good with mental arithmetic… Subaru accepted this reasoning with a nod.

"Hehehe, just thinking of my devilishly good intellect Emilia-tan's heart must be exploding. I guess it's true in every era, a man's gotta' have both guts and smarts. My oh my, is my cheat ability finally here?!"

Now that I've understood the circumstances, I keep my cool and don't become self-conceited. That's me. Natsuki Subaru.

He reminisced over his achievements proudly, although these weren't entirely achieved through his efforts. His lovely pleasant lifestyle in this world was about to begin.

"I'll fight with an abacus, raise the curtains on this mathematical fantasy world adventure. Catching the slight fluctuations in the market I'll… this is super lame! My spirit is broken!"

He was finished with that. Over. He didn't have the knowledge necessary to do something like make an abacus in a world without abacuses. And even if he did he didn't have the influence to cause the invention to spread. In the first place, Subaru's only good subject was fine arts.

"My climb upward hasn't even started yet… this tall tall mountain of abacuses!"

"Subaru you really… I can't tell if you're amazing or not amazing."

After raising the curtains on his grand adventure the curtains were lowered immediately, seeing Subaru like this Emilia sighed tiredly as she put her hand to her forehead. Taking a short pause, she shook her head and regained her energy, "alright then" she began.

"So we fulfilled the promise, next is…"

"Ah, the loot house right?"

The slums. Remembering the incident that happened on the first day he was summoned, Subaru gripped her hand harder; feeling the warmth from her hand.

“Even so, is it OK if I accompany you over there? If I’m being completely honest, the public order over there is pretty bad and they’ve got hoodlums walking around all over. It’s a little bit worry for a royal selection candidate to be going alone…”

“Even if you say that, no matter where I go it’s not going to be any different.”

Emilia frowned at him asking something like this so late in the game, taking her fingers she lightly pinched the hood covering her silver hair.

“I’ve got this blocking people from recognizing me, most people won’t be able to tell my identity. It’s not something handmade by the Margrave just for show you know. It’s really amazing, this thing.”

“Handmade by Roz-chi… somehow hearing that made its value fade a little in my mind.”

“Hey! You shouldn’t say things like that; is what I want to say.”

Struggling to hide that she felt the same way, Emilia stuck out her tongue shyly. Taking damage from her extreme cute surprise attack, Subaru clutched his chest as if his heart exploded.

“E.M.T!”

“Yes yes, there you go saying things I don’t understand again. I do realize that rather than me there’s another person you’d rather be with.”

Fending off his praise as a joke, Emilia laughed like it couldn’t be helped. Seeing her smiling weakly, Subaru shook his head “Oi oi”.

“Are you stillllll saying that? I’ve told you countless times that Emilia-tan is the one that I want to date. How can I get through to you?”

“I don’t think you should go around saying your important feelings so casually like that. With the proper partner, and a proper attitude, you need to choose the proper words. Promise me?”

Thinking his words were just a hollow decoration she closed down the subject quickly. With her creating a wall between them like this, Subaru couldn’t step any further through. In any case, the only way he could think of showing his affection any more than this would be to pour his heart out completely.

“Doing such a high hurdle, with my prospects of succeeding low and not having made any preparations, this doesn’t seem to be something I can overcome through sheer guts…”

In the first place, Natsuki Subaru’s motto was to never fight a battle he couldn’t win. Subaru made an excuse like that as he fled from having to face Emilia against here. When faced with this wall, rather than going around, or breaking through, it was full retreat! Like that, in the distance between Emilia and Subaru was laid out as a wall.

“Nn-then, cough shall we head off to the loot house?”

Clearing his throat, he pulled himself together. Deciding on the next destination Subaru’s lips bent upward. Emilia looked at his reaction questioningly.

“It’s nothing, just that when I checked the number of appa in the sack, there were 11.”

Plump, big, and ripened to a bright red. The number of these fruit totaled 11. The one who put the fruit in the sack was the shopkeeper himself, Subaru couldn’t possibly imagine him messing up like that, which meant…

“That old mans a super good guy after all”

Suburu said while closing up the sack, he laughed when reminded of the tough-mugged Scarface.

The budding, hazy feeling he had before became clear.

Yep, making good on this promise was the right choice.

Chapter 6:
A Dangerous Pair

Relying on memory to reach the loothouse, it was an aging dilapidated house in the farthest corner of the capital's slums.

I wonder if the people building the capital made a mistake or something, it was maddeningly how large a building it was; almost as if they were trying to hide all the unused space with it. For the sticky-fingered inhabitants of the slums, regardless of the legality or illegality of an item it would end up here through a various means, the one managing this place sold these goods out on a massive scale.

Like its name implied, this place was a hotbed of roguery.

"It's completely and totally gone. There's nothing left here at all."

Standing in an empty lot Subaru stared at the demolished remains of the former loothouse.

The loothouse building had disappeared without even a trace, the scrap wood and dangerous materials that would normally remain after a building collapsed had all been cleaned away, not one piece remained. There were traces of a building left on the ground along the edges of the foundation, but if you ignored that, it wouldn't be all that odd to doubt whether the place had ever really existed in the first place.

Thinking back, it's hard to think that a single sword strike could do all this.

"Yep, I don't think we can count Reinhard as human anymore…"

Reminded of a certain red-headed good looking man, Subaru's praise for him wasn't limited to the restraints of humanity. Then again, rather than positive this 'praise' had more of a negative tint to it; whether the person in question would be happy to hear this praise was another subject in itself.

"I suppose it doesn't need to be said, but it looks like nobody's living here anymore. Subaru, what will you do?"

This terrible scene was laid plainly before his eyes. Or maybe it was more accurate to say he couldn't help feeling like the place had been tidied up, faced with this spectacle Subaru was overwhelmed. Rather than Subaru, the more goal oriented Emilia was the first to speak.

"Also, I think getting in touch with Reinhard would be the best option…"

"Yeah, that's probably the right. I thought we could get in touch with Felt or Old Man Rom by coming here and then we'd know what to do next, but I guess things never go that easy."

The criminal always returns to the scene of the crime, well not exactly, but his common sense was such that he'd sort of been expecting that the stage for the end of the first event would somehow become the place for a sequel. However, reality doesn't go like fiction; our two criminals got taken away building and all. Quite literally, the only thing remaining were remains, and even those seemed like they were meager enough to be carried away in the wind.

"In other words we've no more use for this place. Goodbye loothouse. You served your role well as an event trigger."

Subaru picked up the bag of appa at his feet, giving a thumbs-up in remembrance as they departed; pulling Emilia by the hand. He lived his life never looking back. Goodbye yesterday, hello tomorrow. Please come in, Mr. Wedding-day.

"Anyways, since the slums are dangerous let's hurry and get out of here. Next is… searching for Reinhard I'd think. Felt got taken away by Reinhard, right?"

"Yeah, that's correct. He said he didn't mean them any harm, but… he changed his expression so quickly."

Thinking back on what Emilia said, Reinhard settled the incident by saying he'd overlook those two. It may have been just a verbal promise, but he was a young man who seemed like he'd risk his life to uphold his convictions; not the type to break promises so easily. Incidentally Reinhard had also taken charge over treating Old Man Rom's injuries too.

"It would have been nice if we could have spoken a bit more at least, we had our own issues though and had to return to the mansion quickly."

"What do you mean?"

"…Come on, we had a certain someone who had their stomach torn open you know? We couldn't think of anyone other than Beatrice who could heal it properly, so we were in a rush."

"Thank you very much for that assistance!"

He was wondering what she was talking about but it ended up being about himself. After throwing out a loud-voiced apology. "Now then" he said, trying to change to mood

"In any case, it looks like the conversations looped backed to searching for that pretty boy. I get the feeling there was something he said earlier, something about going to the royal guard station if we ever needed him…"

Digging through his memories of the conversation they had when they first met, Subaru was able to pull something out that seemed like it might be a lead. Well then, there you have it. Although he didn't have too much confidence in it. At any rate, if he is at the guardhouse I guess that'd mean Reinhard had somewhat of a policeman type position in the city.

"Like hell someone like that's just a policeman! I'm at least 90% sure that bastard's an actual knight and just wanders around town for fun."

He had an expensive looking sword, and even had some ridiculous nickname like 'sword saint'. On top of that he had some insane power. If that was the strength of an average soldier then he'd never be able to walk in the capital again out of fear. Looking like she agreed with his assessment, Emilia gave a small nod.

“I think so too, the probability that Reinhard is at the guard station is rather low. But, even if the person himself isn’t there, there might be someone there that knows him.”

“Well, either way he’s probably some kind of soldier, and maybe in the guard station they’d have the castle’s phone number written down somewhere… they don’t have phones here do they?”

“Phone?”

Emilia put a finger on her cheek while tilting her head. “Cute!”, Subaru thought to himself while wracking his brain on how best to explain.

“If I put it simply… it’s a way to talk with people who are far away. Ah, and it’s not some primitive method like shouting in a loud voice.”

“If you’re talking about a communication mirror, I think they’d have one…”

This time it was Subaru’s turn to tilt his head at the word she spoke with confidence. She could see he didn’t know from his reaction, “hmm…” she groaned softly.

“It’s a magical item used for long-distance conversations. When you stand in front of it on one end and another person stands in front of it on the other end, their image and voice will be projected over and you can have a conversation. It’s one of the more popular magical devices, you can see them around in a lot of places.”

“Hahaa, so they had this kind of method after all. Mirror, a mirror… this really is a magical world huh, fantastic!”

When you stand in front of it, it works something like instead of reflecting your own image it reflects the image of the person you are trying to talk to. When it came to magical items, the only thing that came to mind was his ‘magical’-phone that he tricked Old Man Rom with and passed off as a fake. Hearing that they actually had something similar to a phone got him excited, kindling his boyish spirit.

“Even if I don’t have magical aptitude, maybe it turns out that I can fight using magical devices. This time for sure, my happy fantasy-world adventure is about to begin.”

He was aware he lacked ability, but his nature was one that wanted to avoid situations where he’d have to use it in the first place. He had drawn up quite the fantasies about having grand adventures after being summoned to this new world, even though after facing reality he knew just how unrealistic this was. Facing this extreme situation, what had he done aside from forgetting his dignity and clawing to stay alive desperately?

Gloomily, his thoughts sank back into a negative direction. Shaking his head he dispelled his despondence. As for why he’d fallen into this line of thinking in the first place, that’d be due to the long silence that had settled between the two.

“Emilia-tan?”

“…Huh? What’s wrong?”

Her reaction was a few seconds delayed. Looking at Subaru her purple-blue eyes twinkled with light. Seeing her indifferent response Subaru’s face soured.

“That’s what I want to know. You got quiet all of a sudden. Is there something on your mind?”

“…No, it’s nothing. So, off to the guard station?”

From her attitude it didn’t really seem like it was nothing, but her response indicated he shouldn’t press any further on this issue. Acting like he’d accepted this explanation, Subaru tried his best to give out a vague reply.

“Since the guard station is over in the nobles’ district, from here it’s a bit of a walk. Let’s hurry a bit shall we, if we take too long Rem’s going to sulk.”

Originally Rem was the one who was supposed to accompany Subaru around the capital, but since she had a lot of work related matters to tend to, crying and crying, she had to hand over Subaru's charge to Emilia. Right now she should still be furiously tending to miscellaneous matters at the place they were staying for tonight.

Pulled by hand while they walked down a street heading out of the slum district, Subaru gazed silently at Emilia's back. Facing her white hood and robe embroidered with the emblem of a hawk, Subaru couldn't get a word in.

Whenever he was beside Emilia, he never failed to feel invigorated and excited. That's why there wasn't anything worse for him than getting the cold shoulder like this. 'What', 'when', Subaru fell into a panic as he raced to find what he'd done to put her in a bad mood.

If he got rejected by Emilia then he'd be all alone in this world. In this world Emilia had become his sole meaning of existence.

As the wheels in Subaru's head started grinding, the way he defined himself worked itself in a bad direction. His vision dimmed as nerves in his head screamed. A dark emotion crept up in his heart. He subconsciously understood this was the same as the dark hand he'd seen before. His lips trembled as the negative emotions started to run wild.

"That's enough of that, Subaru."

A voice resounded in his head unexpectedly, snapping him out of his stupor. Subaru opened his eyes in surprise. The words uttered felt like they were whispered directly into his mind. In front of him, Puck rested on top of Emilia's hood, rubbing his own belly while gazing out towards Subaru.

"This looks like a pretty bad sign to me, so I'm here to put a stop to it. I'd hope you wouldn't do anything improper with my daughter. I don't want to come to hate you."

Twirling a mustache, Puck came out with his reasonable as always tone. Subaru was a startled by the words as his face stiffened, looking at Emilia's back fearfully. However, Emilia didn't notice his panic and kept walking.

“You don’t have to worry about Lia hearing, I’m speaking directly to your mind.”

“…Can you hear what I’m thinking?”

“Telepaths can only do this when there’s a large difference in power. Well, you can just think of this as the difference between you and me.”

He could see Puck laughing dryly, but no sound was emitted. Although he could no longer be surprised at this emotion-reading-cat, the discomfort of speaking directly through his mind was something he didn’t think he’d easily get used to.

Anyways,

“Ah, I’ll just say my thanks. Just now, I was a bit weird for a second there.”

It was like he was the only one left in the world, he hated it so much; desperately struggling to get away. Hysterically, he reached out his hand to cling onto Emilia’s back in front of him. —Shaking his head, even Subaru didn’t know what had come over him just now. It was like he wasn’t himself, a strange thought had run wild.

I’m going to be blunt about this, the reason Lia’s in a bad mood isn’t because of you. She’s angry at herself after remembering some things.”

For Subaru who had doubted himself, Puck’s words brought him back to his senses. He tilted his head at Puck’s words.

“At herself?”

“There was something that reminded her of a bad experience. She’s only pouting over that. If you overlook it a bit, it’s pretty cute.”

Puck’s expression was one full of a father’s love for their child. Seeing this attitude Subaru felt alienated like he was being left out, he’d come to a sharp realization.

—I don't know anything at all about her past.

The Emilia that Subaru knew was an impressionable beautiful girl with silver hair and purple-blue eyes. She was a half-elf, and a potential candidate for the queen of this Lugnica kingdom. Living at her Patron Roswaal's mansion, she brought along a spirit named Puck who was close enough to call family. She was honest, always acted tough, soft-hearted, she'd take care of someone even if it meant losing something herself, she was like a big-sister, and on top of it all extremely easy to trick.

It's been two weeks since he met Emilia and this was everything he'd observed of her. It was completely surface level information. Only now did Subaru realize that he hadn't managed to step any closer to her.

Thinking of it, he didn't even know about the royal selection until recently. And him coming to the Roswaal mansion was only due to what happened the day he met her.

He was in a daze, he'd only taken the things given to him, and never sought to know more than that. This mess of a situation was his reward. Unlike Puck who knew her circumstances, Subaru who knew nothing and could do nothing but hold his peace.

"Bottling up your feelings like that, it seems you're quite the difficult child."

Even though he had kept his mouth shout on the outside, his couldn't keep the feeling on his inside quiet. Against Puck who could skim the top of Subaru's mind there was really nothing he could do. Subaru shrugged his shoulders.

"Bottling up my feelings? I think you've missed the mark on this one; my candidness loses to no-one. It seems the Great Spirit still has much to learn."

Poking fun of Puck in an exaggerated manner, Subaru acted to cut off any further discussion on this subject.

However,

“Hey, Subaru”

Regardless of what Subaru wished for, Puck wasn’t done with the conversation.

He didn’t even have the option to block it out. The words were whispered directly into his mind, rather than through his eardrum. Even though he was silent his feelings leaked out through his thoughts. And from his attitude it was clear these actions were not welcome. Irrespective of the other party’s interest, Puck broke through one-sidedly and informed him.

“I’d like if you didn’t expect too much. From me, and Lia too.”

“…Hah?”

“Hope is a gentle poison. Even if you know it, it will eventually eat away at your body. If you delude yourself into thinking something is within your reach there’s no way you won’t reach for it. Without a doubt, you are poison.”

Narrowing his black eyes, Puck erased his expression as he glared at Subaru. Faced with those expressionless eyes, his body froze up instinctively. Being stared at like he was being judged, he fought the urge to grind his teeth.

“You, what do you mean by that…”

However, before the incomprehensible Puck could give his reply—

“We’re here”

Emilia who was still pulling him by the hand stopped her feet.

“Oops”

Falling forward, he just barely managed to catch himself before almost bumping into her from behind.

He had been focusing too much on the conversation with Puck, disconnected from reality, finally the streets of the city came back into his view. Compared to the buildings that were jumbled together in a disorderly fashion, the buildings here were lined up neatly row-by-row.

The nobles' district. If it was like the name implied, this was probably the place where people from society's upper echelons lived. The scenery here was naturally more polished than from the districts where the masses lived, speaking directly, the way they spent money was different. The buildings were a given, along the roads were walls, and greenery was planted to maintain a beautiful view.

The other side of the street in front of him was like a completely different world. And, as if blocking the entrance to this new world a giant building had been erected. Even among the complete change in scenery this conspicuously tall building stood out. Like in his former world most of the buildings here were two or three stories tall, but this establishment in front of him looked to be about as tall as a six story building. The rear portion of the building joined into the outer wall behind it, the top portion had a terrace that could probably look out over everything. But rather than being intended to enjoy the view, he thought the terrace was probably built in order to look down over the people below. Even though he'd never done anything wrong, he was always timid in front of police; Subaru made a bitter face, remembering his own disposition as a member of lower-middle class society.

"This is the station for the guards that patrol the capital. People that want to go in and out of the nobles' district need to have their social status confirmed here."

"So that's why they built something like this… I guess no matter what era you're in, the police organizations have a kind of strange power that's hard to go against."

The pressure he felt was the same. From the feeling this place gave off, what he could tell was this definitely wasn't the type of place you'd go lightheartedly to about something like a lost child or forgotten item. He'd take the police boxes over this any day.

"Anyways, let's go talk with Reinhard inside… why are you doing all curled up?"

“It’s a conditioned reflex. There are some policeman out there that like to target people like me for questioning.”

“I don’t really know what you’re saying… but doesn’t that just mean you can’t do anything bad?”

“Impressive, now you’re starting to get it.”

Seeing through the spirit of Subaru’s statement, Emilia let out a sigh. Looking in front, she walked forward to knock on the door of the guard station. Chasing her hood-wearing back with his eyes, Subaru realized instantly that a certain little cat’s figure was missing. Disappearing off unnoticed, he was probably hiding in her silver hair right now.

Puck said what he wanted and left in a flash. Subaru scowled at his words, what exacted was he trying to say?

Whatever. Even if he worried about it it’s not like he’d get an answer. Folding his arms, he quickly ditched thinking about it as he moved his feet to line up behind Emilia. Almost immediately after she knocked on the door.

“—What’s this, what a coincidence to meet you here.”

The doors of the guard station opened outwards, a young man appearing from inside. The young man bowed respectfully to Emilia,

“It’s been a long time, Lady Emilia. Has anything come up in the meantime?”

He called her Emilia while she still had her hood on. Just from that Subaru’s heart filled with cautiousness. Emilia fidgeted a little after seeing him bow, but was overall calm.

“…Yeah, thank you. Nothing’s changed in particular. Um, Julius.”

“I’m honored that you remembered. I’m glad that your beauty is also unchanged, Lady Emilia.”

The man named Julius flashed his teeth with a glitter when he smiled. He said such a cheesy line without even flinching.

He was quite tall. It looked like he was at least 10 centimeters taller than Subaru, so around 180 centimeters in all. His hair was moderately long, purple with a tinge of blue; it made him seem both arrogant and polite at the same time. His body was slim, but rather than being frail it was more accurate call him supple and limber.

He had a big mouth fitting for a lady-killer. Amber colored eyes that women love and men couldn't help but be jealous of.

From his appearance and the fact he'd just emerged from the guard station, Subaru came to an understanding.

"Isn't it rare for a royal-guardsmen like you to be at a station like this?"

There were ornate decorations burnishing his uniform. A dragon symbol was woven into the sleeves, and a rapier hung from his waist like the wind. Most of all was Julius himself, it was clear from his appearance what his occupation was.

"Holding a ceremony for the guards, and inspecting the city… I suppose you could say. I came on the request of a friend, it's fine to prioritize friendship once in a while"

He replied to Emilia while brandishing his hands, as if to sing a song. His talkative mouth spun words like he was getting drunk just from listening to himself speak. Apparently trying to cut him off, Emilia in front of him followed up his words, "anyways…"

"Stretching my legs like this for a stroll through the city, no sooner than a single step was I able to come across such a beautiful flower. What more happiness could I wish for than this."

Saying this, Julius took Emilia's hand in a practiced manner and knelt on the spot. Before she could even let out a single breath he placed a kiss on her white hand.

Dumbfounded, Subaru was at his wit's end at having witnessed such a chain of events. One second later his emotions were seething, on top of this guy being arrogant he had to go out and do something like this that'd undoubtedly rub Subaru the wrong way.

However,

"Thank you, Julius. I'm sorry to spring this on you suddenly but…"

Seeing Julius' nostrils flair wildly, Subaru was about the let out a warcry but was instead interrupted by Emilia holding out her palm to stop him. Not understanding her intentions Subaru couldn't move. In front of him the situation slowly progressed.

"I have some business to take care of, could I have you act as an intermediary between the castle…?"

"Ah, I see. So you need the station's communication mirror. I understand, allow me to guide you."

Standing up and opening the door, Julius glanced inside the facility.

"Originally I'd feel a little awkward bringing Lady Emilia inside such a squalid place as this…"

"You don't have to mind things like that. Please."

"Well then, please come in…"

Emilia nodded at his words as Julius returned inside the station like he was going to guide her. Seeing this Emilia followed after. Scrambling, Subaru hurried to chase after them but,

"Subaru, wait here."

"Huh?"

Before the door closed, Emilia glanced back and turned him down cleanly. Words wouldn't come out. He tried to show his objection through gestures, but Emilia only shook her head.

"It'd be nice if I could bring you with me, but I don't think Julius would be too happy if you tagged along. Wait here."

“What the hell. Is that guy’s good mood more important that mine?”

Subaru’s mouth soured, from the way it came across it sounded like she was prioritizing Julius. Emilia protested with a troubled expression.

“That’s not it. It’s not because it’d put Julius’ in a bad mood, it’s because it’d definitely be an unpleasant experience for you. That’s why I want you to stay. Please, understand.”

“It’s already quite the unpleasant experience for me.”

The kiss on her hand. Even if it was an action that expressed reverence and respect, for Subaru it was something that was hard to forgive. He’d already gone on a date with her and held hands with her in the capital, yet she completely didn’t see him as a member of the opposite sex. That’s why kissing was something that he’d been struggling especially hard to do. Seeing another man cross that threshold so easily it was only natural he saw him as an enemy.

If possible, he didn’t want that man to touch Emilia anymore. Far from that, he was actually seeing her go off to that guy’s place without out him. That was Subaru’s male instinct.

“It’s not going to be that long before I get back so be a good kid and wait here. And don’t wander away from the guard station.”

It was worded kindly, but the color of rejection was still thick. Emilia was thoroughly keeping him away from her matters, fearing to step in any further Subaru couldn’t say anything.

The door closed between them, interrupting the two. Subaru laid his hand heavily on the door and hung his head, spilling out a long, long sigh.

“I’m so lame… what am I even doing? I’m not even doing anything.”

What came out was only self-derision. He bared his jealousy openly, sinking in it. A jealousy that would never run out or be used up. However, he was already aware of his own incompetence, if he left it alone he'd just get depressed.

“Knowing my luck, if I stay outside the station too long sulking like this I'll get picked up for questioning.”

Looking at it from an outsider's perspective he was definitely suspicious, thinking this Subaru hurried away from the station.

Nonetheless, since he had instructions from Emilia he only moved across the street, still in view of the station. After taking an appropriate distance, he put his back to the wall and let out a second sigh.

“That smug guy… an imperial guard was it?”

If that was right, then he'd be a knight. Among all the knights groups, the imperial guard were special. Originally they were directly under the command of the royalty, but now that the country has no king I wonder what's going to happen.

“That smug guy had a pretty obvious elite feeling to him. Licking and drooling all over Emilia-tan's cute hand so casually…”

His memories had already been revised. In his mind Julius was slowly changing into a heinous sexual deviant.

All he could do for now was wait and brood on negative emotions like this. Praying that Emilia would hurry to complete her task and make it back safely without being attacked by that sexual deviant Julius.

“And, after being defiled by that man's hand. Enter stage left. “Subaru, I'm no good anymore…” “That's not true, Emilia-tan… no, Emilia! No matter what happens to you, the Emilia that's reflected in my eyes is more beautiful than anyone else! Your eyes are more precious than any gemstone…” or something like that.”

His delusions exploding into a full-blown story, tears came to Emilia's eyes as she closed them, leaning her lips in towards his. It was then that a figure crossing the street caught his eye.

“I-Impossible.”

His lips trembling as the theater he had built up in his head collapsed. The lovely image of Emilia blushing vanished into his dreams, but a very real spectacle lavished his eyes, unable to avert his gaze.

In front of the shocked Subaru, an adorable therianthrope crossed the street.

It was only about about as tall as Subaru's waist, its short body swaying side to side as it walked. Tottering with each step, its body was covered with an unbelievably fluffy looking white fur. It couldn't even be compared to the beast-eared Demi-humans, this was the perfect figure for a therianthrope.

It was likely a dog, I think it's a dog anyway. It had long fur that was pure white like freshly fallen snow, which it wore with a loveable roundness.

In just one moment he was completely captivated. The heartbreak he'd just experienced from Emilia's attitude paled in comparison to this ultimate fluffball crossing the street in front of him. That is, he'd lost the will to fight even before the battle.

His soul as a fluff-a-holic, the resentment he'd built up since coming to this world, the self-loathing he'd wrapped himself up in just a few minutes ago, the torrent of emotions he could never seem to express to Emilia, through the combination of all these factors Subaru no longer possessed full control over his decisions.

I want to bury my hands in it. I want to rub my fingertips in the fluffy white fur. Hug it to my heart's content, press my face in it, pick it up and spin it around, sing my love for it to the world. Fluffing is love, fluffy is the cornerstone of world peace, fluff shall save the world. Even without fluffing, you can still fluff. However, because you fluff you want to fluff. To fluff is precisely the deepest desire of a fluffist. To not fluff despite being able to fluff is equivalent to choosing death to a fluffist. In summary, to fluff = a fluffist's life, without fluff the radiance that is a fluffist's life would…

"I got so caught up doing that, where the hell am I…"

When he came to his senses the therianthrope was gone, at his wits end Subaru stood looking around in shock.

Spread around him, his surroundings were a series of small alleyways he had no recollection of. The road in front of the station that was there a second ago was now gone. At the very least his surroundings were completely different from the showy nobles' district. He was too preoccupied with fluffing, this what he got for disregarding everything.

“I can't even sit still and wait, am I worse than a dog?! I guess after the point I got excited by the dog-like fluffball that much was already decided though.”

Having his sanity stolen away by the appearance of the fluffball, he followed it in a daze and now he's here. He didn't know how much time had passed, if he didn't hurry he'd be in for another one of Emilia's scoldings. Right now she must be waiting uneasily at the guard station, praying to be reunited with him even a minute sooner. That'd be nice if she thought that. Once she completed her objective and returned, she'd see the absence of our lost child Subaru who couldn't even sit still and wait obediently.

Subaru shuddered at the cold-treatment in store for him.

“I'll definitely get abandoned. This isn't the time to laugh and make a cute pose!”

Scratching his head, he recognized he was now in the emergency situation of emergency situations. First I've got to get out to the main street, he thought to himself; dashing down an alleyway. But on top of being unfamiliar with this area, the alleyways all looked the same to him so he couldn't tell up from down.

“Shit, why'd this have to happen now of all times… I've got it! I remember hearing that when you're in a labyrinth, if you stick to one side of the wall you'll eventually get to an exit. Piece of cake! Alright I'll go on this side of the wall… hogyaaa!!”

Reaching out triumphantly to the wall, when his hand came in contact with the filth covered wall he felt a smearing sensation and his ‘unpleasant feeling coefficient’ immediately shot up to max.

“What the hell is this, it’s all sticky and slimy! This seriously better not be vomit?! Why the hell is this sprayed all over the walls, even with the power of alcohol you couldn’t do something like this!!”

Wiping this vomit, excrement, or whatever other unknown substance, off onto another wall; not being able to ask some grandma for directions he was completely at a loss. It just had to be at a time like this, he couldn’t feel the presence of anyone in the nearby streets. For Subaru who couldn’t live without relying on other people, he couldn’t find anyone at all to rely on.

“Like this, trapped in the labyrinth without possibility of escape, Subaru gave up on thinking… BAD END #8: Death by isolation… Ok seriously this isn’t funny!”

Not having the composure to mess around anymore, Subaru upped his movement to the max. At least let this be towards a place with people… the moment he thought that,

“You bitch! Stop messing with us!”

While he wondered whether he should get closer or not, his eardrums had certainly picked up traces of people.

Chapter 7:
The Orange Girl

1

He wavered for a few seconds, deciding on whether he should go in the direction of the voices or not.

Even Subaru himself wasn't sure what his deciding factor was. It could have been that after being lost for such a long time he longed for human contact, maybe he was just drawn to the scene out of morbid curiosity. Or perhaps, it was because a certain silver haired girl did the same for him during his first loop.

Getting a bad feeling about this Subaru grimaced and pushed forward, rounding the corner.

"Don't mess with us, woman! Should we ruin that pretty face of yours?!"

"Stop making such a racket, you louts. Such an uncultured group, even your method of coercing lacks class."

Facing these disheveled men whose spit was flying in anger, her crystal-clear voice sounded cold and carried a hint of poison.

Quietly, he peeked his head out from around the corner, timidly checking to see what was happening.

In the narrow alleyway stood a single girl, three men surrounded her trying to cut off all means of escape. He couldn't help but sigh at the start of such a stereotypical 'petty-criminal' event, but what drew his attention more was the girl's appearance that didn't seem to fit in with this place's atmosphere.

Vivid orange-colored haired that sparkled like it was catching light from the sun, tied together with a barrette into a single bunch as it streamed down her back. A florid vermilion dress, one that's beauty would best be used for a ball or tea with the aristocracy, certainly inappropriate for this cluttered and dirty alleyway. The many ornaments adorning her neck, ears, and fingers, even an amateur could tell these were inlaid with first-class gems. From top-to-bottom, the coordination of her outfit just screamed ‘I have money’ to Subaru.

The girl herself despite being clad in dozens of dazzling jewels, her noble appearance still stuck out, not inferior to her possessions in the slightest. Her red almond-shaped eyes glinted defiance. Thin peach-colored lips, and skin shining white as fresh snow. Such perfection would make any painter snap their brush in frustration, seeing this in person Subaru once again confirmed how irregular this world was.

Surrounding this girl, the men savagely revealed their violent nature, shouting at her openly. The girl calmly looked back at them. This attitude didn’t appear to just be her acting strong, but no matter how he looked at it her delicate body didn’t appear to contain the power to extract herself from this situation. Or even if she did have the ability to take care of this herself, he had no way to confirm it. Crossing her arms, she puffed up her abundant chest with an air of composure. From his outsider’s perspective, he could tell the men had interpreted this as her looking down on them and gotten even more riled up.

“—H-Hey! Sorry to keep you waiting, honey!”

Promptly waving his hands, Subaru nimbly made his way into the middle of the altercation. Four people, the three hoodlums and the girl all stared at him; for the time being, he lifted a hand out to the three-hoodlums as if trying to apologize.

“It looks like there’s been some sort of misgivings between you all, but could you overlook this one for me. You can probably tell from looking, but she’s not all there in the head. You get me?”

The public order in this city’s underbelly definitely couldn’t be called good. Walking around celebrity-style was just begging to have all your possessions stolen. Wasn’t this exactly what you’d refer to as someone with mental issues? Shelving his own indiscretions at having temporarily lost his sanity chasing a fluffball therianthrope and wandering off, Subaru faced the group of awkwardly staring men.

“Well, that’s how it is. Bye!”

Subaru said energetically. Grabbing the girl’s hand behind him.

“Wh-”

“Look, let’s get going and not bother these nice young men any more. Remember we have that promise today… the one where we’ll be eating sweets together, feeding each other with a spoon “aaaan”, that promise you know…”

Making a cast substitution in the dream schedule he’d planned out for Emilia, Subaru took the girl by the arm and started quickly moving to depart.

However,

“Insolence.”

“Ha…?”

Grabbing the hand he touched her with, the angle of Subaru’s body was forcibly changed with a great twisting motion. Made to lean forward, his waist turned as his body made a full revolution.

“Don’t touch me so casually”

Releasing the wrist he’d grabbed, he felt his other hand brace the back of his head before a strong impact run out as he struck against the side of a wall like a rag doll.

“Gh-Ghh?!”

“Oh my, I go outside and immediately this happens. Men see my body and are drawn in like flies. Truly, I can’t let my guard down at all.”

Almost like looking at some garbage on the side of the road, the girl ignored Subaru rolling around in pain on the ground clutching his injured face. Subaru looked up from below, still half-crying from the pain of having his nose scrape against the stone wall. He stood up, anger welling.

“You! Go with the flow! That was definitely pattern A: Save the thankful woman from hoodlums. If you don’t go along with it how are we supposed to go by the template!”

“I don’t know what you’re saying. I do whatever I want.”

“Smashing someone you just met against a wall, that’s way beyond the level of being free-spirited!”

He tried to help her out, but far from having his intentions understood, he actually got treated like some pervert. To make things worse she actually took expensing justice into her own hands.

If he wasn’t so resistant to nosebleeds, or if his teeth protruded out more than an ordinary person this would have ended in tragedy.

Subaru’s face bent with pain and disgrace. It took him a while to realize the men silently standing around were looking at him. Subaru had put on such a spectacularly pitiful display. He collected the appa that had spilled out everywhere, setting them against the wall.

“Go ahead and laugh. I tried to act cool and help someone, and ended up eating a wall to the face for it. I’m lame so just go ahead and laugh. Do it!”

“Err, that’s… laughing would be a bit too much…”

The men’s words were colored with sympathy. Subaru dropped his shoulders, he would have been much more comfortable with being laughed at. Letting out a long sigh he settled his feelings. Taking control again,

“Take two! Come, you scoundrels! Now that I’m here, things won’t be so easy! If you want to pass here, you’ll have to go through me first. Hehe, once this battle’s over I’m going to go open a bakery in my hometown. I promised my childhood sweetheart I’d marry her too!”

Declaring his words assertively in good spirit, Subaru spoke sharply to the men. Protecting the girl behind him, he observed how the men would move. It’s 3-on-1, so if I take the initiative I might have a chance of winning—as he thought that,

“Uh, you guys kind of seem familiar”

Wracking his brain, he looked at the men in front of him, comparing their faces to his memory. With a sudden realization, he clapped his hands.

“Ah, the stooges. No way, this can’t be. Are there really no other goons in the capital besides you three?”

It was only natural he remembered these three, this was the idiotic 3-man gang he dubbed the ‘three-stooges’ after they harassed him on his first day in the capital. A slight feeling of tension seized Subaru, they did take his life once after all,

“Any more of this and I’m going to start losing my energy… what the hell are you guys, do you do this every single day? Every day? One day? Summer vacation?”

“He came in, bumped his head, now he’s spouting this gibberish”

“Oi, I don’t really want to deal with him right now, you go.”

“I don’t want to either! If we harass him a little do you think he’ll leave?”

He didn’t know if they were being cautious, or if their tension had dropped; facing the idiotic Subaru they couldn’t get their fighting spirit up and were now consulting each other in a low voice, deciding who should have to deal with him. With the three losing their will to fight and the mood on the verge of settling, the girl who had been observing silently spoke up,

“I grow bored. Talking amongst yourselves so indecisively, nothing’s ever going to happen. What are you, women? If that’s it, then I think you should dress like it. With all that muscle and hair, you'd look quite funny."

Putting a finger to her mouth, the girl threw out abuses; laying on ridicule and contempt. In that instant the other four (3 stooges + Subaru) had no idea what she'd just said. It took them a while to process what had just happened, but once it got through they all exploded at the same time.

"Don't mess with me, you shitty woman!"

"Who you calling a girl? messin' with me!"

"Who do you think you are, talking down to us like that! Huh?!"

"You, you're so full of yourself! Whether we're women or not, should we teach your sexy body the difference?!"

The 4-man gang of hoodlums spouted out vulgar objections. Among all of them the last one was especially inappropriate for public discourse. The one who shouted such a comment was Subaru, his shoulders swaying as he breathed heavily.

"Damn. What the hell am I doing joining up with the stooges…"

Even I'm surprised by my own impulsiveness sometimes. Honestly, the hoodlums were justified to be angry at her attitude. Then again, just because she was foul mouthed didn't mean it was OK for her to be threatened by these guys.

"I sympathize with you guys, but I won't yield from my original intentions. You may have reasons of your own, but if you want someone to blame, blame yourselves for making an enemy of me on first day we met."

"That stuck-up woman is one thing, but what the hell's your problem? You damn brat."

Scratching his head, one of the stooges spat out angrily at Subaru, seemingly troubled. It appears they had absolutely no recollection of him. Getting beaten black and blue by Emilia, getting beaten up by Subaru even when they were 3 on 1, stabbing him when he was passing by, they went through a lot together. How heartless to forget him.

“Well, I guess all those events didn’t happen on this particular world-line. In reality, the one these guys should remember… is a certain pretty-boy’s valiant entrance.”

It was settled in the most peaceable manner, but you could also say it was the one that left the shallowest connection between Subaru and them. Because he didn’t deal with them directly, there was no helping that Subaru didn’t leave much of an impression on them. Subaru felt a few pangs of loneliness,

“Hey, I remember now. A few days back in the business district’s back alley…”

“— ! He’s that crazy brat! He hasn’t changed a bit!”

“It’s really him. I didn’t notice because his clothes were different.”

A lightbulb lit up in one of the stooge’s minds; he yelled out, snapping his fingers. Like a chain reaction the stooges searched their memory, one after the other. Subaru’s sensitive ears picked up an inexcusable word mixed in, but that was water under the bridge. He clapped his hands in delight that they remembered him.

“Yep, since that’s the case, we’re not really strangers anymore right? So could you do me a favor this time and let us go?”

“Are you an idiot? Instead of strangers, we’re more like enemies now. The only thing that’s changed is instead of 3-vs-1 it’s 3-vs-2.”

“With just one more person it’d be evenly matched. Neither of us wants to make any painful memories, right?”

“I have a revision. It’s not 3 vs 2, it’s 3 vs 1 vs 1.”

“You! Could you not talk for a while?!”

Even though he was trying to throw out a random bluff to somehow resolve this peacefully, the self-absorbed woman was completely ignoring his intentions. If only he could time-leap 5 minutes back, he wanted to tap himself on the shoulder and call out, “seriously, it's not worth it." It was way too late for that now though.

In the first place, he knew first-hand that these guys didn't have much patience. Increasingly, what he felt from these guys wasn't anger, but a certain cold and sharp emotion mixed in. This was something he'd gotten very familiar with since coming to this world, this thing called killing intent. Putting their hands in their breast pockets, it was only a matter of time before they took out some item to exact their bloodthirst with.

"… I guess there's no helping it. I really didn't want to do this."

Having judged that there was now no avoiding a confrontation, Subaru shook his head at his own lack of ability. Unable to overcome this through conversation, he had to resort to his trump card as usual. He hoped he'd be able to take it easy one day.

"Stop right there, you three. Any more and this won't end well for you."

Turning a palm out towards the three, Subaru blocked the men who were now on the verge of violence. Listening to Subaru's words, a vein popped up on one of the easier to anger stooge's forehead.

"Ha? Aren't you misunderstanding something here? We're on top here, not you. Don't be giving out orders."

Not hiding his killing-intent, the stooge reached for the knife in chest pocket. Subaru was a moment quicker, stepping towards the stooge, declaring clearly in the most intimidating voice he could muster.

"Those words, don't regret it."

"Haa?"

"Just between me and you, I know Reinhard you know. We're best buds. If I give him a call, he'll come here flying."

"—Wha?!"

Hearing what Subaru said, the stooge shrunk back in fright. Begin operation ‘fox hiding behind a tiger’: they’re already shaking in their boots!

Having invoked Reinhard’s name, tremors ran between Subaru and the stooge. They probably wanted to call it a bluff, unfortunately, the stooges had actually witnessed Reinhard himself backing Subaru up before.

That ridiculous swordsman with a few screws loose up there, there was no way they didn’t know about him.

“What’ll it be, with just one shout I can take you guys out. I’ll do it.”

No sooner than he said that, the effects were apparent. Subaru cupped his hands around his mouth like he was going to yell, putting his acting skills to max in an attempt to threaten them. Honestly, if Reinhard wasn’t the type of character that’d conveniently appear out of nowhere like a hero to help citizens in need, Subaru would be getting the shit beat out of him right now. That’s why this was a rather desperate charade.

Not seeing through Subaru sweating bullets on the inside, the men grit their teeth in frustration.

“We’ll let you off this time.”

“But, it’s not like we lost, remember this.”

“And it’s not like we’re scared of Reinhard either!”

Here comes the loser’s excuses as expected, their unnecessary explanations made them look even more like kids. Leaving behind some foul words, the men shuffled down an alleyway.

Watching until their backs completely disappeared behind the street corner, he finally let out all the tension he had been keeping in with a sigh. Placing his hands on his knees he crouched down.

“Aaah, totally worn out. I’m seriously sweating. In a small child vs small child fight, it seems my small-child battle tactics were superior… it’s a small world!”

Telling a small joke he managed to get back some of his composure, turning to face the girl behind him. Trying to rationalize it all in his head: he had been bluffing towards those guys, so maybe she was doing something similar and that haughty attitude of hers was actually all an act for self-protection—

“What, looking at me with those eyes like a beggar. I have nothing to give to the likes of ye!”

“Nope, this is authentic. Can you at least say some words of gratitude towards the person who saved you?”

“Saved?”

She turned her head inquisitively. Closing her eyes in thought for a brief moment, letting out an ‘ah’, as if she’d come to some sort of understanding.

“What ye were chirping about earlier was all in order to save me. Hmm, I didn’t notice.”

“After all that, saying something like ‘I didn’t notice’, isn’t that exactly the same as no reward?!”

He twisted his legs, befuddled. The shock he received was so great he had to express it with his body. Even so, the girl looked at him with bored eyes, not commenting on it at all.

“Good grief, what a waste of time. Stealing my unlimited time, what a sinful story.”

“So you’re not going to say thanks after all…”

Gratitude and some words of thanks were all he sought, unintentionally Rem’s image came to mind. That blue-haired girl was probably on a shopping tour right around now, they’d only been apart for a few hours but how much he missed her. I want to be healed by Rem!

From Subaru’s voice she realized she may have been a little patronizing, with a ‘hmph’ she turned only her head back towards him.

“Don’t misunderstand me. Even if you weren’t there I would have been perfectly fine. It wasn’t even a problem in the first place, and you were the one who went out of their way to get involved. For you to boast of it as an achievement, it’s nothing but comical.”

“I don’t really get it, what do you mean? Is your ladyship so incredibly strong that you’d actually be fine on your own?! …Or something like that?”

“No, it’s even simpler than that. —This world is made for my convenience. Therefore, I’ll never be in a disadvantageous position. Being saved by you was only thanks to me. Snatching my achievement and acting like it’s your own, have you no shame?!”

Like it was completely natural, like she was completely right, like it was just common sense, this young lady puffed up her abundant chest and proclaimed it as universal law.

Such a lively and refreshing declaration. All possible situations are her ally, and everything that happens is only because of her actions.

On top of that, Subaru’s act of coming in to help was struck down as ‘trying to take away her glory’. Simply refreshing.

As she was sparkling like the sun in front of him, Subaru came to a definite realization.

—Getting involved with this… I’ve made a huge mistake.

“Uh… is th-that right? I’m sorry for doing something unnecessary.”

To avoid provoking this fellow too much, he needed to just go along with everything she said. Nodding his head exaggeratedly in agreement, he quickly picked up the sack of Appa he had left leaning against the wall. They spilled everywhere when he face-crashed into the wall, luckily, there didn’t appear to be any signs of bruising or damage. He felt a bit of relief knowing that the grocer uncle’s goodwill wasn’t damaged.

“Well then, that’s that. May we walk again in a place with more sunlight!”

Waving his hand, he made an about-face and turned his back to the girl. Right now I need to put some distance between us without making her angry, once I turn the corner let's all-out sprint to get away.

Like this he'd decided on a course of action, counting the steps until he reached the corner…

"—Halt."

A low voice called out to him from behind, he stopped walking unintentionally, cursing himself.

He should have just pretended he didn't hear anything and kept walking, now that he's stopped walking that excuse wouldn't work anymore. With a little hesitation, without turning around Subaru spoke up.

"Wh-Whatever could it be?"

Delicately trying to avoid angering her and deprecating himself, unknowingly a superior-inferior relationship had already established itself in his mind. The mentally weak Subaru tried with all his might to not turn around, against such a mentally strong girl his petty resistance was futile.

"What's in the bag? Show me."

He turned around slowly, the girl was indicating with her finger to put down the sack he was holding to his chest. He didn't have any particular obligation to obey meekly, but wanting to avoid dragging out the conversation by defying her, he reluctantly opened the sack for her, showing her the contents. Seeing the mountain of bright red fruit, her red eyes sparkled many times.

"Even after seeing it I don't know. This fruit… what is it?"

"Even if you ask me that… It's an appa. Have you really never seen one?"

Since they had always had them on the table for breakfast at the Roswaal mansion he had assumed they were a popular fruit. In a certain way, the standard of meals at the Roswaal mansion was fairly high, there was the possibility that appa's themselves were quite an expensive food item. That is to say, each one cost him 2 copper coins. Which means… a genuine question mark floated up.

In front of Subaru frowning with skepticism, the one with an even more remarkable reaction was the girl. She peeked once more into the sack, then back at Subaru like he was making a fool of her.

"You liar. Don't make me laugh. Understand me? Appa are a white fruit. Definitely not a fruit with a red appearance like this."

"Well, if you peel them the insides are white."

Not knowing what he should say, he blurted out something obvious, replying dejectedly. However, the one whose color drained from their face was the girl's. Uncomfortable from her reaction, he asked timidly,

"Um, it couldn't be, have you never seen an appa that wasn't peeled?"

"Hmm, now that you mention it I've only seen what's lined up on the dinner table. —Alright. Give it here."

Giving a single nod in assent, the girl thrust one hand out towards Subaru, requesting he hand over an appa. From the sheer audacity of her attitude Subaru wanted to try objecting, but, looking at her other hand he could tell that was a bad idea.

Opposite the left hand she presented out towards him, her right hand was tucked between her breasts, pulling out from her extravagant dress her palm gripped onto a short dagger the size of a kitchen knife.

The workmanship of the handle was inlaid with precious gems that he could tell were expensive just from one look. From the way the blade glinted, shining even in a back-alley like this with poor lighting, he definitely didn't want to have the pleasure of tasting its cutting edge himself.

He tried helping out a girl who looked like she was getting extorted, now he had the extraordinary experience of getting extorted by that same girl. Subaru felt his head getting dizzy.

Towards Subaru whose brain had overworked and shut down, the girl once again demanded “give it” with short instruction.

“I’m going to cut it in two and look at the inside. That’s how I’ll check whether or not thy mouth is only capable of spouting out lies like an spout.”

“It’s quite unpleasant to have a knife pointed at you in a back-alley…”

“Hurry it up.”

His resistance in vain, the appa was snatched away as she split the appa in two in her hand. She handled the dagger in a manner that was unexpectedly skilled, gripping it in reverse. Confirming that the insides of the split appa were indeed white, she licked the little bit of juice that spilled onto her hand.

“It’s sour and sweet… this is definitely the same taste as an appa.”

“Are you satisfied with this?”

Towards the girl who finally looked like she approved, Subaru put on his business smile like he was serving a customer. If you’d like I’ll give you one, so please let me go, were his true feelings. How much time had passed since he split up with Emilia, even though he didn’t have a wristwatch so he couldn’t check, he was still afraid of knowing.

However the girl’s heartlessness knew no bounds, with no sign of consideration or empathy to Subaru’s plea,

“Interesting. Hand over all of the rest. I’ll split them all to make sure.”

“HELL NO!!”

She was well past audacious, from her words one could only call tyrannical, even Subaru would erupt. His body clattering with temper, he approached the girl

“If you didn’t get it from cutting just one appa, why do I have to give you all of them. Absolutely NO! These appa, these appa… they’re a symbol of my bond with a certain man. They’re not ordinary appa, they’re the fruit of my friendship!!”

“Enough nonsense, how about this then.”

Brushing off his fervent speech disinterestedly, she continued the conversation one-sidedly. Pointing at the bag of appa he was carrying, her lips peeled apart, revealing a sweet smile

“How about we make a bet?”

“—a bet?”

“Yes, a simple bet. That’s right, something simple like betting on what side a coin lands on is fine. Each time we’ll wager an appa. How about it?”

She proposed a cointoss, Subaru laughed scornfully at her proclamation. She acted like this was a compromise, but the premise itself was strange.

“Your idea is absurd. In the first place, I have no merit taking this bet. If I don’t want to have the appa taken, wouldn’t me just dashing out of here have the same effect?”

“Naturally, I’ll prepare collateral for you. That’s right…”

She touched her lips in thought. Finally she sent Subaru a charming, flirtatious glance. Lifting up and displaying her abundant chest with her arms crossed under.

“If you win, I’ll let you touch my chest. How about it?”

She bet her body as a chip like it was natural; Subaru let out a long sigh, shaking his head. Presenting herself so easily in a bet, she clearly didn’t understand the implications of what she was saying, that line of thinking was destructive. People who ruined themselves through gambling always had that personality.

With such a good looking girl in front of them, what man wouldn't fall for her charms. What a wretched tale, such a sad way of thinking.

Wondering why his reply was so slow, she looked at Subaru with suspicion. Completely overlooking her stares, he scolded her clearly.

"You need to treasure yourself more. Talking stupid like this… as if I'd fall for your charms!"

2

—A short while later.

“This makes 7 consecutive wins for me, you only have 3 appas left you know.”

“Impossible! You took everything!”

In this backalley was Subaru’s figure after consecutive losses, ruined through gambling.

Chapter 8:
The Result of Gambling

1

—The coin flew up, spinning round and round through the air.

On the back of the copper coin there was the image of a dragon indicating it was of Lugnican make, on the face of the coin the year of production was engraved onto it, the appearance of it wasn't too far from the coins in his world.

Reaching the peak of its ascent, for a brief instant the spinning coin froze like it was sown into the air. Subaru held his breath, while watching the trajectory of the falling coin he moved both his hands with a tremendous speed.

Punching towards empty space with a consecutive barrage, trying to alter the falling coin's path with the resulting burst of wind.

Letting the coin drop right in front of him, he lowered his knees and leaned in, as the time it was still airborne dwindled. Right before the coin met the ground, he snatched it up in a crossing motion with both hands.

"Come now! Is it the left hand? Right hand? Or maybe even in my mouth?!"

"I've had enough of your bluffs. It's in your right."

"Oh My Goddess!!"

Opening his trembling right hand, he presented the coin on his palm to the triumphantly gloating girl. Seeing her smile grow bigger, he couldn't help tremble in embarrassment and hang his head in shame. TransFerrisng the appa from the bag to her hand, catching glimpse of the contents, a mere two appas stared back.

"Now, only two left. Not only making me guess which side of the coin, you even have me guess which hand it's in. What kind of tricks do you have for me next?"

Does she have no doubt whatsoever? She genuinely seemed to have no interest in what type of gamble he'd bring out. Her attitude was one where no matter what the game entailed, she had unwavering conviction that she'd win.

On the other side was Subaru in a completely defeated state, after losing in his specialty game of coin-catching his 10 betting chips were now reduced to 2. Mentally he was already feeling pressured.

"Impossible… for this coin-flipping skill that I've honed solely through reading manga to be completely ineffective. They even used to call me 'dazzling Subaru'…"

"I'll say it again, petty tricks are meaningless before me. I don't understand the point of your coin-spinning in the first place, there's no need for me to see the coin."

Sitting on a broken down crate on the side of a wall, he clutched his knees listlessly as the girl looked at him strangely. A smile appeared on her face as always, but a sadistic expression of her enjoying tormenting the weak was starting to mix in. Seeing such a haughty opponent his manly spirit flared up, he wanted to break that stuck-up nose by any means. But, he didn't have even a shred of the ability required to do so.

"I only challenged her to a coin flip because I thought I could win and then this happens… she's even treating it like it's completely meaningless! Since it's come to this all I can do is leave it to fate—"

"Have you decided your method? I wouldn't mind if you just handed me the two appa."

"Oi oi, in my country deserting under enemy fire means you'll be made to commit sepukku. Don't underestimate the harshness of an angry military officer. And don't think that I'll let this off with me being a sore loser."

The girl's attitude was like the incarnation of the word pride.

However with how pitiful of state he'd found himself in, he almost felt like prostrating himself before her intimidating aura. Struggling to go against it he shook his head, raising his voice he jabbed out his finger.

“The game will be… Rock Paper Scissors! This is the traditional means for a final-battle used in my homeland.”

`

“Rock Paper Scissors?”

“What's this, could it be you don't know what Rock Paper Scissors is? You don't do you?! Oi oi oi, how much of a sheltered baby do you have to be to say those words?!”

“A boring provocation, not enough class. While I won't deny thy charges of being ignorant of the world, I won't rise to such a low challenge.”

Making fun of and teasing her at the same he was planning to somehow throw off her usual calm-self, but against this girl who saw through him in a single breath it was useless. Even though he provoked her that much she still didn't pay him any mind. On top of being firmly self-centered, she seemed to think of Subaru as no different from another pebble on the side of the road. A pebble's provocation couldn't rise to the level of causing waves in her mind.

“I-I-t's not like I was scheming anything?! Just because I lost consecutively like that doesn't mean I'll do something underhanded to win, don't look down on me!”

“You waste my time. Hey, hurry up and explain this ‘rock paper scissors’ thing. That'll be the end of you then.”

Waving her hands out to the side carefree, the girl sneered at him. Getting his provocations flipped on him Subaru couldn't hide his agitation. Biting his lip in dismay, he brought his hands out front.

“Rock paper scissors is a type of duel where you throw out certain hand gestures while yelling at the same time, depending on the superior-inferior relation of the hand gestures victory and loss is decided. There are 3 different hand gestures, ‘rock’, ‘paper’, and ‘scissors’. Rock is strong against scissors, scissors is strong against paper, and paper is strong against rock. Got it?”

“Hmm”, she stroked her chin while Subaru bent his hands into various shapes during his explanation,

“Indeed, I understand. That’s quite an interesting idea there. What do we yell?”

“At the ‘scissors’ part of ‘rock paper scissors’ you throw out the hand you plan on using. And by the way, in the case that the same hand comes out it’s a tie and you have to do it again.”

“Is that all? Good, I understand. In that case I choose paper.”

“Mind games right off that bat?!”

In rock paper scissors there is the high level technique of declaring your hand, Subaru shuddered at the level of her reasoning and application. Immediately after explaining the rules, she understood everything completely, and right away chose the method that gives her a mental advantage. It didn’t come out earlier because they were contests of pure luck, the absolute best method for winning—Her ability to choose that is being displayed here.

“My strategy of explaining the rules quickly and jumping into a game of rock-paper-scissors while the opponent was still confused… was crushed?!”

“Let’s start then. Here, Rock-Paper…”

“W-Wait, timeout, hey, I haven’t decided on what I want to use.”

Having his makeshift strategy completely seen through, it backfired and now he was the one flustered. However now that she started she continued without heeding him, watching her raise her hand up Subaru had no choice but to match up.”

””-scissors!””

Throwing out her hand at the same time as her yell, it was paper just like she had declared earlier. As for Subaru…

“Making a flower like me wait, even though you protested so much… it seems like you wanted to give me your appa after all.”

“No! Ontop of being statistically the most common choice, when a person is forced into a game of rock-paper-scissors unexpectedly their hand tightens up, it’s out of my control!”

In front of the girl with her hand laid out flat, Subaru’s hand was tightly balled into a fist while he made up excuses like a sore loser. A schemer drowned to death in his own schemes, Subaru played the part of a drowned corpse perfectly.

“Now then”

Letting out a long sigh, he watched as the girl’s white fingertips reached past him to steal away an appa out from his bag. With this he only had one chip left to bet.

“By taking even that, I’ll teach thee who knows not thy own place a lesson. I’m at the top of the pyramid, you’re at the bottom. It suits you to crawl.”

“Oi oi, isn’t it a little extreme to treat a person who loses a bet like they’re the bottom rung of pyramid? Even though I don’t have a chance of winning and it seems like I’ll have all my belongings stripped from me and be ruined, my pride won’t let me not bet this last one… aa, am I actually the bottom rung?!”

“Don’t worry. Everything below me is the bottom rung. In this world there’s nothing but things below me.”

“A two story pyramid huh, even if there’s nowhere for me to stay it’s pretty refreshing?!”

Even though the portion touching the ground can be very wide, the place at the top only has one spot. With an extremely tall summit it ends being a pretty crazy pyramid. The pyramid in his imagination was in dire need of some lodging. “Now then,” the girl clapped her hands, bringing Subaru back to reality.

“Let’s bet the last one and have a match.”

“…This is the part where you’re supposed to pity me, like leave me the last piece at least.”

“I’ll make every last one of your appas mine. I’ve already gave me decision. All that’s left is for you to come up with the means, you can come up with whatever method you wish to hand over your appa with. I’m of the nature that I don’t get bored easily, but even so… this is becoming a little tedious.”

Even though her statement was no different from the ones earlier, it could said that she had absolutely no inclination to let him go; to Subaru this was a death sentence. For this girl who had no doubt in her own path, that she would win the remaining appa was already a decided matter—since it’s like this, Subaru had no way out.

“Let’s do another rock-paper-scissors for the last match.”

“Hmm, challenging me right away when you’re at a disadvantage. There might be some logic to that, but whatever you do is useless.”

“No more talk, from both of us. And no more of that lead in like last time either, just a straight match.”

Putting his hand out, Subaru’s first objective was to seal the girl’s mind games. Seeing Subaru’s unexpected attitude she raised her eyebrows, concluding that it wasn’t anything that could influence the odds of winning she shook her head.

“Very well. Let’s start this quickly and end this quickly then, shall we?”

Seeing that she agreed, Subaru pulled his hand back, winding it up. Covering his clenched right hand with his left, he shrunk down while twisting his body, like he was preparing to draw a sword from his hip quickly and strike, pulling his body to the limit, heightening his fighting spirit to the point it could cut.

“Aaaaaaaa!!”

Putting his spirit into it, an overly excessive warcry flooded out from his mouth. Movement without meaning, actions without meaning, preparation without meaning, fighting spirit without meaning. No matter how much force he put into his body, victory or defeat wouldn’t be influenced by such a thing. Even knowing this, no… despite knowing this! Subaru put his heart in soul into his right fist!

The atmosphere in the back alley began to change, from the spirit Subaru put into this match even the girl’s expression began to stiffen. The moment his fighting spirit reached its peak, the two of them moved.

““Rock-paper-scissors!!””

They shouted. With it their two fists shot out like they would collide, for just a split second all sound disappeared. The air in front of their fists broke apart, in the vacuum left behind speckles of light could be seen exploding—looking at the fist in front of her, unrest began spreading throughout her red pair of eyes. Subaru noticed this!

The girl’s clenched hand was ‘rock’. As for her opponent Subaru…

“Th-This is…”

“Listen and be astonished, look and be amazed. This is the ultimate rock-paper-scissors lethal weapon, passed down from centuries-old.”

Muttering to himself. Subaru’s right hand, it was a shape that defied the girl’s understanding. —His thumb, index finger, and middle finger were extended in an irregular shape. This was the ultimate forbidden move, tremble and be in terror!!”

“Yes, this is the ultimate form ‘rock + scissors + paper’!”

“What the heck is that?! I didn’t hear that you could use a shape like that!”

“Quite your complaining, loser! I may not have said it, but it’s your fault for not asking! This part here is rock, and this part here is scissors, and this over here is paper. In other words, my hand beats your rock.”

“If that logic works, then shouldn’t a portion of it lose to my rock…?”

“Aaa-aaa-aaa! I can’t hear you!!”

He raised his voice while plugging his ears, with a tap in his step he collected the remaining apple. The last remaining one that didn’t get taken away, he held it as if it were extremely precious.

“I win! I win! I won’t let you complain! Unlike a simple coin toss, rules have a shady side to them. It’s your fault for not putting in the effort to notice! My tenacity triumphs over your good luck! No objections! I’m more positive!”

From her unwillingness to lose to such an improvised idiotic reasoning, and the ugliness of Subaru’s cowardly victory parade, “grrrr” she growled bitterly. Within this short time, for the girl who had always had an air of daringness, her expression was stained with defeat for the first time.

“—In that case, let’s do one last bet.”

“Haa? What nonsense are you speaking, little Ms. Bunny-rabbit? The bet for the last appa ended with my win. What reason do I have to bet any further: NONE!”

“You bet the one appa you have left, and I’ll bet all the ones I’ve won.”

Towards Subaru who was thinking of running away after winning, the girl glared with fire sparkling in her eyes as she made the proposal.

Hearing this, Subaru stopped; staring back at her while frozen in place. The girl’s expression reflected in his black pupils showed her daringness was already coming back, this time with an even fiercer tenacity.

“The match will be rock-paper-scissors again. However, you can only use that ‘rock + scissors + paper’ move one time.”

“Are you serious? I’m just going to say it, but you already have 10 appa…”

“I believe I said I wanted all of them. If it’s not all of them, it’s the same as none.”

An even more refreshing self-righteous reasoning. She tilted her head, ‘what is thy answer?’ she questioned Subaru’s resolve. Hearing this, Subaru thought to himself ‘she’s quite stupid’. Losing herself in the heat of things, and not knowing to quit when you’re ahead is indeed quite foolish. Obsessed with victory

After all, he could never understand the absolute avarice to steal another’s belongings that shaped her very soul. Therefore, upon securing a single appa, and feeling that he had managed to get a good hit on her, Subaru had no reason to accept such a contest.

Even so—

“That old man’s face covered with scars is pushing me forward. Take back the fruit of our friendship. And land a good solid punch on that haughty girl’s face. No! What stupid things are you making me do?!”

“I’ll take that as an affirmative.” The girl confirmed in a deep voice.

Subaru stroked his chin, showing his agreement. Lifting their fists up in air, the final duel entered its starting sequence.

As their fists came down, for a few seconds the world became a slideshow, their thoughts accelerating.

One of the prerequisites for this duel was that the ‘rock-scissors-paper’ move was limited to one use. As this was a sure-kill ultimate move, it would naturally be the first one to be used. This way it’d be a tie, and afterwards it’d turn into a pure game of rock-paper-scissors.

Her tremendous luck was a menace.

Being able to guess heads or tails for 7 consecutive coin tosses, and even being able to recognize which hand he hid it in after he caught it. It was to such a level that if she told him she could predict the future, he'd believe it. But, there's no way that she could actually do that. Knowing future events, and being able to act to change that outcome is beyond a cheat ability. Such a ridiculous ability would be—

"Ah, isn't that describing me!"

"Here I go! Rock-paper-ss…"

Aiming for the moment his concentration was interrupted, her hand swung down. Seeing this, Subaru promptly followed with his own hand.

And—

"Naturally you used 'rock-scissors-paper' move. However, you were too naïve!"

Seeing the 'rock-scissors-paper' shaped hand in front of him, Subaru's face warped into a broad grin.

Faced with Subaru's composed attitude, the girl once again blinked her eyes in bewilderment.

"That hand, what is that?"

Subaru with his thumb sticking up; she called out with a completely chilled voice. Not paying attention to the tone of her voice, he let out a 'harrumph' through his nose.

"This is an even more forbidden move, hidden arts 'bomb'. Even something like the 'rock + scissors + paper' move gets blown away by it, the strongest ultimate technique. Blam, boom, the opponent gets their just deserts."

"What the heck?! Is this just anything goes?!"

"This is the genuine last hidden kind of move. You confirmed the ways you could use the 'rock + scissors + paper' move, but since you didn't ask about different ones I didn't tell you. With this bomb I deal you direct damage! Pulverization! Honorable defeat! Thunderous Ovation!"

Furiously clapping his hands, Subaru drew in the area's ambiance; trumpeting his victory loudly. The girl furiously bit her lip, pointing a trembling finger at Subaru.

"A-Are you saying it doesn't matter as long as you win?! Have you no pride as a man!"

"It's all good as long as you win, as long as you win! Don't misunderstand me! I don't like fighting! I like winning!"

Petty villain full-speed ahead. Forcing out a magnificent speech, Subaru set his foot down. Turning his attention back, he put his hand over the girl's finger pointed out at him.

"In the match just now, since you used the 'rock + scissors + paper' move you indirectly acknowledged my win as legitimate! In other words you have no choice but to admit to my victory! Hahaha, rock-paper-scissors truly is hell!"

"Grrrr…"

Subaru gloating in victory and the girl growling bitterly. But, the girl soon shrugged her shoulders, "I suppose there's no helping it.

Putting her hands on her hips, she puffed out her chest.

"It's as you say, now that it's over and done it's too late to back out now. As such, I'll say that this bet was your win. Now, do as you wish."

The girl took a big step forwards as if to say, 'here'. Taking a stance that emphasized her abundant chest, it was apparent that nothing was supporting her breasts as they shook lightly under her dress. Getting another good look at them once again, they went beyond what he had imagined. This was the first time in his life he'd met such a great person with such giant breasts. Among his ranking of the Roswaal mansion, Emilia's were the most well-formed. Below her were the twins, but even if you were trying to flatter them you couldn't call their's big. As for Beatrice, she didn't even meet the evaluation standards in the first place.

Therefore, with such a girl pushing her body out as an official prize, Subaru swallowed his saliva.

“O-Oi oi oi oi, you’re way too open to this. Can’t you be a little bit more like, “Nooo you dummy, there’s no way I can do something embarrassing like that, so embarassing!”, it wouldn’t hurt you know? If you did that, as a man named Natsuki Subaru, I wouldn’t hesitate to show you some mercy…”

“In the contest my loss was decided, making excuses on top of that is not something that can be allowed. That’d just make me a poor loser. It’s as you say, I got full of myself from my divine blessing and lost track of what was required to win. It was my mistake. Most of all, for me who has never lost this badly before in my life it could be said to be a valuable experience. As such, there’s nothing to feel bad about. Come hold them.”

Saying that, she stepped even further forward. Overpowered by her forcefulness, for as much she stepped forward Subaru retreated back. Scowling at his attitude,

“You, it couldn’t be… now that it’s actually progressed to the stage of touching my breasts, you lost your nerve?”

“Haa?! Ww-what, I don’t know what you’re saying! Who’s ch-ch-ch-ch-chickening out?! Who spread that nonsense?! When did they do it, how many hours ago, how many seconds, how many times did the earth spin around on its axis?!”

“…It seems you’ve fallen helplessly for me. Getting cold feet like this, what a pure love.”

Bringing her palm to her forehead in a shocked manner, she gazed at Subaru with charming eyes. Chills ran up his spine, reflexively he hugged his own body in a feminine manner.

“I don’t care anymore, just please let me go. I want to just take my appa and leave. I have a total cutie that I just got separated from for a bit… I’m probably already going to get a full timeout by now.”

Right around now Emilia was without a doubt earnestly searching for the missing Subaru. His strategy of returning before she got out of the guard station and insisting that he had been patiently waiting the whole time didn't seem like it'd work anymore. Subaru who was led astray by the loveliness in front of his own eyes and wasted all this time had no qualifications to make excuses.

"On top of it all, now that I earned the right to do this I'm hesitating like a no-good bastard. No, the pure-heartedness inside of me is speaking. It's saying that if my first boob-touch isn't with the girl I set my sights on then it's no good!"

"What moldy values… If it's like this I'm not pleased."

To touch or not to touch, the respective positions between the two were starting to reverse. Subaru displaying his apparent virginity and chickening out, on the other hand the girl's pride wouldn't let her happily withdraw after she herself was the one to offer her body. It had truly fallen into a bizarre state of affairs, with one side retreating and one side pushing forward.

"Hmm, this seems like it's going to become rather troublesome."

Abruptly releasing her gaze on Subaru, she turned towards the entrance to the street. Lured in, Subaru turned his attention over there as well.

"Huh, it seems like a bunch of delinquent looking people are coming over here."

"The ones leading the pack are some very familiar looking pieces of trash. Oh dear, it seems these fools don't have a shred of fun in them."

The girl shook her head with an expression that didn't conceal her surprise and disdain. Standing next to her was Subaru in a panic, casting eyes on the alley in the opposite the direction of the oncoming group. He didn't feel any presence of a group coming from that direction, but he had no proof it wasn't a dead-end either.

"Either way, getting caught here definitely feels like a BAD END. Even after hearing Reinhard's name they came back, what the hell are these guys thinking?!"

“They must have found out about your bluff about being acquainted with the Knight among Knights. They’ve got their honor too. Putting together their numbers, they came to pay back their debts. It’s that same tenacity to win you were talking about earlier.”

“What sore losers! Even if I forgive myself for not having any pride, I’m the type that won’t forgive others for their prideless behavior!

The sheer egotism espoused by Subaru and this girl.

Leading as the vanguard of the group, the stooges noticed the pair’s existence. Yelling something, they signaled to the group’s rear and some scary looking men broke into a run.

Subaru seeing this,

“Dammit, today is seriously unlucky!”

It started with his attempted fall from the dragon-carriage, and even more so after he got separated from Emilia. If he messed up at all it likely wouldn’t end pretty. He really hasn’t had any decent luck at all. Forcefully taking the hand of the girl standing up next to him and the bag packed with appa, he put on a hurried retreat —with no idea where he was going he advanced towards the dark.

“Oi, what are you doing, don’t touch me so casually.”

“This isn’t the time for that! If you don’t want to get caught run! Just look at the lewd look on their faces! If you get caught they’d only be able to put that in an adult magazine!”

While forcibly pulling the girl who had little intention of running, “and anyways!” Subaru enunciated out each syllable while rushing forward forcefully.

“You leased out your breasts to me just now! Like I’d let those guys touch them, outrageous! If you get it then dash! B-dash!”

Pulling her arm, he ran down the poorly maintained road; leading her as he headed deeper into the alleys. Behind them, the shouts and footsteps of the men linked together while following in pursuit. He felt his heart beat faster and harder, and felt pain in his lungs—

while aware of that all, Subaru ignored it as he ran deeper and deeper down the extremely narrow alleyway.

2

Emilia got out of the guard station, returning to the main street it was 20 minutes since she left Subaru alone.

Her main objective was getting in touch with Reinhard—Regardless of the time it took, you could say the result ended in failure. Bringing up the subject to her guide Julius,

“Reinhard? For a while now, he’s been busy with something and hasn’t had the time to come here… well, since it’s Lady Emilia I could convey your words to him personally.”

Getting this offer from Julius she somehow or another turned him down, seeing that her objective was crushed she planned to return quickly.

But,

“Julius took up more of my time than I thought.”

“He doesn’t mean any harm, and since I can discern these types of things it wasn’t too uncomfortable for me. Not to mention his colorful and abundant mana, I definitely don’t dislike that.”

Finally getting out of the guard station and onto the street, out from under her silver hair Puck replied to her words. Responding, Emilia nodded her head “yeah,”

“It’s not like I think he’s a bad person. And I think the things he told us were quite useful, I’m not unhappy with any of that, but…”

“Well, he does talk about himself a bit too much… If Subaru were there, what would he call it, ‘someone who can’t read the mood’ or something?”

Seeing Puck laugh dryly, she responded with a long sigh; looking out over the road. Even though it was only 20 minutes, it was plenty enough to get tired of waiting. She felt bad making him wait idle for that long. But, more than that she had been feeling a sense of unease in her heart.

“How to say it, it’s just as expected huh.”

“… I thought he wasn’t the type of kid to wait patiently for 20 minutes.”

The unpleasant sense of apprehension hit the mark. Running her hands through her silver hair, Emilia hung her head in shame. On the street spanning out in front of the nobles district, there was no sign of Subaru who had been told to wait there. They wondered whether or not if Subaru had sought shelter in some building while he waited for them, but, standing outside the guard station for a few minutes there was no sign of him appearing.

“It seems he isn’t here anymore… Puck, can you track him?”

“I can try. Right now Subaru’s mana feels pretty weak as a whole, so if I fail I don’t want you to get mad.”

“That way of talking, you’re becoming more like Subaru. — Anyways, please do it.”

‘Okayyy’, Puck replied softly; pushing his way out through her silver hair he came up to surface. Popping out from under her hood, he settled down on her shoulder. Wiggling his pink nose, he sniffed the air searching for Subaru’s scent—more exactly, he was smelling for any remnants of mana from Subaru’s body.

To a certain degree, if it was the mana of someone he knew then Puck’s nose was quite dependable. The problem was, how long had passed since Subaru had left. And, the problem of the current state of Subaru’s body which lacked mana. Both of those brought him a tinge of worry.

While Puck was using his nose like this, Emilia was scanning the surroundings for clues about Subaru’s whereabouts. There were very few people along the road next to the nobles district’s entrance and especially few near the guardhouse. The restrictions on coming in and out of the nobles district were pretty strict, if you didn’t have business in the nobles district then this probably wasn't the type of place you'd want to hang out at. As such, minus Emilia, the number of people visible on the street was probably few enough to count on one hand.

"… That person, I wonder what they're doing?"

Spotting a person across the street, she was extremely interested in that person's strange actions.

They were standing at a location a few dozen meters away from the guard station, on the opposite side of the entrance to the nobles district, near a path that headed into the commoners district. On the side of the road, was a place with a wooden box that had been established for the purpose of garbage collection. Leaning up against the wooden box, they person was sticking their head and arms in searching for something.

"I wonder if they're looking for a lost item?"

This is what Emilia thought, putting a finger to her lips. Glancing over at her shoulder, Puck was closing his eyes and sniffing through his nose with all his might, still trying to pick up on any remnants. He hadn't signaled for her to start moving yet. Confirming that, 'OK!' she whispered to herself and started walking, heading towards the suspicious person.

If Subaru had been here, or if anyone else had been here for that matter, she would have probably controlled herself. One would normally avoid going up to a person so interested in fishing around in the garbage. But, with Emilia on her own there was nobody around to stop her. And the only one around who could warn her, Puck, was completely oblivious to what she was doing. As such, with no hindrances she had already come up to the person's back.

"Huh, it's not here either, princess. I'm stumped, really. I wonder what happened."

Coming up behind them, the person's grumbles reached her ears. She could already tell from looking at him from behind, but it was a man's voice. A man who's upper body was thrust into the wooden box searching around, he was dressed in slightly dirty lightweight equipment. However, from the fact that the portion around his waist was furnished with a sword as wide as chest one could tell they were exceedingly strong. From the looks of his lower body he was built quite sturdily, there was no doubt at least a portion of that was reflected in his fighting ability.

From the roughness of his voice too, this was someone you'd normally want to avoid touching. But, the person here was someone far outside the norm, a soft-hearted half-elf.

"Um."

"—Mm?"

Being called out to so unreservedly, the man raised a seemingly surprised voice and pulled his head out,

"Gaa!"

Pulling his upper body out of the wooden box, he hit the back of his head strongly against the crate. Leaning over, this time he crashed his chin forcefully against the outside of the crate. Receiving consecutive hits to the head, the man crouched over.

"Ow-owww, it hurts…! What the heck, me, I'm getting too old old for this……"

"A-Are you ok?"

Letting out an oddly pained voice the man consoled himself, as the one who called out to him Emilia felt a bit guilty.

Touching his shoulder,

"Kyaa!"

The man stood up forcefully, Emilia who touched his shoulder was surprised. The man wrapped himself in his arms, turning around to face Emilia behind him.

The man was tall, he had to look down at her. The moment that man’s face met hers, her bluish-purple pupils widened in fright.

Towards this Emilia whose throat was filled with fright, the man pointed a finger and said.

“Oi, don’t touch me so casually little lady. Those that touch me get burned.”

Chapter 9:
Divine Protections, Reunion and Promise

1

Around five minutes after breaking into a run on the rutted road—while being pulled along by the hand, Subaru continued staggering forwards, breathing feebly.

“If you don’t hurry, we’ll be caught. Is this the time to be playing around?”

“Say-saying something like that… Time out, seriously, just a sec…”

When they had first started running, Subaru was in front, but because of a matter of physical constitution, their positions were now switched.

The girl running ahead of him looked unruffled, not even short of breath. And on the other hand, Subaru, unable to handle full-force sprinting for an extended period of time, was soon exhausted.

It must be explained in order to protect Subaru’s pride that his fatigue was partially because he had not yet recovered from his injuries. Considering that Subaru’s strength mid-rehabilitation was lower than usual, his current state was well below even that—it seemed.

“Pathetic. Don’t you think it’s embarrassing, falling behind a delicate maiden such as I?”

“I’ll try justifying it by saying that I’m having trouble because I’m still recovering. …But to be honest, I’m pretty screwed.”

The threat of the hoodlums chasing behind Subaru and the girl was still present. Fortunately, the duo’s head start created quite a large distance between them and the mob. But because there was basically only one path in the alleyway, it was clear that if the two slowed down, they’d be caught. Ideally, they would leave the main alleyway before that happened, but…

“We’re heading towards a dark area with no people…do you have an idea or what?”

He asked the orange hair that was unhesitatingly, rapidly moving forwards. But her answer to the ask was, “Ha, ha, ha, I dunno!” followed by a refreshing,

“Everything I attempt has favorable results. I’ve never needed to think about anything deeply in the past, and I will never have to in the future. Trust in whatever I attempt.”

“I take my hat off to you… Really though, whatever you do, no matter what…?

At this time, there was no doubt that it was thanks to the girl that they had not run into any dead ends. If you consider the possibility that if they exited onto the main street they might be caught like mice running into a trap, it was still too early to assume that something bad would happen if they continued deeper inwards. Nonetheless…

“Our future doesn’t look bright… My body isn’t feewing so good either.”

“—Hmm, we’re in a difficult situation.”

Subaru fumbled through his last words, breathing roughly. In front of his eyes, the girl suddenly stopped. Subaru, who was being pulled along by his hand, also stopped,

“Oi, oi. There’s no time to stop, they’ll close the distance and chase us down,”

Subaru said while making jogging motions to try to get the girl to start moving. But the girl mused over Subaru’s words, then faced him with a bored expression, saying,

“—I’ve lost interest”

“Lost int-…WHAT?!”

"I said, I'm tired of it. In the first place, why should I have to run? I'll decide my own actions. I'm certainly not affected by the actions or words of those ruffians back there."

"I mean, you can say that, but that's not how reality works…?!"

Subaru became impatient, seeing this princessy temper tantrum. Honestly, time was too precious to have this kind of argument. If he wanted to save his own skin, the best option was to leave the girl behind and make a mad dash for safety. But if he did that, he wouldn't be able to achieve his initial goal.

Stuck between a rock and two hard places, Subaru internally struggles with his ideals, reality, and the possibility of escape. Watching the conflicted Subaru, the girl opens her mouth obstinately,

"Hmph. I've decided. —be honored that thou have been allowed to carry me"

"Non, merci!"

He crossed his arms to express his refusal of this seemingly worthless proposal. Seeing Subaru's instant decision, the girl gave an insulted frown, saying,

"It's not as if I let just anyone have the honor of carrying me. Men who do so without permission don't know the meaning of fear."

"Do I look like a macho man who can carry someone while running? Even if I was at peak performance, it'd take all of my strength to carry a girl even skinnier than you! Not to mention that my strength is so far gone my legs are like those of newborn deer! Just look!"

Pointing to his continuously trembling legs, he complained with vigor.

Looking down on Subaru's disgraceful behavior, the girl said, "you good-for-nothing," sighing disgustedly,

"—acura"

She muttered under her breath.

“Huh?”

Suddenly, the moment her whispers reached his eardrums, a faint light appeared, surrounding Subaru. The gold-colored glamour wrapped around the surprised Subaru’s entire body like a veil.

Bathed in comfortable golden light, Subaru raised his two hands in front of his face.

“Wh-What the heck?! I can see an aura materializing… What’s going on?!”

Said Subaru, extremely confused at the changes going on on his body. The girl, who had been hidden in the shadows behind him, walked calmly around him, saying,

“If thou does not wish to carry me, then we shall do this”

“Whoa…oof!”

Subaru is interrupted as the girl easily throws herself onto Subaru’s back.

With her arms wrapped around his neck, Subaru planted his feet firmly into the ground. Although the girl was petite, he would nevertheless had to have bear her whole body weight—but this preparation turned out to be unnecessary.

“What the heck? You’re as light as a feather… Wait, no, it’s me that’s unusually strong?”

It didn’t even matter that she was on his back; it was like he didn’t feel her body weight at all. Moreover, the appa bag in his hand also became weightless, and his legs that had been jogging suddenly felt as nimble as if they had been replaced with brand new ones.

“Anyone who receives my blessing can work like carthorses. Including thou.”

“Whoa, well I don’t entirely understand, but this works! Natsuki Subaru, takeoff—!”

He starts running, with a hand on the girl’s hip to make sure she didn’t fall off.

Light, light, so light were his feet. The lightness was as if he had shedded the shell that was his physical body, and his speed was such that a single step rivaled five of his steps previously.

The distance that had once shortened because of their pause once again widened, and this time, there was no sign of it decreasing.

His senses were sharpened—to the point where he could even keenly detect the presence and movements of the men in the distance. Subaru was very satisfied with how every part of him had been boosted to the utmost.

“This is amazing! My body’s so light! I’m not scared of anything anymore!”

Bending over to reduce air resistance, Subaru moved with such vigor that he became the wind. He narrowed his field of vision, and sped down the alleyway towards a small street, all the while turning just his neck to face the girl, saying,

“Now that we’ve gained a lil’ distance and we’ve got time to spare, I’ll ask this… What got you tangled up with them in the first place?”

To people wary of authority like that group, you’d think that someone as eye-catching as this girl would conversely be harder to lay a hand on. No matter how you looked at it, she didn’t look like the other townspeople.

Or maybe, it was possible that her absurdity was so extreme you couldn’t even consider that.

After hearing that question, the girl softly snorted with her shapely nose, saying, “nothing, really,” continuing with,

“I got separated from my companion while sightseeing to kill time. I simply happened across those guys when I stopped to check out that unusual dirty alleyway while looking for my companion.”

“You can’t have gotten in a fight with them just because of that…”

“It turned out that way because I jeered at their strange style of dress.”

“IT’S YOUR FAULT?!”

“I won’t be friendly with such easy to anger people.”

“Learn to watch that slippery tongue!”

The typhoon-like girl’s sense of compassion had been completely dwarfed by the absurdity of their misfortune. Even though in this situation, the person that thoroughly got the short end of the stick was Subaru.

In the middle of this rousing quarrel, Subaru came across a street that turned perpendicularly to his right ahead of him. Killing his momentum by kicking the wall, he used the recoil to turn right—then suddenly was struck with an idea.

“If we continue along the roads, we’ll never lose them. So instead of running along the path, I’ll make a path—!”

“Was the effect of my spell so strong that it affected thine head?”

“Don’t be mean! Observe, and regret doubting me!”

He declared, changing gear to go even faster than before.

The girl riding on his back shared the same field of view. Because of that, she knew that would be no outcome other than Subaru crashing into the wall directly in front of him.

She tightened her grip around his neck, saying,

“Hey you. What art thou thinking? We’ll crash if we keep going…”

“Stop nitpicking and just watch! Fire! This is it, the wall-riding ability learned from that awful sticky-fingered slum girl Felt!!”

Saying this, he vigorously planted his feet on the ashy brown wall, taking two steps that ignored gravity. With a sound, Subaru ascended. performing a wall-walk that would make Newton half-cry —.

“Red King Crab!”

Except no such thing happened.

On the fourth step, his foot slipped, he rotated downwards, falling with his face towards the ground. Subaru faceplanted without adjusting to reduce damage, and rolled on the ground in agony, screaming,

“IT HURTS IT HURTS IT HURTS IT HURTSSSS!”

“What art thou doing?”

The girl who had jumped off Subaru who was now covered in wounds, and eyed him as if she was looking at a strange exhibit. In her hand was the appa bag, which had avoided the misfortune of falling.

Relieved at seeing her safety, Subaru started to move to get up, saying “Shit, that was a huge failure… Stupid Felt, showing me something that would give me false hope…”

It wasn’t very good to be cursing people who aren’t present, but if you’re going to be falsely blaming people, the golden haired girl was a good scapegoat. In the first place, it was true that she had done the wall-climb, although she has no recollection of teaching Subaru that skill. Of course, it’s not as if Subaru remembers being taught, either. Having displayed that ostentatious failure, Subaru scratched his head and tries to stand up and pull himself together.

“Huh, what? My legs… Ouch! Shit, hey, they really freaking hurt?! I only twisted it but it feels like I broke it!”

“It’s because thou exceeded thine body’s maximum limits. It’s obvious thine limbs will be more sensitive to pain than usual.”

“Obvious in what world?!”

She spoke of the side effects of Subaru’s buff matter-of-factly. Not only did she show no sympathy for Subaru who was moaning in pain, but curtly ordered him, “Now stand up.” But Subaru refused, with a childish, “Wahh, it hurts so bad I’ll cry.”

The distance and time they had gone to great lengths to earn once again decreased, and they could once again sense the presence of the approaching ruffians.

At that time:

“Just as I was thinking it’s been a while since I’ve seen you, what are you’re doing?”

Slowly, the owner of that voice peeked his large body out of the road on the right they were supposed to turn into.

They raised their line of sight. Where a normal person’s head was supposed to be just barely reached this man’s chest. When they looked further up, they could see a moustachioed bald head.

“You-you’re…”

A familiar brawny old man was looking down at them.

“Old Man Rom is here! We’re saved—!!”

“As usual it’s still early and you’re already irritating me. I’ll leave you behind, brat.”

“Save us HELP PLS! It’s not just virtue that’s in danger but innards too!”

The former danger being the girl’s, and the latter being Subaru’s.

That that the bad guys definitely peddled illegal organs was only Subaru’s prejudice at work, but hearing that, the old man—Rom—looked at the girl’s appearance and Subaru, saying,

“What, have you stuck your neck into dangerous situations again?

Your knack for causing a ruckus with female companions isn’t to be underestimated.”

“I don’t need that kind of pervy old-man comments from you! Help us!”

He gritted his teeth against the pain and stood up, pleading with Old Rom while jumping on one leg. The man nodded his hairless head as if troubled, appraising the silent girl all the while. The refined girl clearly expressed her discomfort at the treatment, saying,

“How darest thou look at me with thine ill-bred eyes, thou dirty old man.”

“I shouldn’t be talking, but you sure love to bad-mouth! What are you saying to the old man who’s about to snatch us from the jaws of hell? Please don’t think bad of us, Old Man Rom. Both of us are just a little too blunt!”

“You’re as good at decreasing motivation as usual, runt. Hide, quick!”

Covering the girl’s ever-ready-to-spout-poison mouth, Old Man Rom looks around, then takes off towards a hiding place. There were bundles of lumber leaning against the wall, and it looked as if two people could just fit and hide in there.

He pushed the girl in first, then Subaru by his behind, as if to stopper up the hole. The girl wanted to complain about the grime, but Subaru covered her mouth so decisively that she suppressed her dissatisfaction.

“Old Man Rom, everything’s OK”

“What in the world is ‘oakkeh’… Anyways, I’ll hide you with my body, so don’t move, you hear? If you get spotted it’s trouble for me too.”

Even as he lectured them gruffly, Old Man Rom moved to cover them from sight with his huge body. The two held their breaths behind Old Man Rom, who leaned against the wall with his arms crossed.

Merely tens of seconds after they had hidden themselves, the sound of several footsteps rushing down the nearby alleyway could be heard—,

“The fu-! Thought it was a brat, but it turned out to be an old geezer!”

Swooping in from the direction of the noise, the man running at the front of the pack jeered at the gargantuan Old Man Rom. All Old Man Rom had to do was silently fix a level glance at him for the man’s spirit to break, as he took a step back, uttering, “uh, uhh.”

“What’s this noise for? I won’t be impressed by you trying to frighten the elderly, you know.”

It wasn’t as if he had said anything particularly threatening, but when a behemoth like Old Man Rom says something ill-humored in his low voice, it was already intimidating in itself.

Displaying just the reaction Old Man Rom was going for, the man prepared to turn tail and run back to his pursuer companions, but,

“I was wondering who he was, but isn’t that Old Man Cromwell?”

Shouted a man in the mob, pointing at Old Man Rom.

Subaru raised his head at hearing that unfamiliar name, but the one who had an even bigger reaction to being called was Old Man Rom himself.

His already wrinkled face furrowed more with bitterness as he said,

“I don’t like being called that name.”

“Are ya in the position to be making complaints? I’m askin’ ya, wouldn’t you think I’d become a big-shot in the slums if I smashed down your stolen goods warehouse?”

“It’s gathered a lot of dirt over the years. It’s not spick and span any longer… I’ll allow you to do whatever you like,” Old Man Rom's expressionless response to the lily-livered men, who then thought to themselves that they really didn't want to incite a bigger reaction than that. The man shrugged his shoulders, saying,

"Well, do as you like. If you're fixing to bow your head to Russel, come pay your respects sometime soon. The longer you wait, the worse your position looks."

The man only managed to say that much, and walked towards the men behind him to continue down the alleyway, turning around at the last minute to ask,

"Th-That's right. Old Man Cromwell… Have two brats come around these parts?"

"Haven't seen 'em. Ah, you lot as well. Have you seen my acquaintance, that blonde lass?"

"Dunno. What, is that brat you took in so important? An old fool and a young one, you two are."

With a careless wave, the men leave, this time for sure.

Old Man Rom stared unwavering at their receding backs, chewing his lip as if to quell his anger.

Gazing at his profile from the gaps between the scrap wood, Subaru couldn't do anything that would be of comfort. It was a happy thing to have bumped into Old Man Rom again after such a long time. But today he seemed slightly different to the Old Man Rom Subaru knew.

"Even his skin…"

"Hm?"

His line of thought broken by a murmur, Subaru looked around. Right beside him, breathtakingly close, was the pretty face of the girl who was leaning over, and his hand was still over her lips in his previous effort to shut her up.

She mumbled through her covered mouth,

"Ftopkwabwaengfwawafwasumouth!"

Then came the sharp pain of her chomping down mercilessly with her canines.

"—AYIIIII!!"

Subaru's shrill, puppy-like howl rang through the silent alley.

2

"Thanks for hiding us, Old Man Rom. I thought maybe you got knocked silly over the head, but it looks like everything turned out well."

"You… Those fellas are still on the prowl, so it'd be better if you weren't so optimistic."

"You're huge, so don't say something so small-minded! I can handle such lowly people myself just fine! YEAH!"

Seeing Subaru's bright, toothy smile and thumbs-up, Old Man Rom heaved a tired sight.

They switched locations from the alleyway that was even narrower than the one from before to a slightly more open road. This was the place that Old Man Rom had led Subaru and company to, after saying he would take them somewhere less eye-catching.

The threat of the chasing men had disappeared, and Subaru and the girl could finally breathe easy.

From that breath of freedom were these initial words:

"Hey, thou. Who is that old man that speaks to thou so familiarly? Explain," said the girl who had maintained silence until now, pulling on Subaru's sleeve agitatedly.

She pointed haughtily at Old Man Rom with her chin, and Subaru answered, nodding, "This old man is from the slums in the capital. Old Man Rom is a giant and the stingy boss of a group of thieves and ruffians. His special skills are his bad eyesight, spoiling children, and acting tough."

"I get that you're happy to see this old man you've been missing for so long, but aren't you getting ahead of yourself, kid?"

Catching the finger Subaru was pointing at him, Old Man Rom chided Subaru. Subaru answered, "my bad, my bad," with little remorse, and continued,

"To be fair, even if I'm joking around, it's not as if I'm spreading lies."

"So it's partially true. In short, he's an old, stingy, short-sighted thief with bark but no bite from the slums. How pitiful, for someone who has lived for so long."

"Your companion is as irritating as you are, brat!"

Subaru and the girl exchanged shrugs in front of the stomping Old Man Rom.

Then Subaru faced the disheartened Old Man Rom, saying,

"Either way, it's true that I'm glad we met again, Old Man Rom. To be frank, we were doomed back there, so I didn't have a way to 'confirm our circumstances'.

"I'm not sure if you're quick at changing your tune or you're a little unstable, kid. And you, young-in, would look more spirited if you opened your mind."

Old Man Rom smiles wryly, and gives Subaru a once-over. Seeing the wounds all over Subaru's exposed skin, he says,

"It's funny coming from me, but it looks like you got messed up pretty bad by that knife-user."

"Nah, the wounds I got from her are almost all on my stomach, so everything else is from after that event."

"It's been barely a week since then? What happened?"

"It's a long, tiresome story, so never mind. I'm alive, and that's all that matters. I'm satisfied with that. Anyways, speaking of,"

Hiding his scars from the surprised Old Man Rom's view, Subaru points towards the slums (or at least where he thinks they are), and once again brings up talk of the event.

"What happened after the uproar at the Stolen Goods Warehouse? Since you lost your workplace, have you been eating properly? If you're only eating side dishes you'll starve."

"I don't understand the second half of whatever you said, but I'm getting by, more or less. It's not as if the Stolen Goods Warehouse was my only livelihood. If you've lived as long as I have in the slums, you'd have lots of connections."

Old Man Rom replied laughingly to Subaru, who looked as worried as a mom whose child had gone to the big city. After all, there was no way that he could have been trusted with the role of taking care of stolen goods if he wasn't a person who was trusted in the slum community. He probably wasn't bluffing about having "connections."

Either way, if it hadn't been for the scars from that particular event and the worries of life after that, Subaru would have been relieved. Of course, he was substantially less heartbroken about him when compared to how he felt about Emilia and the girls of the Roswaal mansion.

"That's why I wasn't really worried about you, Old Man Rom."

"Sorry for saying something distasteful suddenly, but I too have something to ask of you."

Old Man Rom abruptly informs the meaninglessly tsundere-ing Subaru in a lower voice. Seeing the earnesty in his face, Subaru adjusted the attitude he had adopted until now. At that time, his sleeve was suddenly pulled behind him.

He turned around. The girl was standing closer to him than was necessary, and he was startled by the beautiful face in such close proximity to his. Then she said,

“I’m bored.”

“Now’s not the time to be bratty.”

“It’s not me being selfish, the world just has it in for me.”

“You’re so fussy. Then, I’ll give you a quiz. In this world, are there more uphills or downhills? LET’S THINKING!”

Slap-dashedly abandoning the girl to her thoughts, Subaru once again faced Old Man Rom. Then waved his hand as if to say, “go on,” to Old Man Rom, who was irritated at being cut off.

He sighed at Subaru’s attitude, then shook his neck as if to adjust his spirits, and said,

“Kid. Do you know where Felt went?”

“…Haven’t you heard? Apparently she was taken by that bastard Reinhard.”

“Reinhard… The Sword Saint? What would the Knight Among Knights want with Felt?”

Old Man Rom tilted his head as if he really didn’t know. Subaru, commiserating with the old man’s unhappiness, thought “It’s definitely because he got knocked over the head,” then suddenly realized the inconsistency between Old Man Rom’s knowledge and the events at the Stolen Goods Warehouse.

He recalled that during that event Old Man Rom had lost consciousness before Reinhard and his men. After that and before Subaru too lost consciousness, there had been no instance where Old Man Rom had been awake while Reinhard was there. In short,

“The abandoned Old Man Rom had awoken at his destroyed warehouse with no one around to explain what happened, and was left to stare dumbfounded at the ruins of what was once his home.”

“I didn’t fall into such a sorry state. When I regained consciousness, there were palace guards stationed. It was helpful they treated my wounds, but they left me alone soon after.”

“Ah, that’s true. That’s a little awkward then.”

After all, people who have done bad deeds don’t have the sensation of having lived if they wake up in a police hospital. It’s not strange for them to want to get out before anyone starts asking any questions.

Old Man Rom had left the guard station before being able to ask more about the situation, he had no contact with Reinhard, who was holding Felt in custody, and it seems he has been left dangling ever since.

“So that’s why our stories don’t add up. OK, then, I’ll just fill you in on the bits after you lost conscious, and before I lost conscious.”

With that as the preface, gesticulating, Subaru told the story of the grand decisive Battle of the Stolen Goods Warehouse, ‘Sword Saint vs Bowel Hunter’, a sort of one-man VTR.

Old Man Rom watched Subaru in wonder as he displayed his surprising yet useless performance skill, and even the girl who had looked bored watched him in fascination, eyes glittering.

“Then I said this to the surprised girl: —I want you to tell me your name.”

“What—! I said that, I did!”

“Ho-ho, isn’t that an elegant way of saying it. I don’t dislike it.”

With that slight derailment, the battle saga ended.

All three were a little fired up from that explanation, but the first to come to his senses was Old Man Rom, who said,

“This isn’t the time nor place to be doing things like that. Ah—, in other words, you, kid, don’t know anything beyond what happened when you and Felt were taken by Reinhard?”

"Well, yeah…"

"Isn't it obvious that the number of uphills and downhills is the same?!"

"Baumkuchen!"

Eating a body-blow from the girl who had suddenly arrived at an epiphany, Subaru squatted down in agony. Swinging the fist that struck Subaru, the girl seemed satisfied, declaring "From henceforth, do as you will."

After recovering from his shocked daze, Old Man Rom looked down pityingly at the groaning Subaru.

"What I'm saying may be indirect, but I think you should pick your companions more carefully."

"It's not like I'm especially picking them! I just wait for them to pick me! I'm in the middle of a powerful DAZE that won't disappear from eyesight!"

Jumping to his feet, Subaru poses, pointing out Old Man Rom's incorrect assumption. Then, clearing his throat, Subaru once again returns to the previous topic.

"Those longtime connections of yours, can one of them personally make an inquiry at Reinhard's house?"

"If I had such powerful allies, would I be holed up in a shack drinking booze? If that's the only way, I'm in trouble. —I can't think of anyone except the Astrea household."

That last half was a murmur that barely left Old Man Rom's lips, and didn't reach Subaru's ears. Looking at the serious-expressioned Old Man Rom, Subaru shrugged as if giving up, and said,

"Then, I might be able to speak with Reinhard on my end, so if I learn something I'll let you know. I've always thought that I should see how Felt is."

"Those are comforting words… You too, have some unusual connections. Any relation to that little lass over there?”

Remembering Subaru’s temperament at their previous chance meeting, Old Man Rom pointed Subaru’s source of confidence at not Subaru himself but at the people around him.

Although that judgement itself is not wrong, associating it with that girl is incorrect thinking.

“No, not at all. In the first place, I don’t even know that girl’s name or anything.”

“Youngin, why are you getting into feuds with allies you don’t even know the names of?!”

“Looking back, I didn’t know Emilia-tan’s name either, so this kind of thing isn’t that strange for me.”

Resigned, Old Man Rom put his finger on the nonchalant Subaru’s forehead, closed his eyes, and mused, “even considering it is useless.”

Then, Old Man Rom looked straight at Subaru and said,

“Then, without going through that young lass, you think it’s possible to create an opportunity to speak to the Sword Saint?”

“At least more than you who have nothing, Old Man Rom, I think. Put your faith in me, as you would when you cross an old fishing bridge!”

“The saying is to ‘tap a bridge as you cross it’, so how did it become this…”

Old Man Rom nodded at Subaru, who was beating his chest triumphantly, as if he was already prepared for the worst.

“Very well. I’ll leave it to you, youngin. Once you learn about Felt’s whereabouts, let me know. I’ll repay your kindness.”

“Don’t be so earnest. Don’t tell me you really are soft for children?”

“—Maybe so. That girl is my granddaughter of sorts. So please”

“-Then, it’s been asked.”

There wasn’t even a rebuttal to Subaru’s bold assertion. Subaru’s mouth slackened slightly at Old Man Rom’s direct affirmation.

As for the golden haired girl: what would she think if she knew she was loved this much? It’s her so, she’d probably turn beet red, all the while putting on a tough front.

“If I find news, how should I contact you?”

“Good point… There’s a shop called “Kadomon” on the merchant’s street. If you act intimidating and say my name, you’ll be able to contact me. Much obliged.”

“Aight, aight, Kadomn… Kadomon?”

Subaru tilted his head. It seems as if that word had been etched into his memory recently.

Anyways, as long as he knew where the merchant street was, there was no problem. If he combed that street carefully, he would find that store.

With a nod to indicate understanding, Subaru and Old Man Rom entered a steadfast agreement.

Subaru owed Old Man Rom for having made it this far, and he didn’t have a reason to refuse either. Doing what he had originally set out to do, and being able to help ease the life of an old man whose days were numbered was profit in and of itself.

“That’s right. I should probably explain to Emilia-tan. About this being for my own sake as well or something.”

“Did you say something before?”

“No, not really. Speaking of, it’s a bit soon, but I know a way you can be of use.”

Subaru pointed again at Old Man Rom, rocking his hips to get Old Man Rom's attention.

Old Man Rom frankly didn't look too pleased at being asked for a favor so soon, but then again that was the deal they made moments ago. With a sour face, he said, "go on."

To that, Subaru said, "It's no big deal, but:"

"To be honest, both that girl and I are completely lost, you see. My adventure ends thus, without having been fulfilled my promise! Or something like that, so please guide us out to a main street."

"…I see. I got it, leave it to me. Which street?"

"Outside the station would be great."

"Hey brat, didn't you just hear I ran away from the station?!"

Old Man Rom's shout echoed through the alleyway.

About an hour had passed since Subaru had strayed from Emilia.

Chapter 10:
Confluence and Farewell

1

“At first I thought this dirty place had a certain jumbled charm in its own right, now that I’m familiar with it there’s nothing interesting here at all. It’s no use at all in staving off my boredom.”

The end of her arm raised, while the hem of her dress fluttered; the orange-haired girl muttered without breaking her bored look.

“It’s only been a few minutes and you say you’ve seen everything there is to see in the back-alleys. The capital’s architect would be rolling in his grave if he knew his city was being evaluated as boring.”

“It’s because this world was made for me, that’s why everything in this world exists to entertain me. Why should I care about the opinion of someone who designed such a boring city? When you talk about the royalty, it seems they lacked a discerning eye. There’s a reason they died off recently.”

“Y-You… what are you doing saying something so disrespectful in the king’s own back-yard!”

Just hearing her words made his heart sink, even knowing there wasn’t anyone around in the vicinity Subaru couldn’t help but shrink down and cast glances around himself. Seeing Subaru’s caution, or rather cowardice, the girl flared her nostrils.

“What a boring reaction, and an idiotic irrational fear. Being this afraid, thou’s caliber is no different from the many thousands of innumerable commoners after all.”

“I already know I’m a mediocre, common, average, ordinary person from the lower class so I don’t care. I already got wrapped up in one fight today thanks to you, I don’t want to get dragged in any more cause of your irresponsible words.”

“What foolishness. You should be proud to follow the brilliant path I walk, even if it’s a minor role. Showing discontent goes against all reason.”

“I don’t want to take any more time like this and trouble my companions! I’m already out time wise, but the more time that passes puts me in an even worse position! OUT OF CONSIDERATION!!”

Thinking of being stared at by Emilia’s cold gaze, shivers shot up his spine from fear. He also felt a strange sense of chill. Even though he didn’t know what this mysterious feeling was, he knew it was the kind of feeling that he didn’t want to have the misfortune of learning about it in more detail. As such, he wanted to avoid sticking it out with this egotistical girl for any longer.

Like so, Subaru was reminded of this impending danger. But, the girl ridiculed these very fears of Subaru as ridiculous.

“What stupidity. How rude to think of another’s existence while in my presence. In actuality I also have a companion, but I think nothing of them getting lost.”

“No, that’s something you should think a little about! Don’t you feel sorry for them?”

The girl he was escorting was like the incarnation of arrogance. Even without meeting this other person he knew from this short period of time how much hardship they had to endure, the flames of sympathy flared up in his heart. No doubt they were thrown about by this unreasonable young lady, they must be a beautiful woman with an unfortunate fate and a neat and tidy personality; tossed around on the whims of the lady they serve. For Subaru who had a weakness for elegant characters, this was definitely a person he wanted to see for himself.

“On the other hand, coming in contact with them means I’d have to deal with this one as well though.”

“Calling me ‘this person’, I see you’re getting quite full of yourself. If you upset me too much, your life is yours to lose.”

“I’m sick and tired of that kind of talk! Just how much do I have to watch out to not trigger any death flags, damn it. Good girl, good girl, please don’t be angry!”

Walking side-by-side, he cut in front of her, waving his hands with a flutter and calling out in a playful voice. The girl frowned like she had some thoughts about his attitude; abruptly laughing.

“Well, it’s fine. A fool is only fit to be called a fool because they act like one. For the likes of a jester who doesn’t even have the self-reflection to be ashamed of themselves, there’s no reason for me to dirty my hand.”

“You said it in a smart sounding way, but you’re basically calling me an idiot right?”

“If I called thee an idiot that’d be just as expected. Being aware of it or not aware of it is the difference.”

Saying it with a look of enlightenment, the girl shifted the focus of her ridicule to Subaru. Receiving such an unpleasant gaze, Subaru was aware of just how bad a compatibility he had with this girl.

“Well, I guess it’s fine.”

We’re originally just strangers who happened to meet. We don’t even know each other’s names, once we get out onto the main street I can turn my back and probably never meet her again in my life. Even though he could go out of his way to put up with unpleasant feelings, he didn’t have such an amiable personality to be able to get along with just anybody. The thing that Subaru hated the most was trying to spend time turning something he disliked into something he liked. While making this decision, he still wasn’t going to leave her until they were safely out onto the main street. That’s just the kind of person Subaru was.

The two continued on with their dangerous but friendly chat in this manner. Old Man Rom, the only person who could have intervened, was nowhere to be seen. He disliked going out onto the main street, and declined to accompany Subaru and the girl on their way. Although he hadn’t met the old man in a long time, from his aloof attitude he could infer the position Rom was in wasn't all too great.

For Subaru whose understanding of the slums and the capital was too shallow, he didn't realize just how valuable the loothouse was for the people of the slums there. However, judging from the conversation of the thugs earlier it seems Old Man Rom's situation was well known. Losing the loothouse, his situation certainly couldn't have gone in a rosier direction.

"It's a rather heartless story, not something I can do anything about though."

Even guessing what his situation was, there was nothing he could do for him. In a certain sense you could say that Subaru was the one responsible for destroying the loothouse in the first place. From Old Man Rom's perspective Subaru is the abominable villain that destroyed his livelihood. Even though Old Man Rom could have blamed him for it, he didn't hear anything about it from him. Old Man Rom's definitely a reasonable guy after-all. Thinking of how likeable Rom was, he only wished he could do something for him.

If I want to repay him, I have to at least find out where Felt went off to.

Even though it was a bit of a detour, following the route Old Man Rom told them they'd be able to get out safely to the main street. For the sake of his own well-being he naturally wanted to avoid meeting the thugs for a second time; other than the unpleasant chatter coming from the girl along the way he really didn't have any reason to complain.

"Thinking along those lines, it looks like we finally found the exit."

Breaking out from the winding alleyways, out from the darkness there was finally a ray of bright sunlight piercing through onto the street. Seeing an uninterrupted stream of people crossing, with all the liveliness it seems the place they wound up at was close to the business district. Thinking that his agony was over, Subaru turned to the girl.

"Now that we're back in the open, from now on you and I are no more than strangers. I've got to go look for my cute-cutey-companion and I'd like to avoid further trouble from sticking around with you. Your companion is probably looking for you desperately as well, just don't move around too much and they'll find you."

Cold-blooded, cold-hearted, and steeling himself for abuse, Subaru put his foot down between him and the girl firmly. Until now he had gotten wrapped up in the pace of things so there was a tinge of him getting back at her here, but he also judged that if he didn't say it plainly the girl in front of him probably wouldn't pick up on his intentions.

Possibly because he said it so clearly, the girl didn't appear to be taking it as 'working out in her favor.' Regardless, she didn't forget to laugh intrepidly.

"Something as obvious as thou and I being unrelated, there's no need to go out of one's way to say it. Thou are nothing more than one of countless pebbles placed for my stepping. There's no need for someone like me, who has personally received the favor of the world, to be related to likes of a stone on the road…

—it's not like it's bothering me."

Crossing her arms and puffing out her abundant chest, the girl glanced apprehensively at Subaru, averting her eyes when they met his. Her speech and actions were completely opposites. She was so obvious even the notoriously dim-witted Subaru could figure it out.

"You act arrogant yet you still care about what people think about you?! You're such a pain!"

"It's the world's natural order for me to be loved by all. Going against that truth, you're the one who's strange. Rather I'm the one who's shocked at your lack of common sense."

"While I'm rather confident in my lack of common sense, you're the last person I want to hear that from!"

As if the previously tense atmosphere was never there, Subaru raised his voice boldly and dove in. Even though, if he left now he'd only elicit some bitter feelings and be soon forgotten just like he preferred, but there was just something about her attitude. She was undoubtedly beautiful, and he didn't exactly hate this new side of her.

She was incredibly egotistical and spoke like she didn't care about other's feelings, yet she was afraid of being disliked.

Looking at her like this he couldn't settle down.

“Aah! Alright alright, I get it. I don't hate you, OK?”

Like he had somehow rid himself of his malicious tone, Subaru smiled bitterly while answering the girl. Seemingly dissatisfied with this, she scrunched her face in discontent, “So what?” she started out,

“Being loved is only natural. Thou say some obvious things.”

“Aww, that's right~ you have the mind of a baby and everyone loves the baby!~”

Making silly faces was a staple for when you go to a social gathering with the neighbor's baby. It's always been a hit with the mothers. Although at the time he hadn't necessarily been trying to make a silly face, that was just how he looked normally, so he had some bitter feelings remaining from that.

Using those sad memories from that unpleasant experience as a basis for his approach, he was sure it'd receive a standing ovation, but what was important was how the girl responded to it.

“Hmph, thou are a wretched fool.”

Far from laughing she let out a sigh, putting a finger to her forehead she closed her eyes and shook her head. Ignoring Subaru's face, still frozen in a funny look.

“I don't know if you're aware of it or not, but it appears your behavior is ingrained into your being. Hardly a charming feature. It's simply a brittle husk to hide your own weakness. I can't bear to watch your dumb face any further.”

“The first half you were saying some pretty serious things, but for the last part did you really have to comment my how my face looks?!”

“If you’re going to stubbornly continue with that, then it’s none of my concern.”

Wrapping up the conversation like that, she made no allusion to Subaru’s previous behavior. Losing his opportunity to put the strange look on his face back to normal, the girl said her part and tilted her head at him innocently while he was stuck with a warped expression on his face.

Subaru had no idea what she wanted to say. According to her actions or attitude or speech pattern she had no regard for other people. Even if he investigated this further he probably wouldn’t get a clear answer. Thinking along those lines, Subaru gave up on trying to decipher her previous statements.

In a sense, he deemed her an existence that was impossible to come to an understanding with, but on this occasion perhaps he was avoiding coming to terms with that. But, while he was still stuck on how he should respond, he didn’t get his opportunity to form a reply.

That’s because—

“Found you!”

The moment they came onto the street, the two were greeted by a voice. Unlike the darkness of the inner-alleys, out on the main street the sunlight beat down harshly from above. They poked their heads out from under darkness to a sunny spot; Subaru narrowed his eyes as they were scorched by the intense light.

A girl wearing a white robe almost enveloped in light was looking at Subaru. With a seemingly troubled, tired look, she scrunched her noble eyebrows; from under her hood, silver hair swayed in radiance. Among her well-kept looks, the relief on her face was shown plain alongside a warm smile, and a difficult to describe emotion flickered in her bluish-purple eyes.

With just one look at her beautiful face wearing such a worried look, he could tell just how much his going missing had weighed on her heart. While on one hand he was sorry about making her worry, having her worry so much about him made him somewhat happy as a man. The love relations between a man and a woman were a rather complex thing.

"Ah, Emili…"

Coming across the street just now, the person he wanted to meet the most came to see him. Being able to meet up earlier than expected, his face was beaming as he called out her name. But, that was all torn about abruptly with a sudden strong sense of foreboding.

Next to Emilia letting out her soft sigh of relief, there was the shadow of another person. He could tell it was a muscly man with a well-built body. The words that popped into Subaru's mind were "Mr. Netorare."

"Hey, what do you think you're doing! Who are you to Emilia-tan?!"

Stepping forward rapidly, he immediately wedged himself between Emilia and the other man. Hiding her behind his back, he pointed his finger and glared—the moment he thought "I'd love to see this bastard's face!" his face hardened.

"Oi oi, little lady. Your pal over here has a few screws loose. Is this going to be alright?"

Shrugging his shoulders like that, he called out to Emilia in a booming but friendly voice. His voice had a few hard to distinguish grumbles mixed in.

It was only natural considering his head was entirely covered with a jet-black color full face helmet. A helmet that concealed his entire face, if it was only that then it probably wouldn't have stood out so much. This was the capital after all, a great number and variety of people travel back and forth along these roads. The likes of which naturally included those dressed as knights and sorcerers, you could say that type of outfit was rather popular. If he was going around with full body armor Subaru probably wouldn't be this surprised.

Even so, Subaru was dumbfounded by this man's appearance. That was because this man was not wearing a full armor suit, but was dressed in a strange manner not like what was usually seen in the capital.

"Immediately getting treated like a home-wrecker by a girly-man like you, this is new even for me. Gets me excited."

"Right back at you, your fashion sense is terrible."

"Hey kid, you don't know how to talk to your elders. I'm a cool dude, so I'll let you off this time but if you get on my bad side your head's gonna' fly."

Faced with the maniacally screaming and pointing Subaru, the man happily tapped on his own neck demonstratively.

His irregularity didn't stop at his head—no, I suppose it was irregular precisely because it did stop at his head.

A jet-black full-face helmet. From the neck below, normally there would be a set of matching armor. But, in reality there was no armor below the neck, instead he had on some light linen attire made from cheap looking materials. It didn't look like it was made from special material or anything like that, it was just some simple light garb. It wasn't just his shirt, his pants were the same way, and on top of it all he was even wearing Japanese-style wooden sandals.

That combination already didn't make any sense. In terms of style, Subaru's jersey was already considered pretty weird but it was nothing compared to this guy's outfit. He couldn't rule out that this was maybe the standard outfit in this world, but…

"It isn't like that, right Emilia-tan?!"

"Don't worry, I was surprised by his appearance too."

“Yep, she was really surprised, it was cute. When she asked to join me after learning I was looking for a lost kid, it was my turn to be surprised!”

With a giggling laugh, the man readily recounted his encounter with Emilia. Hearing this, Subaru stared vacantly at Emilia,

“Emilia-tan, even though being super-nice is one of your good points, you should choose more wisely. Do you know why a poisonous mushroom looks poisonous? It’s because it wants you to think “Huh, that’s poisonous. I probably shouldn’t eat that because I’d die.” It’s telling you that to prevent any damage before it occurs you know?”

“Oi oi, hearing that it’s almost like you’re saying I’m somebody dangerous, that’s a bit harsh you know?”

“For someone as blatantly suspicious looking as you, from where I’m from if you even got in the vicinity of a child you’d get reported immediately. They’d hold a community assembly at the nearby elementary schools warning about you.”

It was to the level that they’d be circulating flyers about a suspicious man just because you walked down the street. This was maybe going a bit too far, but it was probably Subaru’s prejudice against him than an actual concern for the children.

While continuing those baseless delusions et cetera, Subaru turned to Emilia.

“Anyways. Emilia-tan, aren’t I always telling you to watch out for cars and men? Especially the men, if you so much as give them a smile they’re all wolves that will… wait, are you angry?”

“Since you seem to have some things you want to say, I’m just wondering if you remember what I had asked you to do. I don’t mean it in a bad way.”

He poked a hornet’s nest; regretting his poor choice of words he felt like burying his face. Fortunately for him what seemed to soon be a lecture was unexpectedly interrupted. The one taking that action wasn't one of the 3 participants in the current conversation,

"Hmph, to be waiting here at my intended destination, thou sure pay a lot of attention to details. Thou hast a more commendable spirit than I first thought, Al."

"…Honestly, it's more of an accidental fluke of a coincidence, but if I said that it'd put princess in a bad mood. Too annoying, so I'll just play along with it. Aah, it's just as you say!"

As the girl stepped forward, haughtily addressing him—the man called Al laughed heartily. Taking his giant arm he tousled the girl's orange-colored hair messily with his hand."

"Nothing bad about coincidences, but the fellow you're looking for and the person I'm looking seem to be fellow travelers. This must be something like fate or something."

"It was just the red string pulling Emilia and I together, I refuse to believe there's anything like fate between us and you two!"

"You're never at a loss for words, huh."

Raising a grumbling laugh at Subaru's response, Al waved the hand that had been rubbing the girl's head. From some time ago, he had been only using his right hand. That was perfectly natural of course. After all, for the man in front of him, in the spot that one would normally have a left-arm there was nothing there.

One arm and a black helm. Not to mention his light clothes unsuited for his overbearing body. Going from the sound of his voice and his looks aside from his face, this was probably someone more experienced and older than him. Despite this, he didn't seem to inspire an air of superiority, probably because his attitude was as frivolous as his clothes.

Putting it in a good way, 'friendly'. Putting it in a bad way, 'this guy has ADHD."

"Speaking of it, you're this girl's companion aren't you! What happened to her retainer being a 'neat-and-tidy beautiful girl who gets run around and is always troubled by her master' type person that I was promised?!”

“Things never work out that well, you’ll have to make due with a middle-aged man like me. —Hmm, what’s wrong little lady?”

Facing Subaru who couldn’t hide his dissatisfaction at having his expectations betrayed, the big-hearted man brought up Emilia in a dubious manner.

From the man’s attitude Subaru belatedly realized something was wrong with Emilia.

Something was strange with Emilia, she had went silent a little while ago and wasn’t participating in their conversation. She had nonchalantly hidden her face behind the corners of her hood, and seemed to be hiding behind Subaru’s back to obstruct other’s view of her. As for who she could be hiding from, there was only one person it could be. You could immediately tell who it was, even without doing something like calculating the angle from where she was standing.

“What, why are thou staring at me? Now that you know we’re parting are you starting to miss my beautiful face? While it’s true I have sinfully good looks it’s still rude to stare like that.”

“Sorry, but if it’s beautiful ladies then I’m in no shortage. We’ve both found the people we were looking for, so it’s probably about time we head our separate ways.”

He responded coldly to the girl’s words, the person Emilia seemed to be hiding from, but the person he was really speaking to was Al rather than the girl.

He didn’t know why, but Emilia didn’t seem to want to make her existence known here. In that case he’d take her feelings into account and oblige her. In order to do that, rather than negotiating with the person who wouldn’t get it at all, he should try the person who would probably understand his intentions.

It wasn’t certain or not on whether he grasped the inner workings of Subaru’s mind, but Al didn’t appear to particularly deny anything that was said.

“Well, that’s fine I guess. You know I’m dead-tired from having to deal with Princess here.”

“…The amount of sympathy I have for you is no small amount. No, seriously.”

“If you hang out with broad minded adults, it’s not that tiring. Looking for that in a kid the same age as you would be unfair, so I don’t.”

Shrugging his shoulders at Subaru’s relatively serious words, Al lowered his eyes from the girl. You couldn’t tell from under his helmet, but his expression was somewhat close to that of a father’s affection for their daughter. It was no doubt a difficult relationship, or so he felt vaguely.

“Alright, we’re going to be going in this direction… what about you?”

“We’re heading that way too.”

“… Alright, then we’re going in the other direction.”

“Then we’ll go in that direction too…”

“You’re such a pain, did you fall in love with me or something?! This easily? Are you a girl in a gal-game?”

“It’s just a small joke, thou are so fussy. A boring man leads a boring life to a boring death.”

Right up until the end she was calling him boring. Together with her escort in tow, she walked off into the distance majestically. Her back showed no hesitation, even though it was something he wanted in the first place, getting thrown away so resolutely wasn’t fun at all.

As such, Subaru put together a final revenge for the departing girl.

“Hey, pompous girl, catch this”

“It seems you look down on me quite a bit. Al, I order you to take this fools head…”

Saying some dangerous words, the girl turned her head; her red eyes opened lightly. Her eyes traced a parabola, following the path of Subaru’s poorly thrown appa. Aiming for the two appa’s slow trajectory, the girl received them snuggly in her arms. Making sure she had caught it, Subaru smiled.

“You can have it, my appa of friendship. Next time be careful to not get reeled in by any bad adults using appa as bait.”

“I wasn’t in the back alleys for such a moronic reason.”

“The image I have of you is already set. Anyways, just take it.”

Using some rough logic he forced the appas on her, taking Emilia’s arm he turned his back on the pair. Just a little before turning around, he was starting to regret not putting his arm around Emilia, if it was earlier she probably wouldn’t have refused him. He had to convince himself to be satisfied with holding hands.

From across the street, facing towards the quickly departing Subaru and Emilia for the last time.

“Little lady, thanks for helping me find who I was looking for!”

With a muffled voice; nevertheless the feelings put into it were conveyed.

2

Bidding farewell to the haughty girl and her mismatched guardian, after walking down the street for a short-while Subaru slowed down to a stop.

“Hey, Emilia-tan. They’re gone now, so do you mind telling me what that was about?”

Looking at the surroundings, Subaru called out to Emilia who had similarly stopped walking. The girl had been silent up until now. Because she had been hiding under her hood the whole time, even Subaru wasn’t able to see what facial expressions she was making.

During the conversation back there, he was worried he had done something to displease her. Thinking that,

“Um, sorry Subaru. I was spacing out a little.”

Emilia muttered, blinking her eyes and abruptly coming back to her senses. At the very least, hearing her say that made him relieved, hiding that sense of relief in his chest he played around.

“Are you sure you should space out around me? I could take that chance to do some things that can’t be said out loud”

“Things that can’t be said out loud…?”

At Subaru’s words, who was now wagging his finger side to side, a wave was set off in her bluish-purple eyes. Seeing that ripple in her big eyes, Subaru tilted his head

“Yeah, things that are beyond description. Emilia-tan, before you even know it you’ll be mesmerized by my golden-finger, before long I’ll make it so your body can’t live a day without me… Huh, is it just my imagination or did it suddenly get a lot colder in here?!”

“I don’t think it’s just your imagination.”

Subaru felt the physical sensation of a faint cold wave of air on the back of his neck. At the same time he felt a ringing in his head, the exact same type of sensation that he felt an hour earlier with the forced telepathy.

Experiencing the unbridled wrath of Emilia’s guardian, a grey kitty whose figure was nowhere to be seen, Subaru gestured frantically with a cold sweat.

“What I mean is, you know, that. I’m an upstanding son of Japan, one-track manly person with good morals, that’s why I’d never do something horrible like that without consent. The first time is us enjoying the night sky together at a suite, it’s no good unless we properly tell each other our feelings right… right?”

With his previous statement, he picked up a sigh from somewhere unseen. Seeing he had somehow or another managed to escape punishment, he felt like another weight was lifted from his shoulders. Seeing Subaru like this, Emilia frowned lightly.

“Subaru. —That girl earlier”

“Hmm, what is it, Emilia-tan are you jealous? Do you feel like baking some yakimochi? Seriously, I pushed on through these grueling two weeks—finally, the day my effort is rewarded has come!”

“—Subaru.”

Putting voice to his desires so naturally, he interrupted Emilia’s words. In return she interrupted his words in an even stronger tone, calling his name. From the seriousness of her expression, the look in her bluish-purple eyes filled with vigor, even someone like Subaru felt alarmed and quit his jokes.

“H-Huh? Emilia-tan, why are you making such a serious face…”

“I’m begging you Subaru, please don’t treat this like a joke. Why were you together with that girl?”

It was like Emilia was investigating something about Subaru. Uneasy about her request, he raced to think of an explanation she’d accept. With that, Subaru had an unusually earnest mindset.

“Finally found you! Making us go through all that trouble.”

As if dubbing over the two’s conversation, a rough and vulgar anger-filled voice interrupted them.

Surprised, Subaru looked around the surroundings in astonishment. In a street that just a little while ago should have been crowded with people, looking at it now they were surrounded by rough and dangerous looking men. Leading the bunch was the big and strong looking one of the three stooges. Although the other two were nowhere to be seen, the big stooge stood grinning at Subaru’s group who stood frozen in place.

“You sure made a fool of us back there. I’ve been looking for you and the girl for awhile now, gotta’ repay the favor.”

“…For a little tiny dispute you’re going to call your friends and get revenge? I’m a bit disappointed in you. No matter how much you were made fun of, no matter how frustrated, you’d never let others wipe your own ass for you. You made an oath to settle all debts yourself. Even though I’ve always… always! Always believed you were that kind of man!”

“Cut it with that sentimental crap, you don’t know me!”

Listening to the abuse and spittle hurtling at him, Subaru quietly observed his surroundings. The men who were blocking both sides of the road were roughly 15 or 16 in number. They all had weapons that were intended to not stand out too much—holding short poles or knives in their hands, they were probably pretty effective at chasing away potential onlookers. It certainly didn’t seem like there were any civilians around to get caught up in the mix. If they reported it, he wondered if the guards would notice the incident and come running eventually. Whether they’d make it in time like Reinhard with his hero-like perfect timing was a bit of a gamble though.

On top of escape being difficult, waiting for someone to save them was unrealistic in this situation. As such, the most effective method of making it out alive from this situation…

“Although it’s a bit pathetic, my best bet is to rely on Puck and Emilia.”

Picking up his ears, Puck admired Subaru’s refreshing extent of reliance on others. Subaru nodded exaggeratedly at his own words, said without even a hint of sarcasm. He stood out in front of Emilia, as if he were dancing.

“So, for that reason I’m going to give you guys an advanced warning. This is just a word of advice, if you attack us you’re going to be the ones to regret it.”

“You blind? Look at our numbers! You punk, I can understand showing off in front of your girl, but the one that's gonna' be screamin and cryin in pain is you."

"Don't jump to conclusions. The one that'll beat the hell out of you isn't me, it's this cutey behind me."

"The hell, at least try to show off a little in front of your girl?!"

Subaru comfortably ignored the stooge's angry shouts

"Now then," he turned to Emilia while gesturing his arm towards the men surrounding them.

"Now that I've decided to rely on your help, I leave the rest up to you. If you'll do the honors Emilia-tan. Cleaning 'em up with just a light beating will do. If you want you can make them into snow sculptures and we'll have a snow festival here in Lugnica."

"I took a quick peak into your mind for a bit, you sure are saying some scary things… However, it doesn't seem like there's really a need to go that far."

Lining up the street with newly minted ice sculptures, he was thinking about naming it the Eternal Force Blizzard street until his thoughts got leaked to Puck. "Hmm?" Subaru wondered, after hearing his words.

"—I came here following your scent, but what's with this ruckus?"

Saying an ominous line from the sky, a certain blue-haired maid came falling from above.

Holding the hem of her skirt while flipping through the air, a sound effect not unlike an explosion sounded out accompanying Rem's landing— Blowing away the cloud of dust with a wave of her hand, everyone's eyes were focused on her.

"So, Subaru. Don't you have something to say to say to Rem?"

"Rem, you're a supermaid with seriously good timing! I've fallen in love with you again!"

“If you praise me so much I’ll get bothered”

While the stooge’s stooges were on their toes from Rem’s sudden entrance, Rem and Subaru fell into their normal daily routine. Rem fidgeting from side to side, her face red from Subaru’s praise. The first to act was the big stooge, a vein bulging from listening to the two’s conversation.

Rem’s figure was perfectly positioned between Subaru and the stooge. With a scary face the stooge grabbed Rem’s shoulder angrily,

“Hey, you out-of-place maid. I was having a talk with that friend of yours o—”

The threatening words he had expertly seasoned with his veteran experience as a thug were cut short before he could even get the full sentence out, ephemeral like a fleeting dream.

Pulled by his shirt collar up into the air by Rem, the stooge was thrown onto the ground head first. As he got closer to the ground his body tumbled slowly, the whites of his eyes showing, unable to move out of shock.

I don’t think he’s dead. Definitely… Probably… Maybe…

“These are the people who threatened Subaru and Lady Emilia, correct?”

Rem said in a deep voice, no emotion showing on her face as she entered into work mode. Considering that she subtly listed Subaru’s name first it seems like her priorities still weren’t fully in order. While thinking that strange thought, he had a bit of sympathy for the obviously shocked group of thugs. Saying a prayer for them in his heart out of compassion, it was the least he could do.

“Rem”

“Yes.”

“Don’t kill them, ok?”

“Yes, Rem will only kill them 3/4ths.”

Deciding she would only 75% kill them, Rem leisurely got to work. There were some who threw things at her in desperation. There were some who turned tail and tried to flee. And then there were some who couldn’t quite grasp what was going on and just clutched their knees in fear.

—Facing all that, she rained down punishment on them, distributing it evenly.”

“Wow! Amazing.”

Watching the figures of several people easily thrown through the air, Subaru muttered dumbfounded. He was completely taken in by the brawl that was coming to a close, so much so that he didn’t notice the pair of bluish-purple eyes staring at him quietly, isolated from the chaos.

“—Subaru”

Towards her pleading mumbles, he was completely oblivious.

3

In the other direction, after separating from Subaru and the others Al and the girl were magnificently causing their own commotion.

Walking briefly after separating from Subaru’s group, in a section of the road where there were strangely few people they were surrounded by a group of men using the same modus operandi. These were led by the two remaining stooges, with the addition of those two this group was slightly larger.

Compared to Subaru, the girl’s physical looks probably attracted their attention more. Or, it could be that she had simply made them more angry than Subaru had.

“Since it’s like that, we’re going to put you through a little bit of pain. A little, just a little bit.”

Laughing vulgarly, the short stooge looked at the girl’s body with lewd eyes. The other men surrounding them similarly had a greedy light reflected in them, as for what they'd do after they caught her, it was obviously something you can't say out loud.

And, speaking of the girl being stared at like this with lewd eyes,

"…Hmph, what a bitter pleasure. The insides are unmistakably that of an Appa. With this it appears that fool earlier was right, he didn't just paint the fruit red as a jest. What a shock, who knew that appa were actually red?"

"Uh-umm, Princess, do you realize what's happening?"

Cutting the appa in her hand with a short knife, the girl put the piece in her mouth seemingly unconcerned with the surrounding men. Seeing this, the extent of the hoodlum's rage intensified; acting as a proxy for the men's feelings Al put voice to their concerns. That's right tell 'em! The men's spirits were united; the girl looked questioning at Al who called out to her.

"Get to the point. I hate circuity more than anything."

"Then I'll just say it straight. —You have two appa there, so isn't one of those mine?"

"Haa? What foolishness. Listen, that fool threw these two appa and I caught them both. In which case, these are both mine."

Letting out a tired sigh, Al shrugged his shoulders; seeking sympathy from the surrounding men. But, the men whose trust had been betrayed by what question he chose to ask, had a different response than he expected.

"Oh oh, they're really out for blood. They can't take even one playful joke, how mean."

"I'm not joking. I won't give any of the appas. They're both mine."

Even behind the helmet it was obvious Al was smiling bitterly at the obstinate girl. From their back and forth, it was the straw that broke the camel's back for the hoodlums.

Displaying obvious hostility, they closed in on their prey, shrinking the enclosure as they slowly approached. They too had noticed the irregularity of Al's appearance, but after considering his shabby clothing and missing arm they had judged if they grouped up on him he probably wasn't a threat. Towards this group that seemed accustomed to ganging up on a single person, Al let out a sigh of admiration mixed with cynicism before turning back to the girl.

"So, Princess. What course of action does the world will?"

"Whatever I choose it to. You should already know that, Al"

"More or less."

Nodding in satisfaction at his words, the girl took another bite from the appa. Puckering her face from its sour sweet flavor, an angelic smile formed on her charming face.

"I'm in a good mood right now. It's fine if you don't kill them."

Like she was plucking the wings off an insect, a smile as innocent as an angel's formed naturally on her lips. Hearing those words Al turned to face the men. Swinging his arm to his waist, he grasped the handle of the thick sword hanging on his hip. The sword grated slowly as he pulled it out of its sheath. He made that his background music.

"—Aye, Ma'am."

With violent vividity, a bloody smile was born under his jet-black helmet.

Chapter 11:
Three heads are Better than One, for Sinister Schemes

1

—As they continued glaring at each other for an excruciating amount of time, Subaru became uncomfortably aware of the droplets of sweat running down his brow.

What a big room. There were two beds on the far side, and near the door was a space that could easily fit Subaru's room from his home world. In that space was packages brought in and neatly organized, but the space could easily accommodate those things without becoming crowded.

If Subaru stood in the center of the room and enacted a fight, he'd encounter no obstacles at all.

"You don't plan to let me pass no matter what, do you?"

Subaru asked, painfully aware of his dry lips and throat that had gone rough out of nervousness.

It was a deep voice, to hide his trembling. Then as a response, the obstruction in front of him, the one blocking Subaru's path, opened his arms, firmly blocking the door from Subaru's view.

Recognizing the futility of trying to get past that posture, Subaru latched onto a glimmer of hope, putting out an entreating look. For a second, Subaru could see a slight wavering in her eyes, but her professionalism quickly recovered and any hesitation vanished.

"Even if your request was to do so, Subaru cannot leave here."

The one blocking the way—Rem—looked straight at Subaru, and said bluntly. Subaru sighed at her obstinance, and jokingly shrugged his shoulders.

"Well, just calm down and think about it. I've already been left behind, and moreover it's not as if I have any big power or influence. Therefore, even if I left this room, there's not much I could do. You get it, right?"

Repeating himself, Subaru presses Rem urgently in an effort to ease Rem's anxiety.

Hearing Subaru's words, she said, "yes," smiling cutely.

"Certainly if you think about normally, Subaru's wish wouldn't come true if he were to just leave this room. It's not as if it's an easy place to find, and hypothetically, if Subaru were to make it there, Rem still can't think of anything you could do."

"Right?"

"That is merely the conclusion Rem can draw from common sense."

Shutting him down flatly, Rem looks at Subaru unsmilingly. Having been scrutinized from head to toe, Subaru adjusted his posture. Then the girl continued.

"However, in Subaru's case, it is impossible to tell what kind of strange methods will be uses to achieve his goal. It could be a solution that is beyond Rem's imagination."

"You sound like you've been taken over by a demon; I can't tell if you trust me or you don't trust me. It's not like I've done anything above your expectations?!"

"If Subaru thinks so, then that must be. From his perspective, that is."

Subaru tried to gently correct Rem's thoughts, but Rem, who had already solidly constructed an image of Subaru, was unswayed.

Either way, it was quite the difficult situation, having to persuade her to let him pass using his words. Maybe it was better to create a path a different way.

"That's quite a high level topic. It's the same as what you said in the beginning."

Scratching his head while sighing, Subaru narrowed his eyes as if thinking while looking at Rem. No, his line of sight was actually beyond him—to beyond the door to the room where Emilia and Roswaal had left Subaru behind.

2

"—What? Housesitting?!"

Breakfast had just ended, and everyone was about to return to their rooms when Subaru, who was just told his task for the day, shouted in surprise.

In front of the shocked Subaru was Emilia and Rem.

The one who had caused Subaru to yell in the first place, Emilia, put her hand on her hip, saying, "isn't it obvious?"

"You haven't forgotten why you've come all the way to the capital, have you? You've come to check on the welfare your acquaintance, and to recuperate. That was a promise."

"Yeah well that second half is up to interpretation…"

"DEFINITELY not! It's not fun and games, so we can't allow any outsiders. We can't even bring Rem."

To the Emilia who had adopted an unusually threatening tone, it was bad for Subaru, who had made a mistake yesterday, to protest with a slip of the tongue. As if to look for help, he looked to Rem, who was standing in the corner of the room, but the blue-haired maid only shook her head to his supplication.

"All the same, Rem cannot be Subaru's ally in this situation. Lord Roswaal has made his intentions known, and Lady Emilia's opinion is correct. Please listen to them."

"Shit, I'm alone in this, huh. But if I think of yesterday's mishap, I can't even say anything. This sucks!"

Even Rem, who generally took Subaru's side, had her priorities in order.

With yesterday's failure— In short, because of the stray child incident when he disobeyed command, Subaru had his movements severely limited within the capital.

Regarding this, Subaru had little to say by way of excuse because he too recognized his own failures, and hoping for another meeting with Old Man Rom and the fruit stand man was not a big problem. Though it was a bit of a shock to himself that the people he most wanted to see were a bunch of dirty old men.

"Nah, I was just thinking I wanted to see Felt again, so that shouldn't be a problem. People connected to the throne are 3/4ths men… Though 6/7 of them are absurd!

There was no way to increase the proportion of girls in the group of people he wanted to see again without including Elsa. It's an alternate-universe fantasy, after all, so why the heck were there only flags for male character story routes?

"It's fine, at least I have the main heroine flag…"

"If you keep grumbling to yourself like that, I'll start to get reaaally suspicious."

The one who was the main heroine, Emilia, said this with reproachful eyes, and all Subaru could do was stay silent without a peep. Seeing that Subaru had run out of refusals or hair-splitting arguments, Emilia gave a satisfied nod, saying,

"It won't take that long… At least I'd like to say that, but I have no idea how long it will take today. So have your meals with Rem. If you wait for us, we'll definitely keep you for a while."

"Humph. Well if Emilia-tan says so so sternly, I have ideas of my own. Right, Rem? Let's dine like kings today!"

"Negative. Today's menu is roast appas followed by appa salad. Appa pie made with plenty of appa jam. After the meal will be juice extracted from appas that I've also prepared."

"What is this endless appa?! Damn you, Scarface!!"

Blind to the fact that he was the one that had carried nine or so appas home himself, Subaru visualized the scary face of the fruit stand man floating in the air. Returning the thumbs up of the vision who was smiling brightly at him, Subaru smilied with his teeth showing, as it had come to this.

“That’s fine. Appas are my favorite fruit, after all! Seriously, it’s Appa Night Fever! The two of us will eat them all up!”

“Definitely not. Rem is a maid with sense, so she will not hinder Subaru, who likes appas so much. All of the food will be served to Subaru.”

“Why is it you’re so merciless when it comes to me?!”

Subaru yelled at Rem, who always bore in mind her position, or rather, bore in mind how to use her position to her advantage. While watching their comedy sketch-like exchange, Emilia looked thoughtful, then turned her head to the side as if trying to shake off an idea.

“Anyways, I’m leaving everything to Rem. Though I think she was also told the same thing by Roswaal, but I’ve left strict instructions. —I’m serious, okay?”

“For you to have thought this through so much, you must really care about me, Emilia-tan!”

For emphasis, Subaru made a thumbs-up at Emilia.

Emilia, who was already used to his gestures, used her palm to push down his outstretched hand. Subaru caught his breath at the sudden contact. And with that, any opposition he had to the previous conversation they were having became extraordinarily weak.

As if she hadn’t noticed the change in Subaru’s attitude, Emilia said,

“Subaru. I’m not asking for much.”

“Y-Yeah?”

“Please, just let me trust you.”

She said closing her eyes, as if supplicating him. For that moment, Subaru lost the ability to think.

Her words reverberated in his head, as he mulled them over, replayed them, until he understood exactly what she meant and felt by those words, then said,

“Ah, aah! All of it, I’ll do it all! I’ll succeed your expectations! As if I only live for them!”

He responding with resounding positives, as if he hadn’t understood what she was talking about. As long as he agreed to it now then fulfilled it later.

Emilia fixed her purple-blue eyes at Subaru, whose assurances were undeniably flippant, and looked at him unhappily, quietly grumbling,

“Alright. —I trust you.”

3

Now, our story comes back to the beginning.

Emilia and Roswaal had made their way to the capital, and Subaru, who had been left behind at their lodgings under Rem’s surveillance, spent some time copying writing.

At this time, Subaru had basically mastered all of the “I writing system,” and was now working on the “Ro writing system.” If the “I writing system” was the equivalent of the Japanese hiragana system, then the “Ro writing system” would be similar to katakana, the shape of the characters was different but the underlying logic behind it was mostly the same, with this new mastery he predicted it wouldn’t take nearly as much time to learn as the first.

Around an hour and a half after Subaru had begun copying the Ro characters, Subaru, who usually enjoyed studying, had gotten tired. Not so much of the studying, but more of having to stay in one place.

To Subaru, studying how to write was letting this alternate world into himself, and wasn't a bad feeling at all. This is why he looked forward to studying every day without a single complaint.

However, if the thing on the other end of the scales was Emilia, it wasn't even a question as to which one was more important.

Subaru stood up, preparing to walk slowly towards the outside of the room until he was masterfully intercepted by Rem.

When Subaru had said, "I'm going to pick some flowers," the maid who was simultaneously in charge of cleaning the room, taking care of the luggage, and managing/tutoring Subaru in his studies, immediately realized true meaning behind Subaru's words.

That is, his scheme to escape the inn and head for the capital.

He felt no small amount of guilt, since he was essentially breaking his promise with Emilia.

Rem had seen Emilia's well-founded uneasiness, and was watching Subaru's movements carefully as ordered.

And, while Subaru understood that all, he still couldn't bear to stay holed up waiting in his room.

"She only has bad memories of the capital, so she's probably scared stiff…"

Last time Emilia went to the capital, she suffered just as much hardship as he worried she would.

Probably, in spite of having arriving at the capital secretly, enemies who want the insignia would probably take it, and maybe her life along with it.

Subaru knew that if hadn't been there, she would have met that fate.

—If he recalled the day they met, Subaru couldn't place himself if he wasn't aware.

Having suddenly been summoned to an alternate world, Subaru hadn't been given a single thing that could be called a mission. On the surface, his insolence was disguised through positivity, but on the inside, you could only call him rash and reckless.

In short, he was basically the same inside and out, so it was undeniable that the developments up til now that let to him being in his current situation were not in his control.

However,

"People who just go with the flow should swim to and choose which currents to follow."

Without denying that he had simply followed along up to this point, he could also have chosen options that did not lead to this point. And the reason he was here now, was because he had chosen so.

Subaru, who was dropped into an alternate world without so much as a goal.

It's because he had that perspective that he was now thinking about turning his powerless situation around.

If he wasn't given a mission, he simply had to decide on one himself.

"Let's go save Emilia."

It wasn't just because he had been saved by her.

It was because the feeling of wanting to become Emilia's strength brimmed over from the bottom of his heart.

"That's the power of love!"

"What did Subaru say just now?"

"Sorry, it was kind of serious, so having to say it again is embarrassing,"

That was Subaru's one-sentence answer to Rem, who had asked him with her head tilted. Then, Subaru collected himself by clearing his throat, and set his mind in full operation in order to break through the obstacle in front of him.

Even if he managed to escape this place, he couldn't think of a single way to get to the capital. But none of that mattered if he didn't manage to escape this place first.

Regarding that, it was more Subaru's style to force things rather than go with the flow.

"Although the situation's badness doesn't really change."

Getting past Rem, who was standing imposingly with arms outstretched, was like clearing an insanely difficult last boss.

The difference between their physical abilities were evident, not to mention Subaru wasn't even in his best condition. An attack from behind would probably be rendered ineffective by that huge difference in strength, and Subaru had nothing up his sleeve to change the power imbalance either.

He also considered casting Shamak and running away under the cover of the black smoke, but he would definitely faint after breathing in the smoke because he didn't have any Bokko fruit with him. After all, the use of Bocco fruit was strictly banned in every corner of the residence.

Because of this, Subaru was boxed in. Subaru, who wasn't using any cheat codes to make his brain faster and sharper, was all out of ideas.

That is—,

"Woa…no way, it's!"

"Subaru?"

Subaru's face suddenly lost all color, as he clutched his forehead, trembling furiously.

Seeing Subaru in this unusual state, knees trembling and breath rough, Rem panickingly outstretched her arms and gently supported him by the shoulder.

“What has happened, Subaru? Don’t tell Rem you’re despairing at the recklessness of your ideas…?!”

“How low would my score be if you gave my worth to you a number? I can’t, I can’t… Ugh, so painful…”

Even while being supported, Subaru clutched his chest as he went to his knees, gasping at the pain. Seeing this, Rem too kneeled and nestled closer to him, saying,

“Subaru’s head was hurting, but now it’s his chest? Is Subaru alright?”

“Huh, was it my head? No, my chest hurts… It must be that…”

“The shallow atmosphere is showing a little, but do you know the cause?”

Seeing Subaru’s shallow anguish, Rem’s worries were sky high. Hearing this, Subaru gripped Rem’s collar as if holding on for dear life, brought their faces close, and opened his mouth tremblingly,

“—Ma”

“Ma?”

“—Mayonnaise deficiency.”

He asked himself if this was really the only idea he had, and one he had already used once already.

However, once he had said it, he had to see it to the fullest. This was Natsuki Subaru’s unwavering policy. The unwavering spirit of an uninteresting male.

“This deficiency happens to mayonnaise lovers who don’t get enough mayonnaise… Thanks to you, Rem, it was alleviated til now, but now that the house has been empty for a day… the symptoms advanced.”

“No way… What should Rem do…?”

Make me some mayonnaise… If I just could just suck on some mayonnaise, you could save my life… Oof, it hurts…”

Subaru, who couldn’t even raise his body to a standing position, fell over sideways even as he was clinging to Rem. Putting Subaru’s head on her knee, while stroking the suffering Subaru’s forehead, she murmurered softly,

“Mayonaise… I’d have to prepare the eggs, oil, and other ingredients, but…”

“It hurts… I’ll die. Please, Rem. Only you… I can only depend on you…”

“—Subaru can only depend on Rem?”

She couldn’t look at the suffering Subaru. So she wouldn’t know if anything changed during the time she had averted her eyes.

Hung out to dry between her own feelings and the orders she received, Rem was wavering, but but it seemed as if Subaru’s final words were the decisive blow.

“Only Rem!”

She balled her hands into hard fists, muttering with force,

“I understand! Please, leave it up to Rem!”

“Ouch! And oof!”

Rem stood up suddenly. Because of that, Subaru’s head fell from her knees, and he hit the back of his head, and moreover, his rib was crushed by the overeager Rem’s heel. It didn’t seem that Rem, whose enthusiasm had reached maximum levels, had noticed her own act of violence. Just like that, she put herself in order speedily, saying,

“Well then, Rem will quickly go get the ingredients and make mayonaise! Subaru, don’t sleep there on the floor, please rest properly in bed.”

“The fainting… is connected… to mayonaise…”

“Huh? Yes, I know. Rem will do her best for Subaru. The dawn… fufu, Rem lookS forward to it.”

She interpreted Subaru’s words as he was fainting in agony, and leaving behind an unusually cute smile, Rem fled the room.

Clutching his chest in pain, Subaru watched her disappear around the corner, confirming his success. He confirmed it indeed, but due to the accident earlier, he was unable to move for a while.

By and large the pain started to disappear, and while patting the back of his head which had begun to swell, Subaru stood up, then dusted his clothes that had been in contact with the floor before looking around,

“I can’t believe such a bad plan actually worked. I’m a little worried about Rem’s future, but I’ve been saved by her simpleness today.”

His rib and the back of his head were necessary sacrifices.

Having gained a pathway simply by exchanging a bit of pain was surely a good deal.

“All that’s left to do now is to leave a note to Rem, then run away quickly. It’d be bad if I left through the door and bumped into her…”

He left a scribbled note on the table, then opened a window and looked down. The room was on the second floor, so it wasn’t extremely dangerous to climb down by tying a sash to something. Under the window was a fairly empty alley, so there was probably little chance he would be mistaken for an underwear thief as he climbed down.

“Well, better get going. It’s not like climbing into my old house through the balcony to surprise my parents when I was young was just for show, anyways.”

He was an expert at climbing up and down the pipes and such that went around his house. His window was barred with iron, so he also developed the skill of squeezing his body through the spaces. He dubbed this skill “rubbermen”, which for some reason when naming it he made it plural.

Digging up these old memories, Subaru grabbed the sides of the window, and jumped down tumbling towards the capital’s road with little hesitation.

4

—Shortly after Subaru secretly slipped out of his room.

“…Even so, for Subaru to actually believe Rem was fooled by a trick like that is a bit of a shock.”

In the middle of the otherwise unpopulated room, Rem, who had just returned, muttered to herself while touching the table.

She retrieved the note left on the table she was touching. There, in hastily scribbled, barely legible I characters were written, “I’ll be back soon.”

Although she didn’t understand it, she could tell from Subaru’s personality that it was meant to be some obscure reference or joke.

“He didn’t really have to jump through the window… Rem wouldn’t have tried to stop him from leaving the room.”

This was the result of her pretending to have left through the door and hiding herself in the depths of a corridor. Once she had sensed that there was no human presence in the room and returned, she discovered the wide-open window and the note—and realized he had left through a rather dangerous method.

“…Geez, Subaru really can’t be helped…”

Contrary to the words she muttered, the expression on her face held a hint of happiness.

She was the one Subaru left the message for. The contents aside, it was unmistakably a letter addressed to her. Folding it neatly, she tucked it into the inner pocket of her maid uniform, treating it preciously.

"—Still, Rem wonders what Lord Roswaal is thinking."

Hands on her cheeks, Rem tilted her head, wondering about the meaning behind her master's order. It was an order she was given this morning by her just-awoken master.

Specifically, "Do not interfere with Natsuki Subaru's movements. Even if you were to be ordered to by Emilia."

When Rem tried to ask the reason, she was simply met with a silent refusal. Thus, as a servant, she had no choice but to comply quietly. She felt some amount of guilt for going against Emilia's orders, but her hierarchy in terms of masters unmistakably placed Roswaal above Emilia. Although as an exception, Subaru was somewhere in that hierarchy.

Regardless,

"—please, come back safely, Subaru."

She didn't think he was the type to have dashed off without a plan, but even so he was the type of boy to come running to the aid of others without regards for his own well-being. The only thing she could do was to pray for his wish to be fulfilled, and that he didn't encounter too much harm in the process of fulfilling it.

—Rem was wishing too much for the former, and much too optimistic about the latter.

Rem, who generally held Subaru in higher regard than he was worth, closed the window he left from, turning around to face the room. Shaking her head as if forget her troubles, Rem immersed herself in the work befitting her role as a maidservant.

Like this, Natsuki Subaru was let loose into the capital for a second time. As to whether he was playing into the palm of someone else's hand, that much was unclear.

5

“And so, for that reason Natsuki Subaru has been running around aimlessly,”

The rubberman Subaru who had jumped down into the capital without a scratch thought to himself—his mind refreshingly empty of thought.

He didn’t have a way to make it into the castle by himself, even his chances of getting past the guard station and into nobles district had a low probability. He considered breaking into the guard office using his reliably trusty Shamak, but that idea was rejected because he could just imagine himself fainting by the roadside from smoke inhalation. Relying too much on Shamak as an all-purpose tool was a bit of a problem.

“Shamak is pretty versatile, but I just don’t have enough power. If I could at least improve my mana pool for when I use magic…”

Since the uproar with the witchbeasts he had been getting some lessons on using magic from Roswaal. If the Margrave was right, for Subaru to learn some magic, and learn how to use his mana for that magic, would take two years. If he trained limited by his own natural talent, it would take Subaru twenty years to become a second-rate mage. And, in the first place, it would take over half a year for his overused body to return to the condition it previously was in.

“Trying to break through with using magic was unreasonable from the start, I’m still disappointed though.”

The next time he overuses his gate, there was no telling what would happen to his body.

So currently he had no choice but to remove the use of Shamak as an option. While it’s not like Shamak was ever a viable choice to begin with, it still stung.

“Having to say goodbye to the romance that is magic, vexing indeed.”

Were more or less Subaru's strong feelings on the matter. Compared to the how it would be for the sisters Rem and Ram, or Roswaal considering his job, Subaru wasn't as bothered by his current state. Subaru was never really able to use stuff like magic or mana, so losing something he never had in the first place didn't really feel like that great of a loss. Or at least, even if were to go down that path, now was definitely not the time for it.

"So that's how it is, the question now is how do I get into the castle without relying on anything magical. My knowledge and connections, if you're listening, now's the time to do something!"

"…And just what exactly am I supposed to do after hearing that? Jeez"

"More importantly, don't talk about dangerous stuff in front of someone else's store. This is supposed to be a respectable business that won't draw the eye of the crown. What am I supposed to do if some strange rumors surface thanks to you?"

"It's too late for this store to be respectable when the shopkeeper's face is the least thing from honest. Having connections with the old man from the back-alleys, it's no wonder there's rumors about you."

"You've got quite the bad mouth there, kid…"

The one who making a grim face at Subaru's extremely rude comment was Scarface, a long white scar running from his forehead to his chin. And nearby, was an old bald man whose immense muscular body was squeezed into the narrow store.

Including himself, he felt the surroundings smelled even more like sweat now. He let out a long sigh, "Anyways."

"The store that Old Man Rom had connections with turned out to be this uncle's shop. It's a small world—or rather, it's a small capital… Or is it that birds of a feather flock together?"

""Don't group us up like that.""

"Don't talk in unison like that! Unlike the pair of pretty young maid siblings I know, if a baldy and a scar face like you guys do that, nobody wins!”

The two looked at each other, exchanging disagreeable looks. By the way, currently the merchant’s store was definitely still open, but unrelated to Subaru and Old Man Rom’s presence, the number of customers was low.

It was a merchant street, yet because of the location of the store, as well as the shopkeeper’s face, he was playing on hard mode. Subaru, who always encouraged self-inflicted handicaps, felt a great affinity for the shopkeeper on this point.

“Hey, what the hell. What’s with that hand on my shoulder.”

“Both of us want to just to live it out on easy mode, I can sympathize with someone the like me. The gods just aren’t fair, ya know.”

“Don’t rope me into your pessimistic delusions. Unlike you, I have a wife and a daughter. I’m on the winning team here.”

“Liar, liar, pants on fire!”

Shocked at having been betrayed by someone of his own ilk, Subaru’s speech became wild.

Subaru took a step back, and turned his face towards Old Man Rom in order to ask Old Man Rom about what was just said. The bald old man looked straight into Subaru’s wavering black eyes, saying,

“Face the truth. Plus my wife’s a beauty and my daughter’s cute too.”

“You damned…! This is the first time I’ve been treated this badly since I came to this world, you!!”, unleashing the fury he had accumulated after being summoned to this world.

Giving way to all the dark feelings he had pushed deep down into his stomach, Subaru flew at the shopkeeper, and was instantly met with a counterattack by way of a strong arm to his forehead.

“I’m… I’m powerless…”

"You've got to handle things situation by situation, but is there anything you want to say aside from lines that make you sound like a sore loser?"

Looking at Subaru sulking after having his angry outburst put to a stop, Old Man Rom stroked his chin in thought.

He was in a good mood after being called out here since he was sure it had something to do with Felt. When he learned it was just Subaru trying to rope him in on some shady scheme, instead of getting upset the old man showed the goodness in his heart and helped consult Subaru on his troubles.

Softened by that show of kindness, he felt guilty a bit about taking advantage of the old man, but prioritizing his personal gain above his own feelings and moving forward regardless was one of Subaru's good points.

Therefore,

"I'll ask your opinion again. How can I sneak into the castle without being caught?"

"What if you commit a felony and get shut up in the dungeons under the castle? That'd also achieve your goal, though your head would have to say goodbye to your torso."

"Give me some more constructive ideas. After all, it's not like you or your shop are busy right now."

"Don't say it like that, kid. It's because Kadomon's shop isn't popular that we can talk secretly like this. If you think about it that way, it's not a bad thing. Right, Kadomon?"

"Do you two have a grudge against my shop?"

Subaru and Old Man Rom met the eyes of the shopkeeper—Kadomon, who had been glaring at them, then shook their heads, with an "of course not."

As if to chastise the two for their infuriating behavior, Kadomon rubbed the scar on his face, saying, “Stop it with those dangerous ideas, like sneaking into the palace. There’s no emperor right now, so the security’s not all that high, but it’s not as if you won’t be punished if you’re caught.”

“Well then, the risk is just as high as we imagined, isn’t it. If you’re spotted, brat, you’ll die,”

Said Old Man Rom, agreeing with Kadomon.

The two had concluded Subaru should give up on his plans. But of course, to those two, there was no reason to try so hard in the first place.

“Well, when you put it like that, I don’t really have a clear reason to risk my life like this…”

Unlike up til now, this time Subaru didn’t have much of a reason to put his life on the line.

He always had another option—stroll back to the inn, stay in bed, drink the mayonnaise that Rem had made, and wait for Emilia’s return.

It was definitely the case that Emilia and company would be much happier if he did that. It was definitely the case… but,

“Why am I so desperate about this?”

Subaru had always half-thought being at Emilia’s side was his mission. He didn’t know how much help he could be to her. Even though he didn’t know, he still thought that as long as he stayed by her side, the opportunity to help her may arise. If he wasn’t near her, these chances wouldn’t appear.

That being the case,

“Even if it’s conceited, I want to be with her, that’s what I think.”

Although he was only a little ways separated, he felt a terror so deep it felt like it was burning him up.

Weighed against the other option of his own life, it was his reason for moving forwards now.

“Well, it’s the truth that I will break the jinx that surrounds the capital.”

In a place where dark premonitions regarding the candidates to the crown didn’t die, Subaru’s unease was bottomless.

If it was a place where he could only decrease the possibility that Emilia might get hurt when he wasn’t around by a little, he wouldn’t have had a reason to be so impatient all this time.

“It’s fine if I can’t be by her side, but I at least want to be where I can see her face. Somehow.”

“It’s not as easy as that. If it’s a guard post, you could get past with a bribe, but all the way inside the castle?”

Although it’s not impossible Subaru’s attitude wasn’t impacted deeply, it could only be seen that he did not look like he was going to give up. After being left alone to run wild, he would only be arrested and given the death penalty—and that left a bad taste in Old Man Rom’s mouth, so he too began to seriously formulate a plan to get into the castle. Compared to Old Man Rom, who was not self-conscious about his own position as an accomplice, Kadomon’s relationship with Subaru was not so deep.

He eyed the pair of conspirators amazedly, and quipped,

“Whatever you do, make sure it doesn’t cause me trouble.”

He couldn’t say that that was impossible because it chipped away at his earnestness, but Subaru pursed his lips at the uncooperative man, saying,

“Don’t say that. You do your best operating this store even if you have no customers even though you’re on a merchant street. We might get some sort of idea seeing your willpower in action.”

“First of all, even though I’m not feeling that well today my store is still popular, ok? …Instead of using hard to understand tricks, why don’t you go to the guard station and ask about it. Your companion is in the castle, right? …hmm, what did she look like?”

Having stated his honest opinion, Kadomon scowled as if to search his memory. It seemed that no matter what, that silver-haired beauty’s appearance would not surface from within his memories. It was the result of her hood, who’s purpose was to obstruct facial recognition.

Anyways, unfortunately, his decent proposal was not even considered as an option.

“If we do that, we’ll definitely be caught by Emilia-tan! It’s ideal to watch and protect her quietly from the shadows, even better if is undetectable. I’ll name this strategy ‘The Super-Strong Me Under the Floorboards’.”

“What an extraordinarily self-praising name for hiding.”

“You’re such a pain. Well, what if you hid yourself inside packages that are send into the castle? Coincidentally, today’s market day so they will send food in, and if you’re lucky…”

Kadomon said smiling, as if he was just chit-chatting, but his scarred face soon hardened.

It was because the instant Subaru heard that information, his two eyes shone.

He shut his own mouth as if ashamed of his slip of the tongue, then held out his palms, and started to say, “forget what I said just now!” but was interrupted by

“That idea— It’s a YES!”

It was way too early for Subaru to smile brightly with a thumbs up and wink.

Old Man Rom lamented at the sky at this recklessness.

The sun’s rays shone down on that bald head, making it glow a pale white.

Chapter 12:
Secret Castle Infiltration and its Result

1

“When things go smoothly like this, it makes me worry even more.”

Scratching his head, Subaru looked around at his surroundings while sighing. It was a sturdy passageway made of stone, a little less than two meters in width. It was narrow enough that four men side by side were enough to block it up, but if you only consider the movements of servants it was plenty big enough for their use. In comparison, the Roswaal mansion’s hallways were needlessly large which made cleaning a pain.

Anyways,

“I was imagining a whole lot more obstacles— Is it possible we cleared it on the first try?”

An unpopulated passageway— lurking in the corner of one of the passageways of the Royal castle’s basement, Subaru let out one of many innumerable sighs, unknown to anyone else.

2

—‘Kadomon pictures presents, Exciting Secret Infiltration Plan’, or so he was currently carrying out this scheme they had crafted not even an hour ago.

“Listen here, don’t ever say my name. You can use this trick to enter into the nobles district… The upper ward, but you’ll need to find some other way into the castle. Now that it’s come to this I’ll ask a person I know here by the name of Henehehe. They’ll be able to guide us back safely.”

Off to Subaru’s side reminding him to not get into any unnecessary trouble was Kadomon, he even went so far as having secured information about the all-important escape route. No matter how much he'd already done, his helpful nature compelled him to do even more, this scary faced shopkeeper. Considering he was accompanying Subaru in his recklessness, you could say his goodness as a person was almost disastrous.

Going by Kadoman's plan (he'd never take the credit for it though), they decided they were going to sneak into the upper ward by mixing in with the carts carrying goods from the business district. The lower classes: commoners living in amongst the general population, including those in the commerce ward or along the business street, when adding in the slums as well, which occupied the outer circumference of the capital, this seemed to be the entire range referred to as the lower class and their corresponding areas were referred to as the lower wards. The transportation of goods between the lower wards and upper wards appeared to occur at regular intervals, and the control issued by the guard station was said to be relatively lax.

"Do they just trust the merchants that much?"

"Rather than them trusting the merchants, it's more like they never imagined there'd be idiots stupid enough to do something that would upset the nobles like this…"

The one who answered Subaru's question was the muscular giant with his arms crossed. Rubbing his bald head once, Old Man Rom's outfit was completely different from usual. In place of the old worn rags he had on just a little while ago was a set of relatively clean clothes. Being questioned by him, Old Man Rom finally noticed Subaru's stares.

"If we made it into the upper district you could say I'd be quite suspicious looking, but if I dress neatly like this it probably wouldn't go farther than drawing attention. In your case, that's just another unnecessary concern."

"Well, in my case I'm actually a servant at a fairly respectable house. Since this is my debut in the capital, there's been quite a bit of money put forward on stuff like my clothes."

Facing those scrutinizing eyes Subaru gestured his hands toward his clothes, giving himself a quick look over before laughing. Related to his servant lifestyle at the Roswaal mansion, he received some formal men's clothing prepared by Rem. She said it was ok to get them dirty, but from the appearance and feel he knew it was something of the highest quality. For someone who was basically from the lower-middle class, taking abnormal care of his things was basically a given.

While in the lower ward the formal clothes were a source of attention, but here in the upper ward he thought the quality wouldn't stand that much so they were a rather mild choice. While making them understand that point, Subaru redirected the conversation to Old Man Rom's tidy appearance,

"Anyways, " he said while looking him over.

"Um, it's that, you know… If Old Man Rom is seriously coming along with us, I'm a bit worried here."

Since it was his single greatest source of anxiety right now, he touched on the subject apprehensively. Related to their human trafficking into the upper ward, the person who decided to accompany Subaru was Old Man Rom himself. Honestly, Subaru was against him coming along since he wanted to reduce the chance they were discovered as much as possible, but…

"What? When it comes to getting into the upper class area I have plenty of experience! Where do you think all the stolen goods from the loot house gets sold?"

"Annoying! You're like a father trying to hype up how much of a bad boy he was in the past. Or rather, you do this regularly?! It's dangerous to rely on this that much, old man."

Looking at Kadomon for some sense of agreement, the scarface's attention was absent from the two's conversation and was instead focused on his own conversation with the driver leading the carts. Subaru watched him not comment on Old Man Rom's coming with them, apparently the old man had used this trick far more than just once or twice.

The fact that the driver didn't have much of a reaction when Kadomon asked him to smuggle them into the upper ward, lent extra credence to that theory as well.

"I don't know if I should sigh at how lax the guards are here, or give a thumbs up to the sheer tenacity of these merchants trying to make a buck off it…"

"If a problem occurs, then it'll bring trouble to Kadomon and the others as well. If there wasn't this kind of mutual trust we'd never be able to do stuff as unreasonable as this. That's why it's only because I'm here that you're allowed to ride along with us, so where's my thanks?"

"You're definitely a bad adult, happily dragging a troubled youth like me down the wrong path. I swear I'll never be like this old man here, I'll give you some superficial praise at least though. As expected, Old Man Rom! Your head today is shining!"

"Wa-ha-ha, you really don't know how to watch your mouth you damned brat. Should I kick you off in front of the guard station?"

Reaching such an impasse they let out a sigh at the same time, trading smiles. While shrugging his shoulders, Subaru brought the conversation back to their original topic.

"Nn-so, in the end why did you tag along? It's not like I mind, since it's only thanks to Old Man Rom that we get a free pass on the cart, but do you really have a reason to be taking such a huge risk like this?"

Kadomon as well, he'd said he was merely an acquaintance of Old Man Rom's but given the current situation that was a little hard to believe. Simply from Old Man Rom asking for his cooperation he'd agreed to lend his support, there wasn't really a clear reason for Kadomon to go along with Subaru's recklessness so it didn't make much sense.

At Subaru's line of questioning Old Man Rom made a difficult face, wrinkling his brow.

“It’s about the kid, you said Felt was taken by that ‘sword saint’ fellow right? Since that’s the case, I was thinkin’ there might be an opportunity here to get some information about it.”

Old Man Rom had a bitter expression when he said the words ‘sword saint.’ Hearing that phrase, an image of the red-haired youth floated up in Subaru’s mind. If he remembered correctly his residence was also located in the upper ward. He was unmistakably someone from a fairly respectable family, I guess that was to be expected from somebody named ‘sword saint’. Although, actually finding the house might prove to be fairly difficult, it’s not like they have big nameplates scrawled out on the front gate.

“Not even mentioning the fact that I don’t know which house is Reinhard’s, even if we did find it I can’t really imagine we’d be able to just walk up to the door and ask to meet Reinhard, you know? Knowing that good-looking bastard though, I kind of get the feeling that even if we charged in unannounced he’d probably welcome us in warmly… “

“Brat, you’re the only one that’d do such a stupid thing. At most, I’ll just be doing some preliminary investigation and making some preparations for what comes later.”

“…What comes later?”

Tilting his head, he looked at Old Man Rom who was lightly stroking his chin in thought.

“Preparations ‘fer takin’ Felt back. As long as I know where the mansion is, with the right amount of money and connections, learning about about it in more detail should be possible.”

“Uhh… did I just set off a really big event? I’m not one to speak, but Old Man Rom you’re giving me the feeling like I just lit the fuse of something I really shouldn’t have.”

While the one criticizing Old Man Rom for saying such a radical idea was Subaru, looking at it objectively what they were doing probably wouldn’t be viewed much differently than terrorism. One of them was intending to sneak into the royal castle, while the other was in the midst of drafting up plans to break into a noble's mansion— the very nature of the offense made it quite likely they'd be cut down on the spot if they were discovered.

"At least when it comes to Felt, I don't think you need to worry about Reinhard doing anything bad to her. Speaking frankly, the chance she's living better now than before is pretty high you know? She could be working as a servant like me, with a fully satisfying lifestyle."

You might not have been able to tell since she was living in the slums with a filthy appearance, but if you fixed up her clothes and cleaned her up a bit her looks would be pretty decent. If it's Reinhard, then it wasn't impossible to think he noticed her aesthetic virtue and decided to take pity on a poor girl struggling in poverty. Shaking his head though, he didn't think think Reinhard was the kind of guy that would show the kind of compassion typical of an elite looking down on others from his position. Like that, Subaru tried to fit the context into the image he had of Reinhard in his mind and ended up rejecting the notion himself.

In any case, it was hard to believe she was being treated badly. However, towards Subaru's carefree attitude Old Man Rom pursed his lips with difficulty.

"No, I can't let it be. It doesn't matter who the other person is, that's not the problem. That girl has always belonged in the upper classes. —Sooner or later though, it'll cause problems."

Subaru looked suspiciously at Old Man Rom, whose attitude was more earnest than obstinate. While his suspicion somewhat included the parts about Rom being concerned for her wellbeing, it was moreso because he had an even stronger suspicion that Rom's words were tainted with self interest. But before Subaru could question him about his real intentions,

"Oi, we're finished on our end. If you're serious about this then hurry up and get on. We're on the third wagon. Old man, you usually handle the arrangements, so bring that kid up to speed on things."

Kadomon had finished his conversation with the driver and came back to tell them the preparations were done. Old Man Rom responded to that by waving his hand, staring with quiet eyes at Subaru who seemed like he had something he wanted to say.

“In any case, we need to get past the guard station first. Since it’s you I’m giving you an extra warning, don’t do anything unnecessary. Even if their guard is down, they’re still guards. If we’re caught it’ll end up making our purse hurt quite a bit.”

“I was sort of expecting we’d get beaten to death if caught, but for you to actually be able to settle things with money… this place sure is a hive of villainy. Be careful.”

Still finding it rather hard to accept, Subaru nodded; following Old Man Rom’s back, who had already started to move. There were four carts headed to the upper ward, they took up about half the space of the business district’s wide street by themselves so these carts were pretty big. And as for the ground dragons pulling the carts, unlike the thin lizard looking type he had seen before, these ones had short, thick legs, and reminded him more of slow lumbering turtles

.

For the four carts, there were four ground dragons in total. The one he and Old Man Rom were getting on was the third cart in the middle, whose main good appeared to be—

“Wow I was thinking it smelled pretty fishy, could it be that all of this is fish?”

“It smells pretty bad, so the guards are less likely to pay special attention to it. It hides our scent too so it’s perfect. Here, don’t forget to put on this deodorant powder.”

Old Man Rom handed a small green colored pouch over to Subaru, who was grimacing at the fishy scent having entered his nostrils. It was a small pouch whose size fit perfectly in the palm of his hand, sniffing the bag from the outside… he almost fainted in disgust. The foul odor was painful to his nose, It was even worse than the fishy smell. The smell attacked his face to the extent he thought he would get a nosebleed. Dropping the bag unintentionally, Old Man Rom stooped down to pick it up.

“This is our lifeline, don’t handle it so roughly you damned ingrate.”

“This feels like I’m getting an advanced loan on some divine retribution, what the hell is this stuff?! This isn’t at the level where you can just pinch your nose anymore! It feels more like my nose is gonna get torn off! In a non-metaphorical sense!”

“This Kalnago powder smells bad at first, but a few minutes after you apply it on your body the smell’ll disappear, along with any other odors. Don’t tell me you want to walk around in the upper ward with yer specially made nice clothes stinkin’ like fish; you’ll stick out like a sore thumb. Just think of it as a necessary sacrifice.”

Pushing the pouch back at Subaru, Old Man Rom had a wicked smile on his face. Reluctantly accepting it, he put the pouch in the pocket of his trousers while keeping his nose as far away as possible. Looking at the back-and-forth between these two, Kadomon waved his hand indicating them to hurry it up. Seeing that he wasn’t allowed to waste any more time, Subaru resolved himself and boarded the wagon.

As he feared— no, worse than he feared, the fishy smell assaulted his nose. They hadn’t even left yet and his spirit already felt like breaking. It seems they also had some method of chilling the raw fish, as the middle of the cart was unusually cold. While seeing the whiteness of his breath, he scanned for a spot to hide himself.

“Stop it with yer lookin’ around like that. The hidin’ spot is a little bit from the entrance… let’s see, behind that wooden box there. I’m hiding too so try to squeeze in.”

“This is just too sad, I’m stuck with this muscley old man for twenty-four hours a day… The floor better not be covered in fish juice, these clothes are brand new.”

“It’s far better than the alternative, having your clothes bloodied from living a life in poverty. B’sides the fish in the crate are salted so they don’t stink as much.”

Old Man Rom pushed Subaru’s back from behind to hurry him up. Coinciding with the moment he was pushed, the dragon-carriage started forward with a light jolt. Before hiding further in the back, Subaru poked his head out of the entrance of carriage to peek. Seeing them off with a wave, Kadomon gave them a final goodbye. He responded to that wave with a wave of his own, but Kadomon turned his back signaling not to look anymore, walking away from the carriage back to the business district. Confirming this, Subaru too retreated back into the wagon—settling in the corner next to the wooden crate he had been designated. He focused on calming his rapidly beating heart, excited from the thought of his first castle infiltration.

3

Grimacing at the pain from his heart, this carriage ride was one of slight regret for him, lamenting the fact that reckless deeds came so naturally to him. Though, the proof that Subaru’s worries were largely unfounded came when the driver seated on the coachman stand stealthily informed them that they had safely slipped past the guard station.

Roughly twenty minutes had passed since they departed from the business district. Having broken through so very easily, to the extent that he was even depressed from such an anti-climactic turn of events, Subaru looked with at Old Man Rom with a shocked face like he had just been told a joke or something.

“Is slipping past the guard station really this simple? They aren’t going to inspect the goods or anything?”

At worst, he had been imagining they’d do a really violent inspection like he’d seen in a few manga, like sticking spears into the wagon one by one. For Subaru who had been lying on the floor under this assumption, it was like his mental state was just thrown sumo-style.

Looking down, Old Man Rom laughed at Subaru’s baseless fears.

"Like I've been saying, there's an unspoken agreement here. Normally there are only supposed to be three carriages when bringing food items in from the business district to the upper ward. In the fourth wagon behind us, there were quite a few goods piled up to catch the guard's fancy."

From Old Man Rom's attitude, telling him with such an unpleasant face, it seems that Rom already knew the details behind the station's loose surveillance from the start. Hearing that with a sour face, Subaru openly displayed his displeasure with Rom's teasing-nature.

"So basically it's a rigged game from the start, and it's my fault for getting scared… Anyways, with the way you said it, can I assume the stuff piled up in the wagon were bribes?"

"If I said it without coating with any sweet words, then yes that's what it is. The cart was filled with a lot of inconvenient things that'd be bad if you got stopped with. Not just a small quantity."

He muttered like that, with his arms crossed. But after that Old Man Rom sent a serious look at Subaru.

"However, displeasing those bunch is the law. Getting caught and inviting unwanted attention isn't something they want either. They won't give you any chance to explain yerself, they'll cut'ya down to keep their secret safe— what a wretched way to die, got that?"

With unsaid words, Old Man Rom warned him against any hasty or rash actions. Faced with such a serious atmosphere, the usually talkative Subaru solemnly nodded his head, indicating his agreement silently. The shaking in the wagon decreased suddenly; it seemed they'd entered the upper ward— the sound of the wheels biting into the ground changed into that of pavement, informing them of their entrance into the nobles district.

"We'll get off after goin' a little bit further. Next, I'm headed to the place I told you about earlier, going to gather up some information in nobles district… Hey brat, you should do the same."

"Um… If I do that I can't achieve my objective?"

"It's only cause you pushed me so much to help that you were able to get into the upper ward. Trying to sneak in with how things are now should be impossible. You'll just be throwin' yer life down the drain. I know you have some reasons, but your preparation is lacking."

Having logic thrown at him, Subaru kept silent. Seeing him like that, Old Man Rom put a firm hand on Subaru's head, tousling his hair roughly.

"B'sides…", he prefaced

"Challenging these things with no preparation, from a certain perspective you can call that 'preparing to lose'. Even if you rush it, it's not going to get you the result you want. That's why… You understand right, kid?"

"…When you preach and act like an adult like that it's hard to argue"

Removing the hand resting on his head, Subaru sat up in the cart; turning to face away from the old man. Towards Subaru's pouting behavior, Old Man Rom smiled wrly. Peeking out from the gaps of the cart's canopy, he judged that this was around where their planned departure area was.

"Hey, we're gettin' off here. If we fully stopped the wagon it'd look suspicious. The carriage is going slow though, so I don't think you need to worry about getting injured; try to match your speed to the speed of the wagon and run along with it when you land."

Putting his arms though the gap in the canopy, Rom lifted it up enough for his body to fit through. The sun's rays flooded into the cart that was closed off from the light, to Subaru the strong light was painful to his eyes as he peered outside.

It was a paved road just like he had been imagining from the sensation in the wagon, and compared to the lower wards the way the city blocks looked in the nobles district's upper ward was fundamentally different.

Unlike the plain looking and crammed-together buildings in the trade district or slums, the amount of land dedicated to each building was vast. From Subaru's perspective using so much space between each building was a waste of land, it was like each building was enshrined by its own plot of a land. Each building felt pretty close being an extravagant mansion that you'd only see in fairy tales. He didn't see any buildings that were quite as large as the Roswaal mansion, but that was already a nonsensically large waste of space and was only really that large for the entertainment of Roswaal. Without the Rem and Ram sisters being excellent at their jobs, it'd probably end up where the mansion was impossible to maintain.

Finally at an understanding, Subaru took in the sights as he came to experience the difference between the upper-class and lower-class on a fundamental level. I guess this is the disparity between these fairy tale-like nobles and commoners, but it's also probably proof of how powerful the Lugnican empire had grown to be.

Including the wagon full of bribes behind him, he didn't exactly have a good impression, but it was also true that he had rode in on the back of those very misdeeds. Easily dismissing that inner-turmoil, Subaru's attention turned to getting off of the dragon-carriage.

"How's it, think you can do it?"

"I've got some experience when it comes to jumping, or rather, falling off a dragon carriage… I'm a little bit scared to be honest, if you would demonstrate it for me, I'll send you a nice gift or something."

"At least you don't try to act tough, that's one of yer good points you know. Here, watch close."

Nodding at Subaru, who had just confessed his own incompetence with honesty, Old Man Rom was the first the climb off. Pushing off from the edge of the wagon with one hand, his old body worked with practiced movement as he propelled his body off the wagon. Grabbing the edge of the wagon with both arms, he waited for the perfect timing before setting his feet on the ground.

He had imagined him being dragged along like that, or even worse getting caught in the wheel and turned to mince-meat in a huge accident, but—

“Without any of that happening… Could this be?”

“It’s because the divine protection’s still working. As long as you don’t let go with your hands you won’t get thrown off. Like this.”

Just like the dragon-carriage they had ridden to the capital, this dragon-pulled wagon also appeared to have divine protection against wind. So as to not have his body affected by the wind when putting it outside the carriage, he was running alongside the carriage while matching speed.

The speed of the cart was roughly what a bicycle pedaling at a relaxed pace could achieve. A little faster than a jog, but considerably slower than an all-out sprint. For Old Man Rom, whose stride was considerably bigger than the average person, keeping pace wasn’t difficult at all.

Letting his hand go, Old Man Rom was completely separated from the divine protection of the carriage. His body was now subjected to the natural law of inertia, but for Old Man Rom who had predicted its influence, this was a small matter. Without even flinching, he ran alongside the dragon-carriage.

Witnessing his magnificent skill, Subaru couldn’t help but sigh in admiration. As for Old Man Rom, seeing Subaru’s face exuding awe, he clapped his hands once while running alongside the carriage normally.

“Here, jump down just like I showed you. I can even catch you if you’d like, nice and gently.”

The words might have been intended to stoke Subaru’s competitive spirit. But, having that thrown at him, Subaru simply peered out from the canopy looking over Rom’s smiling face. What he learned from watching the running Rom, that is, to put his hand on the wagon’s edge and propel his body off— his practical application of that never materialized.

His innermost thoughts were seized with fear at the realization that he had to perform such an unexpected display of acrobatics. After chasing the dragon-carriage on foot for roughly 300 meters Old Man Rom seemed to have picked up on Subaru's thoughts as concern wove its way into the furrows on his brow. Veins popping on his wrinkled brow, his face reddened and spit flew while he shouted,

"W-Wait, kid! Weren't you going to get off here and sneak into the castle?!"

Seeing through Subaru's inner thoughts, the running Rom shouted with a face full of unease. While ignoring that, Subaru neither affirmed nor denied his words. With an attitude like he was going to close the canopy, his actions were demonstrating he heard it.

—This dragon-carriage was bringing supplies to the castle.

Although he had repeatedly corrected that statement saying he'd just misspoken, Subaru's ears hadn't forgotten the words Kadomon let slip at the start. This dragon-carriage's destination was the royal castle, it was probably safe to assume the food provisions they were carrying would be brought to the castle's cellar. Otherwise, then the plan of getting off here with Old Man Rom and finding a way into the castle together should have had a far better chance of succeeding.

Rom chased after him, having guessed Subaru's intention, but this place was the nobles district and once they got into the more populated areas he'd have no choice but to stop his pursuit. Just like Subaru had things he had to accomplish, Old Man Rom had his own priorities. If he caused a commotion on his own, that benefited neither of them. He understood that point, with a vexed expression on his face he dodged off the road, his giant body slipping into an alleyway. Seeing Rom's back disappear behind a corner, Subaru felt a pang of guilt.

In the end, it was like he was throwing away Kadomon's kindness and Old Man Rom's sympathy. They had given him the most assistance they could possibly give, it wouldn't be wrong if they thought he was paying that back with betrayal. Even so, Subaru had exploited their goodwill but he had no intentions of making excuses for himself.

—I'm going to be by Emilia's side.

For the current Subaru, this was truly his only priority. For that purpose, any problems that stood between him were nothing more than words on a page to be ignored.

The capital was a distorted land, where danger spread like a disease. Leaving Emilia exposed and defenseless in a place like this was something that Subaru couldn't allow on an emotional level.

If he were at least by her side there might be something he could do. In other words, "Even if it's no good, there's still a chance I might be able to do something, somehow or another." Or so Subaru was thinking subconsciously.

—Not noticing that this kind of thinking excessively prideful, or even inhuman.

Among the supply carriage's cargo there was only the slightest of differences, an unfamiliar face enjoying the smoothness of the paved road as they headed towards the royal castle. Happy with the realization he'd made it this far without something like a bribe, unbeknownst to him the situation was like an unexploded powder keg, growing ever and ever larger.

4

After the tearful farewell with his benefactors, Subaru had no choice but to challenge this ordeal himself. Blocking his way were countless thousands of crises and hardships, along with the love and friendship born amongst such tribulations. And, his collapsing life, ambition, dreams— stepping over that and shedding blood while pressing on.

"Something like that would be ideal… In reality aren't I in a pinch?"

Easily slipping into the castle's food cellar and currently walking around in the castle's interior, Subaru couldn't help but sigh in wonder at the state of the castle’s defenses— or rather lack of.

From the point of their journey where Subaru abandoned Old Man Rom about thirty minutes had passed, with Subaru riding along with the dragon-carriage he had easily entered the premises of the royal castle. Part way through, before they reached the castle the fourth wagon had strayed off the path, but that probably meant the bribes in it were destined for a different location. If that was the case it should be that the leading three wagons weren’t headed for a location other than the castle, and that Subaru’s life was probably safe for now.

“I guess this is what I get for cohabitating with salted fish. I didn’t expect the salt to stick to my body, but I guess the deodorant powder did its work.”

Noticing that some white powder was still clinging to a few spots on his body, Subaru dusted himself off with neurotic scrutiny while praising his own quick-wittedness. As expected after entering the castle, in order to unload the wagon of course they had to check inside. Faced with the likelihood of being caught, Subaru decided to climb into the crate of salted fish to escape the current crisis.

In actuality, they checked the contents of all the wooden crates next to him, but thanks to a stroke of god-like good luck they never checked the one Subaru had climbed into.

After that, the movement of the cargo itself was done with something like wind magic, Carrying the food provisions to the interior with something other than by human labor. Thanks to that the unnatural weight in the wooden box went undiscovered, and with his primitive hybrid-combination of absurd, reckless, and unreasonable, he somehow managed to succeed with his unlikely plan.

For Subaru the current situation was very lucky, but with the lax surveillance his thoughts immediately drifted towards worrying about Emilia’s safety, so he couldn’t celebrate without restraint. Taking into account all the information he had he slipped out of the food cellar, and thus choosing an area with few people he began moving about the basement.

“Well, it’s nice I managed to get in, but… I seriously have no plan here.”

Honestly, it was nice he got to this place, but he was drawing a complete blank on what to do now. Watching over Emilia from the shadows, if that was possible that was the best option, but as one would expect it didn’t quite seem possible to make it to where she was in the centre of the royal castle without being noticed. At worst, even if he was discovered mid-way through it wouldn’t be impossible to handle it by gradually pressing to meet up with Emilia to have her bail him out, or so Subaru calculated shamelessly.

Now that he had snuck in this far, even though Emilia would probably be angry he didn’t think she would send him away. It’d be enough to just apologize with his whole heart, and rely on her kindness. Thinking with extreme optimism, Subaru ran through the basement passageway. Without even a shred of self reflection, if other people were to see him now how would they judge him? Fortunately or unfortunately there was nobody around to do that.

And,

“Crap, somebody’s coming…”

Feeling somebody’s presence coming from the front, Subaru’s eyes searched his surroundings in a panic. As the location was a passageway in the basement, this was most likely a place only used by servants. Sliding his body into a nearby room, Subaru stood behind the crudely made door.

Luckily for him, there was nobody in the room he snuck into.

This small room was probably something like a dressing room used by the servants. There were several closets lined up next to each other, from the sweet scent he could tell this was room was intended for female servants as some feelings of guilt came to mind. But, he didn’t have the leisure to savor the sensation of the room’s sweet scent. In a hurry Subaru opened the interior closet, confirming that nothing was inside he quietly hid himself in it.

Concealing his breath, it would be fine if he just waited for the presence in the hallway to pass. If he was caught he could probably do something about it, or so he was going about thinking optimistically, but his body's actions revealed that this wasn't a situation where he'd get off easily if discovered. Although he hadn't steeled himself for the situation and his courage was wavering, to him now this was a trifling matter.

First thing was to get through this current situation, he could even try announcing himself and playing it off from there. But, Subaru's composure in considering his future course of actions…

"—This room stinks."

…was broken so easily; a girl's voice called out as the door swung open violently. He was so nervous it felt like his heart was going to jump out of his throat. He felt the sound of his blood moving with each pulse while he ground his teeth in despair. This closet was unlike that of changing room locker in that there were no convenient holes for him to peer out from. In other words, Subaru was in the dark and could only imagine what was happening outside based on the actions of the other person.

While feeling his throat closing up from stress, Subaru once again regretted his actions. He underestimated it, made fun of it, and got full of himself. He was too conceited. And now looking at the predicament he was in he understood just how stupid his actions were. Why did he ever just calmly carry out with such a reckless idea, he couldn't understand the reasoning behind his actions and decisions up till now.

While confused and trying to reason things out, Subaru still decided not to go ahead with the option of announcing himself to the other person. He was still hoping that maybe, just maybe, the other person hadn't noticed he was here. Or so he clung to that thread of hope thinner than a spider's silk, unable to throw those feelings away.

Subaru held his breath, his whole body tormented with the urge to run.

"—I'm only going to wait five seconds. My princess hates waiting even more than I do, you see."

He heard a muffled voice proclaim from beyond the wooden door of the closet. It was somehow a voice without much energy, but the intention behind it appeared not to be a lie, from the midst of silence the sound of a sword sliding out of its scabbard was proof enough.

Like this the proclamation he thought was just a bluff turned serious, he was still hoping to pretend like nobody was there and wait for this all to blow over— but he didn't have the guts to go through with that choice.

"5, 4, alright I'm done counting—"

"Time-out, stop, let's talk this over! I'm coming out, I'm coming out right now, just wait"

Hurried by the voice seemingly eager to use their sword, Subaru was pressured through fear to open to door. The closet slowly grated as it opened, the scent that had settled and drifted about in the room flowed in as a refreshing breeze, for just a moment it softly caressed his feeling of despair.

Then again, what followed was going to be a harsh scolding where excuses were useless. Thinking of the current situation he had brought about, it wasn't something that could be settled with just a light punishment. It's not like he hadn't thought about it at all, but it was true to a certain degree he had been overly optimistic in thinking everything would work out in the end.

Since there wouldn't be much point in arguing about it, before he was completely defeated he would play every card he could play— and Subaru having come to that determination, looked at who stood before him,

"See, look Al. Isn't it just like I said?"

It was a certain haughty voice he'd heard before, reflexively raising his head, an orange-haired girl smiled arrogantly while pointing the small fan-like prop in her hand at him.

“For us to meet this buffoon again so soon, even I’m surprised at how much early than expected this was.”

“Aah, I guess so. As expected of Princess, you have quite the eye. And you, you sure have bad luck.”

It was the middle-aged man standing next to her— sporting a jet-black helmet and bizarre light clothes, same as last time. The first half of Al’s statement was agreeing with the girl, the latter half he uttered with a tone seemingly full of sympathy for Subaru.

Wasn’t this the very situation he wanted to avoid? Getting thrown about without any say. Still, a feeling of relief attacked his whole body, before he knew it he was crouched down, letting out a dry laughter; he couldn’t help but breath out a long sigh.

Chapter 13:
Same Homeland

1

Subaru sank into the floor realizing just how bad his luck was.

Although it would have been the best development if they hadn't been found, it was a godsend that the people he did find were familiar faces. What's more, the people involved turned out to be a duo he had only just met yesterday; you never know what life will bring.

It would not be an exaggeration to say the purpose of the event last night with the girl and her companion had been to help Subaru get through this situation.

???: "So, out of respect for the will of fate in that area, let's keep things civil—"

Assuming a seiza posture, he bent deeply at the waist, placing both hands on the ground in the shape of a figure eight, and gently slammed the crown of his head into the floor. This was the Dogeza battle tactic, handed down from the ancient times of the Empire of Japan, which advocated for the triple star of defenselessness, impotence, and helplessness, thus making the opponent bear absolute pity towards him.

Subaru returned to his senses, caught up with the fact that he had not escaped the situation, and chose to make the most obvious apology.

His other options included pushing through forcefully or pretending to be crazy as he danced around the issue, although he foresaw both options ending in catastrophic defeat and hence quickly rejected them. He arrived at the option that seemed to give the highest chance of survival: clinging to the other party's kindness.

???: "…"

As speechless moments continued, Subaru prostrated himself, feeling pressure culminate on his shoulders. Unable to bear the heavy weight, he glanced upward.

He peeked at the situation with the full breadth of his field of vision, the small soles of shoes spread out.

???: “You really are a worthless guy.”

Subaru: “Cough, cough”

With a single phrase of boredom uttered, a front kick struck the surface of Subaru’s face.

With such force that it seemed as though there had been no mercy, let alone anything of the sort, Subaru was thrown back by the neck from where he was sitting. The back of his head nailed into the closet door, while the soles of shoes continued to trample down on him as his eyes cried in pain.

The young girl, who was the owner of such soles, kicked the shocked and immobile Subaru.

Young Girl: “To sneak into the Royal Capital, I wonder how determined you must be… how worthless. I refuse to use listening ears for anything like an apology. Besides, if you were going to apologize, you should not have done the thing in the first place.”

Throwing out a mixture of scorn and mockery, the girl continued to knead Subaru’s cheek with her pointed heel. He grunted from the sharp pain before quickly attempting to brush her foot away,

???: “Don’t move, dumbass. Princess is doing this directly out of kindness. Bastard, would you prefer my interrogation? You’re a useless underling, so naturally you’re a pain.”

As he tried moving, the tip of a silently-drawn large sword was held against his throat.

Before Subaru’s breathless eyes, the one-armed man who had done it muttered listlessly in a hard-to-hear voice.

Based on Subaru's knowledge, the broad blade was similar to a sword called the dao. The man easily wielded the large, thick sword with one hand.

There seemed to be no way that an unarmed, amateur fighter like Subaru could compete.

While Subaru was left speechless and unmoving by the way they expertly got the drop on him, the girl, still with her foot on Subaru, looked up at the attendant beside her.

Orange-Haired Princess: "Hey, Al! You dare to bring something so dangerous so very close to my feet? If my flawless, jewel-like skin were to get even a scratch, it would be a loss to the entire world!"

Al: "Relax, Princess. I've got a policy of never doing anything I can't handle. Besides, you're someone I owe. So just feel like you're riding in an ultra-powered boat of mud."

Remaining tense as he watched the exchange between master and servant unfold before him, Subaru decided that making a move in the current situation would be unwise. That said, simply sitting back and letting things play out wouldn't lead to anything good either. At some point, he'd have to seize the right moment to act, but—

Subaru: "A mud boat's just gonna sink… Put me on a real ship…"

Forcing the words out, Subaru risked his life to point out the oddity he'd heard.

At those words, the orange-haired girl slowly turned her head. She closed one eye, displeased that Subaru—who had just been kicked—had spoken without her permission.

Orange-Haired Princess: "To speak without mine permission while you are still awaiting mine judgment… You have some nerve. Very well, if your life means so little to you—"

Al: "Hold up a sec, princess. Just now, what did you say, kid?"

Stopping his master just as she was about to deliver a cruel decree, Al leaned in and questioned Subaru. His disrespect clearly irritated the girl, but Al, focused entirely on Subaru, didn't seem to notice.

From within his jet-black helmet—his eyes hidden from the outside—Al stared intently at Subaru.

Al: "Since yesterday, when I caught a glimpse of you, I've had a feeling, but… Hey, kid."

With his cheek still gouged by the girl's foot, Subaru looked up at Al with the one eye he had free reign over. From Al's demeanor, Subaru determined his suspicion hadn't been too far off the mark.

Together, their gazes intersected, while Subaru held his breath as he waited for Al to speak. Then,

Al: "When the wind blows—"

Subaru: "…? Oh, the barrel makers profit?"

Al: "If you talk about next year, then,"

Subaru: "The demons will laugh…!"

Al: "A laughing household…"

Subaru: "—Brings good fortune!"

Declaring with firm conviction, Subaru continued looking up at Al's face.

From within the pitch black helmet, any change in his expression was unreadable. Such being the case, he shook his head, shrugging the shoulder of his one arm.

Al: "I see. So it really is like I expected. You got me there."

Orange-Haired Princess: "What is this? You went and made sense of it all by yourself. Explain it to mineself as well. What is the meaning behind that incomprehensible exchange just now?"

Seeming dissatisfied with his understanding was the left-out young girl.

She glanced back and forth between Al's attitude and Subaru's expression, which interchangeably seemed to display the acquiring of a common sense.

Orange-Haired Princess: "The disrespect piling on top of disrespect is not something I am so tolerant of as to just forgive it or laugh it off. Therefore, answer carefully. That exchange just now, what was the meaning of it?"

Al: "—If I had to say, it was like a confirmation of each other's homelands."

Subaru: "That's about it…"

To the low voice, Subaru answered with the same inflection. At that answer, the young girl scowled at the lack of meaning getting through. Suddenly, she squinted as if she had realized something.

Orange-Haired Princess: "—The same hometown, hm? Al?"

Al: "Probably, yeah."

Once more, Al shrugged his shoulder as an affirmative gesture towards his master's inquiry.

Thereafter, he sheathed the dao. After that, Subaru once again looked down,

Al: "A few more questions I'd like to ask have sprung up. So, how about it?"

Subaru: "…If it's gonna be an interrogation, I'd personally be pleased to have some pork cutlet along with it."

Al: "I'm a fan of eel bowls. Although, this way and that, they're nowhere to be seen."

Yes, simply from Al's tone of voice, it could be judged that he was laughing as he presented his free hand.

Subaru reached up to firmly grasp that hand,

Subaru: “Life; you never know what’s going to happen, really.”

With the relief of escaping a narrow run-in with death and the unexpected surprise twist that came with it, those words were let slip.

2

Subaru: “Amnesia?”

Standing up from the floor of the changing room, after just having secured his right to life, Subaru muttered in a remarkably wild voice.

Repeatedly listening to these murmurings, the black helmet— Al nodded.

With one arm, he roughly scratched at the nape of his neck, at the point where his helmet met his light armor,

Al: “It’s what you’d call episodic memory loss. I haven’t forgotten general knowledge, or the names of things, or anything like that. Just the parts related to myself have cleanly disappeared. Pretty orthodox, right?”

Subaru: “Hearing somebody else rapid-fire all those katakana terms is really off-putting… Guess I’ve gotten pretty submerged in this otherworldly fantasy.”

Responding to Al’s seeking of agreement with a wry smile, Subaru realized anew the truth he had just confirmed. Yes, meaning—

Subaru: “No mistake about it, you and I really were both summoned from the same world.”

Al: “Well, that’s how it looks to me when I ascertain it with the common sense I’ve got.”

Saying so, he shrugged his shoulders— most likely, Subaru figured it was his way of laughing.

Compared to his earlier demeanor, Al had considerably softened. It gave off a sense of friendship equal to, no, greater than their encounter yesterday.

In a way, it was only natural, because Subaru too couldn't help but feel genuine empathy towards him, as if Al's situation were no longer just someone else's problem.

Subaru: "I hadn't given it much thought, but if there's someone else like me, then it isn't so strange for there to be others who were summoned. Al-san, do you know of anyone else like that?"

Al: "Attaching –san like that is a bother so quit it, brother. Just referring to me as Al is fine. And about others from our hometown,"

The troubling words caused him to correct his helmet's positioning; Al turned his neck slightly downward.

Al: "It's a no, I know nobody else like that. Meeting you was the first time I had come across someone from my hometown. Honestly, I even suspected that I could be a lunatic."

Subaru widened his eyes in surprise. Seeing that reaction, Al gave a self-deprecating chuckle and said, "After all, can you blame me?"

Al: "I have memories of a world that's not here, but I have no memories of myself, the one who holds those memories. Do you think it's possible not to doubt the possibility that this sudden self of mine is just some mysterious collection born from the depths of delusion? Memories of another world, to be blunt, felt to me like nothing but solitary insanity. Although—"

His manner of speaking was gloomy, but by the end of the latter half, that gloom was swept away. Riding that momentum, he clapped Subaru firmly on the shoulder.

Al: "Turns out I had a bro out there. Thanks to that, I was saved. My memories were real. I wasn't some insane madman. Just that alone—yeah, that saved me."

The manner of the weeping note of relief led Subaru to understand and ponder on the weight of that man's unbearable daily solitude.

There was no one out there who could share in his memories. Subaru had been in the same situation, but unlike him, Subaru held thoughts related to the self that served as an anchor for those memories. Only with both of those together could the solid sense of self known as Natsuki Subaru truly exist in this other world.

On the other hand, for Al there didn't exist that ideal anchor. In a different world where no one knew of his existence, he carried memories of another world that even he himself didn't know in any real sense. In that sea of memories, so vast and harboring misunderstandings from others, he had endlessly continued to nearly drown.

Shuddering at that terrible weight, Subaru's lips subconsciously trembled as he began to ask a question.

It was something he hadn't contemplated on up to now, but once it entered his awareness, he couldn't help but question it. That was,

Subaru: "Al, how much time has passed since you've been in this world?"

The time Subaru had spent in this world, in real time, amounted to no more than twenty days. His memories of his original world still being clear, he was in a state of amateurism in which the existence of everything in this other world felt fresh.

To Subaru's question, Al became speechless for a short time.

Al: "As to when I arrived in this world, I'm not certain—It must have been about eighteen years ago."

Subaru: "Wha–…?!"

Upon being replied to with an unexpected number of years, Subaru's repeated questioning choked up.

Al affirmed Subaru's surprise with a nod of the head.

Al: "When it comes to memories of my true age, I'm at a loss… Most likely, I'm just about to be around forty, I think. When I was summoned, I might have been around the same age as you?"

Touching his chin and steadily gazing at Subaru, Al expressed those words.

Once again grasping the weight behind his words just now, Subaru was unable to put forth any frivolous words of acknowledgment regarding that painful everyday.

There were still various things he wanted to say and many things he wanted to ask. However, thinking that digging into them might tie into more pain for Al, he couldn't bring himself to do it so simply.

Orange-Haired Princess: "So?"

Interrupting Subaru's sentimentality was the voice of the third person, who up until now had remained silent.

He turned his head around. With her back against the wall of the changing room, the girl stood with her arms crossed and eyes closed. She tapped her fingers against her folded arms in irritation,

Orange-Haired Princess: "To go so far as to interrupt mine judgment. There better have been fruit to it, Al."

Al: "As far as my standpoint goes, I couldn't have asked for any more. I don't know how you see things, Princess, though… At the very least, I've come to know my delusions don't end as mere delusions."

Orange-Haired Princess: "Continuing to speak with such a refreshed face; I'm not even angry. —And now, upon that, comes thy disposition…"

Pushing aside Al with her hand, the young girl stepped forward to stand before Subaru.

The pressure emanating from the small-framed girl—that sheer mass left Subaru instinctually overwhelmed. The meeting of the previous day was void of such a feeling of oppression. That is, without planning it, Subaru felt the greatly deep divide sprawled out in the space between himself and the girl,

Orange-Haired Princess: "You, like Al, prattle on about coming from beyond the Great Waterfall?”

Subaru: “Great Waterfall?”

Orange-Haired Princess: “At the ends of the ends of the world. A place of abhorrent demise. All swept away by the torrent— That is the Great Waterfall. It is said that none have seen what lies beyond it.”

She gathered her fingers on the unmoving Subaru’s jaw, lifting his face up as she continued.

Orange-Haired Princess: “Every once in a great while, there comes a party loudly proclaiming they are from beyond the Great Waterfall. Those fools generally try to attract attention with grandiose lies… Al is a bit different.”

Subaru: “That deducing, I’d like to know the grounds for it…”

Orange-Haired Princess: “Just intuition.”

At the very least, Subaru’s counterattack was cleanly cut through by the young girl’s single statement.

Declaring so to the speechless Subaru, thereafter she turned to face Al behind her.

Orange-Haired Princess: “I only need one clown to divert me from mine boredom. That is my decision. Any objections, Al?”

Al: “There are, massively so. Because, Princess, there honestly probably aren’t any of my countrymen left anymore. So if you could maaaaybe show a teensy bit of mercy or something, I’d be gladly humiliated with a rapidly beating heart.”

Orange-Haired Princess: “Are you giving mineself orders?”

Al: “Come now, come now, I’m begging for mercy. My ultra beautiful, ultra promising, ultra clever, ultra wonderful, and ultra kind Princess would surely never make a choice that led to my misery.”

Al’s smooth tone was met by silence and void of expression by the young girl. As it was, with a cooled voice, she turned her now-bored eyes to Subaru, who still awaited his verdict.

Her fingertips remained upholding Subaru’s jaw, as the fear of what her next words might be was unbearable.

Emotionally speaking, Al was taking Subaru’s side, although the essential aspect of moodiness was something Subaru came to understand in their short time together yesterday. Whether she herself possessed the power to inflict harm was unclear, but at the very least, she certainly could use both daggers and magic.

—If push came to shove, he could unleash one of his Shamak in retaliation.

Subaru sensed within himself a feeling of desperation.

Orange-Haired Princess: “Well, very well.”

Thus spoke the unchanged, disinterested tone from the young girl, the single phrase unmasking those as baseless fears.

The young girl withdrew the fingers touching Subaru’s chin, pulled a fan out of a bag, and began fanning herself while walking across the changing room.

Orange-Haired Princess: “It wasn’t anything that piqued my interest to begin with. To lop off your head by the neck and fall into disfavor with a retainer would be idiotically foolish. Needless labor; an unnecessary exertion.”

Subaru: “Umm, that meaning… I’m not getting punished?”

Al: “Now that seems awfully convenient, doesn’t it, bro?”

As the tides seemed to be unfolding in his favor, Subaru let out a sigh of relief, slumping his shoulders, to which Al cautioned him with a pained smile. Then, calling out to the back of his master who was just about to leave,

Al: “Heeey, Princess. Not that I’m displeased you heard me out, but seriously, what's to be done now? I don't expect you to just overlook everything, that'd be unreasonable."

Subaru: "Right?"

Even though he had literally just escaped the threat of death, saving his one life, it was also true that the situation Subaru brought about had stepped past the line of being able to be overlooked.

Regarding that, as expected, it seemed Al had no intention of drawing that line leniently. In response to his words, the young girl halted her steps and, with a look of bother from the bottom of the heart, turned her neck back.

Orange-Haired Princess: "Do you not heed my will? What a dullard. —No matter, bring him along. If he tries to run away, lop off his head by the neck."

Al: "Well sure, but… No, is that really okay? After all, given where you're headed, Princess—"

Orange-Haired Princess: "Shut it."

Upon readily accepting the inhumane decree, Al voiced a point of uncertainty. Cutting over his words, the young girl,

Orange-Haired Princess: "To interject into my conduct is preposterous. It would do you well to know your place, Al. In this world, only that which is convenient for me shall come to pass. Therefore, there is not a sole error in my judgment. Bringing that clown along shall serve my benefit. I will be the victor of this world's decision."

Al: "Listening to your self-assurance is almost refreshing, Princess. I understand."

To her self-regard bordering on haughty arrogance, Al declared his compliance in a pleased tone. From there, he turned to the left behind Subaru, tapping him on the shoulder.

Al: "That means that from now on, bro, you're in captivity. Oh, and don't try to run. I'd rather not, but if it comes to that I'll cut you down.”

Subaru: “No comradery between countrymen?”

Al: “When you weigh duty and sentiment on the scales, duty always prevails in this world.”

The announcement of those words invoked a deep feeling involving the fickle nature of this fleeting world. Al pushed Subaru along by the back.

Completely swept up by the situation as is, Subaru proceeded between the small-framed back and, from behind, the pressure of the one-armed man from his homeland.

Subaru: “Well, I’m aware I messed up, there’s no helping that, but… is this situation improving or getting worse…?”

Orange-Haired Princess: “Had it not been mineself that found you, your head would already be forfeit. Come now, offer your limitless gratitude unto me.”

Subaru: “It’s true that I got saved and all, but… isn’t it strange you aren’t asking why I was even here to begin with? Even I gotta admit I seem super suspicious and ill-natured right now.”

While he did want to explain himself, it was hard to say he acted based on something that could easily be explained to others. It was that unfounded anxiety that made it difficult to stay put.

And so, Subaru’s inquiries were born from the anxiety of not being asked what should have been asked; a shell of weakness serving as a makeshift defense. Although the girl, as if seeing through Subaru’s shallow contents, snorted through her nose.

Orange-Haired Princess: “I more or less have a rough idea of that reasoning. Therefore, mineself shall not ask. That my tolerance was what it was… ah, let us see, yes, I suppose.”

Halting as she stood, the young girl turned around.

Orange hair swaying before his eyes, at once Subaru came to a dazed stop. Before those same eyes, a finger was stuck out; the young girl graciously raised the ends of her lips,

Orange-Haired Princess: “Appa.”

Subaru: “Huh?”

Orange-Haired Princess: “Yesterday’s Appas weren’t bad. It would do well to consider that the reason I did not immediately lop off your head.”

She defined her change of heart with that reasoning, and with that, began walking out without so much as a look behind her.

Dazedly seeing her back off, Subaru mulled over the words spoken to him in his head. With effort, he used his feet to step forward, murmuring a bit. That murmuring was,

Subaru: “Meaning my life was saved by that unc from the fruit stall…”

Even the achievement of having infiltrated the castle was thanks to Kadomon; he felt his participation rate in events related to the Royal Capital had reached abnormal levels.

With such a trivial impression, Subaru, regarding his narrow escape from death, attained one small sense of comprehension.

3

Subaru: “Heey, is this really okay? There’s no problem? Aren’t I pretty out-of-place?”

Al: “Out of place, you say? More like trespassing. I won’t go running my mouth, since Princess is okay with it, but… Don’t do anything strange. I won’t go out of my way to defend you.”

To Subaru, who repeatedly glanced around anxiously, Al curtly threw out a comment from beside him. But even Al, who seemed to be acting composed, appeared uncomfortable at a closer glance as he corrected his posture, shooting a gaze to his master walking ahead.

The girl walked ahead— striding down the corridor of the central tower located on the upper floors of the royal castle. She basked in the countless stares of others, those looks in a manner befitting her luxurious attire and elegant beauty.

Those gazes following the young girl's gait were being directed by the fully-armed guards lined along either side of the corridor. Down that corridor lined with guards brandishing swords, the young girl continued. Subaru restlessly walks forward, his inner thoughts in anything but their ordinary state.

After all, to begin with, Subaru had only planned to stealthily peek at the castle's interior. So why was he now in a place completely crowded to the brim? What's more, beside him, Al carelessly made a slip of the tongue; just that alone would put him under circumstances in which heads would fly.

He just wanted the corridor to quickly reach its end. The collection of soldiers shooting him a whirlpool of gazes, that wordless pressure exerted upon him quickened his step, causing him to inadvertently reach the young girl's back.

No, you could say he reached the end of the corridor where an exchange is to take place.

Subaru: "In the back of this passage filled with soldiers, that really is a massive door…"

The double doors were large to the extent that one had to look up at them, which naturally prompted Subaru to imagine the majesty of the place that lay beyond them.

The location was the top floor of the central tower in the royal castle of the Royal Capital— beyond a corridor flanked left-to-right by lined-up soldiers. Since earlier, an unpleasant premonition had taken hold of Subaru's head, swinging it around without letting go.

Before Subaru, who was in such a gloomy state of mind, the young girl was exchanging words with the giant blocking the door.

The well-armed giant removed his headpiece, then with an intellectual gaze measured up the young girl.

He appeared to be around thirty, not so much sharp-featured as one with a rugged countenance. On his craggy, deeply chiseled face, he carried an air of sternness mixed with a battle-hardened aura.

Stern Soldier: “Your arrival has been anticipated, Priscilla-sama.”

The man with that solemn face met her gaze with a serious voice, lowering his head politely.

Despite bearing in mind the respectful conduct, the young girl haughtily nodded her head, before indicating to the two behind her,

Priscilla: “They are my companions. One is my knight, and the other… is in charge of appas, I suppose.”

Subaru: “Hold o–…!”

Subaru was about to interject that she should have given him a more favorable position, but then he remembered the graveness of the situation and covered his mouth. Taking but a glance at the Subaru making many comical expressions, the knight glanced at the young girl with a boulder-like expression void of even the slightest movement.

Stern Soldier: “—In charge of appas, you say?”

Priscilla: “That’s right, commander of the appas. A pitiful fool whose purpose is to bring mineself red, sweet-and-sour appas. He is harmless, pay him no mind.”

Stern Soldier: “Unless I first inquire Miklotov-sama’s opinion, your passage…”

Priscilla: “My actions are, in a turn of phrase, the will of the world itself. This is outrageous disrespect. We will proceed now, Marcos.”

Apparently accustomed to such commonplace declarations, the knight raised no protest towards the young girl’s insolent remarks.

With gentle blue eyes he appraised Subaru, and then Al’s demeanors— Immediately after, his clear blue eyes shone dazzlingly, not metaphorically, but literally.

He lightly pressed a finger to his own eyes.

Marcos: “The presence of no dangerous mana signatures or armaments has been confirmed. As for Sir Knight, the only thing being brought in is that greatsword, correct?”

Al: “… Oh, by knight you meant me? Yeah, yeah, yes, yes. If the black-haired person shows suspicious signs, by chance, I’ll cut him clean in two with my own hands.”

Marcos: “If by some one-in-a-thousand chance something occurs, then please protect your liege, Priscilla-sama. As for all other matters, leave them to us, the royal guards.”

Having his flippant remark returned with such grandiosity, Al vaguely replied with an evasive “Sure, sure”.

Marcos: “Everyone inside is waiting. Please make haste.”

Priscilla: “To make the common masses wait is but a result of my superiority. The reverse, however, is absolutely impermissible.”

Putting on airs with a small-minded remark, the young girl stepped through the door as she was seen off. Without the slightest hesitation, Al followed behind. Seeing that, Subaru mustered his resolve and headed inside.

—What spread out before his eyes was a red carpet spread out over a vast space.

Dazzling ornaments adorned the walls and extravagant lighting from the broad daylight cast from the ceiling. Compared to this size of the room befitting a gymnasium, the sparsity of contents was like a bargain of wastefulness. However, that made sense if one considered the room’s objective and use.

At the very rear of the room’s center stood a modest level change where there lay a slightly raised platform, upon which a built-in chair had been furnished.

From behind there was a wall adorned with a dragon motif; the one seated in the chair could be seen as bearing that dragon on their back, or as being protected by it.

That was unmistakably the throne room of the Royal Capital. That chair was without a doubt the throne of Lugunica.

After first having his gaze stolen by the eye-catching throne, Subaru fearfully scanned his surroundings.

As for the interior of the room, unlike the outside, not a single figure of a sword-wielding guard could be seen. While all the royal guards were on standby outside, the few figures in the room could be accounted for on one's hands and feet.

And then, among them—

???: "—Subaru?"

As Subaru passed through the door into the throne room, a silver-haired young girl was watching him with astonishment on her face.

She blinked as if unable to believe the fact that Subaru was there, those deep violet eyes harboring confusion among other emotions, all blending together in ripples.

Basking in the full brunt of her astonishment, Subaru's heart cried out in a high degree of pain.

That mysterious feeling of oppression exceeded all previous pressures since sneaking into the royal castle.

Suppressing it by some means, before her next action, Subaru made his move.

Hitting his head with his hand, with one eye shut, he stuck out his tongue.

Subaru: "Sorry, I ended up coming."

A tremendous, wordless pressure came to sprawl over the throne room for a short while.

Chapter 14:
The Beginning of the Royal Selection

Subaru's earnest mischievous grin fell spectacularly flat, completely unaffected by historical context, cultural gaps in a different world, or any other issues.

Silence descended, so awkward that the world seemed to lose its sound, and even the passage of time became hazy. Yet, reality insisted that time hadn't stopped; Subaru's heart, shamelessly, continued to pump blood, and Emilia's complexion before him worsened with each passing moment. He wished he could just die of embarrassment and get it over with, but for Subaru, who had survived his days in this other world out of self-preservation, dying of shame or frustration was a distant concept.

He could only remain silent through the excruciating awkwardness, waiting for a reaction from the other party while maintaining his grin. This was a battle, yes, a battle. Like the few high-stakes moments he'd encountered in his time in this other world—the incident in the loot house, the one in the witchbeast forest—and now, this grand flop in the throne room, right in front of Emilia.

Subaru couldn't move. He had resolved not to budge an inch without a reaction from Emilia, a truly splendid sentiment. In contrast, Emilia's lips trembled as if searching for words, and her eyes darted around as she tried to compose her thoughts. Then, her lips set, and her violet eyes, as if having reached some conclusion, gazed directly into Subaru's black ones. Feeling as though he might be drawn into their depths, Subaru braced himself to accept whatever her first words might be—

"Mixed-blood, why are you staring at my servant?"

"Oof!"

"Huh?"

As Subaru awaited Emilia's words, an impact came from behind him. An incredibly soft sensation pressed against his back, and then arms wrapped around his chest and neck in a suggestive lock. A ginger-haired girl, standing on her tiptoes behind him, rested her chin on Subaru's shoulder, facing Emilia side-by-side with him.

Subaru's ears turned red as her posture naturally led him to realize what was pressing against his back. But he immediately dismissed that thought, shaking himself free.

"What do you mean, 'servant'? Emilia-tan will misunderstand…"

"Hmph, so you're not my servant. Then what, pray tell, is your status, that which allows you to brazenly wander the castle?"

"Ugh…!"

His immediate retort was cut off by a malicious grin. His overwhelming disadvantage in the current situation was undeniable. It was an undeniable fact that his position was secured only through her good graces, and his reliance on them. Considering the capricious nature of the girl, if Subaru chose to act against her wishes here, he'd be immediately reported and end up imprisoned. At worst, he might even be executed on the spot.

However, being overly familiar with any girl other than Emilia in front of Emilia was out of the question. It wasn't about what Emilia would think, but a matter of Subaru's own male pride. Thus, Subaru was in a desperate bind. Unless Subaru was a complete idiot, the logical course of action would be to obey the girl's wishes and get through this. However, just like his circumstances of infiltration, Natsuki Subaru was, indeed, a complete idiot.

"I can't bow my head to anyone in front of Emilia-tan!"

"…Oh, interesting. Then what do you claim yourself to be?"

The girl's teasing expression changed completely, and she questioned him in a chilling tone. His answer here would directly determine the value of his head. He couldn't see Emilia's expression behind him, but Al, standing behind the girl, shook his helmet-clad head, desperately trying to convey, "She's not in the mood for jokes right now!" Feeling bad about trampling on his goodwill, Subaru quietly took a breath and clearly stated his position.

"I am in this castle…"

"Oh my~, Lady Priscilla. My sincerest apologies for the trouble caused by one of our household staff. It is truly regrettable that he lost his way within the castle. Please excuse his impertinence."

Interrupting Subaru's rather pointless display of male pride was a familiar, gentle male voice. Standing beside Subaru, who was overly pumped up, was the long, indigo hair of Roswaal. Dressed in proper Marquis attire, he wore his usual carefree smile. He gestured to Subaru with an almost theatrical, mock-reverent bow.

"I shall repay this debt in due time. Again, please forgive the rudeness of our household member."

"So, the head charlatan has shown his face. Well, it matters not. Thanks to this clown and the mixed-blood, I was adequately entertained. —And it is my attendant's request, after all."

To Roswaal's impudent behavior, the girl nodded grandly, showing her generosity. Behind her, Al expressed his relief with a visible shudder. He seemed to have been terribly flustered by the fact that his compatriot, found after eighteen years, had almost faced a life-or-death situation so soon.

"Give me a break, Princess. My life candle melted like summer ice…"

"Your metaphors are usually incomprehensible. In any case, you both should be grateful for my magnanimity. Worship me, worship me."

"Yeah, yeah, amazing, amazing, great, great."

He casually ruffled the girl's head with his single arm, making her head wobble back and forth in an unsettling display of affection. It was a kind of interaction one might instinctively try to stop, yet despite the rough treatment, the girl's mood hadn't soured. It genuinely seemed to be her category of affectionate expression.

In any case,

“Seriously, that was a close call. You saved me, Ros-chi.”

“Well, I suppooose I bear some responsibility as weeell. Still…”

Roswaal looked down at Subaru, who was sighing in relief, with only his yellow eyes, full of deep emotion. Feeling uncomfortable under his gaze, Subaru asked, “What is it?”

“I honestly didn’t think you’d truuuly infiltrate the castle. How far will you deviate from my expectations…? No, perhaps this is futile.”

He muttered, and Roswaal nodded, as if only he understood. Subaru attempted to press him further about his enigmatic behavior, but then he noticed an individual in the corner of his eye to whom he had to apologize first.

“Ah, sorry for abandoning you. There’s a lot I want to say, but…”

“Why…?”

“Hmm?”

As Subaru mentally organized the order in which to deliver his various excuses, Emilia made a whisper so soft it almost disappeared into her mouth. When Subaru asked her to repeat herself, she shook her head once, and then looked back at Subaru.

“Not ‘how’… but ‘why.’ Why are you here, Subaru?”

“If I were to explain that, there’s a reason that’s somehow both deep and shallow, heavy and fluffy, and sometimes it exists and sometimes it doesn’t.”

“Don’t joke around. Subaru, I told you, didn’t I? Don’t you remember?”

Subaru’s throat made a small, constricted sound at her repeated, questioning tone. Emilia was, of course, reFerrisng to the promise they had made at the inn. Given that he had broken his word only minutes after promising to wait, Subaru's lack of intent to keep promises was utterly baffling.

His guilt over breaking that promise was inescapable. But on the other hand, the fact that he had rushed here out of concern for Emilia was also true. How could he blend these points well, in a way that leaned heavily in Subaru's favor? Subaru's mind raced as he thought. Just then—

"—Everyone has arrived. The Wise Men will now enter."

As if to interrupt Subaru and Emilia's conversation, the throne room doors opened. Subaru turned at the sound. From the front, the first person to enter through the grand doors was the knight who had been speaking with the arrogant girl earlier—he must have been called Marcos.

He advanced with a dignified stride, his face hidden beneath a re-donned helmet that conveyed robustness. His figure was precisely that of a knight from a fairy tale, exuding an aura so imposing that even Subaru instinctively straightened his posture.

Following behind him were several elderly individuals. All were dressed appropriately for the place and their status, and their demeanor suggested they were figures of considerable rank. Deep wrinkles, etched by long and heavy experience, marked every face, and an air of solemnity emanated from them.

Among this group, a white-haired elder walking in the center particularly stood out. He didn't appear to be stooped, but he was about a head shorter than Subaru. His long, snow-white hair, completely drained of color, flowed freely, and his beard, just as long and well-maintained, seemed to compete with his hair for length. His short stature made it seem precariously close to dragging, but that impression was sharply cut short by his gaze, which resembled the keen edge of a blade.

"That person is the representative of the Council of Wise Men — meaning, in the current Lugunica, where there is no king, he is the individual with the mooost influence. That's Lord Miklotov."

To a Subaru who had involuntarily lost his voice, Roswaal, standing beside him, quietly added this explanation. Subaru nodded in understanding. The person who was clearly no ordinary individual at first glance was, indeed, not ordinary in reality. He also recalled hearing the name of the Council of Wise Men and the representative of Lugunica in the absence of a king.

"If I remember correctly, it's the organization that runs the country in place of the king, right?"

"Noooominally, they're just assistants, but these days, the actual governance relies on the Council of Wise Men… Though, honestly, not much has chaaanged since the royal family was still alive."

Roswaal shrugged in response to his mutterings. In short, it seemed the Council of Wise Men had a track record of essentially managing the country since the time of the previous king, who lacked the ability to govern. While this might be true, for Roswaal to casually reveal it to Subaru, a near-outsider, let alone do so in the throne room, was nothing short of audacious. He had a rough idea, but it seemed his employer had a rather lax sense of loyalty to the nation. This seemed like a serious trait for someone involved in the nation's core, but then again—

"If we start talking about that, then what even is my position? Seriously, I can only play defensive midfielder, you know?"

"If you could play defensive midfielder, you wouldn't have ended up in that situation, I think. Besides, we're over there, brother."

Al, who had overheard Subaru's mumble, retorted, and Subaru looked in the direction he pointed. Knights were beginning to line up along the walls of the throne room, and three individuals with a distinct aura, different from the uniformly armored knights, also appeared there.

"Oh, those people over there are…"

Naturally, his eyes were drawn to the three distinctive figures, and to his surprise, they were all people Subaru had seen before. Al patted Subaru's shoulder, urging him to go toward them. Subaru looked at Roswaal next to him, as if seeking permission.

“Is it really okay if I go over there?”

“The cooorrect course of action would actually be to quietly send you outside… However, this is quuuite amusing, so follow the guy in the helmet.”

“Hold on, Roswaal!”

Roswaal’s attitude was unchanged from his demeanor at the mansion, and Emilia, similarly, was still angry with him. She pressed him, protesting his casual words.

“Unfortunately, Lady Emilia, there is no time to follow your reasonable arguments right now. To put it correctly, Subaru would be leaving here… for a long, looong time.”

“If you let Subaru stay in a place like this…”

“Debating our opinions will also have to wait. Lady Emilia, the other candidates have gathered. Please go over there.”

Roswaal’s arm pointed towards the back of the throne room, where the “distinctive” group was gathering.

Leaving the throne empty, the elderly members of the Council of Wise Men filled the surrounding chairs. Their figures, descending beneath the large dragon wings painted on the wall, were like loyal retainers attending a king with a dragon at his back. And arrayed neatly before these elders of the Council of Wise Men were individuals who, unlike the seasoned intimidation of old age, radiated a brilliance inherent from birth that resonated with others.

At the forefront stood a ginger-haired girl, leading three young women who stood proudly in line.

In the center stood a girl in a sun-colored dress, hands on her hips, proudly puffing out her chest. She had been called ‘Priscilla’ before entering. Even under the multiple gazes of the kingdom’s highest authorities, her core of arrogance showed no sign of wavering.

Standing to her right was a woman with long, deep green hair. Her hair was so dark it was almost black, but on closer inspection, one could see its lustrous green sheen. She was tall for a woman, her gaze slightly lower than Subaru's, yet her crotch height was significantly different. Her hair, tied back, reached her waist, and her voluptuous, feminine figure was encased in a dark blue uniform. —Her attire was similar to the guards he'd seen in the capital, but the quality of the material and the design were different. She wore trousers, a beautiful woman with a dignified face, well-suited to the term 'cross-dressing beauty'.

To Priscilla's left, in stark contrast to the woman with the sword-like aura, stood a woman with purple hair, exuding a cheerful impression. Her hair also reached her waist, but its texture was naturally wavy, and being fine-haired, it felt soft like cotton candy. This woman was slightly smaller than the other two beside her, her less voluptuous figure clad in a white dress. But what caught Subaru's eye most about her attire was the fluffy white animal fur stole wrapped around her neck. It was a masterpiece that immediately appealed to Subaru's inner fluffy-lover, and the sheer fluffiness of it was enough to make him drool.

Contrary to Subaru's rather tangential thoughts, Emilia bit her lip in frustration.

"We are definitely going to talk properly about this later," she emphasized to Subaru, then hurried over to the three girls. As Emilia, with her silver hair bouncing, joined them, Subaru, biased as he was, thought that while her attire might be a step behind, her inherent cuteness made her stand out head and shoulders above the rest.

Going forward,

"So, those are the participants of the Royal Selection—the candidates for the future queen, huh?"

Considering Emilia joining them and their previous interactions, Subaru concluded that this must be the case. Honestly, it was surprising that all the queen candidates were women, but he also felt that if there had been a male candidate, things might have been decided more smoothly. In a way, he should have anticipated this when Emilia was chosen as a candidate.

Subaru, sighing inwardly with emotion, noticed the people around him also beginning to move and hastily joined them. Roswaal joined a group of several elegant men who looked like civil officials, opposite the standing knights. Subaru strode confidently, following behind Al, who moved without hesitation, and positioned himself slightly closer to the throne than the armored knights. There, he saw—

"—As I thought, you came, Subaru."

A red-haired handsome man raised a hand, greeting Subaru's arrival with a smile. It had been two weeks, but his refreshing aura showed no sign of fading—it was Reinhard. His fiery red hair swayed, and today, unlike the light attire Subaru had seen him in in the lower district, he was in a knight's uniform. What remained unchanged was his divinely sculpted appearance and the sword at his hip, bearing the claw marks of a dragon.

"When I heard Lady Emilia would be attending, I immediately thought you might come."

"Long time no see, and what's with your ridiculously high evaluation of me? Last time you saw me, I was calling for help in a high-pitched voice and pathetically trying to commit seppuku, so you shouldn't have a good impression."

"You not only protected Lady Emilia from deadly blades but also consistently chose the best course of action in other situations. I suppose excessive modesty is a virtue, though."

When Reinhard said that with a completely earnest expression, Subaru was left speechless. True handsome men like him were a problem. They were so favored by their looks that they rarely faced hardships that would twist their personalities, resulting in a high percentage of genuinely good people. It was the "no pointless villains among handsome men" theory. Any handsome man with a twisted personality would be an extremely rare exception within the overall population of attractive men. Among them, Reinhard's seemingly good upbringing was exceptional, making him the epitome of a handsome man—an elite handsome man, one might say.

“If I pray, can I get some of that good fortune? Namu-Amida-Butsu, Namu-Amida-Butsu.”

“I’ve never heard that chant before, but it won’t have any effect, you know? It’s just how I am, by birth.”

“No, no, that’s purely within the realm of prayer, so don’t worry about it. Oh, right, right. Before that, there was something I needed to say.”

Reinhard looked at Subaru with wide blue eyes as he straightened his posture. Subaru then slowly lowered his head to him.

“Seriously, you saved me last time. And, I’m sorry I didn’t have time to thank you or a way to contact you sooner. I wish I could’ve talked to you earlier.”

“I understand your circumstances, Subaru. It couldn’t be helped. You had honorable injuries, and I’ve been a bit busy lately as well.”

Reinhard shrugged slightly, but his lips curved into a happy smile as he accepted Subaru’s words of gratitude. Even such a small gesture looked somehow picturesque, making it impossible to feel any jealousy toward a truly handsome man. And as the two rekindled their acquaintance,

“Reinhard and Subaru-kyun are acquainted? That’s surprising!”

A person with natural cat ears said, interjecting with a feather-light voice. Today, she wore a black uniform, matching Reinhard’s—a uniform with dragon motifs—and her flaxen hair was adorned with the same white ribbon he’d seen before. She was the one who had visited Roswaal’s mansion a few days ago, delivering the message that led to this trip to the capital. She brought a hand to her forehead, like a karate chop, and winked in a salute.

“It’s only been two days, has it? Have you been well? Everyone’s Ferris has been doing just fine, nya!”

“I didn’t ask, but thank you for before. It’s an honor to meet you again.”

“Oh, oh, was that last part a little stiff? You should relax a bit more, you know!”

The girl casually touched Subaru’s shoulder, urging him to relax. Reinhard watched their interaction with a slight look of surprise.

“Subaru, are you acquainted with Ferris?”

“She came to Roswaal’s place, where I’m staying, to confirm attendance today. I thought she was just a low-ranking attendant, but…”

Given that she was now standing next to Reinhard in the same attire, she must also hold a position worthy of standing alongside the ‘Sword Saint’. In fact, Subaru had already heard at the mansion that she was ‘the most skilled water magic user in the royal capital’. Considering everything, he had a strong premonition that she was a person of considerable rank.

“I see, so Ferris went to Lady Emilia’s place. If I had been free, I definitely would have liked to go myself.”

“There’s no way Captain Marcos would allow the Sword Saint to leave the capital, nya. It’d be a shame to add more worries to the Captain’s plate. He’s barely thirty, but he already looks so old… Soon it won’t just be his face, but his mind too, possibly.”

Reinhard let out a faint wry smile at Ferris’s jest. The content was such that he couldn’t openly laugh. Subaru also recalled Marcos’s stony face and inwardly commented that he was too imposing for someone not even thirty. And then, further—

“It’s about time you introduced them to me, wouldn’t you?”

The last individual with an aura different from the knights spoke up. Subaru recognized this person too. However, to be honest, he didn’t have a very good impression of him. Because,

“He’s the guy who kissed Emilia-tan’s hand in the guardroom.”

The flashy guy who had kissed the back of Emilia's hand, cutting in front of him. Subaru mentally called him a show-off, but outwardly, he forced a smile.

"My apologies for the belated introduction. I'm Natsuki Subaru, a humble man. Please, feel free to tuck that information away in some dusty corner of your mind, heheh."

"You're suddenly being quite self-deprecating, Subaru."

Reinhard admonished Subaru, then turned back to the flashy man.

"Please don't take offense, Julius. Subaru has a tendency to behave in a way that makes others underestimate him, to test them."

"Whoa, whoa, can you stop giving me such a cunning backstory? I don't have any such intention, this is just how I act when I'm trying to read the room, in my own way."

Reinhard's overestimation of Subaru was on a completely different level. For him, Subaru's actions on the first day must have been incredibly commendable. Being praised so much made Subaru uncomfortable, or rather, he wasn't used to it and suspected there was some ulterior motive. However,

"So, that's how it is. Julius, elegantly."

Reinhard's demeanor showed no hint of hidden intentions. Subaru realized it was pointless to say anything more, given the sheer goodwill radiating from his profile.

"That is my strongest suit, Reinhard. Julius Juukulius, of the Royal Guard. A pleasure to make your acquaintance. You as well, Sir Knight."

Accepting the red-haired youth's advice, the flashy man—Julius—introduced himself to Subaru with a slight smile. Then, he turned his attention to Al, standing beside Subaru. The one addressed as 'Sir Knight' cleared his throat uncomfortably.

"Ah, I'm not that distinguished, so please don't call me 'Sir Knight.' I'm just a ronin, you know. Not like you gentlemen, with your upright stances.”

He responded in a muffled, low-pitched voice. Unlike his attitude toward Subaru, there was a clear intention to keep people at a distance. For Subaru, who had the impression that Al was quite friendly, his demeanor was utterly unexpected. However, unfortunately, there was no time to delve into that. It was almost simultaneous with the exchange of names and the moment the knight commander, Marcos, raised his voice.

“—Honorable Wise Men. Esteemed candidates. Everyone is present. With utmost humility, I, the commander of the Royal Guard, shall officiate this assembly.”

“Hmm… Very well.”

Miklotov, the representative of the Council of Wise Men, sat with his hands clasped, nodding with a slight tilt of his chin. Marcos bowed respectfully to the elder’s reply, then furrowed his brow, his expression stony.

“This convocation is to deliver a grave announcement regarding the selection of the next queen—the Royal Selection. It is for this reason that we have requested your presence at the Royal Castle, and for the Council of Wise Men to gather.”

His resounding voice, though not particularly loud, reached the ears of everyone in the throne room equally. Subaru, sensing the inherent quality in his voice to command attention, even refrained from making light remarks and listened intently.

“The origins of this matter trace back approximately half a year ago—when the previous king and other members of the royal family successively passed away. The absence of a king is the greatest crisis for a kingdom, and for the Dragon Kingdom of Lugunica, in particular, it deeply concerns the ‘Covenant’.”

The Covenant—that must be some kind of agreement the kingdom had made with the dragon. It was a detail he heard constantly in the early days at the mansion, so he was thoroughly tired of it. However, the information Subaru knew was only superficial, and the same went for the details of the Royal Selection. This lecture was, in a way, welcome.

“Indeed, the maintenance of the Covenant is vital to the kingdom’s survival. It was a regrettable matter that the entire royal family was afflicted by illness simultaneously. It became imperative to swiftly find a new ‘maiden’ capable of communicating with the dragon.”

“To that end, we, the Royal Guard, under the command of the Council of Wise Men, have undertaken the duty to seek out maidens chosen by the Dragon’s peculiar radiance.”

Marcos reached into his breastplate, revealing a small emblem in his palm that Subaru had seen many times—the gemstone-embedded qualification for Royal Selection participants. Marcos walked toward the arrayed candidates, bowed to them, and said,

“Ladies, please present your Dragon’s Radiance.”

In response to his call, the girls each held out their emblems before them. Each gemstone shone brightly in their hands, scattering light of different colors throughout the throne room. Gasps of admiration spread among the knights, and the elderly members of the Council of Wise Men also showed expressions of relief and joy on their deeply wrinkled faces.

“Thus, all candidates possess the qualification of a Dragon Maiden. Having witnessed this, we shall proceed according to the Dragon History Stone—.”

“Huh?”

Marcos was solemnly proceeding with the agenda. He was about to continue speaking in his grave tone, when he was suddenly interrupted by a calm voice. Marcos turned to see the girl who had spoken, the one whose Dragon Radiance shimmered with blue light—the purple-haired figure in the white dress. Still holding up her Dragon Radiance, she tilted her head gracefully.

“I know the Captain wants to push ahead with things, but I’m busy, too, you know? In Kararagi, they say ‘time is money,’ don’t they?”

Despite her gentle tone and calm demeanor, the girl made a straightforward demand. She put away her Dragon Radiance, then clapped her hands together.

“To be honest, instead of repeating what’s already clear, I’d rather hear the core of why we’ve all been gathered here.”

She spoke with a unique intonation, ending her request with a smile. Marcos looked somewhat taken aback by her attitude, but Subaru was even more shocked. In this tense atmosphere, even Subaru himself was trying his best to keep his mouth shut to avoid saying anything ill-timed.

“Hey, hey, Kansai dialect? You’re kidding me.”

"Oh, you're surprised too, bro? Apparently, that's how they speak in the western country of Kararagi. I haven't seen it myself, but… Maybe the other world's translation system just chose that language option."

Subaru muttered softly, and Al, standing beside him, echoed a similar sentiment in a low voice. As expected, Al, a veteran who had been summoned eighteen years ago, seemed to have long since overcome the initial shock of such linguistic encounters, showing less agitation than Subaru.

Meanwhile, a different kind of surprise spread through the throne room, for reasons unrelated to Subaru. A faint murmur began to fill the hall, but it was quelled by another dignified female voice.

"That makes sense."

"—Lady Crusch."

The green-haired woman, arms crossed and chin slightly lowered, assented. Marcos called her name in response to her reaction, furrowing his brow with a hint of perplexity.

"To think, the head of the Karsten family would say such a thing…"

"While I understand the importance of formality, neglecting the main topic would be putting the cart before the horse. We should quickly address the reason for our gathering. Although…"

The woman closed one eye, looking past Marcos to the assembled Wise Men.

"I have a rough idea."

"Oh, I see. As expected of the head of the Karsten family. You already understood the meaning of this convocation."

Nodding at Miklotov's impressed words, the woman lifted her dignified face and touched upon the true purpose of this gathering in front of the throne. It was—

“Yes. —A banquet, wouldn’t you say? Though we are destined to compete, there is still much we do not know about each other. If we gather around a table, clink glasses, and speak from the heart, we will naturally come to know each other’s character…”

“No, that is incorrect.”

An old man couldn’t help but interject to the woman who was solemnly planning a drinking party. She looked surprised by his attitude, then slowly turned to Subaru and the others.

“Ferris. The story is different from what I heard.”

“Oh, come on, you know. Ferris just said, ‘There’s lots of food and drinks being brought into the castle, so maybe they’re throwing a banquet, nya!’ That’s all!”

“I see, my mistake then. I forgive you.”

Her demeanor was magnanimous, but the content of the conversation was clearly bizarre. Turning back to the front, and based on their previous exchange, the woman let out a slight sigh.

“In that case, please disregard everything I just said. It’s embarrassing.”

“Oh, Lady Crusch, you’re so manly!”

Ferris writhed, holding her hands to her cheeks. Her face was red, and she swayed her hips, seemingly unconcerned about having provided incorrect information. In fact, seeing her now, it seemed almost intentional. It was hard to gauge the precise line between playful teasing and going too far. Subaru, even as he was swept up in the atmosphere of the venue, tried to maintain his normal thoughts. His thoughts were interrupted again by a clapping sound.

“Even if Crusch steps back, my opinion hasn’t changed. Everyone already knows the superficial stuff about the Royal Selection. Right?”

Tilting her head, the girl asked the three standing beside her for their agreement. Crusch nodded to her question, Priscilla let out a small, bored snort, and Emilia's lips trembled with tension.

"W-Well, I think we should listen properly…"

"Sorry, but I'm not listening to your opinion."

However, her attitude toward Emilia, who was the only one to respond, was abrupt and dismissive. Emilia's expression clouded with resignation at the blunt dismissal. Seeing her profile, her head bowed in submission to having her opinion brushed aside, sparks flew in Subaru's mind.

"You… what's with that attitude…? "Woohoo! I don't know anything about the Royal Selection or whatever, so I want to hear what's next!"

A strong arm reached out to block Subaru as he stepped forward, on the verge of shouting. The curse words that were about to spill from his mouth were instead overwritten by a voice that echoed throughout the hall.

It was Al who had stopped Subaru's rashness. Bathed in the gazes of everyone in the hall, he fiddled with the clasp of his jet-black helmet with his single arm, making rhythmic metallic sounds.

"Don't stare so much, it's embarrassing. I know I'm out of place, so if you treat me like too much of an outsider, I'll cry and wail and make a huge fuss, an adult of my age."

Al, as if scoffing at Subaru's attempt to gauge the limits of acceptable mischief, tap-danced through the minefield with an air of nonchalance. His behavior, more heedless than audacious, genuinely startled those around him, including Reinhard. However,

"Lady Priscilla. I understand he is your knight… an explanation?"

"You long-winded fools will do it yourselves without my needing to. I merely saved myself the trouble. Repeated words are no different from sleep talk. And you shouldn't even sleep talk while sleeping."

As only Marcos managed to respond calmly, Priscilla provoked him with her haughty tone. They were all, without exception, dysfunctional personalities—Emilia's good character stood out to an unfortunate degree. It was clear from their previous exchange that she wasn't being treated properly.

Anyway,

"—You owe me one. Or is it two now?"

Al held up two fingers, turning his head towards Subaru, who was inwardly grateful. He didn't think he could have handled the situation as well as Al did, had he gotten enraged and raised his voice there. Al had stepped forward and taken all the blame for him.

Perhaps the reason Al could act so confidently, despite being in a similar position to Subaru, was that he had solidly built his foundation over eighteen years. He was clearly different from Subaru, who had yet to find anything certain in this other world, even in terms of his mindset.

"Oh dear, the princess's tantrums have begun again. Please, enough already."

"It is Heaven's will that I bend the common folk to my will. Rejoice and dance in my palm. Continue, Marcos. Tell my knight how I shall become queen."

"If you can throw it to someone else with that much conviction, that's impressive. I'm not saying anything more."

The girl shrugged, giving up on Priscilla's attitude. Seeing that their two wills were unified, Marcos cleared his throat slightly and asked, "Is that acceptable?" to Emilia and Crusch. After seeing them nod, he continued.

"Then, though we have slightly diverged, let us return to the main topic. —You, the ladies qualified as Dragon Maidens, have been gathered here due to a new prophecy etched into the Dragon History Stone."

Another new word, Subaru inwardly wondered. From the context, he assumed it was some kind of prophecy tablet, but he couldn't be sure about the details.

“The prophecy inscribed on the stone tablet reads thus: ‘When the Covenant of Lugunica is broken, a new bearer of the Dragon shall maintain the Covenant and guide the nation.’”

“Indeed. The tablet’s revelation is truly the will of Heaven. The Dragon History Stone, which has accumulated as much history as the kingdom itself since its birth, inscribes texts in response to events that determine the kingdom’s destiny. Considering that its contents have shaped subsequent history, it is our duty to obey.”

Miklotov’s reflection was met with solemn nods from the other elders on the Council of Wise Men. In short, it could be interpreted as a rather audacious deferral of future policy to a prophecy tablet, but in a world with magic, prophecies seemed to have so much power that he couldn’t interject. In any case, it seemed Emilia and the others were gathered as king candidates—or rather, as maidens who could communicate with the dragon—in accordance with that prophecy.

Just then, a question popped into Subaru’s mind. It amounted to this:

“If it’s about talking to the dragon and the Covenant and all that, do they really need to be involved in the royal selection? Couldn’t they just have a family whose role is to be the Dragon Maiden?”

He muttered his question quietly, not to Al, but to Reinhard on his other side. Reinhard glanced down at Subaru, a wry smile playing on his lips.

“What you say, Subaru, is very sensible. But it cannot be so.”

“Why not? Could you tell me why?”

“The answer is that the Covenant for the prosperity of the kingdom was made between the Dragon and the King. The Dragon did not merely make a covenant with someone who could communicate with it. It was because that person was the King who bore the kingdom that the Covenant was made.”

A passage from a picture book, “The Dragon’s Tale”, resurfaced in Subaru’s memory. As Reinhard’s explanation indicated, it was a story of a king and a dragon. The weight of that history, passed down through generations. The Council of Wise Men, and the Royal Guard who had gathered Emilia and the others, probably aimed to uphold that history as much as possible. But then,

“In that case, wouldn’t a hastily appointed maiden and queen just infuriate the dragon? It’s not like it’s a riddle contest from Ikkyu-san; you can’t just say, ‘Oh, the royal family’s gone, so we’ve made a maiden into a king instead,’ can you?”

“I hear opinions on that point clashed quite a bit. However the prophecy tablet, the Dragon History Stone, which is transmitted within the kingdom, indicated that this precarious method was the correct one, the will of Heaven. The Council acknowledged that and gave us our orders. I don’t want to think it will turn out badly.”

Subaru responded with a nod of understanding to Reinhard’s explanation, which was too refreshing to be called a prayer.

There was no certainty, but there was also no other way. Therefore, doing their best was the current state of affairs in the Dragon Kingdom of Lugunica. What judgment the crucial dragon would pass on the decisions of the kingdom’s people—that was something no one knew now. Perhaps only the owner of the heavenly will, who so grandly inscribed words on that prophecy tablet, knew.

“Alright, I get the gist. So, the plan is to choose a queen from these four. Is it out of the question to just make all of them queens and rank them or something?”

“The reason that’s not possible is also inscribed on the Dragon History Stone… The Captain will read it now.”

Subaru’s brilliant idea was dismissed with a single shake of the head. As Reinhard’s blue eyes turned back to the center of the hall, he said that the true meaning would now be revealed. The stony knight, who commanded the attention of the hall, turned to the four candidates standing in line.

“The prophecy continues thus: ‘From the five who can become new guides for the nation, choose one maiden and approach the Dragon’s Covenant.’”

Marcos’s booming pronouncement, once deciphered, left Subaru no choice but to grunt in understanding. If the prophecy tablet stated to choose one, then there was no other way. But as he considered that, a part of it suddenly bothered him.

“Five…?”

“Yes, five.”

Reinhard nodded in response to Subaru’s question. He coolly glanced at Subaru, whose face was etched with doubt.

“In other words, with only four candidates currently present—the Royal Selection hasn’t even begun yet. We can only be blamed for the Royal Guard’s inadequacy in failing to find the fifth candidate.”

“Fifty million people, you said? It seems tough to find five from that, and if they did it in about half a year, wouldn’t that be too fast? That’s my opinion.”

Indeed, unless there was a well-established communication system and a nationwide census could be conducted all at once, as in a country like Japan, it would be a very difficult condition. Even in Japan, one could expect countless individuals who might bypass such conditions and become exceptions. He didn’t know how many people were in the Royal Guard or how excellent they were, but simply selecting four candidates in a short period was already quite an achievement.

“Well, if it turns out there are tons of potential maidens who can make the Dragon’s Radiance glow, then I’ll blame you without hesitation. You blind idiot…!”

“I can’t definitively say we searched all fifty million citizens, but we found four after searching over eighty percent. I think the Royal Knights deserve some praise.”

He must have been proud of what they had accomplished.

Reinhard's demeanor showed no shame whatsoever. Because of this, Subaru, who had gotten carried away, felt even more awkward. However, the situation continued to unfold, ignoring Subaru's feelings.

"The fifth person couldn't be found, because of this we were unable to do anything, despite knowing our competitors. It's frustrating."

"Exactly. I've been called out repeatedly, interrupting my business dealings, and the connection with the Juukulius family alone isn't going to be worth it in the long run."

"Lady Anastasia. Your honesty is a charming virtue, but in this setting, it might be better to exercise a little restraint…"

The purple-haired girl agreed with Crusch's words. Julius then offered a refined, albeit critical, remark. The girl—Anastasia, as she was called—looked at Julius.

"What? That it's better if I restrain myself?"

"No. It would simply be more graceful."

"I really don't understand Julius's standards on that one, nya."

Despite the advice being unconvincing, Anastasia sighed with a disarmed expression. Then, she turned back to Marcos.

"Anyway, everyone knows what's been said so far. Are you satisfied now, Princess?"

"What do you think? Did you get it, Al?"

"Yep, got it. Thanks a bunch, young lady with the Kararagi accent."

As Al waved his single arm, Priscilla responded to Anastasia, "She says so." Anastasia closed her eyes at the arbitrary nature of the master and servant. Then, she looked up at the Council of Wise Men again.

"If you have something to say, make it quick, okay? I'm busy, too, and I have lots of other things I want to do after this. You grandpas holding the national purse understand that, right?"

Her admonishing tone, however, in the current situation where she knew they were her superiors, sounded only like teasing. Subaru instinctively tensed, fearing the atmosphere might turn ugly, but Anastasia seemed to be a person who had already faced many such situations and knew how to tread the line. There was no hint of disapproval from any of the Council of Wise Men members, who had received her disrespectful remarks. On the contrary, Miklotov even looked amused.

"I apologize to the busy Lady Anastasia, but I would be grateful if you would bear with an old man's rambling a little longer. After all… Today will be a day etched in the history of the kingdom."

At the end of a seemingly casual conversation, Miklotov's voice suddenly deepened. Hearing it, an atmosphere so profound that everyone in the hall, which had been losing some of its initial tension, felt compelled to straighten their backs, swept through the room. Everyone tried to discern the true meaning of Miklotov's words, fearing to utter the first sound. In the midst of this, the girl who stood fearlessly, chest puffed out, broke the silence.

"You said history would move. Meaning, that's how it is, isn't it?"

To Priscilla's quiet question, Miklotov nodded slightly on the dais. Then, he directed his sharp gaze at Marcos, signaling with his eyes. Marcos, receiving the signal, bowed with a hand over his chest.

"—Knight Reinhard van Astrea! Present yourself!"

"Yes, sir!"

Suddenly, Marcos's voice echoed through the hall. Subaru flinched in surprise, but next to him, Reinhard responded as if he had been waiting for the call. He then moved with a fluid grace to the center, bowed to the four candidates, and then stood before Captain Marcos.

"Reinhard, your report, if you please."

"Yes, sir."

Stepping aside, Marcos cleared the center of the dais. Reinhard advanced, commanding the gaze of all spectators, and faced the Council of Wise Men with not a hint of tension.

“Honorable members of the Council of Wise Men, I, Reinhard van Astrea of the Royal Guard, humbly present my report on the completion of my mission.”

“Hmm, then let everyone hear it.”

At Miklotov’s instruction, Reinhard bowed, then turned to face the entire hall, standing tall and proud.

“The Dragon Maiden, the queen’s candidate—the fifth and final one has been found.”

A murmur of astonishment spread among the standing knights, and the expressions of the candidates shifted, reflecting various strong emotions: joy, boredom, bewilderment. Subaru, too, muttered “Just as I thought” to himself at Reinhard’s words. Given the flow of the conversation so far, this outcome was inevitable. However, what he didn’t understand was Reinhard’s position. Why was he chosen to deliver the report? Or, thinking along those lines, Subaru realized a common thread among the people present. It was—

“Everyone here is connected to a queen candidate… so that means…”

Al was with Priscilla. Ferris was with Crusch. Julius was with Anastasia. And if Subaru included himself in that category as being connected to Emilia, then Reinhard’s position in this group was also clear.

“Bring her in.”

Though his voice was quiet, it effortlessly carried over the murmuring in the hall, reaching the guards at the grand doors. The guards, receiving his command, saluted, and then the doors slowly opened.

Through the opened doors, accompanied by several women dressed as maids, one person was ushered into the throne room. Seeing her, Subaru raised his eyebrows in suspicion.

A dress of pale yellow fabric. White gloves reaching her elbows, and high-heeled shoes that made it difficult to walk, rustling her skirt as she stepped on the carpet. Her small, delicate frame looked so fragile it seemed it would break if hugged, and her fine golden hair perfectly matched her ethereal appearance. However, Subaru knew that this strong-willed girl, with her swaying semi-long golden hair and mischievous gap in her teeth, was far from frail.

Surprised by her transformed appearance, Subaru involuntarily gaped, stunned. While everyone else's eyes were fixed on the newly entered girl, Reinhard's clear voice echoed through the hall.

"The one I shall revere as queen—her name is Lady Felt."

Reinhard's voice reverberated repeatedly in Subaru's ears, frozen in surprise.

—The Royal Selection, which would decide the future of the Kingdom of Lugunica, was about to begin.

Chapter 15:
People on Bad Terms with Each Other

A girl clad in tattered, grimy clothes, with dull blonde hair and wild eyes. Though forced to walk with her head down by her circumstances, she was a resilient girl who survived with only fierce determination burning in her red eyes.

That was Subaru's entire impression of the girl named Felt.

Summoned by Reinhard's declaration, Felt, accompanied by her maid, walked quietly through the Throne Room. She trod on the red carpet, consciously avoiding dragging the hem of her pale yellow dress on the floor, her small back held straight as she advanced—the very picture of a noble lady.

Subaru had once thought she might shine if polished, but the raw gem named Felt, apparently refined by the power of Reinhard's house, unfortunately diverged from Subaru's previous assessment.

It wasn't just "might shine if polished." The truth was, she would "shine brilliantly if polished."

Though still immature, her refined appearance was beautiful.

As Subaru stared, dumbfounded, his mouth agape, she moved gracefully to Reinhard's side. Seeing Felt within reach, Reinhard smiled and nodded, his handsome face composed.

"Lady Felt, thank you for coming."

"—Reinhard."

Reinhard bowed respectfully. Felt, looking up at him due to their height difference, lifted her chin and called out.

Called by her clear voice, Reinhard responded with an equally clear "Yes." Felt smiled faintly at his demeanor.

Then,

"—You bastard, you hid my clothes again, didn't you?!"

Lifting the hem of her dress, her slender, surprisingly long leg arced. It struck Reinhard's temple precisely—but his kicking foot was neatly caught in Reinhard's lightly raised palm.

Reinhard, still holding Felt's foot as she stood on one leg, sighed.

"You startled me. What are you doing, all of a sudden?"

"Don't act all innocent after stopping me so smoothly! My clothes! You hid them again, didn't you? Thanks to you, I'm stuck wearing these annoying frilly things!"

Balancing on one leg, Felt pouted unhappily, shaking the hem of the dress that was likely tailored for her. Roughly handled, the formerly wrinkle-free fabric began to show unsightly creases. Watching this, Reinhard gently lowered Felt's foot to the ground.

"They suit you very well; there's no need to be embarrassed."

"I'm not embarrassed, I said I hate them! It's not just about the clothes, it's you too! Don't you think it's embarrassing for a knight to kidnap and imprison someone?!"

"If it is for the prosperity of the kingdom."

Felt put a hand to her forehead as if she had a headache, in response to Reinhard's unwavering declaration. Then, as if just realizing that all eyes in the hall were fixed on her,

"What are you looking at? I'm not a show. If you think I'm a show, you should throw some money, you rich folks."

With hostility towards the obviously upper-class people, Felt grumbled in a very unrefined manner, despite wearing a dress that was clearly of high quality, even in this setting.

Her disappointing thuggishness, betraying her refined appearance, allowed Subaru to finally shake off his dazed state and let out a sigh of relief.

"I thought she'd completely changed, but it's just her looks. Good, people really don't change their core, do they? Including me!"

Subaru was pleased, having justified himself while defending Felt.

Following his reaction, everyone else who had been watching Felt and Reinhard's exchange also began to react accordingly.

"To make Reinhard use his hands, she seems more capable than expected," said Crusch, impressed from an odd perspective.

"Oh dear, another tomboy, aren't we? Give me a break, please," said Anastasia, shaking her head with a look of exasperation.

"It's unthinkable for anyone to stand out more than me. What is there that I can use to stand out… Perhaps a public execution of an intruder?" said Priscilla, drifting into an unignorable thought.

"That child… from back then…?! So that's why Reinhard was so surprised…" And Emilia, who had apparently reached some conclusion, widened her eyes in surprise.

Emilia, in particular, was no stranger to Felt, so her surprise must have been profound. Despite their relationship of vying for the insignia, it had turned into Felt also being chosen by the insignia, and now they were rivals for the throne.

Once the initial impact had subsided, Felt reacted to these responses by looking uncomfortable—or rather, rudely clicked her tongue and turned her face away.

Though their acquaintance two weeks ago was brief, Subaru hadn't thought she was such a twisted girl. A lot must have happened to her during those two weeks. Subaru felt his own experiences were intense, but he could imagine the intensity of her journey from a mere street urchin to a royal candidate was considerable.

As Subaru nodded, thinking these thoughts, Felt's gaze, which had been scanning the hall as if appraising it, met his.

She suddenly furrowed her brow, then closed her eyes as if searching her memory. After only a few seconds, her face brightened as if she had found the memory.

“Oh! What are you doing here, bro!”

Pushing Reinhard’s chest with a light shove, she stomped towards Subaru with the same momentum. The expensive-looking dress was handled so roughly that it was heartbreaking, and the maids who had carefully coordinated it covered their faces and looked away.

Ignoring such sentiments, Subaru faced Felt, who was approaching with a beaming smile. Honestly, he would have preferred to avoid facing her given the atmosphere, but thinking that she must feel just as helpless with a lack of allies, he couldn’t just brush her off.

“Yo, long time no see. You’re doing well, aren’t you—”

The moment he casually raised his hand and offered a cheerful greeting, a front kick landed squarely in his gut. His body bent into a V-shape from the impact, and Subaru knelt on the spot, coughing.

Subaru groaned, not understanding the sudden violent act. Felt, still with one leg raised, looked down at his pathetic state.

“Judging by that, your stomach wound seems fine. It looks like you’ve got a lot more injuries elsewhere.”

“If you know that, show some sympathy, you… Why did you put your full strength into a check? What if it tore open when it was temporarily stitched? …There was actually a time when it was close to that.”

Though perfectly healed now, a distinct straight white scar remained on Subaru’s bare abdomen. Moreover, scars from witchbeast fangs were scattered across his body, making his state of being battered and bruised over two weeks quite remarkable. There were countless lacerations and scrapes, so it was no longer a matter of saying a back wound is a swordsman’s shame.

“Well, I guess you’ve had it rough too, bro. However, if you say you’ve had it rough, I haven’t been slacking either, you know?”

“…I guess so. I never thought I’d run into you in a situation like this. The insignia commotion has come full circle and now Bon Jovi —”

“You can’t just blurt out ‘insignia commotion,’ can you? Look at the situation!”

“…Couldn’t you have found a cuter way to shut me up? Your kicks are still fast.”

And because it was to shut his mouth while he was crouching, her chin was kicked up from directly below. Fortunately, the force was tempered, and he was getting used to being kicked, so he avoided biting his tongue. Anyway, he felt it would be bad for Reinhard if he touched upon her past misdeeds.

However, thanks to Felt’s own actions, the fact that her social debut had become such a mess was, he thought, irreversible.

“Lady Felt. It is good to renew old acquaintances, but please come this way.”

It was Marcos, who remained unswayed by the atmosphere and calmly proceeded with the agenda, who interrupted the exchange between the two, which might have seemed amicable to an outsider.

Felt seemed to want to argue with his stern expression, but as Reinhard, standing right beside him, bowed apologetically, she reluctantly moved forward again.

“So, what do you want me to do?”

“First, I would like to say, ‘behave like a lady,’ but before that, please take this.”

Felt made a disgusted face at Reinhard’s light jab. Into her palm, Reinhard placed the Dragon Insignia he took from his pocket.

For a moment, Felt’s brow furrowed at the shape of the insignia, but as soon as she saw the gem begin to glow brilliantly in her palm, her stiff expression softened.

"I thought it was a weird stone when I stole it. Why does it glow?"

"Stole it?"

"It is because Lady Felt has been recognized by the Dragon as worthy."

Felt inadvertently let slip a remark, despite having just chastised Subaru. Marcos seemed to notice her carelessness, but Reinhard immediately cut her off, somehow averting the situation.

Marcos seemed momentarily perplexed that his statement had been brushed aside, but he apparently prioritized the immediate facts over his question.

Turning around, he looked up at the elders of the Council of Wise Men who had been silently observing the qualification ceremony.

"As you can see, the Dragon Stone has indeed recognized Lady Felt as a priestess. With her participation approved, the true meaning of this Royal Selection can now begin."

Marcos placed his palm on the iron plate and bowed respectfully. Reinhard followed his captain's lead, and then all the Knights of the Royal Guard who had been involved in the search followed suit.

The knights reported the completion of their mission; thanks to their efforts, the five Dragon Maidens—that is, the future queen candidates of Lugunica—had gathered here.

"I see, so this is the day history moves," Subaru muttered, finding himself unexpectedly in the midst of this momentous occasion. To sneak into the royal castle on such a grand day, looking back, was quite reckless and foolish. He should have been dead nine times out of ten.

He once again realized the strength of his own good fortune.

Subaru, harboring such irrelevant thoughts, belatedly noticed the murmuring that had begun to spread through the Throne Room.

The source of the murmuring was from the group of civil officials, including Roswaal, arrayed opposite the saluting knights across the center of the hall. The details of the murmuring were unclear, but it contained confusion, bewilderment, and clear dissatisfaction.

“Excuse me, if I may?”

Finally, a middle-aged man stepped forward from the group of civil officials.

He was a man in his forties, with flowing brown hair. He nervously stroked his magnificent goatee as he spoke.

“Regarding this Royal Selection ceremony, the efforts of the Royal Guard are beyond words. Without your strength, it would have been impossible to create a situation in line with the Dragon Stone’s prophecy in such a short period.”

“Your words are too kind.”

To the man who praised the knights with an elaborate turn of phrase, Marcos humbly replied in a solemn tone. The man, in turn, looked away as if finding it difficult, then prefaced with “However,” and continued,

“I hate to say this, but although it aligns with the situation indicated by the Dragon Stone, isn’t there a slight problem with the selection of individuals?”

“Meaning?”

“I am saying, have you not been too captivated by their qualification as Dragon Maidens, neglecting the crucial qualification to wear the crown of the kingdom?”

The middle-aged man snapped back, as if scolding someone slow to understand. He immediately clamped his mouth shut, seemingly embarrassed by the harshness of his tone, but several voices of agreement, like “That’s right, that’s right,” leaked from the group of civil officials.

Perhaps gaining some confidence from the presence of supporters, he cleared his throat and continued, "The covenant with the Dragon is of utmost importance. As long as Lugunica has existed as a pro-Dragon kingdom, the nation cannot stand without their friendship. However, if we emphasize the Dragon too much and neglect the people, isn't that putting the cart before the horse?"

"So, you mean this: We, the Royal Guard, in our zeal to find the Dragon Maidens, have misjudged the individuals worthy of being the king to whom we should pledge our loyalty?"

"There's a slight discrepancy in wording, but that's essentially it."

Perhaps chilled by Marcos's blunt summary, the middle-aged man indirectly warned him to choose his words carefully. But the follow-up was a little too late.

Despite their desperate efforts and results, the knights' feelings were far from calm after receiving such an ungenerous evaluation of their achievements.

This was particularly easy for Subaru, who stood on the knights' side, to perceive.

"It's not just fishy, it's getting ominous…"

"Well, from the knights' perspective, they're being nitpicked. I don't really care about that, but what about you two?"

Hearing Subaru's murmur, Al let out a muffled laugh and turned the conversation to the other two. Julius and Ferris, who were addressed, only shifted their gaze.

"Ferris doesn't care at all, nya? Because, no matter what that old man says, Ferris's loyalty is already pledged to just one person."

"I wouldn't say I completely agree with Ferris, but I feel the same way. My sword has already been offered. They, too, will eventually entrust their loyalty. I am not so narrow-minded as to condemn the wavering of their hearts before that happens."

"Hah, well said. Well, I'm the same with my princess."

As Al spoke as if in competition, the two could be seen smiling faintly.

Subaru felt somewhat left out and displeased. The three of them, who placed their complete trust in their masters as knights or mercenaries. Comparing his own position to theirs, Subaru felt a strange sense of being a step behind.

He shook his head to dispel the weakness, telling himself that couldn't be true. He wanted to help Emilia achieve her goal. He shouldn't be inferior to the three of them in that feeling.

While Subaru was driven by a strange impatience, the exchange in the hall began to escalate.

Starting with the middle-aged man who voiced his opinion, the civil officials began to express their dissatisfaction one after another.

"They are Maidens, but also queens. Or rather, they lack the self-awareness of becoming queen."

"Even if their appearance is adorned, their true nature shows in their demeanor."

"They lack dignity. Their education is insufficient. How can we call them queens?"

"Isn't it fine, reeeally? I think it might make for a cooolorful and enjoooyable Royal Selection, you knooow?"

"You, be silent!"

A familiar voice seemed to cut through the civil official group, but Subaru ignored those issues and looked at Emilia and the others caught in the storm.

The civil officials were particularly singling out Felt, whose bad attitude had been conspicuous earlier, but it couldn't be said that the criticism wasn't spilling over to the other candidates. In fact, Emilia's profile was as if she was enduring pain, and it was clear that standing there was a burden for her.

If only someone would shout at them to shut up, she might feel a little better, but considering the disadvantages of doing so, he hesitated to make an immediate decision.

Therefore, what settled the situation was not Subaru's shortsightedness, nor the anger of the knights whose completed mission had been sullied, nor the wisdom of the civil officials who regretted their excessive words.

The sole reason was a single word, "Silence," whispered by the old man seated on the dais.

Stroking his long beard, Miklotov narrowed his already half-closed eyes further, looking at Felt, who stared up at the old man with a defiant expression.

A moment of silence passed, then Miklotov suddenly let out a small sigh.

"Knight Reinhard."

"Yes!"

Called by name, Reinhard was beckoned and swiftly ascended the dais.

He knelt before Miklotov, removed his sword from his waist, and placed it on the floor, showing the deepest respect. Miklotov watched him with satisfaction, then stroked his white beard as if recalling memories.

"Hmm. Would you tell me the circumstances of how you discovered her?"

Asked about their encounter, Subaru, though not directly involved, felt a cold sweat on his forehead. If Reinhard told the truth, he would naturally have to mention Felt's theft.

However, disregarding Subaru's concerns, Reinhard nodded deeply.

"Thirteen days ago, I found her in a corner of the capital's lower district—commonly known as the 'slums'. At that time, for certain reasons, she had the opportunity to touch the Dragon Stone, and it was revealed that she possessed the qualification as a maiden, and so I brought her here."

Reinhard reported, smoothly glossing over the problematic parts.

To Subaru, who knew the circumstances, it was easy to find flaws, but it was not Subaru who commented on Reinhard's statement. The part that person pointed out was also different from what had bothered Subaru.

"A gutter rat from the slums… Are you sane, Knight Reinhard?!"

It was the voice of the middle-aged man, who had been gaining some momentum with the backing of the civil official group.

He gestured dramatically towards Felt, wildly waving his hands.

"To invite a gutter rat, of all people, to this ceremony to select the king who will bear the future of Lugunica is outrageous. What do you take the throne for?!"

"…"

"If it's inconvenient, you stay silent. Is this the successor to the current Sword Saint? I must conclude that the honor of the Astrea family has fallen to ruin."

Reinhard remained in a respectful salute on the dais, accepting the words as they were spoken. No negative emotion was visible on his cool profile, and the middle-aged man, who had been pressing his accusations, eventually fell silent as if speaking to the wind, clicking his tongue in irritation. Then,

"Lord Miklotov, please reconsider your thoughts. To grant someone the right to the throne merely because they were chosen by the Dragon Stone is excessive. The crown of the queen should be given to the worthy. It's not a matter of just having the insignia glow at random…"

"Lord Rickert, aaaren't you getting a little tooooo heated, perhaps?"

The middle-aged man—Rickert—challenged the current head of the nation and its policy. His fiery rhetoric was doused by a familiar, drawn-out, feigned-innocent voice.

Rickert turned a gaze filled with clear hostility towards Roswaal, who stood a few people away. Roswaal raised both hands at the piercing stare.

“Oh~, scary, scary. When looked at like that, my timid heart aches.”

“Nonsense… Roswaal. I am not convinced by your attitude either. Not just me, but many in the court. Until now, we have overlooked it as unavoidable due to the emergency, but if exceptions keep appearing like this, it’s unacceptable. The Astrea family, who tries to hoist a gutter rat onto the throne, and your foolish act of recommending a half-demon as king…”

“—Lord Rickert, you should retract those words.”

A chilling voice quietly echoed through the hall, and Rickert’s face, which had been red with excitement, turned pale. The cause was the pressure that accompanied the voice—Roswaal, who still wore an unchanging smile, merely tilted his head in concern.

“Calling a half-elf a half-demon is a bad custom. Moreover, Lady Emilia is still a royal candidate—do you understand which of us is out of line?”

“E-Even so, I don’t think my argument is wrong. The qualification as a Dragon Maiden and being a suitable person for a queen are not synonymous. Lord Miklotov!”

Rickert, pressured by Roswaal’s quiet intimidation, called Miklotov’s name, his face glistening with sweat.

“Please reconsider. At this point, it is premature to arbitrarily select royal candidates. What meaning is there in merely following the Dragon Stone’s form…”

“—Knight Reinhard.”

In response to Rickert's plea for a change of heart, the Wise Man, however, did not comply, but called the red-haired knight's name. The knight responded without hesitation, turning his resolute face towards the dais as if awaiting the words that would follow.

Miklotov touched his long beard, playing with it with his fingertips as if searching his memory.

"Surely, you believe she is that person?"

"I have no certainty. The means to confirm it have already been lost. —However, I hesitate to call this many coincidences."

"Then what?"

"—Destiny."

At Reinhard's clear answer, Miklotov closed his eyelids as if deeply moved.

Subaru, listening nearby, had no idea what the two were talking about. He glanced around to see if others understood, but Al, whose face was always hidden, and even Ferris and Julius seemed equally clueless.

Only Reinhard and Miklotov understood each other.

As if losing patience with this situation, Rickert's lips trembled and he stepped forward.

"Meaningless wordplay! Knight Reinhard, have you lost even the path of a true knight? Such clouded eyes, bringing a gutter rat, suit you well…"

"If you are caught up in superficialities and overlook what is important, then your eyes are but holes. Or perhaps your loyalty to the royal family is merely a facade, one might suspect."

The one who struck Rickert, who had been trying to denounce Reinhard with renewed vigor, was a quiet but unmistakably firm condemnation that brooked no softness.

Rickert stood dumbfounded for a moment, unable to comprehend the meaning of the words spun from Miklotov's mouth. The civil official group who supported Rickert was also in the same state, and even Subaru, who secretly felt schadenfreude at their humiliation, shared the same incomprehension.

Naturally, a slight silence fell upon the hall, but Rickert managed to gather himself and look up. Surprisingly tough, he said, his face pale,

"Th-This is strange. Lord Miklotov, you are being unkind. What is wrong with my loyalty, or my eyes?"

"Hmm. Then, looking at Lady Felt, do you not notice anything?"

At Miklotov's testing words, Rickert looked at Felt with a puzzled expression.

Felt, who had been the subject of the conversation but largely excluded from it, made a visibly disgusted face at the attention. The other candidates, who had been quietly observing the situation, felt the same way, with only Emilia, who had a subtly longer acquaintance with Felt, showing a faint hint of inner impatience on her face, stimulating Subaru's worrying nature.

While Subaru harbored such misplaced anxieties, Rickert meticulously examined Felt's appearance from head to toe.

"What is there to notice… She is still so young. There is too much she needs to learn rather than ascend the throne…!"

Rickert, following the words, looked at Felt and was about to point out what needed correcting. His expression suddenly stiffened as if he noticed something, and his eyes widened in astonishment.

Then he turned his wide eyes towards Miklotov.

"G-Golden hair and crimson eyes—?!"

"Hmm. Indeed, a rare combination of eye and hair color. —In Lugunica, especially, it holds a very significant meaning."

As Rickert voiced the cause of his agitation, the same shock spread among the civil officials who understood his meaning. Only Subaru, lacking common sense in this world, remained oblivious.

He glanced beside him; Ferris and Julius also had expressions of understanding. Al, as usual, was unreadable, but showed no particular surprise.

So Subaru, for now, adopted a stance of understanding what he didn't understand, just to avoid feeling left behind.

However, the explanation for that unknown part was soon provided by Rickert.

Perhaps wanting to share his current astonishment with those around him, he pointed a trembling finger at Felt.

"Golden hair and crimson eyes—those are the physical characteristics that appear in the bloodline of the Lugunica royal family. But! How can such a strange story be true! The royal family, all its members, passed away in an incident half a year ago! There's no room for anyone to intrude—"

"—Are you aware of the incident that occurred in the palace fourteen years ago, Lord Rickert?"

Reinhard quietly interrupted Rickert, who was about to utter a strong denial.

At the content of Reinhard's words, Rickert's expression stiffened further, and his voice cracked as he said, "No way."

"You don't mean, Knight Reinhard, that you're suggesting…"

"Fourteen years ago, an intruder broke into the castle, and the daughter of the former King's younger brother—Lord Fold—was abducted. The intruder was allowed to escape, and the whereabouts of the young lady remained unknown."

"Hmm. That was the incident that led to the disbandment and reformation of the former Royal Guard. I believe your relatives were not unrelated to it either…"

"Knowing information that should normally be unknown. I hope that is enough for you to surmise."

To Reinhard's concise reply, Miklotov merely nodded in response.

However, Rickert's confusion showed no sign of abating. He waved his hands wildly.

"An extreme, no, a wild theory. The young lady who went missing fourteen years ago, living in the slums of the royal capital, and you just happened to find her? And what's more, her body was even worthy of the Dragon Maiden qualification?"

Rickert listed the barrage of information, then laughed.

"Ridiculous! It's too convenient a story. It would be far more plausible to say that you, who found a girl with the maidens qualification, dyed her hair and changed her eye color with magic. —Though you wouldn't do something so reckless, would you?"

"Upon my sword."

To Rickert, who had regained some composure, Reinhard stood the sword he had placed on the floor, drew the blade slightly from its sheath, and then sheathed it with a click, making his vow.

Rickert roughly scratched his thinning scalp at Reinhard's composed demeanor.

"…The royal bloodline has all died of illness, and there is no means to confirm kinship. Do not think that everyone will bow their heads based on mere speculation about her lineage."

"That is natural. However, I am convinced that Lady Felt is the one most suited to inherit the throne. Even without considering her bloodline."

"For the current Sword Saint to be so infatuated."

To Reinhard's direct reply, Rickert sighed in resignation. Then he looked again at Felt, who had been the subject of the conversation but not involved in it.

"Aside from your qualification as a Dragon Maiden, you are from the slums. —And, perhaps, the possibility of a lost royal bloodline. The weight of the hardships you will face is unimaginable. Do you have the resolve for that?"

His words were a test, not merely a light provocation.

Considering the flow of the conversation so far, it was likely a ritual for Rickert to come to terms with his dissatisfaction through her own answer.

Sometimes, people, even while acknowledging someone, have to choose such troublesome means. Subaru, watching from the side, breathed a sigh of relief, thinking that this fruitless discussion would finally end.

"Huh? What are you talking about, old man? I never said I wanted to be queen, don't just decide for me!"

Completely ignoring the previous flow of conversation, Felt pouted hatefully and clearly expressed her refusal.

Naturally, a ripple of agitation ran through everyone in the hall, including Rickert. Felt, who had caused such an emotional wave, pointed a finger at Reinhard.

"I was dragged here from the slums against my will. They won't let me go back, and they keep hiding my clothes and making me wear these frilly things. It's beyond annoying; I'm not satisfied at all!"

Panting, Felt raised her chin defiantly, looking up at Reinhard's tall frame. The red-haired young man smiled wryly, looking troubled.

"Lady Felt is still saying such things."

"From my perspective, your stubbornness is what makes no sense. Listen? I said I don't want to!"

"—How long are you going to keep bickering about such utterly trivial matters?"

Felt shouted at Reinhard, who wouldn't back down, her face impatient.

One girl interrupted their exchange—Priscilla, who had been silently observing from among the royal candidates, her arms crossed, her eyes narrowed in boredom.

She swayed her ample chest above her crossed arms.

“The five necessary figures for the opening are gathered, at least in form. Once it begins, the unsuitable ones will naturally be weeded out. In the end, only I shall remain. The queenly qualities of the other superfluous individuals, whether they exist or not, are irrelevant.”

“Huh?”

Felt, still heated, reacted to Priscilla’s outrageous and violent remarks. She shrunk her small body further, adopting a thuggish stance to look up at Priscilla from directly below.

“I thought you were some happy-go-lucky woman in a fancy dress, but are you trying to pick a fight in those impractical clothes? I’m famous for kicking people right away, you know.”

“Insolence. Do you know who I am?”

“Hah, how would I know…!”

To Felt’s rather low-level threat, Priscilla imperiously retorted. Felt scoffed, then her expression suddenly clouded with bewilderment and surprise.

Felt ran a hand through her golden hair, muttering “Huh?” softly, and swayed as if dizzy.

“—Princess, that’s…”

The moment Felt nearly collapsed, Al, next to Subaru, gasped and shouted.

He understood that Felt’s sudden change was his master’s doing. And, triggered by his shout, simultaneous movements erupted throughout the hall.

Reinhard moved with truly wind-like speed, gently supporting Felt's collapsing body. Al, the one-armed man, stepped in to interpose himself between the moving Reinhard and the haughty Priscilla.

Felt's faction and Priscilla's faction confronted each other in close quarters. Outside this dynamic, several others were also moving.

Crusch crouched slightly, placing a hand on her empty waist, as if drawing an invisible sword. Marcos, the captain of the knights, who stood relatively close to the candidates, extended a hand to restrain Crusch's movement.

Anastasia, alone among the candidates, was holding her head and distancing herself, muttering, "Give me a break," which suggested she had no combat ability.

After meticulously observing each of their movements, Subaru focused on Emilia, his main concern.

She, who had also moved almost simultaneously with Al's shout, extended her hand into the void, a faint glow emanating from her palm.

"Over-interference of Yang magic—what were you thinking, using it like that?!"

The faint glow enveloped the swaying Felt, transmitting a healing wave to her body.

Emilia, openly angry, directed her fury at Priscilla, who showed no remorse for her actions. Priscilla waved her hand dismissively.

"I merely shared a little of the divine protection I was born with. If that elicits such a reaction, it merely reveals the capacity of the recipient."

"When you do something bad, you should apologize, shouldn't you? Do you not understand unless you're scolded?"

To Priscilla's unrepentant answer, Emilia retorted, her usual tone returning. For a moment, Priscilla looked bewildered, then burst into uncontrollable laughter. With a face full of mirth, she said,

“Ah, this is amusing. That was the most fun I’ve had in a long time; I might even praise you.”

“You’re always so unpleasant. What are you…”

“To apologize for doing something bad, you say. Then perhaps, in your case, you should apologize with ‘I’m sorry I was born,’ you silver-haired half-elf?”

Subaru could tell that shock had pierced Emilia’s entire body.

As if struck by a physical blow, Emilia’s shoulders trembled violently. Her resolute expression from moments ago was erased, and she pushed open her eyes, filled with anguish.

“I, I… have no connection to the Witch.”

“What meaning does such an excuse hold for anyone? You are a reflection of the world’s taboo, and people are terrified just by seeing your form. That is precisely why you rely entirely on such superficial rags to cover yourself.”

To Priscilla’s scathing words, Emilia, her face pale, could only shake her head weakly. Subaru could generally guess the content of their conversation, but he didn’t know the deeper circumstances. Therefore, he couldn’t possibly fathom the depth of the shock Emilia was experiencing.

He knew she was being unfairly hurt. That alone was enough for Natsuki Subaru to act. But,

“Princess, could you stop there? It’s really troublesome if you keep making more enemies, seriously.”

What stopped Priscilla’s tyrannical behavior was the faint plea from Al, who stood before her. Inside his helmet, where his expression should have been invisible, his voice was so weak that everyone could tell he had a troubled look.

“Especially confronting the Sword Saint, that’s a huge source of trouble. Let’s just apologize honestly, okay?”

“Do not utter such pathetic words, for you are my retainer. What of the Sword Saint? He is merely the strongest in this country; do something about it.”

“Wouldn’t last a minute.”

Calmly assessing the difference in their combat strength, Al quickly raised a white flag and declared his non-resistance.

Priscilla looked exasperated by his attitude. Reinhard and Emilia, facing Al, had expressions that couldn’t hide their surprise and confusion.

At least, the situation was prevented from immediately escalating into an explosive confrontation.

It was a moment that needed a trigger to reset, but it was unlikely to spiral out of control immediately.

As everyone racked their brains on how to resolve this stalemate—that sharp sound, despite its small volume, clearly struck the eardrums of everyone in the hall.

“—Is everyone satisfied?”

Dropping a flicked coin into a ceramic dish, the white-haired old man—Miklotov—drew everyone’s attention.

He did so without rising from his chair, surveying everyone, then turning his gaze to Felt, who was shaking her head after receiving Emilia’s treatment.

“Lady Felt, are you unharmed?”

“…Somehow. Damn it, if my knife hadn’t been taken away, it would’ve been nasty.”

Responding to Miklotov’s concern, Felt, still ill-mannered, hurled an insult at Priscilla. Even her losing remark sounded thuggish, but it wasn’t the atmosphere to point that out.

Reinhard gave Emilia a thankful nod, and Emilia accepted it with a nod, still looking somewhat dispirited. Crusch relaxed her combat stance, and Marcos let out a sigh of relief, finally, Al also rotated his one-armed shoulder, showing relief.

Only Priscilla, the instigator, remained with bored eyes, showing no sign of remorse, which was perplexing, but for now, the skirmish had ended.

Witnessing this, Miklotov declared anew.

“Then, regarding the original agenda—the Royal Selection—I hereby propose the convening of the Council of Wise Men, with the candidates present.”

Chapter 16:
Declaration of Ideologies

Miklotov’s dignified declaration filled the hall with tension. While their previous exchanges hadn’t been lax, it was true that the discussion had proceeded with little regard for the Council of Wise Men, the highest authority in the land. Now, as Miklotov’s presence suddenly intensified, all eyes in the Throne Room naturally gravitated towards him.

Receiving their gazes, Miklotov calmly stroked his beard and said, “Regarding the proposal to convene the Council of Wise Men, I would first like to secure the agreement of my fellow colleagues.”

Miklotov surveyed the elderly figures around him from the center of the nine seats arranged on the platform. At his words, the previously silent and almost invisible elders nodded in agreement.

“I, too, concur with Lord Miklotov’s proposal, exercising the authority of the Council of Wise Men.”

“Likewise.”

“I agree as well.”

Miklotov lowered his chin at the elders’ consent, then looked down at the candidates below. The five who had maintained a somewhat confrontational stance hastily gathered before Miklotov’s silent presence. Anastasia, who had been particularly far off, sprinted back. As the candidates returned, the two who had been with them naturally left their side and rejoined the knightly ranks where Subaru and the others remained. —Al and Reinhard flanked Subaru, making him extremely uncomfortable.

“Do I really have to be here?”

“For my part, I’d prefer you stay there as a sort of buffer. Honestly, getting into a fight with the Sword Saint is unthinkable, seriously.”

Al made a motion of wiping his forehead, as if in trepidation. Given that he was wearing a helmet and his voice hadn't changed, it was likely a jest, but for Subaru, who had witnessed Reinhard's combat prowess firsthand, it wasn't something to be dismissed as a joke. Al had even gone so far as to call himself a mercenary and served as Priscilla's one-armed bodyguard. He probably had confidence in his own abilities, but considering he was from the same hometown, it was hard to believe he had stepped into the realm of the superhuman. As he himself had explicitly stated, in a fight, he wouldn't last a minute.

"Come to think of it, maybe Elsa was genuinely amazing after all…"

He recalled the woman who had managed to put up a fight worthy of being called swordplay against Reinhard. At the same time, the pain of his torn abdomen resurfaced, and Subaru grimaced before quickly stopping himself.

"Her skill was genuine. We haven't even picked up her trail since. It seems we won't be able to make her atone for the severe injuries she inflicted upon you just yet."

"I just stopped that flashback, so don't bring it up again. Oh, it feels like my eyes are stinging, like they were cut horizontally…"

Thinking back, the second time he died felt like the most tragic. The mentally toughest experiences came later, though. Reinhard cast a concerned glance at Subaru, who was rubbing his eyes so vigorously they were practically bloodshot.

"Are you alright? If not, I know an excellent water magic user. They are nearby…"

"Mmm, we're about to get into some important talk, so keep quiet, 'kay? I'll heal you later."

"It's strange for me to say this, but aren't you two a bit too easygoing?"

Ferris remarked on Reinhard's words, and Julius gently chided them. Subaru was confident in his own easygoing nature, but he considered the four people around him to be quite similar, with an air of complete detachment.

While the tense candidates and their associates engaged in surprisingly relaxed banter, the convening of the Council of Wise Men was formally announced—Miklotov nodded.

“I thank my colleagues for their agreement. Now, let us begin the discussion. The topic, of course, is ‘who shall become Queen’.”

He paused, stroking his beard, then the old man winked one eye.

“Hmm. The problem is how to decide that. The Dragon Stone mentioned gathering five candidates, but it said nothing about the method of selection afterward. To put it extremely, it would be possible to have all factions compete in martial prowess here and make the last one standing queen, but…”

“I have a feeling that method would result in one faaaction completely dominating, dooon’t you think?”

To Miklotov’s jesting remark, Roswaal’s lighthearted comment from the civil servant group responded. The faction implied by his jest was none other than Felt’s, who had Reinhard. Knowing this, Miklotov slyly chuckled.

“Is there someone even the Marquis doesn’t wish to face?”

“There’s a ceeertain individual whom my only advantage doesn’t work against. So, unfortunately, the moment I’m forced to confront them, it’s goooodbye, farewell.”

Roswaal shrugged and shook his head. Even Reinhard, usually unflappable, looked down somewhat abashed at his words, but the fact that he didn’t deny it suggested he had confidence. Knowing the certainty of Roswaal’s magical abilities, Subaru questioned whether there was such an overwhelming difference between him and Reinhard. However, if the individuals themselves were convinced of it, then it must be an unshakeable fact. Reinhard’s inhumanity stood out even more to Subaru. Just then,

“Well then, since the Marquis also opposed it, let us refrain from choosing such a crude solution. Hmm, then what do you all think would be best?”

Putting aside his introductory pleasantries, Miklotov guided the Council of Wise Men into discussion. The members of the Council of Wise Men exchanged glances, and in voices somewhat less clear than Miklotov’s, softly but surprisingly audibly to everyone, they spoke.

“First, we should hear from each of the candidates.”

“It’s the first time all of them have gathered and met face to face like this.”

“Previously, even we, the Council of Wise Men, couldn’t all attend.”

“Therefore, a discussion. Their respective positions, their resolve to become queen, and what they intend to do once they are—that kind of discussion would be appropriate, wouldn’t it?”

“Hmm, I wholeheartedly agree. Then, Knight Marcos, if you please?”

As a result of the Council of Wise Men’s deliberation, the conduct of the proceedings was once again entrusted to the Knight Captain. The sole armored figure, standing apart from the candidates, bowed, then turned back to face the candidates, his stony expression firm.

“If I may be so bold, I will once again take charge of the proceedings. Each of the candidates must have their own assertions and positions. The members of the Council of Wise Men, as well as the knights and civil servants in the hall, all wish to know them. Please, bear with us.”

Representing the sentiments of everyone in the hall, Marcos respectfully bowed his head to the five candidates. Then, lifting his head, his stern expression opened wide.

“First, Lady Crusch, if you would begin. —Knight Felix Argyle! Present yourself!”

“Indeed.”

“Yes!”

Crusch nodded serenely at Marcos’s voice, and Ferris lightly raised a hand. Ferris scurried forward to stand beside Crusch, who stepped forward, heading towards the center of the hall. On the way, she stared intently at Marcos’s face.

“Captain. I always tell you, call me Ferris, not Felix! You’re hurting Ferris’s feelings!”

“I have no intention of giving special treatment to any of my subordinates. Naturally, that includes you. Step forward.”

Marcos curtly dismissed Ferris, who was pleading with a finger on her cheek, then gestured with his chin towards Crusch’s side, urging her to hurry. Ferris, looking displeased, stuck out her tongue at Marcos in protest, then stood beside Crusch, who was standing with her arms crossed.

“I am Crusch Karsten, head of the Karsten family and a Royal Candidate. Pleased to meet you.”

“I’m Ferris, the Karsten family’s head knight.”

“I am Knight Felix Argyle, members of the Council of Wise Men.”

Crusch introduced herself with a dignified, fearless demeanor, followed by Ferris, who remained lighthearted. Ferris’s self-introduction was corrected by Marcos in a chiding tone, drawing a piercing gaze from Ferris, but Marcos ignored it with a stoic, unyielding expression. Subaru, observing this exchange, murmured, “Hmm,” to himself.

“So that Ferris kid’s real name is Felix. It sounds like a really masculine name.”

In Japan, too, in old samurai families, the name of the eldest child was sometimes inherited, and there were cases where it was given regardless of gender. In gal games, historical gender-swap stories often featured female warriors with male names. Japan’s truly a cesspool. As Subaru came to this realization, Al subtly tilted his head beside him. Perhaps in his normal understanding, this was something not so easily accepted. Given the difference in their summoning eras, Subaru wanted to deepen their mutual understanding a bit more.

"Subaru, weren't you listening?"

Reinhard suddenly asked, looking surprised, as Subaru contemplated Al out of the corner of his eye. Unsure of the question's intent, Subaru foolishly asked, "What about?"

"It doesn't just sound like a man's name; Ferris is a perfectly fine man."

"—Wait."

"What is it?"

"What did you just say?"

Subaru's brain momentarily overloaded, unable to process what Reinhard had said. He slowly, deliberately, formed his words, demanding Reinhard repeat himself. Reinhard nodded nonchalantly.

"It doesn't just sound like a man's name; Ferris is a perfectly fine man."

He repeated the important thing twice, word for word.

""Whaaaaaaaa—?!""

As comprehension dawned, Subaru's and Al's simultaneous screams echoed through the hall. Everyone's attention in the hall turned to them in their surprise, but the two flailing and gesticulating in confusion didn't notice. Subaru, moving wildly, pointed emphatically at Ferris, who stood in the center of the room.

"Wait a minute, THAT's a guy?! Even the Knight of Knights isn't good at jokes, is he?! That's not funny?!"

He gazed at Ferris, who was looking at them. It was true she was tall for a woman, but apart from her facial features, slender build, and height, she looked entirely female. Although, it was undeniable that she lacked some feminine curves, there were many adult women in the world with flat chests. It wasn't conclusive proof.

"His voice is high, and he's slender. His skin is transparent, and I can't believe that's a man… No, I don't want to believe it!"

"You get it, brother!"

"Yeah, I get it, brother!"

Al, with his single arm, firmly clasped Subaru's shoulder, and the two aligned their understanding. How reassuring it was to have two rather than one. Just as they were confident that enough had been said to make Reinhard regret his unfunny joke,

"Ah, those two must be new. My knight, Ferris, is a man. I, of all people, can definitively state that."

Crusch, who had been silent until then, spoke to the two men with clasped shoulders. At the unbelievable content delivered in her dignified voice, Subaru's and Al's heads snapped around with an audible crack. Still with shoulders clasped, they almost spun in opposite directions, briefly dislocating each other's shoulder joints with a chain of pathetic cries of "Ow!" Regaining their composure, Subaru then stamped his foot.

"Y-You can say anything you want! You won't trick us like that! Proof! Yes, we need proof!"

"Ferris and I have a long history. We've even bathed together, and there's definitely a male appendage between his legs…"

"STOOOOPPPPPP!! I'm sorryyyy!! I'll completely admit, accept, and embrace everything, just please don't let a girl's mouth say anything about a penis—!"

"She didn't say penis, brother?!"

Subaru tried to correct the direct expression, but Al, at the peak of his confusion, only added to the chaos. Subaru, flustered by the multiple layers of confusing information, pointed forcefully at Ferris, the source of this entire situation.

“You, you damn it! You, with that appearance, who benefits from you having ‘that’? And you have cat ears, but you’re actually a guy, who benefits from that too?! I don’t have a thing for ‘otokonoko’! I’m a completely normal guy who likes silver-haired heroines!”

“It’s not Ferris’s fault if you misunderstood, ‘kay? Ferris never said she was a girl~”

“Don’t screw with me, you bitch— correction, you bastard!”

Ferris stuck out her tongue playfully and winked, and Subaru stamped his foot, expressing his indignation, but he couldn’t seem to elicit any apology from her. Dad, Mom, the existence of ‘otokonoko’ thrives even in another world.

“Unbelievable… This is the first time I’ve ever experienced such treatment. Even I, famous for being so gentle that the word ‘gentle’ would walk by me naked and I’d just watch, can’t help but feel anger…!”

“That’s just one naked person—!”

As Subaru, in his excitement, began to babble incomprehensibly, Al dutifully interjected. They exchanged grateful banter, the natural flow of a straight man responding to a funny man. Waiting for their surprise to subside,

“—Have you calmed down?”

A raspy voice addressed the two, seeking confirmation. It was Miklotov, hands clasped on his lap on the dais. Being cared for by the nation’s highest authority, even Subaru was brought back to his senses and genuinely apologized, “S-Sorry.” He meekly returned to his original line, truly reflecting on his actions for once.

“Everyone always expresses surprise when they learn Ferris’s gender. This is a pleasure I can never get enough of, no matter how many times I experience it. —Though few are as surprised as those two just now.”

“Hmm. It’s quite mischievous of you, Lady Crusch, to continue it even though you know.”

Miklotov subtly chided Crusch, who was smiling contentedly, but Crusch tightened her expression and shook her head.

"Lord Miklotov seems to be under a misunderstanding, but Ferris's attire is not something I ordered him to wear. It is entirely of his own free will."

"I believe it is the master's duty to ensure their attendant dresses appropriately."

The one who retorted to Crusch's decisive statement was Rickert, who had also returned to his line, like Subaru and the others. Perhaps he had gained the right to speak within the civil servant group from the previous exchange, as several attendees nodded in agreement with his words. Crusch gazed at these disparate individuals, then pierced Rickert with her sharp eyes. Rickert's face contorted, but he still faced her directly.

"D-Do you have any rebuttal…?"

"You're not like the countless others who avert their gaze. Though your timing is a bit off, your beliefs aren't the same, and you're somewhat easily swayed. Even so, I still value you, Lord Rickert."

—Wasn't he just thoroughly trashed? Subaru thought to himself, but perhaps Crusch considered that praise. Rickert also looked somewhat unconvinced. However, before he could pursue that, Crusch continued, "But,"

"You said it's the master's duty to ensure their attendant dresses appropriately. Then I would still wish for Ferris to wear his current attire. Do you know why?"

"Why, indeed?"

The question was directed at Rickert, but Rickert, perhaps intimidated by her gaze, couldn't continue. Miklotov asked in his stead, and Crusch nodded.

"It's a simple matter. —Because each person should be given the appearance that makes their soul shine brightest. His current attire suits Ferris far better than knight's armor. Just as I prefer this attire to wearing a dress."

Declaring this, Crusch puffed out her chest as if staking her very soul. Ferris stood beside her in a dignified stance, and she—no, he also followed suit, smiling beside his mistress's imposing figure.

Looking down at their presence, Miklotov narrowed his eyes as if seeing something dazzling. Then he subtly lowered his chin.

"Hmm, very well. We will conclude this discussion here. Lord Rickert, is that acceptable?"

"I-I have no objections."

"I have no objections either. Knight Captain Marcos, please proceed."

Rickert, though hesitant, put away his spear, while Crusch never lost her regal composure. Though they had exchanged opinions, it was clear which side had prevailed without even comparing their reactions. At any rate,

"This is the first declaration of intent among the candidates, but she is the strongest contender. If I may say so, the sense of security she exudes is simply on another level."

Such words, slightly too loud to be a murmur, could be heard. Hearing it, Subaru's ears twitched as he asked Reinhard beside him, "What does that mean?" Reinhard subtly lowered his eyes at Subaru's straightforward question.

"The Karsten family, which Lady Crusch leads, is a ducal house that has long supported the history of the Kingdom of Lugunica. Their history of loyalty to the country, their established lineage, and Lady Crusch's own talent in leading a ducal house at such a young age—she is the undeniable frontrunner in the Royal Selection."

"Is that… actually the case?"

Subaru could only groan at Reinhard's fluent explanation. Even with his limited knowledge of noble ranks, Subaru understood that the Duke was a vital national position, one of the highest in the land. Considering the current state of affairs—the royal family's demise—it would naturally be most desirable for the next monarch to be someone closely related to the original royal house. In that sense, Subaru couldn't help but think of Emilia's disadvantaged position.

"It's practically decided."

"The head of the Karsten family, and above all, Lady Crusch's brilliance as a talent is widely known."

"She makes somewhat bold decisions, but if one considers that a sign of great capacity, she is impeccable."

The attendees around them seemed to reaffirm what Subaru had just heard. The whispered conversations spoke only of Crusch's advantageous position, and it was implicitly understood that she was already a cut above the rest in the newly begun Royal Selection. Subaru couldn't help but feel impatient as the atmosphere in the hall increasingly tilted against Emilia, even before her appeal time began. However, Subaru's tormenting impatience was momentarily halted by Crusch's words as she raised a finger and interrupted the murmuring.

"It seems many here have misunderstood."

Crusch waited for all mouths to close and for attention to focus on her. Sensing her intent, silence fell over the hall, and she then gave a slight nod as a signal.

"I believe I understand what each of you expects of me should I ascend the throne. The Karsten family is a long-standing noble house deeply connected to the royal family, and we have been responsible for a considerable portion of state affairs throughout history. Therefore, if I were to take the throne, there would be no disruption to governance or national operations. A seamless succession to the throne would be assured."

As Crusch spoke fluently, many in the hall nodded, listening intently. Her words clearly articulated why she was considered the closest to the throne, making any rebuttal seem incredibly difficult. But then,

"—I regret to say to those who hold such expectations, I cannot make that promise.”

Her statement, which seemed to abandon her overwhelming advantage, brought a momentary silence to the Throne Room—followed by a seismic shock a few seconds later. “What does she mean?” voices questioned in unison. Crusch surveyed them all, then stepped confidently into the still heated atmosphere.

“Should I become king, the nature of this nation will inevitably change from that of previous generations. I ask you to understand this.”

“—Might I ask what you mean by that?”

“Naturally.”

The murmuring quieted, converging on Miklotov’s questioning voice, and in the hall where the initial shock began to subside, Crusch looked up at the dais. Her long, deep green hair swayed, and with a dignified expression, she looked past the Council of Wise Men members towards the dragon motif painted on the wall of the Throne Room.

“The Dragon Kingdom of Lugunica—this nation has built its prosperity, protected by the covenant once made with the dragon. Wars, plagues, even famines, every crisis has been averted by the dragon, and the character ‘Dragon’ has never vanished from the long history of the kingdom.”

The “Covenant with the Dragon”—Subaru had also read about it in picture books. It was the general outline of the history of the Kingdom of Lugunica, which had prospered and thrived, protected by its covenant with the dragon. Everyone listened intently to Crusch’s words, internalizing their meaning.

The covenant with the dragon had always supported the kingdom’s history from the shadows. It was the very premise of the Royal Selection, because with the royal family’s demise, its continuation was now in doubt. Hence, the stipulation that the next monarch must be someone with the qualifications of a ‘Dragon Maiden’.

"Therefore, we must entrust the throne to a maiden who can converse with the dragon. Otherwise, the prosperity promised to the kingdom will…"

"—I dislike that line of thinking."

As Miklotov spoke of the covenant, Crusch's words pierced through unexpectedly. The old man opened his eyes in faint surprise as Crusch crossed her arms and sighed.

"The prosperity accumulated through the covenant with the dragon, very well. In times of war, it incinerates enemy nations with its breath, if there is plague, it heals people through the activation of mana, and if famine occurs, the land soaked in dragon's blood yields bountiful blessings. All hardships are saved by our venerable Lord Dragon. Glory to the Dragon Kingdom of Lugunica—"

Although the content of her words overflowed with radiance, Crusch herself spoke them flatly, her expression unbrightened. She cast her gaze over everyone, who remained silent, then murmured softly.

"I ask you. —Do you not feel ashamed?"

Subaru could tell that a tension greater than before filled the now silent hall. However, if there was one being in this hall, now brimming with various intense emotions, who felt the most anger, it was undoubtedly Crusch, standing before the throne.

"Regardless of the trials and tribulations, it is promised that they will be overcome through the covenant with the dragon. Indulging in this covenant, becoming decadent, and then panicking and clinging to alternatives when its continuation is threatened. How can one not be appalled by this?"

"—You go too far, Lady Crusch!"

One of the Council of Wise Men members stood up, openly enraged by Crusch's harsh words. He was as old as Miklotov, if not older. The old man slammed his raspy voice against the armrest of his seat.

"To belittle the covenant is unforgivable! How many lives and how much sacrifice did the kingdom avoid thanks to the dragon's blessings in the past? Do you deny this accumulation of history?"

"Regarding past prosperity, I said 'very well'. I myself would never claim to have not received its benefits. The Karsten family also came into being with the kingdom. If the kingdom is in crisis, the same applies to my house. If the country was saved by the dragon, the same applies to my house."

But, she continued, taking a breath.

"The future is different. Do you not feel anything about your current disgrace? Are you not stopping your thought processes by clinging to the covenant with the dragon? When war, plague, or famine strikes the kingdom again, will we have no choice but to fawn over the dragon?"

"—That is…"

"If this kingdom is to perish from being too accustomed to living under the dragon's protection, then let it perish. Excessive blessings breed stagnation, stagnation leads to decadence, and decadence brings about an end. That is what I believe."

"You… you say you will destroy the nation!"

The old man raged, his veins practically bursting. Crusch's eyes blazed with spirit at his cry, and she shook her head, "No."

"If we perish without the dragon, then we should become the dragon. The king, the retainers, the people—all should bear the burden of everything the kingdom has relied on the dragon for until now."

Therefore, Crusch paused,

"When I become king, I will ask the dragon to forget the previous covenant. Even if it results in us parting ways, it cannot be helped. For the Dragon Kingdom of Lugunica is not the dragon's country, but the country of us, its people."

"…"

"Hardships await. Perhaps even greater calamities than those we overcame with the dragon's power in the past. But I wish to live a life that does not shame my soul."

Lowering her voice, Crusch shook her head and looked down.

"I have long questioned the state of this nation. I believe this current turn of events is an opportunity given to me by heaven to rectify it."

Given her loyalty to the previous king, such a statement could easily have been dismissed as disrespectful. Indeed, the elders of the Council of Wise Men exchanged glances at her words, their expressions deeply shadowed. Yet, on the other hand,

"It's certainly idealistic, but…"

Subaru found himself listening intently to Crusch's words, realizing they carried an undeniable weight. It seemed those around him felt the same, as no voices dared to openly refute her in the hall any longer. She directly confronted the accumulated history of the kingdom and possessed a presence that even the seasoned elders, who had built that history, could not gainsay.

It was undeniably the presence of a queen.

"—Lady Crusch, your thoughts are well understood. Having received them, should you attain the throne, you may do as you see fit. That is indeed the choice of a queen who bears the nation's burdens."

"Of course."

With just three words in response to Miklotov, Crusch turned on her heel as if she had said all there was to say. A murmur nearly broke out again at her dignified composure, but Miklotov preempted it. The old man then shifted his focus to Ferris.

"Then, Knight Felix Argyle. Do you have anything to add?"

It seemed he expected not only the master, but also the attendant, to speak of the master's merits. However, Ferris calmly shook his head at Miklotov's words.

"With all due respect, I have nothing to add. Lady Crusch's thoughts are precisely as she stated them. The righteousness of Lady Crusch's actions will be proven by history and by those of us who follow her. —I have no doubt whatsoever that my mistress will become queen."

Solemnly, Ferris bowed his slender waist and proclaimed this grandly. Miklotov responded with a nod of acceptance, and Ferris, after a single salute, went to Crusch's side. He glanced at her, and when she lowered her chin, he happily softened his cheeks.

"As expected, Lady Crusch is always wonderful. Ferris is head over heels."

"Sometimes, Ferris's words make no sense. —But I'll allow it. You wouldn't do anything that would disadvantage me."

Their exchange revealed an absolute trust and devotion between the two. Ferris, who was so infatuated that his persona broke, and Crusch, who accepted it nonchalantly—yes, it seemed to be a good relationship.

"Well, we've finally heard from one person… Hmm, it seems we're off to quite a tumultuous start."

Crusch's declaration of intent concluded, and Miklotov briefly summarized the exchange. For the Council of Wise Men and the civil servants, who mostly wished for a smooth resolution, the leading candidate's policies must have come as a complete surprise.

She had likely lost many votes she could have gained through this exchange. However, conversely, for those who supported her after hearing this, she would have gained an unshakeable trust that nothing could shatter. At this stage, it was impossible to measure the long-term pros and cons of her actions on the Royal Selection.

"I'm still not quite sure how the Royal Selection is decided…"

That's precisely what this declaration of intent session was for—to decide that. To use a mixer analogy, it was the initial self-introduction period to decide who to target. You'd throw out a jab to see if they were a red flag, and then it'd be a crucial turning point for how you'd deliver a straight punch to take them home. That was, by far, the worst analogy I've ever come up with. Anyway,

"Then, I will continue. In order, starting from next to Lady Crusch."

"Hmph, finally. It's time for this humble one's hyper time."

As the Knight Captain regained his composure to proceed with the meeting, a girl with orange hair stepped forward, making a remark that seemed to shatter that regained composure once more.

"Did she just say 'hyper humble one time'?"

Subaru was dumbfounded by the broken grammar, mixing Japanese and katakana. Al, as if boasting, pointed a thumb at himself, likely with a smug look under his helmet. Then, with heavy, thudding footsteps, he too stood beside Priscilla, who had stepped forward.

Unlike Crusch from before, Priscilla wore a vibrant dress and had hair that seemed to capture the sun. Her colorful ornaments jingled, further embellishing her already boisterous appearance with noise. Standing beside such a girl was a one-armed man, dressed seemingly as a commoner, his face hidden by a jet-black helmet. Naturally, this drew curious gazes from those around them.

"Hmph, it seems the humble one's magnificent presence is already attracting the vulgar gazes of the rabble."

"You're making good use of it, Princess. You're pretty hyped up, and it's a good look."

Despite being stared at not so much with curiosity, but more as an oddity, Priscilla proudly puffed out her chest. Al, her attendant, gave her an off-kilter compliment. Marcos cleared his throat in front of the slightly unhinged pair.

"Then, Lady Priscilla Barielle. We await your words."

"It's irksome, but I'll humor you. I suppose I'm to make these old bones understand my majesty, and then let them choose to obey me. A simple matter."

With that, she plucked a fan from her cleavage, snapped it open, and chuckled, hiding her mouth. It was a vicious, sadistic smile, ill-fitting her lovely appearance.

After Crusch's bombshell declaration, an unmistakably ominous atmosphere began to mix with the already unsettled mood in the hall. Even Subaru, known for his inability to read the room, felt a clear tension, and within that taut hall, someone murmured.

"—That Bloody Bride, damn her."

Subaru gasped at that deeply hateful voice, simmering with animosity. He had a clear premonition that this unexpectedly resonant voice, whoever it belonged to, would not lead to anything good.

With the second candidate now at the forefront, the Royal Selection's prologue had only just begun.

Chapter 17:
An Arrogant Speech

A statement like a bomb was dropped into the tense hall. Everyone held their breath, watching the situation unfold as if playing with fire in a powder keg. It no longer mattered who uttered the slip of the tongue. The problem was what kind of situation it would cause.

Holding their breath, everyone's attention focused increasingly on Priscilla in the center. Bathed in their gazes, tinged with awe, Priscilla glanced towards the direction of the voice.

"Such crude, uninspired, and talentless insults. Such vulgar envy, born of jealousy towards me, is far too familiar; it doesn't even serve as a lullaby."

Priscilla unhesitatingly cut through the suffocating silence that had begun to dominate the hall, her voice brimming with utter boredom. There wasn't a hint of concern for the surrounding unease or any attempt to be considerate in her tone. It was crystal clear to everyone that her arrogant words truly reflected her deepest thoughts.

Subaru was deeply impressed by her refreshingly arrogant and insolent demeanor, feeling that she, like Crusch but in a different way, stood on a plane far removed from ordinary people. Given the reactions of those around them, that single word earlier must have been akin to an insult or contempt. "Bloody Bride" was not a gentle moniker, but before anyone could question its meaning, as it hadn't been denied,

"Then, may I ask for your name again, including your attendant?"

Miklotov's seasoned experience was evident in his quick transition to the main topic before the atmosphere could sour further. The way he showed unfeigned respect to someone far younger than himself also spoke volumes. Despite holding a top position in the country, he seemed to be the type who prioritized considering those around him rather than forcefully leading, which was somewhat pitiable.

Priscilla seemed to understand the meaning behind Miklotov's gentle demeanor. She nodded readily, as if she had forgotten the rude remark she'd made earlier.

"Very well. It would be cruel to shorten the already limited time of a short-lived old man. You should be grateful for my magnanimous heart."

Adding an unnecessary remark, she further puffed out her ample chest with an imperious air.

"Engrave the name I am about to speak into your minds until the end of your days. My name is Priscilla—Priscilla. Oh, Priscilla… Hmm, what was it now?"

She started off with a flourish, only to get stuck like an old senile person. Subaru almost lunged forward to interject but barely managed to restrain himself, respecting the serious atmosphere around him. Nevertheless, Priscilla's comment undeniably made the mood in the room awkwardly warm.

She tilted her head a few times, then looked up at Al, who was standing beside her, and poked him in the side.

"Hey, Al. I'm troubled. Hurry up and help me."

"No, I'm surprised too, since I never expected you to stumble at the starting line. What about my pounding heart, waiting nervously for my turn to introduce myself?"

"I care nothing for your pounding heart. My will takes precedence, now hurry."

"You're utterly self-centered! That aside, you're not implying you can't remember your family name, Barielle, are you?"

"—Oh, that's it."

His outstretched hand was firmly gripped, and Al looked up at the sky, placing his palm on his forehead in despair at his mistress's lack of sense. Ignoring his attendant, who made no effort to hide his lament, Priscilla turned forward again, smiling fearlessly at the Council of Wise Men on the dais.

“I am Priscilla Barielle. The next queen. Bow down.”

Subaru felt it was a concise and unparalleled self-introduction. At the very least, it wasn’t the kind of speech someone genuinely wanting to be queen would deliver. Moreover, unlike Crusch, she seemed to have nothing more to add, looking utterly satisfied as if that one line had said it all.

Subaru, growing anxious in a different way than before, wondered if the conversation was truly over with just that, when,

“Barielle… as in, Lord Leip Barielle’s?”

It was Miklotov who interjected with a question. The old man twirled his white beard with his fingers, narrowing his eyes as if searching his memory.

“Hmm. Now that you mention it, I don’t see Lord Leip. Is he…?”

“If you’re speaking of that lecherous old man, he suffered severe injuries in an unexpected accident six months ago, never regained consciousness, and just recently passed away.”

“What? Lord Leip? Hmm. In that case, what was your relationship with Lord Leip, Lady Priscilla?”

Miklotov’s face showed pain at the news of the named person’s death. Priscilla snorted at the old man’s question.

“He would be my deceased husband, I suppose. Since I never even touched his fingertips, it was truly a marriage in name only.”

A hush fell over the hall once more. Feeling a distant, high-pitched ringing in his ears, Subaru replayed Priscilla’s words. In short, she had just dismissed her husband’s death with boredom.

“Princess, isn’t that a bit too heartless, no matter how you put it?”

Perhaps taking offense, or perhaps intending to cover for the poor reaction from those around them, Al whispered to Priscilla. However, she simply brushed aside Al's consideration.

"Where is the need to embellish when speaking the truth as it is? That old man married me, harbored inappropriate ambitions, then got caught up in an unrelated accident in an unrelated place, and burned himself out before his sparks could ignite a great fire. If that's not a laughing matter, then what is? Though, for all the life he staked, it's not a funny story at all, truly a worthless old geezer to the very end."

Rather than a quick, clean cut, Priscilla repeatedly slashed at the deceased with her words. Subaru even found himself pitying the man he didn't even know, and Miklotov, who seemed to know him, looked utterly dejected. Whether she noticed Miklotov's change in expression or not, Priscilla remained unchanged, raking her orange hair back.

"The only meaning that old man held, if any, was that he transferred everything he had accumulated directly to me. Since the old man and I were husband and wife, and there was no heir… What was it again? Oh, right, the Barielle family is mine."

Priscilla reached a crude conclusion and looked around, as if daring anyone to object. Receiving her gaze, Subaru felt a surge of dissatisfaction, but no one dared to express it concretely. Expectations were high for Rickert, who had argued so vehemently with Crusch, but even he kept his mouth shut, despite his displeased expression. Whether there was a reason or if it was clear from the outset that she wouldn't be taken seriously, her outrageous behavior seemed to be allowed to pass unchallenged.

Then,

"Hmm, I understand. As a long-time acquaintance, Lord Leip's passing was somewhat surprising, but… Lady Priscilla's story makes sense. It is indeed true that you are the head of the Barielle family."

"Naturally."

“I would like to hear more details, but what about your knight?”

To Priscilla’s serene nod, Miklotov then turned his attention to the attendant standing beside her. Al, suddenly made the center of attention, replied with a voice that clearly indicated he had been trying to suppress a yawn.

“Huh… Oh, me?”

He proved that both he and his master were the embodiment of doing things at their own pace. Competing with each other, master and subordinate subtly warmed the room. Compared to the other candidates, knowing even a little about them made this development, in a way, more detrimental to Subaru’s heart than it was to the actual participants.

“Yes, you. You’re dressed unusually, and you’re not a face… or rather, a helmet… seen in the Royal Guard.”

“Oh, you noticed? This helmet’s from the Vollachian Empire in the south, and it was a real pain to get out. It’s tough, lasts long, and looks cool, so I use it a lot.”

“From the Vollachian Empire… So, you’re not affiliated with the Royal Guard?”

“Being called a fancy ‘knight’ makes me squirm, honestly. I’m more like, well, a wandering mercenary, a drifter, you know?”

Indicating himself with his single arm, Al brazenly revealed his identity in his muffled voice. As he laughed heartily, his helmet clinked metallically, which seemed to provoke those around him unnecessarily. Indeed, his behavior drew angry shouts from the Royal Knight contingent.

“What insolent behavior! Do you not know where you are?!”

“While it may be cruel to demand knightly conduct from a boorish savage, we cannot condone such behavior!”

“What is the meaning of concealing your face before the Council of Wise Men? And with an Imperial helmet, no less… This is beyond disrespectful!”

“Whoa, whoa, don’t get so angry. My naive heart will be torn to shreds by the pressure, you know?”

Al maintained his cool demeanor in response to the knights’ angry shouts. However, tracing the surface of his helmet with a finger, he said,

“Well, I don’t think your opinions are off the mark. It’s true that hiding my face in front of important people might make me seem suspicious.”

“If you didn’t look like a suspicious character, you wouldn’t have caught my eye, Al.”

“That’s a chilling thought. Nevertheless, I hope you’ll forgive the rudeness of hiding my face. Because…”

Looking up at the Council of Wise Men, Al inserted a finger into a gap in his helmet, lifting it just enough to expose a portion of his concealed face. His head tilted back, exposing his chin and the area below his nose to the open air—

“Uh—”

Someone let out a small gasp at the sight of his gruesome facial scars. Al then turned around like a model, demonstrating the same condition to the entire hall. Naturally, the knights’ momentum died down.

That was only to be expected. Even the visible parts of Al’s face were etched with the marks of countless battles: burns, lacerations, and various other scars. Subaru also had noticeable scars on his skin, but Al’s were ten times more numerous, without exaggeration.

Perhaps the reactions of those around him were as he expected, for Al, replacing his finger and adjusting his helmet, laughed.

“Well, as you can see, I have an unsightly face, so I hope you’ll forgive the discourtesy of facing you all with my face hidden.”

"On the contrary, my subordinate was out of line."

Marcos bowed his head in apology to Al's evasive statement. Then, his face hardening like stone, he added,

"Forgive me for pressing the matter, but you're from the Empire with those scars… could you perhaps be a former sword-slave?"

"Oh, impressive, Captain of the Knights. You're well-versed in the dark underbelly of that secretive Empire. Indeed, I am a former sword-slave. A veteran of over a decade."

A stir once again spread through the hall, and several knights murmured the word 'sword-slave'. Subaru didn't know the term, but judging from the characters, it likely meant 'slave who uses a sword'. From that, he could infer their position was probably,

"Someone who fought for entertainment, you mean?"

"That's right, brother. Well, that's why I'd like you to be satisfied with my skill and my scars. Oh, I didn't introduce myself, did I?"

Al pointed at Subaru, confirming his murmur, then tapped his own helmet with that same finger.

"My ties with Vollachia are cut now. I'm a wandering drifter—just call me Al. I was lucky enough to be hired by the Princess, and I'm just plodding along."

Al continued to smile at Marcos with his usual playful attitude. Like his mistress, he didn't seem to care a bit about the glares from those around him. On the contrary, the knight contingent, who had been accusing him just moments before, were now utterly speechless at the intensity of the scars etched onto his body. This was likely because it became clear to everyone, including his missing arm, that his journey had been far from smooth. And,

"Seriously…?"

This was a fact that also impacted Subaru significantly as he witnessed it.

Until now, Subaru had avoided directly commenting on Al's appearance. This was partly to avoid the insensitivity of bringing up limb loss to someone with a single arm, and partly an unconscious rejection of it as a potential reality for himself in the future. If Al came from the same world as Subaru, then what happened to him was not just someone else's problem. Losing an arm and bearing such terrible, unshowable scars on his face—for Subaru, who already had numerous lacerations etched into his body, Al was quite literally a possible future.

A chilling sensation ran down Subaru's spine. Despite Subaru's sentiments, the royal selection proceedings continued.

"Hmm. If you're from the Vollachian Empire, what's your connection to Lady Priscilla? That country is a peculiar, separate world that keeps not only information but also people and goods from leaving."

"There are always detours, back alleys, and roundabouts. I managed to escape the Empire when the time was right. As for why I'm with the Princess…"

"It's nothing. Just a result of my amusement."

Priscilla, who had been silent until now, perhaps annoyed that it wasn't her turn, interjected. Interrupting Miklotov's question to answer, she fiddled with the colorful ornaments adorning her fingers.

"My becoming queen is akin to divine will. Therefore, any attendant would be the same. So, I chose the one I favored as my attendant. And that turned out to be that man there."

"I see, indeed. How did you choose him?"

It was better to accept than to foolishly argue, so Miklotov didn't touch on Priscilla's arrogance, instead promoting the conversation while satisfying her pride. At this arrangement, she looked pleased, blowing on her fingernails.

"Oh, it's a known fact. —I gathered strong contenders in my territory and had them compete, on the condition that I would take one who caught my eye as my attendant. It was quite an entertaining diversion."

Priscilla responded to Miklotov, then meaningfully glanced sideways at Al. If her words were to be believed, it meant that Al had, in fact, caught her eye. It made imagining the extent of his single-armed strength even more difficult. Miklotov and the members of the Council of Wise Men nodded in understanding at Priscilla's answer.

"So, he was the winner of that competition…"

"No, I didn't win."

However, to their understanding, came an unexpected interjection. Al looked at the surprised faces of the elders with amusement, shaking his shoulders.

"Life ain't that easy for a one-armed guy to beat out a bunch of strongmen. Just making it to the top four in a knockout format means I had some serious luck."

"Then why did Lady Priscilla choose him as her attendant…?"

"I already told you. I chose the one I favored."

Priscilla puffed out her chest in response to the question and forcefully slapped Al's back. A dry popping sound echoed, and Al yelped "Ahin" as she continued.

"Besides, no one else gathered by such a dim-witted proposition of 'strong contenders' was confident enough to still wear such an oddity even when subjected to curious gazes. Above all, no one else had been staying in the Vollachian Empire and then dared to boast that they came from beyond the 'Great Waterfall'."

Priscilla's smile deepened, and her red eyes began to glow with brilliant pleasure. Her speech quickened, and she stomped her foot loudly to draw attention, proclaiming,

"Therefore, I chose Al as my attendant. Both my choice of Al and my path to becoming queen are all divine will meant to make me shine."

Priscilla brazenly declared that the world itself blessed her. There was not a trace of hesitation or doubt, only a terrifying abundance of confidence. Setting aside the eccentricity of her statements, her stance, poised to reach the apex, was truly the charisma possessed only by a superior being who commands others. However, such a wonderful quality was meaningless since the content was unappealing.

"Hmm, I understand your relationship. However, that raises the question of how Lady Priscilla came to be known as a Dragon Maiden. If a knight didn't find her…"

Unlike the speechless individuals among the council, Miklotov possessed the composure to accept Priscilla's assertion. He took her words in stride and moved on to the next question—and indeed, the old man's question was perfectly valid.

From what Subaru had observed of the other factions so far, it seemed that the candidates were all found by Royal Knights who were given emblems to seek them out, and those knights then served as their attendants. This was the case with Ferris for Crusch, and Reinhard for Felt. It was likely the same for Anastasia and Julius as well. This naturally brought up the question of Priscilla's group, and,

"What about Emilia-tan's case…?"

Was Roswaal the one who nominated her? Roswaal supported Emilia as her patron. And Subaru had not yet met the knight who supposedly found her. Not only was he not in Roswaal's territory, but since he wasn't present in the capital, it seemed such a person didn't exist. Despite Emilia being in a situation where she might be isolated by the atmosphere, Subaru felt a certain sense of relief that such a knight had not appeared.

At that point, Subaru suddenly realized he didn't even know why Emilia was participating in the Royal Selection. What was her purpose for being here? And for what reason did she aspire to be queen? Subaru belatedly realized he hadn't even touched upon a fraction of this information.

"Esteemed members of the Council of Wise Men, the answer to that question has already been confirmed by the Knight Order."

Then, in response to Miklotov's question, Marcos stepped forward, saying, "If I may." His brows furrowed slightly within his stony expression.

"In truth, the late Lord Leip was the first to notice the clauses of the Dragon Tablet when the former king and his relatives passed away, and he hastened to secure a candidate. Originally, the management of the Dragon Tablet was Lord Leip's responsibility, and… There were reports of a several-day delay before the contents of the clauses were reported."

Marcos spoke of the deceased's suspicious actions with a hint of difficulty. Miklotov, as if something came to mind from Marcos's words, touched his long eyebrows that almost obscured his eyes.

"I see, he was an ambitious man. It's only natural he'd put effort into finding a Dragon Maiden."

The guardian of the next queen—in this case, since Priscilla was his wife, he must have been a person with an even greater thirst for power. Thinking about it that way, there really was an incredible old man.

"However, it's quite ironic that he found the crucial maiden, only to meet with misfortune himself."

"He was a rather uninspiring old man, never one to spark excitement. This is the extent of the humor he squeezed out at his very end. Truly, a fittingly risible end."

Priscilla delivered her assessment without a hint of a smile, stamping a failing grade on her deceased husband's life. Miklotov could only offer a wry smile at the severe judgment of his acquaintance. At any rate,

"There's no need to speak of a dead old nuisance. I stand alone. All other reasons are trivialities that need not even be touched upon. Without reservation, you should revere me as your queen."

With utter confidence, Priscilla announced the conclusion she had reached multiple times in this short period. While everyone in the hall was speechless at her demeanor, only the jet-black helmet standing beside her looked firmly at her.

"Princess, what's the reward for doing that? What do we get?"

"It's a simple matter. —To come with me is to gain the right to be a victor."

Priscilla laughed, took a breath, and continued,

"As the Royal Selection is a competition, the ultimate goal must be victory. Therefore, choosing me is the answer itself. Hence, following me is your righteous path."

"That Heaven has chosen you…"

"Naturally. After all, in this world, only things convenient for me occur."

That's why,

"I am the one most suited to be queen. No, no one else can fulfill that role. There is nothing more to say. You need only gaze with shining eyes upon my majesty before you."

Raking her orange hair back, Priscilla boldly tossed it into the air and turned around serenely. Her posture indicated that she had finished speaking, and she proceeded to walk towards the center, her back still to the Council of Wise Men on the dais. As he followed her retreating back, the dark helmet finally looked up at the dais.

"The way she puts it might be a bit much, but everything our Princess says is the absolute truth. If you come with the Princess, you'll definitely be rewarded, as long as it doesn't go against her will—Heaven itself has chosen the Princess, Priscilla."

Al finished speaking, then surveyed the entire hall. Everyone who met Al's gaze held their breath, and after seeing this, the one-armed man gave a slight wave with his single arm.

"Well, you can choose when to side with the Princess whenever you like. Though I think it's best to jump on the winning horse early."

Master and attendant, both so utterly self-assured, as if they had left humility in their mother's wombs. As they returned to the line of candidates, the tense atmosphere naturally relaxed slightly, and a sense of relief finally began to spread.

Subaru, too, relaxed the unnecessary tension that had built up during a time when even breathing felt like a chore. At least, the speech of his acquaintance was over—though it was hard to call it proper, he was glad that it had ended without escalating into a full-blown uproar.

"Why do I have to be so nervous…?"

Subaru glared at their backs as they returned to the line, a misplaced anger brewing within him. Then, Priscilla unexpectedly turned around, and their eyes met. Their gazes locked, and she smiled meaningfully, winking at him as if to charm him. The gesture was excessively alluring, and Subaru, who had no resistance, was easily flustered.

Just as expected, she was almost the same age yet already a married woman—or rather, a widow. Describing a young, wealthy noble widow with a voluptuous body would have been enough to fill a story in itself.

"A cross-dressing boy, a cross-dressing beauty. Now a rich widow, too—the genres are too diverse."

The only pity was that despite being a widow, she showed absolutely no signs of it. It was harsh to expect more from someone who had merely lost her husband on paper.

"—Ah."

While he was preoccupied with such trivial thoughts, his gaze happened to meet Emilia's, who seemed to have been following Priscilla's glance. She seemed slightly surprised that Subaru was at the end of Priscilla's gaze, then lowered her eyes, and from Subaru's perspective, looked away sadly as if betrayed. Subaru reeled as if punched, and a misplaced excuse formed in his mind: "N-that wasn't mental infidelity!"

Amidst all this, the Royal Selection showed signs of progressing calmly.

"Next, Lady Anastasia! And Sir Julius Juukulius! Step forward!"

"Yes."

"It's our turn."

The purple-haired girl replied gracefully, and Julius serenely raised one hand to the sky, bringing it down with a flourish that made his uniform sleeve crackle loudly. A dry, crisp sound filled the air, undeniably refreshing the mood. Anastasia smiled and stepped forward with a "thank you," and Julius stood beside her, showing no sign of trepidation.

—Thus, the two who were furthest ahead in terms of master-and-attendant relationship in this Royal Selection were now assembled.

Facing the next candidates, Subaru also straightened himself and looked forward once more.

Chapter 18:
The Greedy Merchant

Anastasia's pale purple, wavy hair flowed down her back.

Beside her stood Julius, a dapper-looking knight with meticulously combed dark purple hair.

They were a striking pair, epitomizing the upper class in their pure master-and-servant dynamic. However, after a string of such eccentric personalities, there was an uneasy feeling that another oddball might appear. Subaru's apprehension seemed to be shared by those around him; the glances directed at the two as they stepped forward were already laden with anxiety and tension, palpable in the air. In this stifling atmosphere, Anastasia, drawing all eyes, began by saying:

"If you're expecting someone with as strong a personality as the previous two, I'm afraid that's a bit too much for me. Too much self-assertion isn't really welcome, so my selling point is a lack of individuality."

She clapped her hands loudly twice, grabbing everyone's attention, then offered a gentle smile for all to see. At Anastasia's smile, the strange tension that had filled the hall subtly eased. Several coughs could be heard, and a sense of embarrassment at clinging to the previous atmosphere was evident among many in the viewing gallery.

She observed these reactions with satisfaction, then nodded once.

"Well then, I —Anastasia Hoshin— will do the talking. Please forgive me if I'm a bit presumptuous, being an outsider."

She pressed her clapped hands together and tilted her head slightly, radiating charm. That opening remark, coupled with this gesture, was the manipulative act of a wicked woman who could play with others' reactions in a single movement. And then:

"Julius Juukulius, First Knight to Lady Anastasia. Please leave the support for your esteemed self to me. I shall uphold you with elegance."

Lightly brushing his bangs, Julius highlighted his presence with an unnecessarily refined movement. Indeed, it immediately became clear that his "lack of individuality" claim was false advertising.

Putting aside Julius's grand and polished demeanor, what continued to bother Subaru was Anastasia's accent, which felt jarring in this other world. While not particularly familiar to Subaru, a native of the Kanto region, it was an accent he'd hear at least once a day if he watched TV. The intonation, combined with an unclear understanding of the otherworld translation's capabilities, still spoke to a remarkable job done.

Subaru nodded in silent praise for this unseen function. Meanwhile, the proceedings continued smoothly. To Anastasia, who had finished her introduction, Miklotov on the platform stroked his long beard and asked:

"Is that distinctive way of speaking from Kararagi?"

"Exactly. My origin is the lowest stratum of the Free Trade Cities in Kararagi."

"Hmm, the lowest stratum… Then what brings you to Lugunica?"

As Anastasia spoke of her origins, Miklotov's eyes narrowed slightly.

If the term "lower stratum" held the same meaning as in Lugunica, then Anastasia's status would be that of a commoner. Or perhaps, as "lowest stratum" implies, even lower. In that case, was her current extravagant attire bought for her by Julius? Yet, she wore it with such familiarity, and her unyielding composure before the kingdom's dignitaries, including the Council of Wise Men, didn't quite make sense.

As Subaru pondered these questions internally, Anastasia simply shrugged her shoulders slightly, maintaining a cool demeanor despite the sharp gaze directed at her.

“Though I’m from the lowest stratum, I now have a proper mansion in the capital. I also have several shops in other cities. My visit to Lugunica is also related to that.”

“The Hoshin Trading Company, which she chairs, is a rapidly expanding mercantile enterprise. With its growth in Kararagi, discussions of opening branches in Lugunica also arose. That was, in fact, the initial point of contact between Lady Anastasia and myself.”

Julius supplemented Anastasia’s words. Hearing this, Miklotov nodded in understanding, saying, “I see.”

“So, a young merchant who made a name for herself through her business acumen, despite being born in the lower strata?”

“It’s a good thing about Kararagi that even a young girl like me is given opportunities. It’s funny, but it seems I have a knack for sniffing out money.”

Anastasia proudly touched her well-shaped nose. Subaru observed a ripple of unease spread through those around them, especially the civil officials, at the content of her statement. Subaru had vaguely understood it as the result of some ‘straw millionaire’ alchemy, but for them, it seemed it wasn’t so simple. He wasn’t very familiar with the height of the wall between commoners and nobles, but the wall Anastasia had casually leaped over with a laugh must have been an extraordinary feat.

In the murmuring throne room, Anastasia modestly recounted her achievements. To further elevate her, Julius stepped forward and pressed the point to the still-rippling civil officials.

“In Lugunica as well, Lady Anastasia’s Hoshin Trading Company will expand its scale with the cooperation of the Juukulius family. What’s truly astonishing is that the rapid growth of this trading company, spanning two nations, was built by Lady Anastasia in just a few short years.”

If Anastasia’s age was consistent with her appearance, she likely wasn’t much older than Subaru, perhaps in her late teens. While it was unclear when she discovered her business talent, considering that fact, it was easy to see that she was a monster in the economic world.

“Lady Anastasia is a genius of commerce… No, a prodigy, even. Her business acumen is a natural gift, unaffected by her beauty… My apologies, by her age. Her foresight, her ability to move people—All are utterly beyond my humble talents and worthy of profound admiration.”

“Indeed, when the Finest Knight boasts to such an extent, it must truly be something remarkable.”

Miklotov nodded wisely at Julius’s excessively humble words. However, Subaru, listening from the side, couldn’t quite agree with his words. Subaru tilted his head at what Miklotov had just said.

“If I didn’t mishear, wasn’t he called the Finest Knight just now?”

With each knight currently attending their respective candidate, only Reinhard, still standing in the same line, could answer Subaru’s question. He merely shifted his gaze toward Subaru in response.

“He was. In the Royal Guard of the Kingdom of Lugunica, after Captain Marcos, Julius holds the highest rank. There is a Vice-Captain, but that’s an honorary position in name only, so you can consider it practically vacant.”

Reinhard glanced at Marcos in the center, then watched Julius, who was gracefully acting under the spotlight.

“His sword skills and mana control, his lineage and achievements—Julius’s qualifications as a knight are impeccable. Without a doubt, he is worthy of being called the Finest Knight.”

“In the capital’s downtown, wasn’t it you they called ‘the Knight of Knights’? Even the simpletons knew it, and you never denied it, did you?”

“There’s quite a difference between that moniker and actual qualifications. However, if we’re speaking strictly of sword skill, I am indeed superior to Julius. I’ve never met anyone stronger than myself.”

Subaru blanched at the casual declaration of being the strongest, but Reinhard, who had just dropped a bombshell, continued without a hint of pride, his face serene.

“The world isn’t so simple that everything revolves around sword skill. When it comes to overall ability, I am greatly inferior to Julius… In that regard, I likely don’t even measure up to Ferris.”

“I can’t tell if that’s high self-esteem or low self-esteem…”

“I intend to neither over- nor underestimate myself. It’s simply that my aptitude limits what I can do, and those who can reach beyond my grasp are worthy of respect—that’s all it is. Of course, that applies to you too.”

“Putting aside your self-evaluation, you definitely overrate other people.”

At the very least, Subaru didn’t believe he had shown enough achievement to warrant Reinhard’s fervent endorsement. Subaru was aware that he was a mediocre talent at best, and he judged his past actions to be the mundane results of a commoner doing his common best. Therefore, conversing with Reinhard, who looked him straight in the eye and seemed to be thinking, ‘You’re seriously amazing,’ was incredibly ticklish. It felt like an itch in an unseen, unreachable part of his body.

“You say that so boldly to my face, you handsome bastard. You’re practically pushing me into a ‘my route,’ so be careful.”

“There are many words I don’t understand, but if it’s with you, then it’s fine.”

“I have no interest in pleasing the fujoshi demographic.”

Subaru, speaking in a difficult-to-understand slang, curtly ended his conversation with Reinhard. In the meantime, the dialogue between the Finest Knight and the head of the Council of Wise Men continued.

“I understand the good relationship between the Juukulius family and Lady Anastasia. Hmm, then I would like to ask Lady Anastasia something.”

“Finally, it’s my turn. Julius hogs the spotlight so much, it’s hard for me to get noticed. Ask me anything, I’ll answer.”

As Anastasia, who had left the stage to the eloquent Julius, smiled and spoke, Miklotov returned a grandfatherly smile and nodded. Suddenly, Miklotov’s eyes sharpened slightly.

“Then I ask you—as a citizen of Kararagi, what is your purpose in aiming for the throne in this Kingdom of Lugunica?”

“Ah, you’re curious about my origins, aren’t you?”

Anastasia nervously fiddled with the ends of her purple hair. Slowly, Subaru understood the intention behind Miklotov’s question. In short, he was raising the point that there would likely be various problems with accepting Anastasia, whose primary allegiance lay elsewhere, as their own monarch.

It was obvious, if you thought about it; as long as countries existed, there were divisions between nations and peoples in this world too. The height of that barrier was unknown, but even in an emergency, it was unthinkable to easily cede the highest position in one’s own country to a visitor from another. Even if she claimed to be qualified, realistically, an American becoming president of Japan would be impossible—regardless of qualifications, the citizens who made up the nation would not accept it.

Her qualifications had been confirmed, as had her background. The next question, then, was why she sought the throne—just as Crusch and Priscilla had articulated, Anastasia was now expected to do the same. The entire hall held its breath, awaiting her words. To the rising tension around her, Anastasia offered a faint smile.

“When you expect so much from me, it makes me nervous.

Unfortunately, I don't possess grand ideals like Crusch, nor do I have magnificent confidence like Priscilla, believing I was chosen to become queen."

"Then you wouldn't say that you're pursuing this simply because the Dragon Stone reacted to you, by any chance?"

"Ahaha, if that were the case, I wouldn't be able to show my face here. Of course, I have my own objectives."

Anastasia gave a wry smile at Miklotov's words, then took a breath.

"—I'm actually a bit greedier than others."

With a casualness like sticking out her tongue, Anastasia uttered those words. The statement, so different in atmosphere from what was expected, made most of the people in the room look as if they couldn't believe their ears. Anastasia nodded, delighted by their reactions.

"Given my humble origins, I believe I've been uncommonly materialistic since I was little. The reason I've managed to become a merchant of some standing, I think, is more due to my strong attachment than just my nose for money."

Anastasia had said she was from the lowest stratum. If her words were to be believed, her childhood, like Felt's, must have been a daily struggle for survival. What kind of personality would be forged in such a place? Comparing it to Subaru's common sense, and recalling the cunning and resilient figure of Felt, it was easy to imagine.

Felt, standing somewhat listlessly and unhappily in the line of candidates, sensed Subaru's lukewarm gaze and turned his way, causing Subaru to shift slightly behind Reinhard. Felt, whose eyes met Reinhard's as she followed Subaru, made a visibly displeased face, while Reinhard returned an intensely refreshing smile to Felt.

"Desire is a scary thing; once you start looking up, there's no end to it. First, it's money for today's meal, then tomorrow's, then a week's worth. I want to sleep in a safe place with a roof, I want a bed, I want a softer bed."

Counting her wishes on her fingers, Anastasia gradually raised her demands.

"At first, I was a small trading company's errand girl, and when I offered a bit of advice on how the shop people did things, it was a huge hit. After doing that a few times, I was entrusted with bigger deals, and life became so easy I forgot I used to live in the lowest stratum. But even though it got easier, I didn't become free. No, I became even less free."

"…Hmm. Why is that?"

"That's the terrifying nature of desire. Simply put, the more things you can see and reach, the more things you want to grasp. I want this, I want that, that's not enough, none of it is enough—and then, before I knew it, here I am."

Smiling brightly, Anastasia pointed at her feet. It was clear she wasn't just checking her footing, but reFerrisng to the royal castle. She then gestured to the other candidates.

"I'm greedy, so I want everything. I've never been satisfied yet. I don't know true contentment. That's why I want my own country."

"You speak of a kingdom as if weighing it on the scales of materialism?"

"If my scales break from it, then I want them to break. If it can't fit into my vessel, that means I'm satisfied."

Anastasia responded with a knowing smile to Miklotov's words, which held a hint of admonishment. She boldly declared her 'desire' as the reason she sought the throne, and furthermore, she stated:

"If, even after acquiring the kingdom, I'm still not satisfied… then I'll have to aim even higher, kingdom and all, won't I?"

"What if what you acquire proves worthless to you?"

What would happen to something placed on the scales, yet still unable to satisfy her passion? Even the kingdom, Miklotov pressed. She waved her hand dismissively, saying, "Oh, no problem at all."

"Didn't I tell you? I'm greedy. Therefore, once I've acquired something, it's mine, no matter what happens. What becomes mine will serve to satisfy my even greater greed. That's why my life in Kararagi, the Hoshin Trading Company, and the employees who work for the company are all part of my passion to fulfill me. I'd never throw them away."

So, she paused, and looking at everyone in the hall, she concluded:

"—Rest assured, you're all welcome to become mine."

She smiled gently, as warm as the first impression she had given in this hall. Beneath that tranquility, an almost insane yearning smoldered.

Though her concept was vulgar, her argument was simple for it. She desired the throne purely out of her own greed, and in exchange, she promised to dedicate all her effort to the kingdom's prosperity once it was hers. She had just conveyed through her speech that she wouldn't abandon what she acquired, and once it was hers, she couldn't help but strive to elevate it. And then:

"Alright, I understand. Lady Anastasia's argument is sufficient. Now, does Knight Julius have anything to add?"

Once the master's speech was over, it was the usual time for the retainer's appeal. The previous two had purely argued for the firmness of their master's spirit, but Julius, fiddling with his bangs, stepped forward and said, "Yes, well."

"Lady Anastasia has used the vulgar word 'desire,' but in essence, it is an expression of ambition and deep devotion. At the same time, from a business perspective, she can choose not to be swayed by emotion. As a ruler, this quality is indispensable."

"Hmm, indeed, I see."

"Furthermore, as I mentioned earlier, Lady Anastasia's business acumen—this prodigious talent—is something the current kingdom desperately needs. Due to the war expenses and wasteful spending of the previous and former kings, the Kingdom of Lugunica's financial difficulties are severe."

The hall buzzed as Julius's words suddenly touched upon a sensitive national issue. One of the old men from the Council of Wise Men made a bitter face, looking down at the young knight.

"I believe that is not appropriate to speak of so carelessly in public, Knight Julius."

"It is common knowledge that financial reconstruction has been a major national concern for decades. I see no need to hide it from those gathered here. Don't you think the current stagnation of even national projects is the result of looking away and ignoring this issue?"

"A mere knight meddling in state affairs beyond his purview…"

"Precisely."

Julius cut off the elder, who was about to retort with a vein throbbing on his forehead, and waved a raised finger.

"My house, the Juukulius family, has not been significantly affected. Had we continued to avert our eyes and deceive ourselves, it might have been a problem I wouldn't have had to face in my lifetime. However, even if my house remains safe, I cannot overlook the fact that the royal family we serve is in distress."

"Therefore," Julius continued, turning his attention to Anastasia, who stood beside him, "I sought to connect with the Hoshin Trading Company, which was at the height of its prosperity in Kararagi, and bring a new wind to Lugunica. That I saw the qualities of a queen in Lady Anastasia in the process—what else could it be but fate?"

As he became more impassioned, Julius's tone grew louder, and his speech became more sonorous and rapid. With gestures, he became almost theatrical.

"If Heaven's will chose, it could be no other than Lady Anastasia. I swear by my loyalty to my royal family, and my fidelity to the kingdom, that Lady Anastasia is indeed worthy of being queen. —Thank you for your kind attention.”

Seeing that the audience had been captivated by his speech, he concluded with those words, signaling the end, and bowed. Air began to flow through the hall, which had seemed to be frozen in time, and everyone returned to their senses, re-evaluating the third master-and-servant pair’s argument. Even amidst this, only Knight Captain Marcos remained unfazed.

“Knight Julius, I think that’s enough.”

He calmly accepted and brushed off the fervent speech. Julius, accustomed to such curt responses from his superior, replied gracefully, “Yes, thank you,” and returned to Anastasia’s side.

“That was splendid, Lady Anastasia. Truly, a flower like you blossoms most beautifully in such a setting.”

“I still feel like Julius took over my turn, in the end. But he praised me so much, I can’t even get angry.”

Laughing together, the master and servant returned to the line of candidates. With the third candidate’s assertion concluded, the next in line was—

“Then, the next candidate—Lady Emilia.”

After a brief silence, the name of the silver-haired girl, who had maintained her composure until now, was called. The only candidate in the line without a knight. When her name was called, she raised her face, her beautiful white profile colored with both anxiety and strong determination.

“Yes.”

Emilia stepped forward. Her Royal Selection was now beginning.

—At that moment, Natsuki Subaru…

Chapter 19:
The Silver-Haired Witch’s Request

1

Emilia responded, her expression tight with nervousness, as her name was called.

The moment Subaru saw her right hand and right foot step forward at the same time as she began to walk towards the center, he thought, “I have to do something about this.”

From behind, even after just a few steps, her body was visibly stiff with tension. Normally, this would be a moment to praise her cuteness, thinking “Emilia-tan is such a puppy!” But now, there was no way it would work in her favor.

Just before she reached the center, Emilia managed to notice her awkward gait. Her limbs settled into a normal walking pattern, and she stepped forward—into the center of the hall, under the gaze of the Council of Wise Men.

—Emilia-tan, are you alright?

“There’s no need to worry, Subaru.”

“Don’t read my mind! Am I just a puppet on your strings?”

Reinhard cast a sidelong glance at Subaru, who was restlessly trying and failing to hide his inner anxiety. In a hushed voice, he addressed Subaru’s worries, then gestured with his chin towards Emilia, who was now at the front.

“It seems you don’t know what kind of reputation Lady Emilia has at the royal castle, Subaru. —At the very least, she isn’t being scorned in the way you’re worried about.”

“Even so…”

Her right hand and right foot had moved forward at the same time.

It was a classic tell-tale sign of extreme nervousness. If she were to trip over her words, then her tongue, then blush and squat down—if that chain reaction continued, it would be unbearable to watch.

If that happened, Subaru was prepared to endure the scorn and contempt of everyone present at this gathering of the nation's most important figures. He was ready to make a complete fool of himself.

—It was typical of Natsuki Subaru not to consider a path where he might cleverly salvage Emilia's reputation.

However, Subaru's utterly off-the-mark resolve became a groundless fear due to a diagonally opposite interpretation.

"Did you see that walking style, with both hands and feet moving at once…?"

"Isn't that a prelude to some special spell or incantation passed down among the elves?"

"It's a witch's charm. For some reason, I can't look away…"

Voices filled with awe reached Subaru from the accompanying Knight Guards, and the content disheartened him. It was less paranoia and more extreme grandiosity.

If they knew the real Emilia, it wouldn't even occur to them that her awkwardness was simply due to nervousness.

As for the third person, their comment was no different from Subaru's own thoughts, broadly speaking.

In any case, even such a stiff movement was being interpreted in that way—if what was being proclaimed wasn't meant to mock her but was utterly serious, then he could tell she wasn't being welcomed warmly.

As Emilia reached the center, the murmurs naturally quieted.

The only sounds remaining were Emilia's presence and the loud footsteps of a tall figure—Roswaal—approaching to stand beside her. Once his tall, indigo-haired figure stood next to Emilia, the preparations for the proceedings were complete.

Marcos, the moderator, looked at the two standing figures, his face grim, and lowered his chin. Then he glared at Subaru and the others—especially at those who had just spouted foolish rumors—making them straighten their backs before saying,

“Now, Lady Emilia. Along with Lord Roswaal L. Mathers. Please begin.”

“Weeell then. Oh my~, after having all these knights as attendants, I really do feel terribly out of plaaace, don’t you think?”

Roswaal responded in a lighthearted tone, turning to Emilia beside him with a “Hmm?” Emilia gave no reaction whatsoever.

Considering her stiffness from moments ago, expecting a normal reaction was out of the question. Roswaal’s inability to read the room was irritating even to Subaru, but that negative feeling was immediately forgotten.

Because—

“It is a pleasure to meet you all, members of the Council of Wise Men. My name is Emilia. I have no family name. Please simply call me Emilia.”

A clear, bell-like voice resonated through the hall, inscribing her name into everyone’s hearts. Her voice held no tremor, and her gaze forward was unwavering.

Where had her earlier nervousness gone? Emilia, standing before the Council of Wise Men and speaking her name, was in no way inferior to previous candidates.

No, Emilia, as she gave her address, possessed a detached, almost witchly charm that no other candidate could ever hope to have. It was unclear if this stemmed from her not being a pure human.

At the very least, Subaru was utterly captivated by that charm. His earlier inner resolve, and the many insults directed at her from the surroundings—all of it completely vanished from his mind as he was mesmerized by her standing figure from behind.

“Though I am unworthy, I, Roswaal L. Mathers, the current Marquis, serve as Lady Emilia’s recommender. I am grateful to all the members of the Council of Wise Men for your time.”

“Hmm. So, not a Knight Guard, but you, Marquis, will be her recommender. Could you perhaps explain the circumstances surrounding this?”

Miklotov stroked his beard, gently guiding the conversation, then his eyes narrowed with the sharpness of a sword. He quietly pierced Emilia with his gaze.

“Candidate Emilia. Please include your background as well.”

“Understood.”

Roswaal bowed at the waist, gestured to Emilia with an outstretched hand, and upon receiving her nod, began to narrate their encounter in a resonant voice.

It was a story even Subaru hadn’t heard, and he involuntarily tensed, straining his ears to catch every word.

“First, as I believe you are all aware, let us begin by explaining Lady Emilia’s ooorigins. Her beautiful silver hair, transparent white skin, deep violet eyes that captivate the heart of anyone who sees them, and a bell-like voice that once heard, you will never forget, even in your dreams. These many ‘Witch’ qualities, as you know, are proof that Lady Emilia carries elven blood.”

Subaru could feel many in the hall gasp at Roswaal’s words.

Elf— It was a fact that must have been widely known given Emilia’s treatment, and in a Royal Selection, it was a difference from others that was impossible to hide.

In the previous example of Anastasia, Subaru had used the analogy of a Japanese person not being able to become the American President. He wondered how deep the chasm between the elves and humans truly was compared to that.

"A girl with elven blood…"

"Superhuman witch allure, and an otherworldly aura, there's no mistaking it."

"An elf on the throne is utterly out of the question. That's not even comparable to the Anastasia example. It's not just that she's an elf."

The old men of the Council of Wise Men exchanged glances, speaking in hushed, yet critical tones. Especially the bald old man with a large scar on his forehead—his stance was particularly firm.

"Half human blood—meaning, a half-elf, isn't that right?"

He spat out the words, a vein even throbbing on his forehead, and waved his hand dismissively. It was a crude gesture to push Emilia away, and in fact, he continued,

"Just looking at her makes me sick. A silver-haired demi-human? How can you not realize it's blasphemy to even let such a being into the throne room?"

"Lord Bordeaux, you go too far."

"Do you understand, Lord Miklotov? The silver-haired demi-human is the very spitting image of the 'Witch of Envy' passed down through legends!"

Raising his voice even at the admonishing Miklotov, the old man, called Bordeaux, stood up. He then descended the stairs and strode purposefully to the center, in front of Emilia.

"The ruin that once swallowed half the world and plunged all living beings into desperate chaos. Don't tell me you are unaware of it!"

"…"

"How many do you think will tremble just at your appearance and lineage? You would dare place such a being on the throne? Unthinkable. Other nations and our own people will surely call us insane. Especially since this is the Dragon Kingdom of Lugunica—The land where the Witch slumbers!"

Spreading his arms and stomping his foot, Bordeaux ranted in a rough tone and manner. Emilia remained unresponsive to his outburst. But instead, Subaru was nearing his limit.

However, even that…

“Damn it, Reinhard! What is that if not a baseless accusation?! If she herself had done something directly in the past, maybe, but to be treated like this just because she looks similar? Does that mean all bald old men are like that? The bald old men I know are a bit better than him!”

“Subaru, you’re starting to stray from the main topic.”

Reinhard, with quick judgment, restrained Subaru, who was about to shout out in a burst of passion. But Subaru’s anger would not be quelled.

Snorting, he glared at Bordeaux’s profile as if he could kill him with his gaze alone. The old man noticed the hostile stare and looked at the two quarreling, saying,

“I thought the attendants’ row was noisy. If Knight Reinhard is the attendant of another candidate, then that black-haired boy is…”

“Lord Bordeaux, haave you finished?”

Just as Bordeaux’s eyes gleamed dangerously, about to do something to them, Roswaal poured cold water on his judgment.

He stepped forward, maintaining his usual feigned aloofness, and met Bordeaux’s gaze head-on. Despite his age, the old man had a robust physique, almost matching the tall Roswaal in height. As they exchanged glances at close proximity, the old man stared into Roswaal’s odd-colored eyes.

“If you mean have I exhausted my words, then I have still much more to say. Your actions are truly so outrageous, do you understand, Marquis?”

“Oh~, I understand peeerfectly. The meaning of my outrageous actions, Lord Bordeaux’s consideration in representing the opinions of the Council of Wise Men, and even the emotional issues of the citizens who will see Lady Emilia."

Calmly accepting Bordeaux's domineering tone, Roswaal then raised a finger.

"Hooowever, have you forgotten, Lord Bordeaux? The part that Lord Bordeaux is concerned about holds no meaning concerning the Royal Selection."

"…What do you mean?"

"Ironically, Lady Priscilla said it heeerself earlier, didn't she? That once five candidates are gathered, even if it's just for show, the Royal Selection will begin. Once the Royal Selection begins, all that remains is to proceed dutifully according to the Dragon History. Isn't thaaat right?"

Roswaal leaned forward, escaping Bordeaux's gaze, and turned the subject to the Council of Wise Men on the dais. In response, Miklotov closed his narrowed eye.

"Hmm, so you are saying that the crucial point is that Lady Emilia is the one chosen by the Dragon, and whether she actually has the qualifications to ascend to the throne is not the issue?"

"Preeecisely. I want to start and finish the Royal Selection as soon as possible and return the country to its normal state. Otherwise, I won't even have time to enjoy my hobbies, you see."

Roswaal casually dismissed Emilia's chances of ascending the throne. His statement held a greater shock than his earlier outburst, and Subaru could only stare in stunned disbelief rather than anger.

He knew how hard Emilia was working to become queen, and yet her backer was saying such a thing.

Leaving Subaru, who was too dumbfounded to form words, behind, Roswaal playfully waved his raised finger and continued.

"It may be rude to call her a 'decoy,' but peeerhaps you could consider it in that way. Lady Emilia's appearance is, indeed, very distinctive. Theeere are few people who wouldn't associate her with the 'Witch of Envy.' Thaaat, to us, means she can be an incredibly easy-to-use piece on the board."

"Are you suggesting turning the Royal Selection of five candidates into a practical contest between four?"

"Don't you think having fewer options reduces the possibility of division? Especially with the nation's politics unstable due to the absence of a king, and the potential for interference from other countries. In thaaaat case, shouldn't we devise a strategy to reduce the risks?"

Bordeaux looked thoughtful at Roswaal's proposal. The other old men of the Council of Wise Men also expressed "In that case," seeming somewhat inclined to accept the suggestion.

The intention was to select Emilia as a decoy for the other candidates and essentially make the Royal Selection a rigged race to bring it to a swift conclusion.

Comparing the advantages and disadvantages, and judging which way the scales would tip, Bordeaux, who had been the most steadfast in his opposition, nodded, a look of understanding appearing on his stern face.

"Understood, very well. I withdraw my previous opposition. Let's proceed as you recommend—"

"Don't you dare joke around—!!"

An angry shout echoed through the hall. As its reverberations died down, the room fell silent.

The only sound left in the hushed chamber was the ragged breathing of the boy who had shouted.

Under everyone's watchful gaze, the boy—Subaru—his face red with anger, glared at Roswaal and Bordeaux, who had been about to agree to their scheme.

Receiving his gaze, Roswaal closed one eye, looking at Subaru with only his yellow one.

“Oh my~, are you not aware of your surroundings? This is not a situation where someone of your staaanding should be interjecting. Apologize and withdraw.”

“I’ve stated my opinion, you bastard. What comes next is this: you’re the ones who should be apologizing!”

“How increasingly astonishing. —To say you don’t need your life.”

Closing his yellow eye, Roswaal pierced Subaru with only his blue one.

His usual nonchalant demeanor vanished, replaced by an overwhelming intensity that sent shivers down the spine. The air around Roswaal seemed to distort, likely due to the immense amount of mana he possessed.

Facing that overwhelming presence, a great fire flashed through Subaru’s mind as he ground his teeth.

He remembered the scene in the Witchbeast Forest when Roswaal had swung his arm, instantly incinerating the Juggernaut that had given Subaru so much trouble. He’d heard that even entire hordes were annihilated by him with the ease of twisting a baby’s arm.

Considering the precision of his previous mana usage, evaporating Subaru alone from this spot would be even easier.

There should have been a certain level of trust between Subaru and him—but in this situation, he couldn’t and wouldn’t expect any mercy.

It was Roswaal himself who had first betrayed that trust.

“This rudeness, just as things were settling. I’ll give you one more chance if you grovel and beg for forgiveness. What do you saay, Natsuki Subaru?”

Under the surging torrent of hostile intent, Subaru’s knees buckled. A tremor spread to his fingertips, and if he didn’t grit his teeth to hold it in, his teeth would surely clatter.

He felt a shiver run to his very core, wanting to flee this place immediately.

—However,

"I-I said it! It's not me who should apologize, it's you!"

His voice was trembling, and it was high-pitched.

Still, Subaru did not lower his head.

Emilia was here.

Now, her wish was about to be trampled. Facing that, there was no way he could back down.

Who else could stand by her, now that she had been betrayed at this crucial moment? Who could be a bulwark against these people who spoke ill of her just because of her race and appearance?

He had no strength. His will was weak. Still, he had stubbornness.

Some unknown, inexplicable force drove Subaru, preventing his two feet from bending at the knees.

In the face of Subaru's powerless, utterly self-serving stubbornness, Roswaal's odd eyes narrowed slightly.

"Very well. If you have no power, you can accomplish nothing. You would do well to learn that meaning firsthand. I hope you can put it to use in your next life."

The moment the ultimatum was delivered, the overflowing torrent of power materialized into form.

What appeared was a fireball, radiating an aurora that illuminated the entire hall. The fiery mass, born in Roswaal's raised palm, was the size of a human head, but its intense heat, like a miniature sun, lightly scorched even Subaru's skin from a distance.

Before the clear manifestation of malice, Roswaal, now in a battle stance, caused Bordeaux and the relatively close candidates to brace themselves. Bordeaux's stern face contorted in anger, and the candidates moved behind their respective knights.

Emilia, the only one without a knight attending her,

"Wait, Roswaal. That's not how it…"

Her deep violet eyes flickered with confusion and urgency as she looked between Roswaal and Subaru. There was confusion in her gaze towards Roswaal, and in her eyes as she stared at Subaru—

"Emi…"

"I'll show you the highest level of fire mana output. —Al Goa!"

Roswaal uttered coldly, and his palm was directed towards Subaru.

This meant he was about to hurl the fireball in his hand. The fireball slowly but surely bore down on Subaru, threatening to incinerate him.

Seeing it before him, Subaru instantly thought of throwing his body sideways to evade. His body simply wouldn't obey his thoughts. Was it because his legs were trembling, or because fear had paralyzed him?

No, neither.

It wasn't that the intention wasn't reaching his lower body. It was that his will was accelerating too fast for his body to keep up with the transmission speed.

His vision became abnormally slow, and Subaru felt 'death' opening its maw and closing in.

It was a sensation he hadn't felt in a long time, and the possibility of experiencing it at Roswaal's hand was something he had wished to avoid until the very end, even during the second loop at the mansion.

His consciousness left reality behind, unable even to move his eyeballs.

Therefore, the only thing left in Subaru's vision, apart from the fireball rapidly approaching, was Emilia reaching out her hand towards him from the corner of his eye.

Seeing the undeniable urgency in her expression, Subaru felt an out-of-place sense of relief.

His own life was threatened, and the girl he cared for was watching, worried for him. —How abnormal it was to find comfort in that fact was something Subaru had no time to consider.

Consequently,

"If you have no power, you can accomplish nothing. Indeed, those are good words. I completely agree with them myself."

The voice that resonated was familiar, yet it struck Subaru's eardrums gently, having lost its usual comfortable familiarity.

The moment the fireball struck, Subaru forgot to even blink before the incandescent death rushing towards him.

Therefore, Subaru's eyes witnessed everything that happened before him without missing a single detail.

At the moment of impact, the fireball extended its limbs as if to engulf Subaru's body and incinerate him. In an instant, a pale blue light enveloped Subaru's entire body first. It directly competed against the heat capable of instantly evaporating a human body—and as a result, it offset the attack, leaving only white steam in its wake.

That unbelievable, inhuman skill, performed with such ease, hovered directly in front of Subaru, at eye level.

"For mere humans to speak so freely in front of my daughter…"

With arms crossed and a small sniff of his pink nose—the small cat with gray fur, its dark eyes frozen with an unprecedentedly cold emotion, declared.

2

The sudden appearance of that thing struck everyone in the hall speechless.

Floating in mid-air, looking down on its surroundings, was Puck, a palm-sized, kitten-shaped spirit. Anyone familiar with his usual doddering manner, his laid-back way of speaking, and his utterly self-paced personality couldn't hide their surprise at his current appearance.

As Subaru stood there in shock, it was clear that agitation was spreading among those who were seeing Puck for the first time. The problem they saw was entirely different from Subaru's surprise. It was—

"He just negated Marquis Roswaal's magic head-on…?"

"In such a short time, practically without incantation?"

"Before that, what was that condensed mana? Anything visible shouldn't be looked at directly! It'll swallow you whole!"

One of the Royal Knights called out a warning, supporting the shoulder of a dazed colleague. Looking around, similar reactions could be seen among several civil officials, all of them staring at the floating Puck with terror in their eyes.

"—Huh? Wh-What?"

Subaru couldn't understand their reactions. The being in front of him was Puck. A small, gray cat. While the atmosphere around him was certainly different than usual, there was nothing that would cause the knights to ignite with maximum caution. Staring intently, Subaru couldn't find a single element that would cause the physical discomfort they were describing.

Subaru couldn't hide his bewilderment. Ignoring Subaru's confusion, Puck, with an unbelievably arrogant "Hmph" for those who knew him, declared, "It seems you don't understand, Roswaal L. Mathers. My previous concessions to you were solely because my daughter wished for them. Otherwise, I wouldn't have hesitated to sink this entire country into the permafrost."

As he spoke, a sudden wind began to swirl around Puck. It was a wind accompanied by a cold so intense it caused pain to the skin. What had initially surrounded only Puck gradually spread throughout the hall, thoroughly engulfing everyone present in its chill. Naturally, as confusion began to fill the venue,

"—Would you please calm yourself, Great Spirit?"

From the platform, a raspy voice was directed at Puck, the cause of the commotion. The speaker was Miklotov. While no small amount of agitation had spread among the members of the Council of Wise Men, he alone, poised in the central seat without changing his posture, lit his eyes with an intelligent gleam,

"Such power, and the dense mana you possess. I take you for a Great Spirit of considerable renown."

"What? There's a young one here with some manners, after all."

"Hmm. To be called a 'young one' at my age, I must say, this is quite a rare experience."

Miklotov responded with a small laugh to Puck's gesture of raising an eyebrow. Perhaps pleased by the old man's demeanor, Puck nodded, maintaining his arrogant posture.

"As for what kind of being I am, unfortunately, I believe you know more about it than I do. I am merely a spirit who has existed for a long time. It's up to you what you choose to call me."

"Indeed, that makes sense."

Miklotov stroked his beard and nodded at Puck's answer. Then, the old man shifted his gaze toward Roswaal, who had remained silent. Receiving his gaze, Roswaal, who had been quiet since his magic was nullified, shrugged.

“This stems from my first meeting with Lady Emilia. I encountered her far to the east of the Royal Capital of Lugunica— In Elior Forest. Commonly known as the ‘Forest of Ice’.”

“Elior Forest…!”

Roswaal’s mention of the place name was met with a chorus of exclamations. Roswaal nodded, as if their surprise was exactly what he had expected.

“Thaaat’s right, Elior Forest. About a hundred years ago, it was suddenly covered in ice, a freezing barrier said to reject all who entered or tried to leave and, the encroaching permafrost.”

“Indeed, wasn’t it a cursed land where the freezing winds gradually froze its surroundings over time, expanding its frozen territory year by year?”

“Frozen land, plants, atmosphere, living beings— That means, it’s a white end. Everything is invited to eternity, and will neveer return from that eternal sleep.”

Clapping his hands, Roswaal indicated Emilia and Puck with an open palm.

“It was in the depths of that icy forest where those two were quietly living.”

“So the permafrost of Elior Forest is…”

“My doing, you mean. Though, I was merely making it more comfortable to live in.”

Puck replied nonchalantly to Miklotov, who couldn’t hide his astonishment. To Subaru, who had little connection to the aforementioned land, it was a hard story to imagine, but judging by the reactions of those around him, it was undoubtedly a significant matter. Subaru’s earlier outburst was already long forgotten.

At Puck’s answer, Miklotov gave a small, troubled groan.

“Hmm. Such power, enough to put Elior Forest in that state— Its might is comparable to any spirit mentioned in fairy tales.”

“It’s just that terrifying, isn’t it?”

Though Miklotov had offered words akin to praise, Puck seemed to have anticipated his true feelings, putting them into words. Miklotov closed his eyes. Then, with a look of understanding in his narrowed eyes, he looked down at Roswaal.

“Hmm, I see. I’ve more or less understood. What was the reason for your contact with these two, who were living deep within Elior Forest?”

“It was part of an investigation, you seeee. Elior Forest was quite close to my territory, so it risked being affected by the permafrost within a few years. I wanted to conduct a preliminary investigation before that happened.”

Roswaal held up two fingers, a wry smile on his face, indicating that he had failed twice. Then, his expression tightened.

“On my third attempt, I managed to get through the forest, and that’s where I met them. At first, I was attacked without question… Ah~, I was so flustered, so flustered.”

“It had been a long time since anyone had made it through the forest. Perhaps my welcome was a bit too enthusiastic.”

They recalled the time with an easygoing air, but no one else in the hall found it amusing. This could only mean that a battle of similar intensity to the magical confrontation they had just witnessed, one that could be laughed off as child’s play, had taken place between the two of them back then.

“I was hooorrified by the welcome that almost changed the terrain, but what horrified me even more was what happened afterward. The transcendent spirit, who had attacked me mercilessly, laid down its arms just by listening to a single girl’s words.”

Casually dropping the bombshell about the terrain nearly changing, Roswaal, with a solemn expression, pointed towards Emilia. She remained silent, her face slightly downcast, her amethyst eyes unfocused and elusive, making it unclear whether she was listening to Roswaal's words or not.

Subaru felt a faint sense of unease at her demeanor, but there was no time to pursue it. As if taking over from Roswaal's words, Puck turned his body around.

"It's the plea of my adorable contractor daughter. I'd grant it over anything else. Conversely, I obey only Lia, other than my own will."

Puck finished, then added, "That's why," as he surveyed the hall. Among the people shrinking as if transfixed by his black gaze, Puck's eyes finally settled on Bordeaux. Puck formed a grin that suited such an onomatopoeia.

"You disagreeable lot should be grateful to Lia that you aren't currently frozen solid. If this child hadn't stopped me just now, this place would be a hall of ice sculptures."

His calm words were accompanied by a chilling cold, sending shivers down the spines of everyone in the hall. The fact that his words were not empty threats had already been proven by his exchange with Roswaal. The truth that everyone present was at the mercy of a single spirit—the sound of someone swallowing echoed loudly.

It was precisely in that atmosphere that—

"—Hohoho."

Miklotov's small laugh seemed utterly out of place. Puck cast a calm gaze upon the laughing man, focusing his chilling stare on the old body. However, Miklotov met his gaze head-on.

"Indeed, it sends shivers down my spine. —I must say, for Roswaal, that was an interesting conceit."

Despite receiving a gaze of absolute zero, Miklotov's composed demeanor remained unshaken. On top of that, his statement made no sense, but upon hearing it, Roswaal's expression suddenly changed. From his earlier serious face, he reverted to his usual doddering look.

"Oh my~, I've been fooound out?"

"I'd say it was a reasonably well-crafted script. The Great Spirit's acting was beyond words, but perhaps, milord, you got a bit carried away."

Leaving the confused onlookers behind, Roswaal slapped his forehead at Miklotov's assessment. Watching their exchange, the floating Puck fiddled with his long, raised tail.

"See, Roswaal? I told you going overboard isn't good. Never mind me, but in your case, everyone knows your usual persona, so you need to act better."

"That really hits home. It huurts! I was so cooonfident, but now I'm in so much pain, gosh."

Roswaal puffed out his cheeks, expressing dissatisfaction. Puck dispersed it with a sigh, and Miklotov, looking tired, closed his eyes in silent acknowledgment. The understanding posture of these three was interrupted by the bald old man who had received Puck's chilling gaze last—Bordeaux. He etched clear confusion into his stern face with wrinkles.

"W-Wait, Lord Miklotov. What exactly are you talking about?"

"Hmm, to put it simply— This is the form of the Lady Emilia faction's speech. Though it differs greatly from the previous candidates'."

Miklotov winked, seeking Roswaal's agreement, and Roswaal raised both hands in surrender, dragging out a drawn-out "Yeees" to confirm. Bordeaux seemed unable to grasp the answer immediately, but Subaru, listening nearby, finally understood. At the same time, a genuine fury churned in his stomach at the maliciousness of the long-haired, indigo-clad figure standing before him.

In other words, with this exchange, Roswaal was—

"Marquis Roswaal, the kingdom's foremost magician. As well as a Great Spirit with power equal to or surpassing his. By showing everyone present that Lady Emilia commands such a spirit, he has demonstrated that she possesses considerable strength. —If I'm to summarize the plot, this is more or less correct, isn't it?"

As Miklotov explained everything patiently and thoroughly, a sense of understanding finally spread throughout the hall. Once everyone understood that the previous exchange was a kind of act, what followed was not admiration for Roswaal's scheme, but rather a strong sense of anger at his manipulation of people's hearts. Indeed, a similar emotion burned hotly within Subaru.

"That was an act… an act?! This whole scene was a fabricated farce! Roswaal, what do you think this place is?!"

Bordeaux, who had been most publicly shamed in the hall, turned particularly red with rage. The old man's forehead pulsed with veins, and his face was crimson as he lunged at Roswaal, looking as if he might spit. However, his momentum was halted by Puck, who appeared directly in front of Bordeaux's face. Bordeaux immediately shut his mouth when he saw the furball before him and realized it was the source of the earlier chill, opening and closing his mouth silently as if struggling to find words.

Puck looked down at Bordeaux's reaction and chuckled pleasantly.

"Yes, yes, it's only natural to be angry. I apologize, I truly do. Forgive me, I'm sorry, it was my fault. —However, everything I said earlier was true."

Though he spoke words of apology, Puck's added remark made Bordeaux's heart pound. The kitten floated higher, spinning sideways.

"That great forest is my garden, and it's true that Roswaal is too much for me to handle. The reason I'm doing nothing and simply existing is because of Lia's request, and the reason I'm not doing anything to you who speak ill of Lia is thanks to her kindness."

He carefully chose his words, as if explaining something important, and then, finally, Puck smiled sweetly. He prefaced his next words with "I want you to understand," and then,

"—The only reason you're not frozen solid right now is Emilia's compassion. Don't forget that."

With that, Puck's form suddenly lost its outline and vanished into particles of light. The green, shimmering particles drifted through the air, slowly moving towards Emilia. They headed directly for her embrace and disappeared from sight in an instant. Presumably, Puck had returned to his vessel, the green crystal stone, which was nestled within Emilia's embrace.

The moment Puck returned, Emilia's head subtly swayed, and then light returned to her eyes. The reason for her earlier unfocused gaze seemed to have been the influence of Puck's manifestation. She blinked several times, her gaze sweeping around as if to confirm her surroundings.

"Roswaal, what's the situation?"

"Generally, it's favorable. To be honest, it would have been ideal to stretch out the Great Spirit's presence until the very end, but… it seeeems it was difficult to deceive Lord Miklotov completely after all."

In response to Roswaal's answer, Emilia simply replied with a small "I see." Her gaze swept across the hall, catching Subaru, who was standing directly behind her. The amethyst light in her eyes looked at Subaru, stirring some fleeting emotion within her. Subaru instinctively began to form words, but captivated by her gaze and unsure what to say, he ultimately missed the opportunity to speak.

Subaru was left behind. Emilia then stepped forward, turning to face the Council of Wise Men.

"First, I apologize for the discourtesy of deceiving you all, members of the Council of Wise Men."

"No, no, it was our oversight for not seeing through it. This old man merely acted with reckless bravery and benefited from the Great Spirit's compassion. Besides, this concerns the Royal Selection… One must use all available means to make one's case."

Miklotov nodded, showing his magnanimity in response to Emilia's bowing apology. Emilia's lips relaxed slightly, showing a degree of relief at his answer, but another old man, who had been experiencing nothing but unpleasantness so far, interrupted.

"Available means…? If the culmination of that is this current threat, then there's no other way to describe it than as characteristic of a half-devil."

"Threat? That's quite a harsh accuuusation. I was merely demonstrating the extent of my capabilities, was I not?"

"What else could it be but a show of force? Did you not hear the spirit's words earlier? The spirit said, 'If you do not comply, I will freeze you solid.' What is the difference between that statement, made in a place where the nation's key figures are gathered, and a usurper's threat to seize the country?"

Roswaal's retort, intended to admonish, was met with Bordeaux's snorting, speculative words. However, in the end, there was some truth to Bordeaux's statement that could not be entirely denied. They had achieved their goal of demonstrating power. But, conversely, it had also revealed to others that military force could be used as a card.

This was information that could become a disadvantageous starting point for Emilia, who was attempting to enter the Royal Selection, far more so than being judged as powerless or harmless.

In this disadvantageous situation, Emilia looked up at Bordeaux, who had returned to the platform, and opened her mouth.

"—Yes, I am threatening you all."

She clearly, directly, and even reversed the negative insinuation aimed at her. Bordeaux gasped, unable to utter another word. Still looking up at the old man, Emilia's gaze did not waver in the slightest.

"Allow me to reintroduce myself to the esteemed members of the Council of Wise Men. My name is Emilia. A silver-haired half-elf who has spent a long time in the permafrost world of Elior Forest, and who commands Puck, the Great Spirit of fire mana. The people of the villages near the forest call me this when they see me.”

Emilia’s voice, clear and resonant, flowed like a song. Standing alone on the stage before her captivated audience, she paused, then closed her eyes for a few seconds as if cutting something off.

“The ‘Witch of Glaciation’ who lives in the frozen forest.”

The moment the word ‘witch’ was uttered, the atmosphere in the hall instantly shifted. Everyone had been aware of her appearance in connection with it, yet they had deliberately avoided pursuing it —the very characteristics of the world’s greatest disaster.

No one could answer her. Not Bordeaux, who had only been spouting bravado, nor the other esteemed members of the Council of Wise Men. Only Miklotov, whose very make-up of courage was clearly different, was an exception.

“To display power and state demands. Truly the way of a witch. —So, what does this Witch of Glaciation intend to threaten us with?”

“My demand is but one. —Simply, to be treated fairly.”

“…Fairly.”

Miklotov repeated the demand under his breath to Emilia, who responded quietly. Emilia nodded, indicating understanding of his murmur with a “Yes.”

“That I am a half-elf, that my appearance shares traits with the abominable witch, all of it cannot be changed. The same goes for being prejudiced against by everyone simply because of that. However I firmly refuse to have all possibilities for me stifled because of it.”

“So, Lady Emilia. You wish to be treated as an equal candidate in this Royal Selection?”

“Being treated fairly is something incredibly precious in my life. To demand more than that in this place would be an insult to the fairness I hold so dear.”

How many memories of malice must she have endured throughout her life? Being unfairly cursed like Bordeaux, being persecuted simply for being a half-elf—it must have happened countless times. That is why, in this moment, she yearned for nothing but to be treated with fairness.

She turned. Her silver hair flowed with the movement, and a shimmer like a pale moon swept through the hall. As everyone was captivated by her radiance, Emilia raised her voice.

“Therefore, the only thing I ask of you is to treat me fairly. I will absolutely not commit an act lacking fairness, such as using my contracted spirit as a shield to seize the throne.”

Emilia could choose that option, if she wanted to. But she had dismissed such an option from the outset, deliberately choosing a situation that might be disadvantageous to her intended goal. Because—

“Compared to the other candidates, I am still an immature being, lacking in many areas. There’s so much I don’t know, and a mountain of things I need to learn. Even so, because I know the peak I must aim for, I have no intention of neglecting my efforts.”

Subaru had seen her diligently studying at the mansion, earnestly tackling everything. That’s why, in this place, Subaru alone knew the truth of her words better than anyone.

He couldn’t hide his trembling. Subaru was aware of the strange situation where he was thirsty but his eyes were watering, and he desperately tried to suppress his pathetic whimpers.

“I don’t know if my efforts will be enough for the throne. However my desire to keep striving to be worthy is genuine. That feeling, I won’t lose to any other candidate.”

“That’s why,” she continued, looking directly up at Bordeaux on the platform,

“Please, look at me with fair eyes. Just Emilia, without a family name. Not the ‘Witch of Glaciation’, nor the silver-haired half-elf. Just look at me.”

Her final murmur carried a hint of entreaty. However, the strength of will and feeling contained within it was unwavering.

Emilia was asking for what was naturally given to other candidates. To stand at the same starting line, to be given the opportunity to run from there.

For a while, silence enveloped the hall. It wasn’t that they couldn’t find words. Everyone was stiffly waiting for an answer to Emilia’s plea. Finally, Bordeaux, who had been the focus of everyone’s attention, let out a long, long sigh.

“My opinion will not change. There is no doubt that your appearance, reminiscent of the ‘Witch of Envy’ will have a negative impact on the populace. Your disadvantageous position regarding the Royal Selection remains the same.”

In a low voice, he directly contradicted Emilia’s previous assertions. At his answer, Emilia’s amethyst eyes clouded slightly.

“But—”

Then,

“Interfering with people’s hearts is a domain no one is permitted to enter. Therefore, I cannot do anything about how you are perceived. Nevertheless, I apologize for my earlier discourtesy. —No, I sincerely apologize, Lady Emilia.”

Bordeaux rose from his seat, knelt on the spot, and performed the deepest bow as a sign of respect. Surprise rippled through the hall at his actions. Amidst it, he raised his head.

“You had the power to freeze me solid if I didn’t comply. Yet, you chose not to, and instead asked for fairness. —That is a noble act.”

His calm expression as he spoke was intelligent, and only now did Subaru truly grasp that this old man was indeed a respected elder of the Council of Wise Men. The shadow lifted from Emilia’s face, and the joy of being acknowledged naturally brightened her expression. Her lips curved into an arc, creating a smile like a blooming flower.

Subaru, who could only witness this from an angle, saw Bordeaux, who was facing the smile head-on, gasp, and inwardly he raised his middle finger, muttering, “Goddamn stubborn old man!” Though his silent curse probably didn’t reach Bordeaux, the old man cleared his throat, as if to cover his momentary stiffness.

“I-In any case, achieving true fairness will be difficult. It’s clear that a path of hardship lies ahead. Do you still desire the throne?”

“I’ve known since the beginning that it wouldn’t be an easy road. Even so, I will definitely sit on the throne. That is because there’s a reason I have to.”

Emilia responded to Bordeaux’s question about her resolve with a voice that no longer held any hesitation. Hearing her answer, Bordeaux nodded with satisfaction, returned to his seat, and extended his palm towards Miklotov, as if entrusting everything to him. Receiving this, Miklotov combed his long beard, nodding repeatedly.

“It turned out to be a bit eventful, but I believe that’s enough. Lady Emilia and Marquis Roswaal, you have nothing more to add, do you?”

“No.”

“Weeell, I actually have much more to say, but in this case…”

“Then, thank you very much.”

Emilia replied concisely. Meanwhile, Marcos, with impeccable timing, interrupted Roswaal, who was still rambling, and brought it to a forceful end. Emilia lightly patted the tall man’s back, who was pouting in dissatisfaction, and they both began to return to the candidates’ line. However, the matter was not yet settled.

“Pray tell, what of that gentleman there?”

Just as Emilia and the others were about to step back into line, the question was posed by Miklotov. The old man raised one eyebrow, a mischievous gleam in his eyes, directing his gaze towards that gentleman—in other words, towards Subaru, who had stepped forward and was now looking lost.

“Ugghh.”

One could hardly blame him for letting out such a groan. After all, Subaru had been nothing more than a spectator, driven by emotion to rush forward, only to then bumble on stage, unable to keep up with the subsequent exchange. He had secretly interjected with “Oh!” and “Ah!” and “EMT!” at various points, but in terms of affecting the overall situation, he was as good as air.

His hope had been to simply drift away with the atmosphere and disappear from sight, yet he had been caught by the old man’s curiosity and once again found himself in the spotlight. And apparently,

“It would be a shame to let things proceed exactly as Marquis Roswaal intended.”

He must have intended to mutter that, but for some reason, Subaru clearly heard Miklotov’s soft remark. In other words, the payback for the earlier charade had, in a roundabout way, come to Subaru. It was a complete misfortune, but thinking of it as a consequence of his own shortsightedness, he felt incredibly guilty.

“Ah, well, this child is, um, my…”

Turning around, Emilia stepped in front of him, trying to hide Subaru from the Wise Men’s view with gestures. Flustered, her dignified demeanor from moments ago had vanished, replaced by the familiar girl Subaru knew from everyday life—Emilia.

A strange, indescribable sense of relief washed over Subaru at this, and his cheeks relaxed at an ill-timed moment. And, precisely at such a time, Emilia happened to glance at Subaru’s face.

“No, that’s not it. Uh, this person is… hey, why are you grinning? This isn’t the time, conduct yourself.”

"Conduct myself? No one says that anymore…"

As Subaru caught the end of Emilia's reprimand, she cast a displeased look his way. Even that accusing gaze was captivating, and Subaru let out a small smile, touching her shoulder.

"It's okay, Emilia-tan. —I won't make excuses either."

"Excuses? This isn't the time for that… Subaru, what are you doing? Hey, wait!"

Ignoring her calls from behind him, Subaru strode purposefully forward. He confidently stepped onto the spot where the candidates had stood, receiving the full attention of the Council of Wise Men on the platform. He clenched his teeth, gathered his resolve, and raised his head.

"Greetings, esteemed members of the Council of Wise Men, how do you do? I deeply apologize for causing such a great inconvenience this time!"

He bowed deeply, right hand behind his back, left palm facing forward, performing a traditional formal bow. It was an otherworldly adaptation of the ancient Japanese etiquette known as "Ohikae nasutte." After a moment of silence to confirm that no one was interjecting, Subaru became confident that first contact had been made. He then moved his limbs in a fluid motion.

He widened his stance, tilted his waist, placed his left hand on his tilted hip, and raised his right hand high, pointing to the ceiling, striking a magnificent pose. And then,

"My name is Natsuki Subaru! A lowly servant of the Roswaal Mansion, and the First Knight to the Royal Candidate standing here — Lady Emilia!"

He shouted, then lowered his raised right hand, snapped his fingers, and winked with a flashy grin.

"Please, allow me to make your acquaintance, and treat me favorably."

To make his position clear, Subaru's unexpected participation began. He felt the air rapidly grow colder than it had been during Puck's earlier appearance.

Chapter 20:
Natsuki Subaru, the Self-Declared Knight

1

It was supposed to be my ultimate cool pose, but ever since I came to this world, I can’t really remember it ever achieving its purpose as a ‘cool pose.’

As far as I can recall, there was that one time I got Emilia’s name, and another time with Rem when I said something so good it makes me blush just thinking about it.

Well, I guess it’s good that it works when it truly matters.

I silently conceded that point, but then I reflected that my expression probably wasn’t appropriate for the time, place, and occasion.

Frozen in a stiff smile, Subaru, in the silent hall, nevertheless pressed on with his outrageous behavior.

Once I started something, there was no backing down. Waiting for the other person’s reaction and then planning a follow-up was the least I could do as an entertainer. Even though I’m not an entertainer.

Subaru’s utterly pointless decision, which benefited no one, was—

“Barcelona?!”

A sharp, hard impact struck the back of my head, cutting me off with a cry of pain.

Stars exploded before my eyes, a forceful blow that instantly buckled my knees. A heavy, solid thud sounded right beside me, and my brain immediately concluded I’d been hit.

Then, forgetting the pain in my anger, Subaru spun around, tears in his eyes, practically flying.

"You, who the hell are you?! Do you know who you're messing with? I'm Emilia-tan's number one knight, under Roswaal's care, and tight with Reinhard!"

"Completely reliant on others—?!"

Subaru spat furiously. Someone interjected, pointing out how utterly dependent his words were, but even that didn't reach his ears right now.

Much of his outburst was also an attempt to disguise how he'd stumbled, seizing on the sudden change in the unyielding situation. But he wasn't without anger at having his declaration of resolve so rudely interrupted.

It was Subaru's own attempt to muster courage.

His method of summoning it might have been a bit outlandish, and the subsequent reactions from those around him were far from what he'd expected, leaving him feeling somewhat disheartened. Still, there was no doubt it was an outpouring of resolve, making him want to praise himself.

The person who poured cold water on Subaru's spirited declaration was—

"Then I'm supposed to do a Dempsey Roll-like combination after a Shamak, like Emilia-tan?!"

Subaru stomped his foot quite emphatically, interjecting as he spotted the silver-haired girl facing him with an outstretched palm.

Looking down, what had fallen right beside Subaru was a chunk of ice, about the size of a hug. It was a miracle his head hadn't split open from its size; after serving its purpose, it dissipated into the air.

Witnessing that, Subaru couldn't hide his shock at the unexpected betrayal. However, the agitation in Emilia's eyes, as she looked at Subaru, was far more intense than his own.

Waving her hands frantically at Subaru, she stammered, "N-No, it's not that! I just… I thought I had to quiet you down, and I just… instinctively…"

"The idea of hitting me hard on the back of the head is dangerous! You're like a heroine from an old manga! Though Emilia-tan is my eternal heroine!"

"H-Heroin…? Oh, honestly, there's no time to be saying things like that! Apologize immediately! I'll apologize with you!"

"You're acting like my mom!"

Subaru thought that apologizing with a parent, despite having done something wrong, showed cowardice, not sincerity. He truly felt that tickling maternal instincts and being treated entirely from a guardian's perspective were similar yet vastly different. With that realization, Subaru firmly refused such a shameful act.

In a hall filled with national dignitaries, the two continued their usual banter.

Most of the audience, watching them, couldn't hide their dumbfounded, open-mouthed astonishment. On the other hand,

"He screwed up—!!"

"Ah-hah-hah-hah! Behold, Al! A fool, there's a fool at his finest!"

The most arrogant and insolent master and subordinate pointed at Subaru; one buried his face in his hands, the other clutched his stomach, bursting into roaring laughter.

"Based on the actual magic cast, the incantation to activation was quite fast. She truly is highly capable as well."

"Oh, my, Lady Crusch, you have such an amazing eye, so manly…!"

Another master and subordinate, whose personalities were inverted in terms of gender, also reacted. One praised Emilia's aptitude as a magic-user, while the other was too consumed by their master's thoughts to care about that.

"Ah, looks like that that guy really is insane, though I already knew that."

"So it seems. Subaru, you are Lady Emilia's…"

Even the two who had yet to form a proper master-subordinate relationship reacted. One succinctly described Subaru's actions with a rather rude remark, while the other, for some reason, bore an understanding look in their eyes, appearing convinced.

Then,

"Well, I thought there was just some strangely dressed kid mixed in, but he's with that witch girl, isn't he? …Huh, Julius, what's wrong?"

"No, it's just a little… yes, something has caught my attention."

In response to the distinctively speaking master, the finest knight quietly closed his eyes, an enigmatic expression on his face. He remained silent, choosing only silence as he waited for the right moment.

Seeing how each of the candidates absorbed the unsettling atmosphere without faltering, it was clear they all possessed nerves quite unlike ordinary people.

Subaru and Emilia's argument ultimately highlighted the difference in mental fortitude between the candidates and everyone else.

Of course, the individuals themselves weren't aware of this, and oblivious to the reactions around them, they continued their usual bickering:

"See, Subaru, you always try to smooth things over with words I don't understand. Just because I'm a little naive doesn't mean I'll always fall for your tricks!"

"Tricks?! That sounds super rude! My heart is always true, heading straight for your route and always together with you!"

"Ah, Lady Emilia, and Subaru-kuuuun."

Emilia crossed her arms and looked away, while Subaru stomped his feet, trying to get through to her. Seeing their verbal sparring momentarily halt, Roswaal's drawn-out call interrupted them.

As they both responded to his voice with just a glance, he silently gestured, as if surveying the entire hall.

"Ah."

"Ugh."

Only then did they finally realize the hall's atmosphere had devolved into utter chaos.

For Subaru, who was sensitive to the atmosphere when he failed to read the room, the current situation was a familiar predicament, akin to a "oops, I did it again, tee-hee" moment. However, Emilia, pale with fright, was far more upset.

Even paler than usual, she immediately looked up at the dais, and as she turned, she grabbed Subaru's ear, making him face the same direction, and bowed deeply.

"We sincerely apologize for causing such a commotion."

"Ow, ow, ow! It hurts! My ear's gonna fall off! Fall off, when, if it falls, when it can fall, it will fall, fall fall fall fall—!!"

Emilia kept her head bowed with Subaru's ear still in her grasp, pulling him down into a bowing position as well.

Subaru, reduced to near tears twice in a short period, struggled free from her grip. He then frantically rubbed his throbbing ear, complaining,

"Careful! Ears are one of those vital spots that can't be trained, so you have to treat them more gently! It'll be too late after they fall off, you know!"

"Being in this situation means you weren't listening to what was being said, right? If you're going to be useless, it'd be much better if it just fell off!"

“You’re harsh when you’re flustered! Just so you know, I’m confident I’d get a double-A rating for my eyes, ears, nose, throat, and all my other sensory functions!”

It was just that his brain and personality didn’t quite work towards utilizing them to their full potential.

Emilia, perhaps judging Subaru’s statement, based on his former world’s health check-up, as his usual nonsense, didn’t press the issue further and continued to apologize to the Council of Wise Men.

She closed her eyes once, then composed herself with a serious expression and looked up at the elders.

“Anyway, please forget what he just said. This boy… he’s an acquaintance of mine, and an attendant of Marquis Roswaal, but what he just said…”

“Wait, wait, wait! I said I’m not okay with you trying to pretend it never happened!”

However, just as Emilia tried to sum things up, Subaru interrupted her again.

She glared at Subaru with eyes that were truly losing their composure—though “pleading” would be a more accurate description of her gaze, as the emotion of entreaty was too strong to be a mere glare.

“Please, just be quiet. I know you’re embarrassed and can’t back down, so please, at least for now, just be still…”

“I’m not saying something I don’t mean out of desperation, and besides, I don’t have the guts to spout nonsense I don’t believe in a situation like this!”

Subaru loudly insisted to Emilia, who refused to believe any of his earlier declarations. Even Emilia, usually so steadfast, couldn’t maintain her rigid posture in the face of Subaru’s attitude.

Perhaps seeing a pause in the conversation due to Emilia’s silence, Miklotov, who had maintained his silence on the dais until then, cleared his throat lightly.

“It seems that gentleman’s will is quite firm. Hmm, what is Marquis Roswaal’s opinion on this matter?”

While stroking his beard in response to their exchange, he directed his attention toward Roswaal. Roswaal, in turn, smiled suspiciously and drawled, “Weeell, now…”

“Each of the Royal Candidates has a trusted knight by their side. Within that context, it had concerned me that Lady Emilia alooone lacked such a figure. After all, it would be a tad awkward for me to hold that position, wouldn’t it?”

“Right, right, you got it, you got it!”

“Roswaal!”

Subaru clenched his fist and cheered “MOTTO MOTTO!” at Roswaal’s ponderous words, while Emilia, in contrast, shot him a reprimanding glare.

Hearing this, Roswaal prefaced with a drawn-out “Howeverrr…”

“That isn’t to say just anyone will do. If one is to call themselves a knight, especially the First Knight of someone who may one day become Queen, they must demonstrate something fitting.”

“Exactly, exactly.”

“Roswaal!”

This time, Emilia agreed with Roswaal’s opinion, while Subaru grumbled his displeasure, calling out his name.

Watching their diametrically opposed reactions with a pleased smile, Roswaal turned to the esteemed members of the Council of Wise Men.

“The qualifications of a First Knight—loyalty to their liege, or the strength to protect their lord’s person. Something that clears the path for their lord, who strives to become Queen. Withooout such qualities…”

“—That alone is not enough, Marquis Roswaal.”

A voice interrupted Roswaal, who had been speaking in a resonant tone about what he intended to have Subaru do. Roswaal closed one eye, turning with only his golden gaze. Standing where his golden gaze landed was a purple-haired young man—Julius.

During Subaru and Emilia’s earlier exchange, he was the only one who had lowered his gaze thoughtfully. Now, he stepped forward, bowed gracefully, and said,

“Forgive my interruption. However, there is something I absolutely must ask of him.”

“Him,” Julius indicated with an open palm, was, of course, none other than Subaru.

Subaru, being the one singled out, scowled at the interruption and prepared to meet the elegant young man’s demeanor. From the start, Subaru had not held a good impression of him. Even in the Royal Selection, that impression hadn’t improved; to put it bluntly, he disliked him.

Julius, who Subaru couldn’t shake the impression of being a snobbish, typically annoying nobleman, received the negative change in Subaru’s expression as if it were a gentle breeze.

“There’s no need to be so wary. There’s only one thing I wish to ask, and once that’s done, you may do what you must.”

His words seemed to consider Subaru’s feelings, but the expression on his face as he spoke was intensely serious, and naturally, Subaru’s own expression tightened, not to be outdone.

“What’s wrong? You’re making a really strange face. It’s rude to make that kind of face when someone else is being serious.”

“I’ve just been severely wounded—!”

Subaru nearly collapsed on the spot, inadvertently hurt by the innocent remark. Without commenting on Subaru's reaction, Julius continued,

"Clownish theatrics are out of place here. That is, if you truly claim to be Lady Emilia's knight."

"…What's that supposed to mean?"

"It means exactly what it says."

Closing one eye, Julius surveyed Subaru's body from head to toe. Subaru moved his hands to cover his private parts from that gaze, but most people wouldn't understand the meaning. Only Al, who shook his head as if he couldn't bear to watch the crouching figure, would get it.

While he wanted to say something about his countryman's behavior, more than that, he was concerned about the man in front of him.

"Sorry, I'm not good at reading between the lines. Back home, I got an 'E' on the 'Reading the Room' exam. So, please, tell me clearly, break it down for me."

Subaru responded rudely to Julius, picking at his ear. Julius didn't comment on Subaru's impoliteness, simply touching his bangs with that irritatingly elegant gesture of his.

"Do you understand, sir? You have just now declared yourself a knight. —Here, of all places, where the Royal Guard of the Kingdom of Lugunica are all assembled."

Spreading his hands, Julius spoke, representing the assembled knights behind him.

At Julius's words, the aligned knights simultaneously straightened their postures, stomping their feet in perfect unison, raising their swords, and saluting.

Overwhelmed by their presence, Subaru instinctively leaned back, muttering defensively, “Tch… I wouldn’t have thought they were the same guys who were scared of Emilia-tan’s walking earlier.”

“You speak too freely, sir. A knight’s attention to minor details comes from understanding the dignity and meaning of what they must protect. Do you have the resolve to do that?”

Subaru had nearly offended the knights’ dignity with his defensive remark, but Julius, with exquisite tact, skillfully reframed it into a noble sentiment.

It was frustrating to be put on the spot like this, but more than that, his question was profound.

Subaru, who had declared himself a knight in front of other knights.

With the dignity of the Royal Guard behind him, Julius was now, with that backing, questioning the true meaning and resolve behind Subaru’s claim to that title.

In short, Subaru was now being tested.

—Yes, the depth of his feelings for Emilia!

“Why are you staring at me like that?”

“Oh, just reaffirming my feelings, and getting a burst of resolve so my knees don’t shake.”

Emilia, who wrinkled her brows as if she didn’t understand, still couldn’t hide her worried demeanor as she watched Subaru confront Julius.

To reassure her, Subaru thumped his chest, then coughed lightly before turning back to Julius, who had posed the question.

“Cough, cough, so you’re saying… hack. My resol—cough, my resolve…”

“Take your time. Unfortunately, we don’t have any water here.”

Julius, instead of being exasperated, gave Subaru a reprieve, who was unexpectedly suffering from bronchial distress. Subaru gratefully accepted the offer, rubbing his throat and buying time to simulate his response in his mind.

Given that Subaru was now publicly known as Emilia's acquaintance, everything from this point on, whether it raised or lowered her standing, depended entirely on his actions.

He already had a sense that his earlier outburst of emotion had slightly reduced her evaluation, so he had to be even more careful in turning things around now.

Emilia, of all people, had gone so far as to put on a performance by asserting herself and expressing her opinion, which was quite unlike her.

Subaru, of all people, couldn't possibly hinder her efforts.

Only Subaru, who simply wished to remain the best for her.

"Right," Subaru cleared his throat, hardening his resolve and ending his stalling. He slapped both cheeks to pump himself up, then, still a bit dizzy from the force, turned back to Julius.

Julius, awaiting his move, stood composed. Despite no wind in the room, he adjusted his impeccably neat hair.

In contrast to that elegant demeanor, Subaru took a small hop, widened his stance, snapped his fingers, and aimed finger-pistols at his opponent.

"Alright, I'll give you a crisp, precise, and accurate answer. Oh, and I apologize for the wait, my apologies."

Julius momentarily furrowed his brow at Subaru, who started with a burst of energy only to immediately lose steam. Perhaps fearing he'd be drawn into Subaru's pace, he closed his eyes and shook his head.

"No, it's fine. Then, let us resume our question and answer. I will ask, and you will answer. —Are you fit to be a knight? Do you have the right to claim that title before us?"

The question was a rehash of the previous one—no, the knights behind him, too, were now more eager for an answer, having waited.

Feeling an illusion of a tempestuous storm from the increased pressure, Subaru moistened his drying lips with his tongue.

“I’m well aware of my lack of ability. I can barely swing a sword, and my magic is less than beginner level. I’m not some financial wizard, and I have no hidden, mysterious powers. If you apply Roswaal’s conditions from earlier, I’m nowhere near good enough, am I?”

Lack of skill, lack of many things—he was fully aware of it all.

Throwing a tantrum wouldn’t change reality. Natsuki Subaru was, tragically, a perfectly ordinary human, with no distinguishing features other than being from another world.

He knew full well that all the abilities he had cultivated throughout his life would be of no use whatsoever in lighting Emilia’s path.

Receiving that answer, Julius showed a hint of bewilderment in his refined expression.

Naturally. For the person who had boldly stepped forward and made such a declaration to then loudly proclaim their own incompetence and offer what seemed like an easy surrender to a clear challenge—it was understandable.

Disappointment, or perhaps simple disillusionment, welled up in his eyes.

But,

“You mentioned loyalty and fealty, didn’t you? Yes, my abilities are completely lacking, it’s laughable. But even so…”

He turned, looking at Emilia standing behind him.

How did she feel, watching him with such concern? She just pressed her lips together, her expression looking angry, or perhaps on the verge of tears, silently waiting for Subaru's next words.

Drawing courage from her presence, Subaru turned back to Julius. And then,

"I'm not sure if 'loyalty' is the right word, but I want Emilia-tan… Lady Emilia to become Queen. No, I will make her Queen. No one else, just with my own hands."

"…Don't you think that's a rather arrogant answer?"

At Subaru's words, Julius sighed as if he'd heard a fairy tale.

"You lament your lack of skill and acknowledge your inadequacy in all respects. In this very hall, you were not even given the right to speak in the first place. Yet, you, of all people, presume to touch the very core of a national affair? —Aren't you getting ahead of yourself?"

"Do you understand?" Julius raised a finger, continuing as if to impress upon the silent Subaru.

"People are born with their station. You could also call it a vessel. One cannot gain anything by exceeding their own vessel. Nor should one even seek to. The honor of 'knight,' which you so carelessly uttered, is also just that."

Julius unfastened the knight's sword from his hip and struck the tip of the scabbard against the floor, making a sound. A hard, sharp clang echoed through the hall, and a split second later, the knightly order behind him also struck the same sound. The overlapping thuds reinforced Julius's actions, and with the cooperation of the knights, he continued,

"What is required of a knight is loyalty to their liege and kingdom. As well as the strength to protect what they hold dear. These are indispensable. Neither can ever be lacking for one to call themselves a knight. However I believe there is something else vital."

"…"

In response to Julius's questioning words, Subaru remained silent.

He probably wasn't seeking an answer either. He likely just wanted to express what was on his mind. In fact, he shook his head faster than Subaru could respond, and spoke his next point.

"What I believe is indispensable for a knight— That is history."

"History…?"

Emilia tilted her head, mouthing the word that had been spoken so clearly. Julius responded deferentially to Emilia's question with a "Yes."

"I bear the name of the House of Juukulius, a count family that has served the Kingdom of Lugunica for generations. We, who hold titles, pride ourselves on supporting and protecting this nation."

He swung his arm, the sleeve snapping with the motion, indicating behind him.

At his gesture, the knights lined up behind him proudly raised their faces, stomping their feet in agreement.

"The Royal Guard does not recommend those whose origins are uncertain. This is not due to an exclusive obsession with lineage, but because the certainty of one's origin speaks to the weight of history served for the Kingdom. It is the accumulated history that upholds our pride as knights."

Therefore, he continued,

"In Lugunica, I do not recognize you, whose origins are uncertain, nor the person who called himself Al, as knights. Even less so as a First Knight serving the King."

"That's not something the person themselves can do anything about, is it…!"

"Indeed. That is why I told you: people are born with their station. That applies even to one's own birth family. People are not born equal."

Julius responded to Subaru's squeezed-out voice with a definitive aristocratic retort.

A chasm of unchangeable values lay between them, and the other's rejection was too distant to bridge the gap with words.

Even so.

Even so, he persisted.

"I will make Emilia Queen."

"—Are you still saying that? That position is far too high for you. You lack the weight of blood, and you don't possess strength like him, standing beside Lady Priscilla."

As if scoffing at Subaru's muttered words, Julius indicated the obsidian helmet with a tilt of his head. Al, in response, maintained an indifferent attitude, saying, "Don't drag me into this."

Ignoring his countryman's callous attitude, Subaru's answer remained unchanged.

"Even so, I will make Emilia Queen."

"You are—"

"If you're saying I don't have the qualifications of a knight, then you're probably right. As I said before, I'm a person with many shortcomings. Even before whether I'm worthy of the honor of 'knight', I'm self-aware that there are many aspects where I question if I'm even a decent human being."

Even with his own shortcomings, he wanted his feelings for someone else to be genuine.

He might be lacking as a knight, weak and unable to reach his goal, yet his wish alone was real.

"Still, I want to be Emilia's strength. I want to be her greatest strength. I know that standing here as a 'attendant' isn't enough. If I want to stand here, head held high, and be her strength, I need to be a ‘knight.’ So if that’s the case…”

He looked up, meeting Julius’s gaze directly.

His well-defined features, the valiant Royal Guard uniform, the splendidly crafted knight’s sword, and his dignified bearing.

Truly, he was the very image of a knight depicted in stories.

In contrast, Subaru was clad in a attendant’s uniform that seemed perpetually grimy from crawling around, his face far from refined or sharp, with ill-tempered eyes. If he let his guard down, his back would hunch, and he had no splendid sword, not even a bamboo practice sword—he was in a state of unarmed, self-taught combat.

The desired destination was simply too far. But,

“If I can’t even have a conversation without being one, then I’ll be a ‘knight’.”

He didn’t know how, and with so many shortcomings, he wasn’t even sure what exactly he was missing. Still, his desire was clear.

“If I can’t stand by her side without being a knight, then I’ll become a knight. That’s my answer, end of story.”

“Why do you wish to stand there so desperately?”

Perhaps he had given up on trying to persuade him with words.

Julius closed his eyes, shaking his head slightly, and questioned the very origin of Subaru’s actions. What did he desire so much that he would go to such lengths?

Subaru inhaled sharply, feeling the intense gaze behind him.

Emilia, the silver-haired girl standing behind him, she was watching.

He couldn’t turn around. He didn’t have the courage.

At least he could feel her presence at his back, so Subaru, though hesitant, answered,

"—Because she's special."

Upon hearing that answer, Julius murmured the same words softly to himself. Then, as if reaching some conclusion, he slightly drew back his chin and asked,

"Incidentally, may I ask what you mean by that?"

Subaru had only one answer to that.

"—Not here, I don't want to say."

He wondered what he was doing, standing in plain sight of everyone.

It was the ultimate humiliation. He could feel his face burning hot, even his ears were red.

As for Julius, the cause of his embarrassment, he shrugged, seemingly satisfied or perhaps resigned to Subaru's vague yet ultimately clear answer.

"Regardless of your qualifications, you've convinced me of your reason for standing there. In that case, there's nothing more for me to say. —However."

Turning his back, Julius started to return to the line of candidates. But along the way, he paused, turned his head back, and said,

"Still, I don't believe I can acknowledge you as a 'knight'."

"What—"

"I understand that you have determined whom you wish to protect and cherish. However, your way of thinking… no, it's not beautiful to use too many words."

Shaking his head, Julius looked at Subaru, who was still trying to argue, with a pitying gaze. Then, “One who makes the person they wish to stand beside wear such a face is no ‘knight’.”

The words, though softly spoken, carried a harsher meaning than anything said before.

Subaru felt a shiver run down his spine and tentatively glanced behind him. Emilia was standing there, and he couldn’t tell what expression she wore as she listened to the conversation. But he was terrified to turn around. Her silent demeanor only fueled his worst imaginings of how she was feeling about his words.

“H-He talks about knights, the ‘finest knight’ (lol) says things like that.”

Thus, the next words from Subaru’s mouth were nothing more than a trembling retort.

It was probably because he knew it was pointless. Julius’s steps, moving away from him, did not falter. Subaru’s words at that moment held no value significant enough to stop his stride.

Feeling as though he was being judged, Subaru continued to babble on.

“You’re being praised as the finest knight in this hall, but the title ‘Knight of Knights’ belongs to someone else in the streets. …Do you think I’d be intimidated by the words of someone like that?”

“Natsuki Subaru, was it? You should know that carelessly belittling others’ words not only damages your own value but also the value of those around you.”

Julius responded calmly to Subaru’s facile provocation, without any hint of anger.

His figure was already back in the line of candidates, standing beside his liege, Anastasia. Neither he nor his master felt any discomfort in that position.

Looking directly at their synchronized stance, and then at the two other pairs of candidates doing the same, Subaru felt the blood drain from his head, accompanied by a painful sensation.

“Natsuki Subaru. —That is not beautiful.”

Summing up all of Subaru’s previous words and actions, Julius stated this.

With that single phrase, Subaru realized the fact that he himself had degraded his own actions to the lowest possible point.

He saw that the candidates’ eyes, too, were now looking at him with a chilled indifference.

From the ranks of the Royal Guard behind them, many directed feelings close to hostility at him, presumably because their representative, Julius, had been disrespected.

From the circle of civil officials opposite, no favorable sentiment for Subaru, who could only voice emotional arguments, could be discerned, and he currently lacked the courage to turn to face the Council of Wise Men behind him.

To side with Emilia, even if it meant turning the entire world against him.

That resolve, that strength, he certainly had it for at least a brief moment until just now.

Yet, now Subaru’s body was rigid, unable to move from the spot.

Far from turning the whole world against him, he found his resolve wavering so easily just by making enemies of the mere hundred-odd people in the hall.

It was so pathetic, so shameful, his eyes felt hot.

Even in such a state, even in a situation where everyone around him seemed to be his enemy, he wished that at least she would remain on his side.

—But,

"That's enough, Subaru."

A clear, bell-like voice circled around him, before Subaru could even decide to turn around.

Touched on the shoulder, Subaru was surprised by the fact that he himself trembled so much he wanted to avert his eyes. However, Emilia, reaching out to him, made no mention of his pathetic disgrace.

"I apologize for taking up your unnecessary time. I will have him step down immediately."

Pulling Subaru's sleeve, Emilia bowed to the Council of Wise Men.

Being dismissed as "unnecessary time" cut into Subaru's heart like a sharp blade. However, there was no argument to be made.

He had, after all, trampled on his own resolve and determination.

Pulled by the arm, Subaru was led off the stage, unable to resist. He still couldn't bring himself to look at Emilia's face as she walked ahead, pulling his arm.

However, the fact that he couldn't even sense furious emotions from her stubbornly averted gaze, as if it proved the futility of his actions, was painful.

To that back,

"There were parts that could be judged as meaningful time, Lady Emilia."

From the dais, Miklotov's reedy, yet strangely resonant, voice reached them.

Miklotov continued speaking to the two who hadn't stopped walking.

"He at least showed that you are not the half-elf feared by the world. —You have a fine attendant."

"—Subaru is,"

They stopped. Emilia turned around.

Her gaze was directed at the Council of Wise Men on the dais; Subaru, standing beside her, wasn't even in her peripheral vision. Yet, Subaru clearly saw her face as she turned.

Her face held cold, frozen eyes, and in a bell-like voice, as if sharply cutting something away, she stated clearly,

"He is not my attendant."

She clearly rejected Subaru's words from moments before.

2

Wandering aimlessly through the corridor outside the hall, Subaru was at a loss.

He didn't remember how he looked after making such a fool of himself in front of everyone, standing next to Emilia. All he recalled was the Captain of the Royal Guard suggesting he leave, and Emilia entrusting the decision to Subaru without affirming or denying it.

Entrusting the choice to Subaru was her last act of kindness toward him.

Subaru had made such a spectacle of himself after widely declaring himself an acquaintance of hers. She must have known, painfully so, that his presence was nothing but a detriment to her.

Yet, she didn't blame Subaru with words, and if Subaru had chosen to stay, she likely would have respected that decision.

That's why Subaru couldn't remain in that place.

It wasn't that he couldn't bear the unbearable feeling of his own foolish actions. It was because he wanted to avoid causing Emilia any more trouble.

"No, that's just an excuse."

Saying he didn't want to drag her down was nothing but a convenient excuse. The root of the matter was simpler and more hopeless.

Simply put, he just couldn't bear to be looked at with such cold eyes by Emilia any longer.

"What did a fool like me even come here for, crossing such a dangerous bridge just to end up like this?"

After causing trouble for everyone, and even being saved by some miraculously lucky encounters, all he had accomplished in the royal castle was to become a grand obstruction in Emilia's path.

He came here to protect her from those who might do just that. His intentions were noble, but the outcome was a disaster— It would have been better if he hadn't done anything at all.

He hated himself for it. Though he had known this all along.

"Is something the matter?"

Suddenly, a knight walking beside him noticed Subaru's self-deprecating murmur and asked, his voice tinged with curiosity.

It was the knight who was accompanying Subaru from the hall to the waiting room. Unlike those inside, this person had been outside the room and hadn't witnessed Subaru's foolishness. Therefore, a certain respect for those involved in the Royal Selection could be felt in his demeanor.

Even being treated with such courtesy felt ridiculous to Subaru at that moment, causing the corners of his mouth to twist involuntarily.

"Nah, it's nothing. I guess… Sorry about this. I'm making you do extra work when you're in the middle of important duties."

"It's quite alright. Everyone knows that what is happening in the Throne Room now is a grave matter that will determine the fate of this nation. Although only a handful of the knights were allowed inside, guarding the exterior and guiding dignitaries are indispensable parts of our duty.”

The knight’s clear and concise declaration, conversely, left Subaru feeling flustered.

Honestly, in his current state, he truly wanted to reject even this praise. But for the knight, who hadn’t witnessed the events, Subaru’s strong rejection here would simply appear as a tantrum. It wouldn’t even count as lashing out.

The knight was proud that his actions were part of the Royal Selection.

What about Subaru, though? Could he be proud of his own actions?

Rejected by the very person he wanted validation from most, even if no one else recognized him.

“—Huh, what’s that?”

Suddenly, a commotion stopped Subaru’s steps as he was sinking into a sea of self-pity.

Looking ahead, he saw several loud voices exchanging words beyond the corner of the corridor. The knight stepped forward, shielding Subaru, who had furrowed his brows in suspicion.

“Please step back, just in case. I don’t anticipate any trouble, but…”

“Oh, uh, yes.”

Following the words of concern for his safety, Subaru pressed himself against the wall and held his breath. Then, turning the corner, the source of the commotion approached.

It was a group of about six people. A young man in knight’s armor led the way, guiding the group behind him. The group in the rear seemed to be restraining a central figure, and among the uniformly dressed knights, only the central individual’s attire stood out.

“What happened?”

Seeing that it wasn’t an urgent situation, the knight accompanying Subaru called out to the leading knight. In response, the knight who noticed them replied with a slightly stiff face,

“What happened, you ask? An intruder trying to sneak into the castle. A troublesome one at that.”

“An intruder…? Why are they being led through the castle? Wouldn’t it be better to take them quietly to the barracks?”

“I said they were troublesome. Anyway, I need to consult the Captain.”

Ending the conversation abruptly, the knight bowed to Subaru before returning to his duty of leading the group. Their destination seemed to be the very hall where the Royal Selection was taking place— A place that should be in the midst of the nation’s most crucial affairs. What kind of situation warranted interrupting that?

Subaru glanced at the group, replaying the conversation he’d overheard. Surrounded by knights, the person who had supposedly infiltrated the castle was now passing directly in front of Subaru.

Thinking that if he had made one wrong move, he could have been in the same position as that person, he felt a terrible sense of dread at the rashness of his own actions.

However, that sentiment quickly vanished. Because,

“—Huh?”

Right before Subaru’s dumbfounded eyes, being led away, restrained by four knights, was a familiar bald old man—Old Man Rom, whom he was supposed to have parted ways with in the noble district.

Chapter 21:
The Price of Impudence and the Old Man’s Intention

1

The shock that pierced Subaru upon seeing that person led away was perhaps the greatest of all the shocks he’d endured in the throne room.

He had stepped forward into the center, intent on helping Emilia, only to disgrace himself. Far from assisting her, he’d been a monumental hindrance, ultimately witnessing Emilia’s gaze filled with disappointment.

All of it brought Subaru unbearable pain. However, he didn’t fully admit that he was entirely at fault for everything. There was no lie in his words truly coming from the heart, and completely agreeing with Julius’s statements, which were rigid with the honor of a knight, was out of the question. Though his arguments lacked cohesion due to being driven by emotion, he didn’t believe everything he said was wrong. To put it bluntly, a significant amount of dissatisfaction lingered within Subaru that he hadn’t been understood, despite his best efforts to explain.

He had still withdrawn because he knew there was no point in revealing any more of his feelings in that moment. Subaru had no right to speak in that situation; it was clear that anything he said would fall on deaf ears. Natsuki Subaru should have been the kind of person to push his way through even in such a state, but the reality was that even the will to do so had been broken.

However,

“Hey, hey…”

On the other hand, the sight of Old Man Rom being restrained before his eyes held meaning enough to condemn all of Subaru’s own rash actions. The knight had pointed to the large old man and called him a suspicious individual trying to infiltrate the royal castle. Old Man Rom, who had been searching for Reinhard's mansion in the noble district and intended to take Felt, would have no reason to sneak into the royal castle. That is, if he had come to the noble district alone.

"Could it be, me…?"

He couldn't voice the decisive phrase, "Were you following me?"

Yet, the question that arose in his heart was almost a certainty, even without an answer. Fundamentally, his thinking had been far too shallow. Subaru should have known how good-natured the old man was, and how his personality was unsuited for the cutthroat environment of the back alleys. That's precisely why he'd used persuasion and trickery to get him to help with the infiltration into the noble district, and later, for his own solo mission, he'd exploited the old man's kindness to separate them.

As for the subsequent risks, they were all the consequence of his own actions. Even if he found himself in any predicament, Subaru had figured he could at least manage himself. At worst, he could invoke Roswaal's name, and even if it caused him an unreasonable amount of trouble, he had the bare minimum assurance that he would save his life.

Old Man Rom, who Subaru had parted ways with without any explanation, could not have known about Subaru's own base self-preservation. He could have abandoned him. He must have had his own important people, his own vital objectives. That's why, even after they parted, Subaru thought that Old Man Rom would somehow prioritize his own goals and discard Subaru due to a matter of priority.

The result of his neglect to consider others' feelings was the scene unfolding before him now. It wasn't hard to imagine that Old Man Rom, regretting letting Subaru head into such a reckless infiltration, had worried about him and thus infiltrated the royal castle. In fact, considering the old man's personality, it was an easily foreseeable outcome.

"Rom…"

"…"

Subaru's lips instinctively moved to call his name. But what stopped him was none other than Old Man Rom himself, who, while being led away, noticed Subaru by the edge of the corridor, protected by a knight. Upon realizing Subaru's presence, a flicker of surprise appeared in his gray eyes, followed by a clear look of relief that was only discernible to Subaru. Then, as if only for Subaru to see, he placed his index finger to his lips, signaling him to "be quiet."

The meaning of that instruction was clear. Old Man Rom, caught in the act of illegal entry into the castle. If Subaru acknowledged his acquaintance with such a suspicious individual, it would worsen Subaru's own standing. This realization was made in an instant, after seeing Subaru's current position.

"It's my own foolishness that got me caught. It's nothing for you to worry about."

Though not spoken aloud, Old Man Rom's inner voice, conveyed through the gesture of a finger to his lips and a quiet shake of his head, seemed to reach Subaru directly. Confused by this sensation, Subaru missed the timing to speak to the passing group. Surrounded tightly by knights, Old Man Rom's figure disappeared down the corridor. Would he be dragged into the hall and impeached? If that happened, who, unaware of the circumstances, would defend him?

And most of all,

"Why didn't I say anything just now…?"

He hadn't actually been verbally restrained, and the words that had flashed through his mind afterward were nothing more than the products of Subaru's imagination. Perhaps Old Man Rom had been seeking help, and even if he wasn't, Subaru had a reason to act to help him. After all, it was Subaru who had led him to such a state of mind and involved him in this infiltration.

"—Wait!"

It took some time to steel himself, but somehow, Subaru's throat managed to scream that out. The footsteps of the group, which had almost disappeared down the corridor, halted, and he sensed their questioning gazes. He had managed to stop them. It was the worst possible situation, but he had avoided falling below rock bottom. The remaining problem was what to do from here.

“Is something the matter?”

“I just have something for that old man…”

Responding to the accompanying knight’s concerned voice, Subaru walked towards the group—towards the restrained Old Man Rom. The group seemed unsure how to treat Subaru as he approached, but when the knight accompanying Subaru announced, “He’s connected to a candidate”, they all immediately straightened their posture and showed him deference.

Feeling the burden of it, but grateful for it in this moment, he gave a nod of acknowledgment and stepped forward. He reached Old Man Rom’s side,

“—!”

As he got close enough to reach out and touch him, Subaru lost his words, unsure what to say. Acting on impulse was his usual habit, but this time, things weren’t simple. Any words to Old Man Rom, who had been caught for illegal entry into the royal castle, could easily be mistaken for Subaru confessing his own illegal entry. Therefore, he needed to be cautious—but again, he had no plan.

Facing the familiar old man and realizing his own helplessness, Subaru understood that he was far more of a live-in-the-moment person than he had thought. He had always vaguely considered himself a calm and composed type who thought things through, but considering the process and outcome of his various actions today, it was laughable to think he could say that with a straight face. Even now, not a single idea of what to say came to him.

“—Sir Subaru?”

A voice of suspicion, directed at Subaru, who trembled his lips, unable to utter a single word. Naturally, the surrounding knights' gazes at Subaru began to harden. Feeling the rising caution prickle his skin, Subaru tried to think of something to say, when,

"Hmph, these aristocrats sure have terrible taste, don't they! To laugh at the foolish face of a clumsy old man who got caught, I can't believe we're even the same flesh and blood!"

Subaru's anxiety was drowned out by a loud voice that echoed from one end of the corridor to the other. Spitting and speaking in a vulgar tone with a grimace, it was none other than Old Man Rom. Twisting his restrained body, he looked up at Subaru's face from below, in an ill-mannered way, saying,

"If you want to see a face like this, look all you want! The face of an old man covered in the grime of the slums, something fortunate young punks like you know nothing about!"

Astonished, dumbfounded, utterly shocked, his thoughts completely ceased. Old Man Rom hurled unbearable insults, directing them at Subaru. The surrounding knights also froze for a moment, but a few seconds later, they snapped back to reality and,

"—Watch your mouth!"

"Guh!"

A punitive fist was brought down upon the criminal who had spoken disrespectfully to the important person, Subaru. Shackled and unable to move, the old man had no way to defend himself. Powerless, he was struck by the fist, paying the price for his unseemly remarks. Unable to hide his surprise at the excessive punishment unfolding before him, but knowing he had to stop it, Subaru reached out a hand,

"Wait, there's no need to go that far…"

"How kind of you, young punk. Well now, what's wrong, knights? That's your beloved master's command, why don't you wag your tails and obey… Guh!"

"Still talking, you vagrant!"

Subaru's words of protest were again cut off by Old Man Rom's curses. As Old Man Rom's insults intensified, the punishment grew even harsher and more relentless.

"Why?" The question flooded his mind, threatening to spill from his lips. But just before he could speak, Subaru's words were held back as he grasped the intent in Old Man Rom's rational eyes, which, despite the assault, never left his.

—Old Man Rom, even in this situation, was still trying to protect Subaru.

Defending Old Man Rom, who was caught red-handed for illegal entry, could create a reason for Subaru's own vulnerable position to be scrutinized. Subaru was aware that his position would be inconvenient if he were pressed, and Old Man Rom also knew this well. That's why Old Man Rom was acting overly hostile to feign animosity and eliminate any connection between himself and Subaru.

A feeling of deep regret overwhelmed his chest. If it was Subaru's rash actions that had driven Old Man Rom into this predicament, then the current situation, which forced Old Man Rom to make a difficult decision, was also a consequence of Subaru's lack of foresight. Old Man Rom was now forced to clean up after Subaru's actions.

"Sir Subaru, we should go now."

"Ah… no…"

A knight touched Subaru's shoulder, speaking in a concerned voice. He likely mistook Subaru's silence for shock, believing he was reeling from Old Man Rom's unwarranted insults. Subaru gave an ambiguous reply to the voice, then met Old Man Rom's gaze.

—Somehow, I need to get out of here.

That was the thought he conveyed. He had no concrete plan, but a sense of obligation surged through him, compelling him to act because he had to. However, Old Man Rom's answer to Subaru's intention was a silent shake of his head—a rejection.

"—None of your damn business, young punk."

The small, hoarse murmur sounded like a continuation of the earlier insults, not raising any suspicion of its context among the knights. But to Subaru alone, it was clear that those were the only honest words Old Man Rom had spoken in that moment, devoid of any deceit.

Old Man Rom then averted his gaze, and Subaru swallowed the words he was about to say, understanding that the conversation was over. His outstretched hand had been rejected, and Subaru again felt as if he had been denied. It was the same as in the hall. Only a sense of urgency pushed Subaru forward to do something—yet, the person who mattered most didn't need it.

Before the silent Subaru, Old Man Rom swayed his body and urged the halted knights to continue, saying, "That's enough now." The knights glanced at Subaru, but seeing him look down, unable to say anything, they said, "Excuse us," and resumed their march.

Just like that, Old Man Rom was led away. His large demi-human body hunched, his injured, bloodied face turned away, Old Man Rom was pulled away from Subaru, and Subaru let the final opportunity slip by.

"Subaru-dono, let's go. The captain will make the decision about what happens next."

A quiet voice, yet unable to hide its indignation, came from the knight. He probably believed Subaru's silence was due to Old Man Rom's unwarranted abuse. While that was partly true, in essence, it was completely different. Explaining it would diminish Old Man Rom's spirit.

—That's just an excuse.

Consider Old Man Rom's thoughtfulness? If he left him as he was, Old Man Rom would face condemnation and impeachment by the knight order in the hall—and there was no telling what punishment would be handed down. At the very least, if Subaru had mentioned Old Man Rom's transgression in that moment, he could have leveraged his position as someone involved in the Royal Selection to some extent.

"Just got caught up in it, huh…"

If he hadn't played along with Old Man Rom's intention, there was no doubt that Subaru, in his flustered state, would have also fallen under suspicion. If he had been eloquent enough in his subsequent defense to secure Old Man Rom's release, to an extreme, he wouldn't have even had to leave the hall. However even that was just an excuse.

"I…"

Once again, he wasn't needed. Rejected by Emilia, rejected by Old Man Rom, his outstretched hand lost its way, and,

"Why am I even here…?"

What would happen to Old Man Rom where he was taken? Shaking his head, Subaru tried to dispel the unpleasant thoughts. He imagined the faces of those in the hall, and in an attempt to comfort himself, he piled up excuses, telling himself that at least the situation would be better than if Subaru had caused a scene there.

Among those in the hall, three people knew Old Man Rom's face. All of them were candidates, the main players of the Royal Selection. Subaru knew how important Old Man Rom was to one of them. So, it would surely not turn out badly.

Surely not. It wouldn't, so.

"What am I here for…? I…"

2

A ripple of commotion spread through the throne room as a single elder emerged from beyond the wide-flung doors. Leading the man, whose hands were bound in shackles, was Marcos, the knight captain who had briefly left the room.

Just minutes earlier, a knight had entered during the Royal Selection proceedings to summon Captain Marcos. Though Marcos initially frowned, citing the presence of the Wise Men, his subordinate's urgency prompted him to excuse himself and leave. Five minutes later, as the proceedings were held in suspense, the current situation unfolded.

"Hmm, and who might this gentleman be?" Miklotov, on the dais, questioned the elder Marcos had brought, voicing the thoughts of everyone present. No one could fathom Marcos's intentions in bringing the man here.

Bathing in their confused gazes, Marcos bowed respectfully. "My apologies for the disturbance. This man appears to be a rogue who attempted to infiltrate the royal castle."

"Then why bring such a person here? He's irrelevant… no, out of place." Bordeaux, a stern-faced elder, made no secret of his displeasure at Marcos's explanation. The others in the room largely seemed to agree, their expressions clouding over as they tried to understand Marcos's true motives.

Amidst the confusion, three individuals, despite not understanding Marcos's intentions, wore expressions different from those around them—expressions of surprise.

One was an arrogant young woman. She recognized the elder's face but kept the fact of their acquaintance to herself, not even informing her attendant. Instead, she watched the situation unfold, a cruel twist to her lips. If Subaru had been present, her actions might have differed. However with the only person who knew of her connection to the elder having left, there was still no reason strong enough to sway her.

Another was a diligent young woman. After taking a moment to recall, she quickly recognized the elder's identity and shifted her gaze to another direction—towards one of the candidates. As far as she knew, there was an inseparable connection between that individual and the candidate. Upon hearing about the attempted intrusion, she immediately realized that the candidate was likely involved in the elder's plans. Then, she trembled her lips, hesitating on how to act. She heightened her awareness, ready to move instantly if anything were to happen.

The young woman who had received the most unexpected assessment in this place was…

"—Old Man Rom?" Her eyes wide, golden hair swaying, the young woman stared at the elder, her eyes shaking with surprise. A mix of unexpected joy, incomprehensible shock, and various other inexpressible emotions swirled within her. Her call of the elder's name was a mere whisper, yet more than a few people distinctly heard it.

"—Lady Felt, are you acquainted with this elder?" Marcos, who had spoken with a tone hinting at certainty, was one of those who heard her. Felt closed her mouth for a moment in response to his question, then stepped forward boldly.

"Don't play dumb. You brought him here because you knew, didn't you?"

"…I didn't take it at face value, but this elder did mention your name. I apologize if my words sounded like a test."

"That's just pointless. You've pulled quite the stunt."

Felt spat out her irritation, not bothering to hide it, as Marcos bowed without changing his expression. She then looked at the restrained Old Man Rom.

"We sure ended up meeting in a strange place, Old Man Rom."

Though her manner of speaking remained coarse, the affection imbued in her words was palpable to everyone present. It was the first time the young woman, who had only ever hurled insults in this hall, had spoken with such familiarity.

In response, the restrained elder lifted his head. For the two of them, it had been over ten days since their last reunion. This reunion should have been filled with profound emotion. But,

"Hey, Old Man Rom, what happened to your face?"

Seeing the elder's bruised and blood-stained face as he looked up, the young woman's expression instantly changed. Her defiant, cat-like eyes sharpened with anger as she glared at Marcos, who held the chain connected to Old Man Rom's shackles.

Receiving her furious gaze, Marcos, however, remained expressionless.

"It's likely the result of a struggle with the soldiers who stopped him when he tried to infiltrate the castle. My subordinates were merely performing their duty; there's no reason to criticize them."

"Ha! You say such fine things, Captain of the Knights. The fact that you're making excuses before I even say anything just proves you know it's messed up, doesn't it?"

"My subordinates risked unnecessary criticism, so laugh at my cowardice if you must. If you're going to slander anyone, please direct it only at me."

Marcos remained unyielding to Felt's provocation, a testament to his experience and composure. Sensing that further argument would be futile, Felt stifled her indignation with a sigh.

"Fine, I get it. Just release Old Man Rom. He didn't steal anything or kill anyone, did he?"

Felt waved her hand as if to say, "The rest can come after," and ordered Marcos. Her intention was to speak with Old Man Rom first and try to resolve the situation. However, Marcos's answer was,

"—Unfortunately, I cannot comply." His voice was low and firm, a clear refusal of her command.

"—Huh?"

Felt's expression twitched, a vein throbbing in her forehead. Her red eyes, filled with surprise and then immediate fury, looked ready to erupt into flames from her trembling lips at any moment. Marcos remained unperturbed by the young woman's enraged gaze. Before Felt could unleash her fury, a red-haired young man, who had been waiting in the knight's ranks, stepped forward.

"Captain, that might be a bit… lacking in explanation."

"Reinhard, be silent. I know you have something to say to me, who acts against the will of the master you vowed your sword to. However, that only holds true if the one you consider your master is willing to accept your sword."

"…"

Reinhard's conciliatory advice was, however, shot down by Marcos's words. Captain Marcos's argument was sound, and Reinhard could not offer a reckless rebuttal. He could only silently observe Felt's reaction.

Felt, however, did not seem disappointed by Reinhard's capitulation, nor was she observing the exchange. Her anger was solely and intensely directed at Marcos. It wasn't just about their current interaction, but a concentrated, potent rage, a distillation of various frustrations accumulated during the twists and turns that led to her being brought here.

"I'll say it again: release Old Man Rom. We can talk after that."

Holding back the rage threatening to burst forth, Felt calmly articulated her words. But Marcos, responding succinctly, paid no heed to her spirit. An ominous atmosphere began to spread throughout the hall, and Felt's patience was nearing its limit.

"—Knight Marcos, your disrespect is getting out of hand."

The one who intervened in this tense situation was, as expected, the person with the most authority to resolve matters here, an elder who let out yet another sigh for the unknown count today. Miklotov chastised Marcos for his unyielding attitude towards Felt, a royal candidate, an attitude that even warranted considering a rude dismissal.

"Releasing a person who attempted to infiltrate the castle—that command is somewhat problematic. However, even if you refuse, your manner of speaking is impolite. At the very least, you have an obligation to explain your rude behavior."

"As you wish."

Marcos's stubborn attitude abruptly changed; he readily obeyed Miklotov's instruction. The swiftness of his change further exacerbated Felt's temper, but her surge of emotion lost momentum as Marcos met her gaze directly. If Felt's red eyes burned with the flames of fury, Marcos's eyes were as still and clear as a tranquil lake.

Feeling as though she had been doused with cold water, Felt heard Marcos preface his words with "If you'll excuse me," before continuing.

"During the course of these Royal Selection proceedings, Lady Felt has publicly declared her unwillingness to participate in the Royal Selection. Forfeiting that qualification means also forfeiting the right to command us, the Knight Order, in this place."

In a clear, resonant voice, Marcos explained his reason for not obeying her command. One might call it an outrageous argument, but Felt's previous attitude, which had not impressed the civil officials, knights, or the members of the Council of Wise Men gathered here, now came back to haunt her. Naturally, many nodded in agreement with Marcos's statement, showing their support.

"Captain, that's an extreme conclusion. Firstly, regardless of qualification, Lady Felt potentially has royal blood in this country…"

"Potential is just potential. Stop speaking of ideals that are unlike you. An unclear qualification holds no meaning here, and forfeiting the clearer reason is her own will." Marcos paid no heed to Reinhard's words, instead looking at Felt as if to gauge her understanding, asking, "Do you understand?"

In response, Felt, who had remained silent until now, lowered her face and roughly raked her hands through her golden hair. She then groaned, irritatedly or perhaps to vent her frustration, uttering "Ah" and "Ugh."

“So, to simplify this complicated talk, you’re saying… You won’t listen to anything I say because I’m not interested in the Royal Selection, right?”

“—That’s correct, in essence.”

“Oh, oh, we finally understand each other. Ah, I see, I see. Ah, yes, yes. I see, I see… You’re annoying, you know that?”

Felt’s cat-like eyes, with their narrowed pupils, glared at Marcos, who had affirmed her question. The hostile gaze, close to murderous intent, however, had no more effect on Marcos’s rock-like expression than a gentle breeze.

An experienced veteran facing off against a mere delinquent girl who grew up in the slums. It was a woefully mismatched confrontation, but Felt’s personality wasn’t one to be intimidated by it.

She understood the reason. She understood the conditions. Her irritation was escalating rapidly, raging within her, seeking an outlet. It wouldn’t be so bad to just trade insults and put this man in his place.

Just as this rash thought exploded, and Felt was about to give in to her impulse—

“Who cares about all that! —Please help me, quickly!” The elder, who had remained silent until now, let out a desperate, high-pitched cry that echoed through the hall.

Neither Felt, who was on the verge of erupting in anger, nor Marcos, who stood beside the source of the shriek, nor anyone else in the hall could immediately react to that cry. The person himself seemed oblivious to the reactions around him.

“Felt, it’s me! Cromwell, the one you worked with in the slums! I don’t know what’s going on, but you look like you can do something now, can’t you? Help me!” Kneeling on the carpeted floor, the elder pleaded with a fawning smile plastered on his face. If he hadn’t been restrained, he would have likely groveled at the young woman’s feet.

Felt herself was speechless at his near-pathetic display, staring aghast at her acquaintance’s transformation. Naturally, the disgust for the miserable elder could be seen bubbling up in the eyes of those around them.

“We’ve done so many things together, haven’t we, you and I?! Who taught you, a naive young girl, how to survive when you knew nothing? It was me, wasn’t it? Your benefactor is in this plight, can’t you do something?!”

He spat, throwing his own crimes aside, and demanded to be helped quickly. Only an exceptionally compassionate being could feel sympathy or pity for him. To ordinary people, his self-serving remarks only evoked disgust. In a brief moment, it was fair to say the elder had alienated most of the people in the room.

Everyone was at a loss for words at such selfish behavior. Among them, only one person formulated words, completely unconcerned by these sentiments.

“—This could turn bad.”

Only the red-haired young man, hearing the pathetic cry, made a small sound in his throat, a sense of urgency rising within his chest.

Chapter 22: The Last Master and Servant

1

“Help me! I don’t want to die here! Felt! Hurry, help me! Tell these blockheads off for me!”

The old man’s desperate pleas continued, his voice hoarse, spitting, and shoulders shaking. The only sound echoing in the silent hall was his pathetic cries, which rapidly cast a heavy, stagnant pall over the assembly.

Many knights and civil officials eyed the old man with undeniable disgust, and even the members of the Council of Wise Men, likely close in age, looked as if they’d seen something unpleasant. It was undeniable that only a minority in the assembly saw any meaning beyond mere begging for life in the old man’s cries.

“What’s wrong? Who do you think you owe your life to all this time?! Have you forgotten all the favors after getting a taste of a slightly better life? Well, what is it?!”

The old man pressed on, insistently vocalizing the baseness of human nature. As everyone else avoided commenting on his behavior, Reinhard focused on the profile of the girl he considered his master. For her, it was a transformation in the old man so drastic it could be called a complete change. While their acquaintance was too brief to fully grasp her feelings, it wasn’t hard to imagine she was significantly rattled.

Reinhard, subtly sensing the true intention behind the old man’s words, decided he needed to act to break the deadlock and started to step forward when—

“—Don’t move, Reinhard. Don’t you dare try anything strange.”

He faltered, his attempt to move cut short by the girl’s voice. A blunder, Reinhard thought, looking up. The girl who had just spoken to the red-haired young man was smiling, her posture the epitome of arrogance. Priscilla held a fan, drawn from her cleavage, to her mouth, her eyes glinting with sadistic amusement as she pierced Reinhard with her gaze. She tilted her head, both charmingly and provocatively.

“That won’t do, Reinhard. For a knight of your caliber to be flustered. Such an attitude makes it seem as if you’re trying to silence that old fool before he says something inconvenient.”

With an exaggerated shrug and a feigned “Oh dear, how scary,” Priscilla’s words made Reinhard inwardly curse his mistake. He bit his tongue, regretting his failure. He couldn’t know what impact the words of the old man, who called himself Cromwell, would have on Felt. However, he had been preempted in his attempt to salvage a situation that was difficult to interpret favorably.

Priscilla’s single remark had now altered how the people in the hall perceived and understood the old man’s words. Even if Reinhard were to try and deny their content, it would no longer be judged without the preconception that he was “trying to conceal an inconvenient truth.”

With a single sentence, Priscilla had completely reshaped the situation to her advantage. Despite not fully knowing the background of the people confronting her, she had accurately discerned their relationships from just the brief exchange moments before and steered the situation as she wished.

Reinhard was left unable to move recklessly. In front of him, Priscilla nodded contentedly, then snapped her fan shut and pointed its tip back at the old man.

“Go on, continue your pathetic begging. Dance wildly, grotesquely, miserably, comically, until you collapse, and amuse me. I permit it; I won’t let you stop. Do your worst, old fool. Depending on your efforts, I might just consider granting your unbearable pleas.”

“You insolent little girl, speaking so grandly… Felt, you’re different, aren’t you? You’ve always been a kind child. You wouldn’t abandon me, would you? We’ve always gotten along so well.”

Spitting at Priscilla’s haughty tone, the old man still clung to the girl, an old acquaintance, with a fawning smile, begging for her mercy. Those around them shivered at the old man’s recklessness, ignorant of the consequences of offending Priscilla. Yet, Priscilla herself, despite being treated so disrespectfully, merely softened her lips with amusement, observing the continuation of what she called his pathetic plea.

Witnessing the end of this exchange, those around seemed to regain their senses, whispering their current thoughts—their impressions of the old man’s miserable begging.

“Did you see how pathetic he was?”

“Even more so, his fawning face. It makes you lose all sympathy. That’s what they call a brazen thief.”

“Even if Lady Felt were to protect him, a pardon would be out of the question.”

The knights loudly condemned the old man’s despicable behavior, as he was a criminal who dared to beg for leniency.

“Is it true that the slum is full of people like him… and Lady Felt grew up there?”

“Even if the story of her being a surviving royal relative is true, can someone who spent their life in such a place truly fulfill the duties of a queen?”

“Perhaps we should reconsider. Or perhaps, following the Dragon Tablet, she should be treated merely as a token candidate to make up the numbers.”

The civil officials began to question Felt’s qualifications, given her apparently close ties with such an old man. The whispers gradually grew louder, spreading as a murmur throughout the hall.

Observing the reactions around him, Reinhard bit his lip, his inner fears confirmed. He had anticipated this outcome. Yet, he had foolishly let the old man’s cries go unchecked and fallen completely for Priscilla’s deterrence. As a result, he couldn’t stop it, and both parties, whose interests aligned, had manipulated the situation to their advantage.

Cursing his own inadequacy, Reinhard looked at the silent Felt. What was the girl, still bowed and silent, thinking?

"—!"

"—!!"

"—!"

While the involved parties remained silent, the voices from the sidelines continued to escalate, unchecked. Unable to bear the crude deterioration of the situation, Marcos finally took a deep breath, ready to unleash a shout. And then—

"—You're all so damn loud!"

It wasn't Marcos's famously spine-chilling roar that made his subordinates tremble. It was a high-pitched, undeniably vulgar shout of anger from a young girl.

A gasp of surprise preceded a sudden silence that fell over the hall. In response, the girl exhaled sharply, stepped forward into the center, and surveyed everyone's faces.

"You've been chirping away while I stayed silent. A bunch of grown men gathered together, acting so effeminate, you spineless bastards!"

"Lady Felt, that language is quite inappropriate…"

"Shut up, half-assed knight. You got beaten by that naive woman, so don't talk down to me. Actually, just don't talk to me, period. I hate you."

Reinhard tried to caution her against such unladylike remarks, but Felt's response was merciless and utterly devoid of grace. Nevertheless, a command was a command, so Reinhard bowed deeply and withdrew. Watching him, Felt swished the hem of her yellow dress, roughly cracking her neck as she continued, "You brainiacs whispering, that's what I don't like. You paid money to study, paid money to buy your positions, and that's why you're standing there, right? Then act like it! You've got faces so pale it looks like you haven't eaten a proper meal!"

Felt swept her gaze across the civil officials, bluntly dismissing them. Then her head turned the other way, causing a stir among the Royal Knights she now stared at.

"Then you, all dressed up, what are you so scared of a little girl like me for? Don't give me that excuse about just bracing yourselves instead of being scared. Isn't that attitude just pathetic?"

Snorting and mocking the Royal Knights, Felt walked to her destination. It was directly in front of the old man who had been exposing his pathetic ugliness. The massive old man and the small girl, with the old man kneeling, were finally at an average height difference. The girl put her hands on her hips and once again surveyed the people she had just belittled.

"Look at this old man's horrible face. He's got a bloody nose from being hit, and tons of failed shaving attempts. Mirrors are precious, and there aren't many decent sharp blades. He's smiling so obsequiously with all that—in a word, it's disgusting."

"Now, that's going too far…"

The old man's voice dropped, and a somewhat deflated mutter escaped him at her scathing assessment. He quickly shook his head as if to regain composure, resuming his fawning smile. Witnessing this, Felt sighed deeply, raising her head.

"On top of that, that begging for your life earlier. Honestly, it made me lose all my strength, just listening to it. So miserable and obsequious, I couldn't bear to watch… Hey, Old Man Rom."

The old man looked up at the address. The girl's red eyes facing him held a tinge of sadness.

"People from the slums like us, well, we're hopelessly miserable. It's natural to be looked down on and live a lowly life, and it was full of rotten-hearted people, including me. It really is a terrible place."

Felt gave a harsh assessment that included herself, then paused and continued, "But…"

"It's true it was a cesspool of hopeless bottom-feeders. Still, didn't we manage to hold onto our human pride? No matter how lowly we were viewed, we never stooped to groveling on the ground."

"Felt…"

"I wish I had a mirror to show you your face right now, Old Man Rom. So obsequious and pathetic, wanting to live so badly you'll fawn and wag your tail—that's not really living."

The old man called the girl's name with a sigh, and the girl responded, shaking her head. Hearing her answer, Crusch, who had been quietly waiting in the line of candidates, nodded heavily. Felt's current statement resonated with her own ideals.

"If you're going to beg me for your life, you're doing it wrong. I won't abandon my right to leave a place I don't want to be just to help someone like you."

Felt stated this flatly, hands on her hips. It meant abandoning someone she knew, someone she had spent time with since childhood if the old man's words were true. And—

"…Lady Felt."

In front of the Knight of Knights—the red-haired young man—it meant withdrawing from the Royal Selection.

Reinhard couldn't suppress the bitter feeling that ran through him at her declaration. He had expected this. Seeing the old man's behavior, he had predicted how the proud girl would react. He had been completely outmaneuvered by Priscilla and the old man—no, by that old man alone.

The old man, abandoned, slumped his shoulders, his head bowed as if drained of all strength. Reinhard didn't miss the faint, powerless curve of the old man's lips. It wasn't the kind of exhaustion that came from regret or despair; it was the sense of accomplishment of someone who had successfully completed an act.

Gambling his life, the old man had made a daring move. And he had brilliantly succeeded, achieving his desired objective. It was a commendable act. Even now, it was necessary to expose the old man's scheme and correct Felt's actions. However, Reinhard couldn't do that. His very nature, what made him who he was, constrained his actions.

Seeing the slumped old man and Felt's stance, Marcos seemed to understand the conversation was over. He pulled on the old man's handcuffs, and the chains clanked as he bowed to the hall.

"I apologize for the disturbance. I will immediately remove this man…"

"—That's how I was waiting for someone to jump to conclusions."

Felt's words suddenly cut off Marcos, who was apologizing and about to leave. Marcos fell silent, looking uncharacteristically flustered. With a pleased smile, Felt glanced at his rock-like face, which showed a hint of agitation, and then, in the stunned hall, the small girl turned around.

"So, Captain, let go of his hand. Those handcuffs don't fit Old Man Rom's thick arms, and it looks painful."

"I've told you repeatedly, I refuse. I have no reason to follow your orders…"

"You mean unless I have no intention of joining this Royal Selection, right? Then it's simple."

Cutting off Marcos again, Felt lightly tapped her own chest. Then she twisted the corner of her lips into a wide, predatory grin, revealing sharp fangs.

"I'll do it, the Royal Selection. I just have to aim to be queen, right?"

"—!!"

Her smiling declaration sent a shockwave through the entire hall. This bombshell statement first stunned those who heard it, but after the initial impact, various emotions remained in each person's heart.

Some accepted it stoically, some smiled lewdly, some touched their foreheads as if enduring a headache, and some tensed their cheeks to maintain their composure. And in the hearts of many, there was resentment towards a girl who so lightly made such a grave decision—or perhaps anger at the casual treatment of a matter of such national importance. Leaving aside these various reactions, the biggest reaction, of course, came from the old man who had received her declaration head-on.

"Wh-What are you saying, Felt? I-I've accepted it. Your words earlier were right. One cannot live if they lose their pride. My previous behavior was the lowest of actions. It's only natural for you to abandon me…"

"That's just a bad act, you old geezer. You've lived so long, yet you don't even know you have no talent as a stage actor? Give up on that career change and just stick to being a petty criminal."

"Don't be foolish…! Besides, you're someone who avoids doing things you don't like. It's natural for you to abandon someone who made a spectacle of themselves like me. You wouldn't force yourself to endure something you hate just to…"

"Yeah, yeah, you know me well, Old Man Rom. That's right, I make it a rule not to do things I hate. But actually, I know you too."

Pointing at the old man, who was now desperately trying to argue the opposite, completely unlike his earlier begging for his life, Felt then pointed to her own face.

"I know this from our long years of acquaintance… Old Man Rom, when you're about to lie, the veins on the tip of your nose pop out."

"Wh-What?! That's a lie—?!"

The old man was startled by Felt's remark, and in a panic, he raised his still-handcuffed arm and rubbed his nose. Felt watched his gesture, snorting.

“Ah, so it’s a lie. Now the idiot’s been found out, so what are you going to do?”

“—Ah.”

Old Man Rom was dumbfounded, having been completely caught in the leading question. Felt shrugged both shoulders, though it was unclear what she thought of an old man falling for such a low-level trick, and shook her head as if to say, “Give me a break.”

“So, go ahead and take off Old Man Rom’s handcuffs. Everything that just happened was just the ramblings of a senile old man.”

“We cannot allow such an excuse…”

“—That old man is my family. So, let him go right now.”

To Marcos, who still refused, Felt spoke, all emotion drained from her voice. Hearing her words, Marcos frowned for a moment, but quickly erased any trace of agitation from his expression.

“Understood.”

He bowed with the deference one shows to a superior, and released his grip on Old Man Rom’s handcuffs. Then he turned back, asking the knight waiting near the entrance for “the key to the handcuffs.” However, Felt stopped him with an upraised hand.

“Can’t wait. —Reinhard!”

“Here.”

Reinhard’s tall figure immediately responded to the girl’s sharp voice, stepping onto the platform. She didn’t even glance at the red-haired young man standing beside her, simply crossing her arms, jutting out her chin, and ordering,

“Do it.”

"Yes, my master—"

To that shortest command in the world, the knight replied with profound emotion. The arm raised before his master formed a hand chop in the air, splitting the atmosphere as it descended.

Cleave—the metal shackles binding the old man's hands were effortlessly sliced through, like paper, by Reinhard's hand chop. The shackles, as if melting away, fell to the floor, producing a sharp clang that resonated throughout the hall. Against that sound, the girl looked up at the tall figure with eyes that seemed to say she found him annoying.

"Is this all part of your plan, too?"

"Not at all. It is a guidance of fate, even more so."

To Felt's unamused words, Reinhard replied, hand on his chest. Hearing this, the girl exhaled with a dismissive "Hmph!"

"Fate again? Are you a slave to fate?"

"No. —I am a servant of justice."

The young man answered her sarcasm seriously and directly. Felt closed one eye at his earnestness and turned up the corner of her mouth.

"However that job's retired now. From now on, you're my servant."

"Yes. As my master wills."

"I'm gonna work you ragged, so be prepared."

"Yes. All as my master desires."

"You're boring…"

Felt muttered this, seemingly exasperated by the complete affirmation. In front of the two, still openly dumbfounded, was Old Man Rom. He shook his now unhandcuffed arms, his bloodied cheek contorted in a pained expression.

"Why, Felt? …I, I was trying to…"

"I kind of get why you were saying all those pathetic things, Old Man Rom. You couldn't stand to see me standing here, could you? You were trying to push me away."

Felt raised a hand in apology to the old man, who was hanging his head limply. Old Man Rom looked up at her, his lips trembling.

"If you understood that much, then why…?"

"I told you myself. I make it a rule not to do things I hate."

To the old man's questioning look, Felt gave an embarrassed smile.

"Are you telling me to abandon my family and shamelessly go back to the slums? There's no way I could do something so despicable."

"…"

Hearing that, Old Man Rom's expression shifted from pained to something else entirely. He turned his back to the girl, hiding his face by rubbing his arm against it.

"M-My defeat was…"

"It was clearer than clear, old man."

Reinhard must have sensed his emotional turmoil. The old man looked up at the ceiling and, with a hoarse voice, muttered regretfully, yet unable to conceal a tremor of deep emotion.

"I raised her too well—!"

2

Amidst shouts that made it impossible to tell if they were laments or cheers for his training policy, Miklotov, the representative of the Council of Wise Men on the dais, narrowed his eyes while stroking his beard.

"Is this situation unfolding as you anticipated, Knight Captain?"

“I would never presume such a thing. I am merely a knight. My role is to uphold the path, not to create it.”

Miklotov nodded at Marcos, who responded with humility, then turned to the three standing in the center—no, rather, the two master and servant figures who had stepped forward.

“Then, Lady Felt and Sir Reinhard. Am I correct in assuming you two also intend to participate in the Royal Selection?”

“

Yeah, sure.”

“Yes. As my master wills.”

Felt maintained her insolent demeanor, and Reinhard followed her lead. The magnanimous elder did not comment on their uneven dynamic, simply nodding quietly and saying, “Understood.”

“Well, despite a bit of commotion, it seems everyone is accounted for. Lastly, Lady Felt, if you have anything to say…”

They intended to offer Felt an opportunity to speak, just like the other candidates.

Felt furrowed her brows slightly, appearing to ponder Miklotov’s suggestion, but then she raised a single finger and said, “Just one thing, then.” She stepped forward, positioning herself in the sightline of everyone present. And then,

“—I hate nobles.”

With a refreshing smile, she spread her hands as if indicating the Council of Wise Men and declared.

“—I hate knights.”

Maintaining that smile, she now pointed at the Royal Guard with her other hand.

“—I hate this kingdom.”

With both hands still spread wide, she wove her words, a hidden venom in her full smile.

"—I hate everyone in this room, the ground I'm standing on, everything. That's why I'm going to smash it all to pieces."

Felt tilted her head as if to say, "How's that?", and smiled gleefully.

At her attitude, the emotions of those who had completely forgotten to think exploded in an instant.

"Wh-What is she saying—?!"

"Destroy the country in a Royal Selection meant to choose a queen?!"

"What about all our time?!"

"Why do you all have to whine and act like 'we' can't even talk without some kind of title? All that talk about pride and history is just ridiculous."

Before the clamoring, angry audience, Felt dismissed their words in a single breath. Then, she plucked at the hem of the yellow dress she was wearing

"Dressed up in these frilly, expensive clothes, dripping with expensive jewels, your eyes are clouded by talk of blood and history. That's why none of you can see how rotten and crumbling the ground beneath your feet is."

"That's why," she continued, taking a breath, and then looked up at Miklotov on the dais.

"If I become queen, I'll smash it all. I'll knock down all those fools who can't see the crumbling ground beneath their feet and let some fresh air in."

The assembly could do nothing but turn pale at her clear declaration.

In response to her unprecedented outrageous remarks, Miklotov, still maintaining his composure, nodded magnanimously, then turned his attention to the knight standing beside her.

“Your master is a fierce one. Hearing those words, what do you think?”

“—Indeed. Lady Felt’s words are, regrettably, still merely a pipe dream.”

With that, Reinhard subtly undermined the very foundation of the girl he considered his master’s statement. Felt gave him a suspicious look, but Reinhard calmly brushed it off.

“However, the day will come when Lady Felt’s words reach everyone. —It is my duty to support her in all things so that this may come to pass.”

“However, it seems you yourself are included in what Lady Felt has declared she will destroy.”

“This person will also desire regeneration after destruction. In that event, there would be no greater fulfillment than to be by her side.”

Bowing deeply, Reinhard spoke with unwavering conviction before Miklotov. Felt, glancing at the knight’s demeanor, roughly raked her golden hair

“So, are you my ally or my enemy, after all?”

“An ally. —Only yours.”

“…Then, fine. I’ll work you to the bone.”

And so, the last master and servant pair for the Royal Selection was formed.

Then—,

“Now, it seems we have heard from all the candidates. So, once again, I ask my comrades on the Council of Wise Men.”

Solemnly, Miklotov spoke in a low voice.

Naturally, a sense of tension and silence descended upon the hall, and as everyone held their breath, awaiting his next words, Miklotov slightly widened his narrow eyes.

“For this Royal Selection, I declare its commencement with the five individuals present as candidates. I seek the approval of my comrades.”

“—By the authority of the Council of Wise Men, I approve.”

“Likewise.”

“I, too, approve.”

The members of the Council of Wise Men nodded in response to Miklotov’s proposal. After confirming their assent, Miklotov rose from his seat.

He then stepped forward, positioning himself beside the empty throne.

“—Now, I shall propose the conditions for the Royal Selection!”

Crusch Karsten, head of the Karsten Duchy.

Crusch’s First knight, Felix Argyle of ‘the Blue’.

“The candidates shall be Crusch Karsten, Priscilla Barielle, Anastasia Hoshin, Emilia, and Felt. All are individuals qualified as Dragon Maidens!”

Priscilla Barielle, ‘the Bloody Bride’.

The one-armed man from another world, Al the mercenary.

“The deadline shall be three years from now, today, one month before the Divine Dragon Ceremony— The ritual where the pact with the dragon is confirmed!”

Anastasia Hoshin, the young merchant from a foreign land.

Anastasia’s First knight, Julius Juukulius, ‘the Finest Knight’.

“The selection shall be decided by the Dragon’s Glow, before the Divine Dragon Volcanica!”

Felt, the lost royal bloodline (?).

Felt’s First knight, Reinhard van Astrea, ‘the Sword Saint’.

“Each individual shall strive to maintain the kingdom, and make their respective Royal Paths known to the common people and the subjects!”

Emilia, the silver-haired half-elf.

Natsuki Subaru, the self-proclaimed knight absent from this place.

“With these as the minimum stipulations, I hereby declare the commencement of the Royal Selection—!”

Miklotov shouted at the top of his lungs, and the hall was enveloped in tremendous fervor.

There were no voices. But everyone was unable to suppress the cries of their hearts.

With the aftershocks of that fervor at his back, Miklotov straightened his bent waist and opened his mouth wide.

“From this moment—the Royal Selection begins!!”

Chapter 23:
The Self-Declared Knight and the Knight Proper

1

—How many times had he been knocked down like this?

As the hard ground met his face, Subaru vaguely pondered this. His mouth was a mess of blood and gravel, and his body, already beaten more times than he cared to count, was burning as if on fire. His head felt hazy, thoughts refusing to cohere, and his swollen left eye was completely shut, making it impossible to see properly.

He was in tatters, like a discarded rag. Yet, due to his opponent's exceptional skill, there were no injuries serious enough to fatally impede his movement, at least not yet. His limbs still worked, and if he ignored the pain, no part of him refused to obey. To say his opponent was accustomed to inflicting pain sounded malicious, but the evidence etched across his body left no doubt.

"—I think any more is just pointless, don't you?"

A voice, distant and condescending, drifted down to him. Still lying spreadeagled on his stomach, Subaru laboriously moved his head to look in the direction of the voice. Through his skewed vision, he saw a purple-haired young man toying with the tip of the wooden sword in his hand. His white ceremonial attire was spotless, and naturally, his visible skin showed not a scratch, not a drop of sweat. Only the wooden sword in his hand, stained with his opponent's blood, stood out, a stark impression amidst his otherwise elegant demeanor.

"If you retract your earlier statement and bow your head, we can stop here. How about it?"

This was the same question he'd been asked countless times already. His body had been brutally beaten, relentlessly struck, and mercilessly knocked down. After each repeated assault, this surrender offer inevitably followed. His answer, of course, was already decided.

“…No, I won’t bow my head.”

His arms trembled. When he tried to stand, using the ground for support, his upper body wouldn’t obey. He rolled, used his shoulder as a pivot to prop himself up, then forcefully dragged his lower body to lift his torso. Next, he thrust the wooden sword, which clung to his palm, into the ground and clung to it as he got to his feet. During this time, his opponent didn’t press his attack on the completely vulnerable Subaru, merely shrugging his shoulders slightly, as if tired.

The difference in skill was obvious. The outcome was clear. His chances of winning were one in ten thousand, and without a miracle, he couldn’t even strike back.

He didn’t care, he thought. Everything else could be thrown aside for now. That he couldn’t win was self-evident. That he wouldn’t reach him was a given. From the start, he hadn’t been arrogant enough to expect a satisfactory outcome, being inferior to others. If that was the case, then at the very least, at the very least…

“…You’re the one who needs to retract your statement—!”

His torn mouth aching, Subaru bit off the end of his defiant cry as he charged at an agonizingly slow speed. He put everything into a desperate strike—the result was:

“There are differences that even everything you stake cannot bridge. That, too, is simply what you were born with, boy.”

The tip of the deflected, flipping wooden sword struck Subaru’s forehead hard. Red sparks filled his vision, his forehead split and bled, and the vision in his barely open right eye was stained crimson.

“How many times has this been?”

He gritted his teeth in pain, wiping the blood-soaked vision with the back of his hand. Slipping through that gap, a blow struck Subaru’s solar plexus, sending him flying backward.

Unable to break his fall, Subaru tumbled across the ground, once again sprawled out on his back. The impact to his chest made his lungs spasm, and the agony of breathlessness seized him. Though driven to the brink by the synergistic effect of pain and oxygen deprivation, Subaru's consciousness, far from fading, continued to rage as if seeking more fire.

The azure sky he looked up at was high and distant, with nothing visible beyond it. Facing the hateful blue, Subaru mustered all his strength and stood up again.

—He'd do it again, and again, no matter how many times.

Fueled only by his endless rage, he endured the agonizing pain that made him want to spit blood and looked forward. As if to avert his gaze from the truth of whether that rage was right or wrong.

2

Subaru realized that the story had started moving without him when Reinhard and Ferris, their faces showing completely opposite emotions, came to him in the waiting room after the assembly in the great hall had concluded, where he was slumped over.

"So, the Royal Selection has officially begun! Subaru-kyun, you're Lady Emilia's knight, right? Let's both do our best!"

Ferris spoke as if completely oblivious to Subaru's actions and their consequences in the hall, despite having witnessed the entire situation.

Next to him, Reinhard looked at Subaru with a compassionate gaze. Without pointing out Ferris's attitude, he smiled at Subaru, who was slumped in his seat, looking utterly defeated.

"I don't think it's as simple as Ferris says, but I agree that we should strive to improve together. Subaru, let's compete fairly and honorably."

"…Ah, alright."

When told so directly, with such a proud expression, Subaru could only give a vague affirmative. The meaning of their words was clear, and normally, Subaru would be scrambling to figure out his path forward.

However, at that moment, Subaru had something he needed to confirm, even more pressing than such important matters.

"…"

He knew it himself, yet the crucial words wouldn't come out.

He felt his cowardly, deceitful, and self-deprecating self holding him back, trying to disregard everything that needed to be set right.

It was humiliating to feel that way, but he could only bite his lip, and Subaru's eyes darted around, unable to meet the gaze of either Reinhard or Ferris.

"—Subaru, the old man is safe. His safety was guaranteed through Lady Felt's intervention."

"—!"

As if seeing through Subaru's cowardly heart, the red-haired youth provided the answer to the question he couldn't bring himself to ask.

Subaru's cheeks tightened in shock, and he stared with wide eyes. Reinhard nodded once.

"Given the passageway to the hall, it would be difficult for you to have passed by without seeing the old man. As someone who knows you and the old man are acquainted, it's easy for me to guess what's bothering you now."

Anticipating Subaru's unspoken thoughts even further, Reinhard raised a finger and explained. However, even he probably didn't understand the full extent of Subaru's guilt.

The baseness of giving up on saving Old Man Rom with his own strength at that moment, and despite there being a fallback plan, overlooking a situation where an acquaintance might be harmed.

No, to be honest, even that was just a pretense.

The truth of Subaru's heart, its very depths, was far, far more irredeemable.

"That's good, isn't it?"

Ferris smiled, leaning in to look at Subaru's face as he hung his head and averted his eyes. He looked up at Subaru from below with that charming smile, his hands clasped behind his back.

"You should be grateful to Reinhard and Lady Felt. —Now, Subaru-kyun doesn't have to make any excuses, right?"

"—!"

Subaru gasped, trying to look away, but found himself facing Ferris. Ferris's cat-like eyes widened, his chestnut cat ears twitched, and his sadistic grin stretched even wider across his face.

He truly looked like a cat toying with a mouse caught in its claws.

Subaru shivered. Ferris's sarcastic remark, clearly seeing through his thoughts, made Subaru instinctively try to form an excuse, but realizing it was exactly what Ferris wanted, he shut his mouth.

Ultimately, all Subaru could do was:

"Oh, right… Good, good. No, seriously, it's exactly as I predicted! I thought it'd go better if I left it to Emilia-tan, who's good at charming people, rather than messing things up myself. Well, in reality, it seems like my calculations were off, or rather, if I think about it calmly, Felt reacted super quickly, as expected."

Subaru spread his hands, shrugged his shoulders, relaxed his cheeks, tilted his head, and tapped his foot lightly. Ferris stared wide-eyed at the change, and Reinhard's expression tightened slightly. Subaru observed their reactions, keeping time with his foot, and then said:

"I'm guessing that's why Felt got so determined, right? What's the situation there, Knight Reinhard?"

"Hmm? Ah, that's right. The old man's appearance helped solidify Lady Felt's resolve in a good way. It's a little concerning that it seems to have gone against his original intentions, though."

The handsome man touched his chin, his brow furrowed slightly in thought. Reinhard's words, spoken with the perfect composure of a painting, didn't quite make sense to Subaru, who hadn't witnessed the exchange in the hall.

He merely imagined the events in the hall from the context Reinhard provided, and then accurately tried to trace how Natsuki Subaru should react after gaining that information.

"I see. So, I accidentally set the stage for a powerful rival to appear, huh? Emilia-tan might give me an earful later."

"I don't think that will happen. Lady Emilia, and of course, the other candidates, will surely want to compete fairly. To complain about a worthy opponent would show a lack of character."

"Nah, if I'm gonna do it, I'm the type who loves easy wins and being overpowered, so I don't quite get that feeling. I'm the kind who over-levels early in RPGs. Basically, by the time I leave the first forest map, the first monster is already in its second form."

Choosing a fire-type starter often leads to abnormal struggles in the first and second challenges if you're under-leveled early on. A grass-type is easiest, but that's cheating and a self-imposed restriction.

Anyway, putting aside Subaru's principles, judging by Reinhard's confident demeanor, their faction seems to be fully prepared and everything is going smoothly.

On the other hand, Ferris's faction, silently watching Subaru's frivolous attitude, has the longest-standing master-servant relationship, pre-dating the Royal Selection. Including Ferris's seemingly complete devotion to his master, Crusch, there appear to be no factors for concern.

Considering these relationships, it's undeniable that Subaru and Emilia's faction is falling behind. After all, the current Subaru is even hesitant to discuss the Royal Selection with Emilia now that she's returned.

—His fear of interacting with her was probably only as intense as during the period he was trapped in the loop at the Roswaal Mansion.

What was clearly different from that time was the state of Subaru's own heart, which feared contact with her.

Back then, he was afraid of the feeling that Emilia had become someone he didn't know.

Now, what terrified him was not knowing how the Emilia he had come to know more deeply felt about him.

"Anyway, if the discussion's over, where are the others? Just the two of you coming to pick me up, isn't that a bit too VIP treatment?"

"I think you know the answer, but the candidates need to discuss a few more details, so they're staying in the hall. For now, knights are free to do as they please…"

"I said I wanted to check on Subaru, and Ferris accompanied me. I apologize for not being able to properly support you in the hall earlier."

Subaru scratched his head with an embarrassed look, saying "Ah", as Reinhard took over Ferris's words and apologized.

"No, it's not your fault at all. In fact, when I look back, I just want to forget it because it's already becoming a dark stain on my past and my chest tightens. So just forget about it, okay?"

"I appreciate your generosity. I will never forget this kindness."

"Were you even listening to me?!"

Interpreting Subaru's guilt in the most positive light, Reinhard came to a conclusion completely opposite to what Subaru wanted.

His shouts ignored, Subaru, still looking troubled, turned back to Ferris.

“So, Reinhard aside, you… no, you… damn it, it doesn’t feel right!” “If you’re so conflicted about what to call me, you can call me “Ferris☆” with love, okay?” “Shut up. Why are you here, cat-ears? To be honest, shouldn’t you be by Crusch’s side?”

He remembered their brief exchange at the main gate of the Roswaal Mansion—their first meeting. At that time, Ferris had said something about not wanting to be apart from Crusch for a moment.

Considering that, he couldn’t help but wonder about the reason for Ferris’s presence here.

“There’s no problem regarding safety. Because Lady Crusch is much, much stronger than Ferris, you see?”

“Don’t say that so lightly… Is that really okay, Royal Guard?”

“Ferris’s selling point is elsewhere, so it’s fine. That selling point isn’t unrelated to Subaru-kyun either!”

Despite the irritation at the drawn-out words, Subaru patiently folded his arms and asked, “Oh really?”.

Ferris puffed out his cheeks at Subaru’s nonchalant attitude, wiggling his body and looking at Subaru from the corner of his eye with a cute gesture.

“Oh, come on, you know already. You’re just teasing me!”

“My heart, don’t waver. My heart, don’t flutter. What’s in front of me is the same kind of creature attached to my crotch…! Get to the point. What’s your selling point?”

“When it comes to Ferris’s selling point, there’s only this!”

Saying that, Ferris held up both hands in front of Subaru, raising two fingers. Then, the tips of his raised index fingers suddenly glowed faintly.

“Ugh… For some reason, I feel like the fatigue in my elbows, shoulders, and lower back is draining away…?”

“You’ve got an old man’s body that aches everywhere, haven’t you, Subaru-kyun?”

Subaru shivered, feeling the fatigue drain from his limbs as heat, and truly felt his body healing.

In short, it must have been due to the faint glow emanating from Ferris’s fingertips.

At that point, Subaru remembered what the ‘selling point’ was that the beautiful-girl-like youth standing before him had mentioned.

“Oh, right. So Ferris is some kind of amazing water magic user, huh?”

“That description, “some kind of amazing,” isn’t enough, Subaru.”

Reinhard corrected Subaru, who had recalled a forgotten detail and casually spoken it. He nodded at Subaru, who looked at him suspiciously, and then, raising his hand, pointed at Ferris.

“Ferris’s talent as a water magic user is unparalleled. Not just in Lugunica, but across the entire continent, there’s no one who can rival him. He possesses power befitting of the “Blue”, one of the Six Colors representing the pinnacle of each magic attribute in Lugunica, bestowed upon him at such a young age.”

“Another new detail… My head’s about to explode.”

Subaru didn’t bother to hide his exasperation at Reinhard’s fluent explanation. In front of him, Ferris, whose talent had been praised without reservation, put his hands on his hips proudly, puffing out his flat, unremarkable chest.

“Reinhard’s explanation skipped a lot, but that’s basically it. Because of all that, Ferris’s schedule, with this grand title, is constantly filled with requests from people seeking the healing power of water magic!”

Ferris pumped his clenched fist into the air, making a broad smile and saying, “Go, Ferris!”.

From that explanation, Subaru gathered that Ferris was essentially treated as a “super skilled renowned doctor” in this world. While it seemed unlikely he could tend to all fifty million citizens of the kingdom, the sheer number of people in a position to benefit from his touch made it easy to imagine how busy his days were.

He was in high demand, constantly sought after.

Needed by countless, innumerable people.

The moment Subaru interpreted Ferris in that way, he couldn’t help but compare himself to Ferris’s existence. He was someone who wasn’t needed by the person he cherished most and wanted to be needed by. It made him feel incredibly miserable.

That’s why,

“Honestly, I don’t really feel like relying on you since I don’t have any obvious symptoms of discomfort in my body. What do you think about that?”

Unable to endure his inferiority complex towards someone who was treating him kindly, Subaru deliberately trampled on it with a frivolous tone.

He knew that the more he spoke, the more miserable he would feel, knowing his own true feelings. He knew that even if he said it, it wouldn’t bring him any satisfaction.

“My body not being in top condition is partly due to lingering effects from injuries, and I think it’ll be fine once it heals. I don’t really feel anything about the gate issue either.”

“I don’t think the gate issue is so trivial that you can make light of it. It’s not okay if you just think of it as merely being unable to use magic, you know?”

“It’s not?”

Subaru frowned and asked back at Ferris's somewhat provocative tone.

Indeed, even when told about a gate malfunction, Subaru didn't feel anything specific. After being forbidden from using 'Shamak', he did feel a dull, persistent sense of fatigue deep within his body, like a murky residue.

However, he attributed that to the exhaustion of having his life force drained, and believed he would recover after nutritious meals and sufficient rest. It was hard to believe that an organ he had never been conscious of in his original world could become fatally impaired.

"You don't understand anything. Listen, the general idea is that a gate connects the outside and inside to let mana flow when using magic. In actuality, a gate doesn't just do that when using magic; it also circulates mana between the inside and outside to sustain life even during normal daily activities."

"So, it's like breathing?"

"You can think of it that way. Subaru-kyun, are you the type of human who can live without breathing?"

"Among the humans I know, fifteen minutes seems to be the world record."

Apparently, if you learn some yoga secrets and lower your heart rate to the limit, such a monstrous state of breath-holding is possible. However, that's probably not what he meant.

So, was Subaru's current state equivalent to living without being able to perform skin respiration? Surely it wasn't that severe.

"So, if I leave it like this, I'll end up like that sooner or later?"

"Subaru-kyun's gate, it's all messed up from all the strain you've put on it. At this point, ordinary water magic users can't even treat it. The most they can do is continuously cast magic and leave the crucial parts to natural healing."

Ferris emphasized that his own abilities were far beyond those of ordinary magic users, while also stating the urgent truth of Subaru's situation. Though, it might just be Subaru's envy making it sound that way.

"So, to quickly escape this critical situation…"

"Ferris's power is absolutely essential. Got it?"

Subaru furrowed his brow, showing his reluctance to Ferris's question as he swayed from side to side. However, Reinhard, observing their exchange, raised a finger.

"Forgive my interruption, but such an opportunity doesn't come often, Subaru. Ferris's skill is known throughout the country, and there's no end to the people who want to benefit from his power. You shouldn't expect to be given priority again in the future."

"Right, right. There are tons of customers waiting for Ferris. But, just this once, I promised to prioritize Subaru-kyun. So, just calmly give your body and soul to Ferris and relax, okay?"

Capitalizing on Reinhard's support, Ferris wiggled his fingers, extending both palms towards Subaru. Subaru looked at his gesture with a disgusted expression.

"When you say it like that, I, the contrarian, want to say no. I don't remember our bond deepening enough for you to give me such preferential treatment."

Counting their initial meeting, where they barely exchanged names, this was only the second time Subaru had met Ferris. Even if he considered the hall and waiting room encounters separately, it was only three times, and he didn't think anything had happened in that short period to stir Ferris's considerable kindness.

To Subaru's question, Ferris smiled mischievously, saying, "That's right, of course."

"Ferris has a super strict cat-like personality towards anyone outside his inner circle, so honestly, I absolutely wouldn't prioritize Subaru-kyun normally."

"You say that so frankly, which helps."

For Subaru, who had low communication skills, it was far easier to understand than superfluous flattery or superficial conversation. Ferris wiggled his body as if to emphasize, 'That's not it,' to Subaru, who didn't seem offended.

"Remember that day Ferris went to the Marquis's mansion to deliver the summons for this meeting? That was Ferris and Subaru-kyun's fated encounter!"

"Ah, the day I should've stayed in bed with a stomach ache."

"There you go again! You were secretly happy, weren't you?"

"Your gentlemanly companion drank expensive tea for free, my senior maid was furious at me afterward. I was forbidden from having mayo-squirts in the morning and evening."

He had, of course, ignored that prohibition and secretly resumed his mayo-squirts the very next morning.

Ignoring the incomprehensible words that spilled from Subaru's mouth, Ferris pouted, looking bored.

"Well, whatever. What's important isn't meeting Subaru-kyun, but that Ferris was asked by Lady Emilia at the mansion."

"…It was Emilia-tan after all."

"It was Lady Emilia, after all."

Subaru's tone was bitter and heavy, as the answer was expected.

Recalling his first encounter with Ferris at that mansion, the content of their conversation, and Roswaal's original reason for having Subaru accompany him to the capital, it quickly became clear.

Precisely because he understood the background, Subaru couldn't stop the heavy feeling from settling deep in his chest.

Subaru's body was being ravaged by mana depletion, a status ailment that could only be cured by Ferris, one of the capital's top magic users. Ferris was a retainer of Crusch, an opposing candidate in the Royal Selection. Asking him to treat someone in his own faction would mean incurring a debt to Crusch's camp before the Royal Selection even began.

In other words, Subaru was once again proving to be a hindrance to Emilia.

Knowing that,

"Hey, do I absolutely have to get treated?"

He spoke, knowing he would be met with incomprehension from the other party.

As expected, Reinhard frowned, looking as if he couldn't understand. Ferris, on the other hand, smiled wryly, as if he had anticipated Subaru's response.

"The compensation has already been paid. If Subaru-kyun isn't treated now, it might end up making Lady Emilia's efforts pointless, you know?"

"What kind of compensation? If it's something physical, you can just return it…"

"It's not something physical, and it's the kind of compensation that can't be returned once you know about it. So, unfortunately, Subaru-kyun's offer can't be accepted."

His plea was unceremoniously rejected, and Subaru could only put his hand to his forehead and look down.

Ferris had correctly read Subaru's feelings and was systematically blocking every escape route he presented.

That might have been his calculated move to put his master, Crusch, at an advantage, and at the same time, it might have been an act of human kindness and obligation to fulfill Emilia's wish, who had gone so far as to offer compensation to ensure Subaru's well-being.

All of these judgments obstructed Subaru's shallow and inadequate thinking.

"Why am I always so…"

He didn't want to be a burden to Emilia.

Knowing she wished to be queen and was working hard for it.

Understanding how much she was striving for that height, looking up to the distant throne.

He wanted to help her, found no other meaning, and that alone supported his very existence now, so he would give up everything.

So why was he so powerless, so ignorant, so incompetent, and such a hindrance?

"—If you lament your powerlessness so much, I think there are other choices you should make."

A serene voice echoed in the waiting room, and Subaru, who had been looking down, raised his head.

The voice came not from Reinhard or Ferris, but from the waiting room door. Looking in that direction, a slender, tall figure leaned against the open door, looking at them.

Receiving their gaze, the youth, stroking his purple hair, smiled with a somewhat affected air.

"You shouldn't make such a displeased face. I didn't expect a welcome, but to show such an attitude…"

"If I do, what then?"

"It would cast doubt on the character of those accompanying you. Be sure to be careful."

"Ugh…!"

If it were just a mere argument, he could have retorted that it was an unfair accusation, but if the matter couldn't be confined to just personal issues, that was different.

Subaru twisted his lips, swallowing his words of protest, and glared at Julius, who was striding leisurely into the room, with a hostile gaze.

"Julius, have the candidates finished their discussion?"

As if to block Subaru's hostile gaze, Reinhard stepped between their lines of sight and asked Julius.

In response, Julius shook his head slightly, closing one eye. "No."

"The discussion seems to be dragging on a bit. Lady Anastasia is concerned that if the Royal Selection begins under the current conditions, it might turn into an assassination free-for-all."

Julius explained that they were still ironing out those conditions.

Subaru, though turning his face away, took in the information and understood.

With five Royal Selection participants, and an unknown method of vying for the throne,

The most straightforward way to secure the throne in such a situation would logically be to eliminate all other candidates.

The candidates he had seen in the hall all seemed to have strong character, but regardless of their own natures, the opinions of those around them might not be the same.

Moreover, Emilia's faction, with Subaru in it, had clearly been subjected to sabotage in the past.

—Emilia's insignia theft on the very day Subaru was summoned to this world was an example of this.

Subaru must have realized the fact he was thinking of at the same time. His eyes met Reinhard's, who had slightly turned his face towards him.

To Subaru, who was at a loss for what to think, Reinhard simply lowered his chin, letting deep emotions swim silently in his blue eyes.

Then, he turned back to Julius.

“Assassination, that’s not a pleasant topic.”

“Of course, resorting to such means would be nothing short of an insult to the throne. However, we should be cautious, perhaps even overly cautious. Don’t you agree?”

“Well, that’s right. After that big incident half a year ago, it took so much effort to rebuild everything. We definitely don’t want to go through that again.”

Julius calmly countered Reinhard’s words, and Ferris concluded by agreeing. Watching the two tall men nod at Ferris’s words, Subaru felt a sense of exclusion, as if he were being left out again.

“So, why did you come here then?”

That’s why Subaru deliberately adopted an unfriendly attitude towards Julius.

In addition to being the source of his sense of exclusion, Julius had played no small part in the events that led to Subaru leaving the hall. While he blamed his own lack of foresight for the humiliation, even with that in mind, he couldn’t agree with Julius.

Bathing in Subaru’s now undisguised hostility, Julius calmly walked towards him. Reinhard subtly tried to block his path, but could not stop Julius’s determined steps towards Subaru.

Subaru and Julius faced each other, close enough to feel each other’s breath.

Compared to Subaru, who was roughly average height for a Japanese person, the tall and slender Julius was about half a head taller. Naturally, Subaru, looking up from such close proximity, said:

"Shouldn't the 'Finest knight' be by the princess's side at such a crucial moment? This castle's security might be so lax that invaders could easily sneak in, you know?"

"—Currently, with the Royal Selection participants gathered, the royal castle is one of the most important locations in the country. Naturally, the guards are approaching their duties with appropriate diligence. You have no reason to worry."

"…No, I really think that perception is dangerous. At the very least, I think you definitely have more reason to worry than anyone else."

Subaru said that to the confident-looking Julius, and could only lament the laxness of the royal castle's security network once again.

Subaru, who possessed no particular skills and hadn't undergone any special training, had managed to sneak in. It would be all the more likely if a professional came.

"You guys are so oblivious you wouldn't even notice a legendary mercenary with a cardboard box until he strapped a bomb to your back. To say you're perfectly safe is just… honestly, it makes my blood boil."

"I don't understand the meaning, but I can tell it's an insult. —This is the second time."

Julius turned away, walked past Subaru, and headed to the back of the room. Subaru followed him with his eyes and saw Julius stop by the window at the back of the waiting room—precisely where he could look down at the back of the castle.

"Now, you asked me why I came here."

With his gaze still fixed on the castle grounds below the window, Julius asked in a voice devoid of emotion. With his back still turned, Subaru lowered his chin in silent affirmation.

Did Julius sense his gesture? He prefaced with, "Then I shall answer", and turned around.

"The reason I came here, of course, was to see you. There's somewhere I'd like you to accompany me."

"What do you say?" Julius asked, spreading his hands, inviting Subaru's decision.

His stance implied that the choice was Subaru's. However, with such prickly emotions exchanged between them, it didn't feel like a friendly suggestion.

"What do I say? I can't accept or refuse if I don't know the place and purpose. Well, I can say it, but…"

"The place is the training ground, and the purpose is… let's see."

Julius responded straightforwardly to Subaru's remark, which was too sarcastic to be lighthearted, and thought for a moment, pressing a finger to his chin.

"The purpose is—to teach you reality, how about that?"

3

Subaru twisted his head, his feet planted on the well-trodden, sandy ground.

The location had shifted from the royal castle's waiting room to the independent Knight's Quarters next to the castle.

Here, the ground was packed with reddish-brown earth, and sturdy defensive walls, showing signs of long years, surrounded a training facility—commonly known as the drill ground—where guards honed their bodies daily and strove to improve their skills.

The grounds were perhaps half the size of a typical schoolyard.

It was ample space, whether for running around or engaging in swordplay.

Standing in the center of this area, Subaru performed slow, deliberate knee bends, stretching his muscles and warming up his still-cool body.

While Subaru calmly went through his warm-up, Julius stood about fifteen meters directly opposite him, surrounded by anything but silence.

This was because,

“Julius, you should stop this. It’s not like you.”

Reinhard was relentlessly appealing to Julius, who was also quietly preparing himself.

There was no anxiety or anger in Reinhard’s expression or tone as he pressed his point. Only a pure, almost sorrowful, concern.

With that emotion brimming in his blue eyes, Reinhard continued,

“I admit there might have been a slight excess on my part, but that’s merely something that can be corrected with a talking-to. Normally, wouldn’t you judge it the same way?”

“Normally, yes. Oddly enough, you are quite right, my friend Reinhard.”

Carefully removing the excessive decorations from his ceremonial white formal attire, Julius handed them one by one to a knight standing nearby.

He continued this task, turning an emotionless gaze towards Reinhard.

“If the day had been different, or if we had met elsewhere, I might have overlooked him. However, that was not the case.”

Cutting off the conversation, Julius averted his gaze from Reinhard.

His calm eyes now only reflected Subaru, who was performing knee bends directly in front of him.

Then, he unfastened the knight’s sword from his waist, and with its scabbard still attached, pointed its tip towards the sky.

“In front of those connected to the King, he insulted us, the knights, and spoke lightly of our chivalry. Without apologizing for that, he continued to heap insults upon me."

A hush fell over the drill ground, which had until then been filled with a faint murmur.

Only Julius's clear, captivating voice resonated.

Gathering the attention and ears of the onlookers, Julius surveyed the crowd.

"—From this moment, I shall pass judgment upon this insolent wretch who has defiled a knight's pride! Does anyone object?!"

"—!!"

A voiceless gale suddenly struck the air of the drill ground with intense force.

The source of this ear-splitting wind was the heat and voices emanating from the surging crowd.

It was the fervor of the gathered Royal Knights and guards, eager to witness the confrontation between Julius, their representative, and Subaru, who had collectively insulted them.

"Odds are a hundred to zero; no one's betting on me. Well, I really outdid myself this time."

"I'm truly hated". Subaru muttered, shrugging his shoulders slightly as hostile glares rained down on him.

It was the first time in his life he had experienced such a degree of enmity from so many people. Frankly, his heart felt cold, and he was overwhelmed by a sense that his legs might give way, crushed by the malice pressing down on him.

Despite this, his pulse didn't quicken, and while his limbs felt heavy, they weren't immobile.

Subaru found himself in a strange mental state, not quite what one would call resolved.

“Now, before we begin, let me ask again: do you intend to apologize for your earlier insolence and beg for forgiveness? If you do so now, with an apology fitting your repeated disrespect, I shall forgive you.”

“I can’t recall any ‘repeated disrespect’… For example, how should I apologize?”

“By rubbing your forehead on the ground while weeping. Or perhaps by lying on the ground like an obedient dog, exposing your belly to curry favor. How about that?”

“Both lack elegance, so I’ll respectfully decline.”

He was excellent at playing the clown, but that only mattered if there was an audience he wanted to make laugh. He absolutely could not tolerate being laughed at by these insufferable people in front of him.

Julius, who likely hadn’t expected a different answer, simply responded with a short “I see,” immediately dismissing Subaru’s retort. He handed the knight’s sword he had been pointing skyward to the knight beside him.

In its place, he received two wooden swords from the knight.

“Normally, it would be no surprise if your insolence warranted being cut down. However, you are, unwillingly, Lady Emilia’s attendant. Therefore, our confrontation shall be with wooden swords.”

Julius questioned him with his eyes if he had any objection, and Subaru succinctly replied “No problem” in sign language. Judging the answer from Subaru’s expression rather than his hand movements, Julius nodded and said,

“I’m glad you’re agreeable. I, too, shall face you purely with the sword this time. I swear I will not use any magic.”

“Oh, so you’re the type of knight who can also use magic, huh?”

“That’s included in being the ‘Finest’. —Now then, Ferris, you’ll be the referee."

"Yep, yep!"

Julius glanced sideways, where Ferris was waving a raised hand.

Having been appointed referee and readily accepting, his true feelings were utterly unreadable. Unlike Reinhard, who had tried to stop this to the very end, what was Ferris thinking, so gleefully present for this upcoming clash of violence?

"Alright, both of you do your absolute best. No matter how bad your injuries are, as long as you don't die, I'll take care of everything, so give it your all, Subaru-kyun!"

"Why are you only saying that to me? You should worry about him too."

"Whoa, feisty! Did you hear that, everyone? On the count of three, ready, set, go!"

Turning to the audience, Ferris waved both hands grandly like a conductor, prompting a burst of laughter from the crowd—mockery aimed at Subaru's recklessness.

Witnessing this wave of emotion, Ferris twitched his cat ears on his head.

"So, the betting odds are like this, but what are you going to do, Subaru-kyun?"

Subaru reached into his pocket, felt the coin with his fingertip, and flicked it towards Ferris.

He watched the coin sparkle as it arced through the air and landed in Ferris's hand.

"Bet on it anyway. If I win, I'll take everything, and I'll strip you all bare."

"No way, you pervert! You're going to do something naughty to Ferris, aren't you? Like in those naughty books! Like in those naughty books!”

Ignoring the wriggling “man-child,” Subaru turned back to Julius.

He sighed at Julius, who seemed fully energized, and slowly closed the distance. The fight would begin once he took one of the two wooden swords.

He had practiced sword swings at Roswaal’s mansion to train his body, but how well would he fare here?

“Anyway, I feel like I just got swept along into this situation, but I don’t actually remember agreeing to this little make-believe duel.”

“You came here. The look in your eyes also tells me you aren’t avoiding a clash. Isn’t that enough?”

“Hey now, Natsuki Subaru, renowned as the modern-day Mother Teresa with his principles of non-violence, non-submission, and non-nuclear, isn’t going to get all hyped up for such a violent approach!”

While prevaricating with random words, Subaru stood directly in front of Julius.

Despite his words, Subaru’s body was warmed up thanks to his warm-up exercises. He’d be able to move instantly once the signal started.

Julius narrowed his eyes, seemingly satisfied with Subaru’s state.

“I’m glad you’re motivated. Shall we begin then?”

Offering one of the wooden swords to Subaru, Julius declared the start of the mock duel.

Subaru felt the audience’s excitement naturally rise. He lightly swung the wooden sword he received, getting a feel for it in his hand, and then moved away from Julius—

“Ah, hold on. This one just feels… subtly off.”

Subaru spun the wooden sword in his hand and turned back to complain.

Hearing this, Julius, looking slightly taken aback, asked, “Is that so?”

“I don’t think it will make much difference, but would you like to try this one?”

“Ah, my bad. You know, I’m a bit of a pampered son, so it’s not good for me to hold items that don’t feel right in my hand—”

As he spoke, he took the wooden sword Julius offered with one hand. Then, he offered the wooden sword he had been given earlier back to Julius—

“Whoa!”

“…”

Before Julius’s fingers could even catch it, the wooden sword slipped from Subaru’s hand. Pulled by gravity, the wooden sword began its natural descent, and Julius, instinctively leaning forward, reached out to follow it.

Julius’s straight posture tilted, and the height difference between them vanished.

“—Hah!”

Stepping forward, Subaru slightly pulled back the wooden sword in his hand and, with a flick of his wrist, aimed an upward strike at the tip of Julius’s chin.

At the same time, he thrust his empty left hand forward, scattering the sand he had secretly gripped during his knee bends into Julius’s eyes—a two-pronged attack of blinding and surprise.

“Gotcha,” Subaru’s lips twisted into a wicked grin at his masterful little trick.

Immediately after,

"It seems you truly have no pride. How common and easy your life must be. —How truly pathetic."

A voice sounded in his ear. At the same instant, an impact arrived, a hard, sharp sensation that jolted his diaphragm.

The oxygen he'd held in his lungs exploded, and a short cry of pain, "Hah" escaped his open mouth. His body, struck by the hard impact, lifted forward, pivoting on his chest. His feet left the ground, the world turned upside down, and his internal organs were tossed about in a moment of weightlessness before his face slammed into the ground.

His face scraped against the sand, he vomited from the pain in his diaphragm, and as his brain took a powerful beating from the pain and heat—the drill ground erupted with fervor.

The recompense for reckless folly, exceeding one's limits, was now mercilessly about to befall Subaru.

In the high sky above the drill ground, a delayed scream of pain lingered, echoing.

High, high, far, far away.

Chapter 24:
The Duel's Details

1

"—Captain Marcos, I have a report!"

A guard, rushing in and saluting, announced this just as the intricate details of the treaty establishing the Royal Selection were being finalized, and the day's meeting was drawing to a close.

The young soldier, his shoulders heaving with haste, turned pale as he noticed the faces gathered in the room he'd intruded upon, his heart seizing with dread at his own impudence.

As the guard's blood seemed to drain with an audible rush, Marcos moved to shield him from the gazes of those in the room, saying,

"My subordinate has been rude. It is due to my insufficient guidance."

"The timing of the interruption was good, and the individual's remorse is clear on his face. If a superior lord says so, then there is nothing for us to reproach."

It was Crusch who, representing the assembly, showed magnanimity in response to Marcos's apology. She smoothed her long, green hair with a hand, then took a breath and continued, "More importantly"

"He must have forgotten the circumstances of this place to burst in like that. It must be something quite serious, wouldn't you say?"

To Crusch's tilted-head question, the guard nodded without hesitation. Then he opened his mouth, his expression betraying fear of what he was about to say,

"Captain, there is something I wish to tell you in private."

"…That is hardly a commendable attitude in front of everyone."

“Nevertheless, sir.”

Marcos, pressed by the subtle reprimand, instinctively judged that a ‘bad’ situation was unfolding based on his subordinate’s demeanor. Sensing only that, Marcos decided to excuse himself from the room and hear the report outside, but,

“You shall not leave this room, Marcos. I forbid it.”

Before he could even form the words, Priscilla, seated in a lavish chair, blocked his path. Unaware of Marcos’s intentions, she wore a sadistic expression, as if to say she found it amusing,

“I shall forgive the rudeness of disrupting the gathering. However, my indignation will not subside unless I hear the reason for it. Therefore, let the report be heard. In a voice loud enough for everyone here to hear.”

“With all due respect, Lady Priscilla. There are many matters that need not reach everyone’s ears. This matter is of that kind…”

“A mere old man, who merely snuck into the castle, gave spirit to a little girl who was previously nothing but spineless. —Then perhaps, that cannot be called insignificant, can it?”

Covering her mouth with a fan, Priscilla cast a fleeting glance towards Felt, who was positioned across the room. Felt, having been made fun of, twisted her lips into a downturned V-shape,

“Stop with your weird accusations, you airhead. Old Man Rom was supposed to be brought along anyway, but he got separated in the castle. Then a soldier who went out of his way to find him brought him to the hall. Isn’t that right?”

Felt crossed her arms, turning her face away from Priscilla, and looked up at the bald, giant man standing beside her—Old Man Rom—seeking his agreement.

The old man, eyes closed and maintaining an expression of enduring pain, responded to her request with a weak voice, “…Indeed.” Felt, though a hint of sorrow lingered in her red eyes, refused to elaborate further, cutting off Priscilla’s sarcastic pursuit.

"Princess, Princess. It's still early days, so how about you try not to make too many enemies? I'm already short one arm, so I'm a troubled man who has to work twice as hard just to break even."

"Hmph, very well."

Priscilla, still intent on tormenting Felt, reluctantly yielded to Al, her attendant's, suggestion. She then turned back to Marcos,

"However, my questioning of you is not over. You shall state your report loudly, so that we may also hear it. I permit it. Nay, I shall permit nothing less."

"…Captain."

"It cannot be helped. Obey the order."

To Priscilla's arrogant command, the guard sought Marcos's judgment, but Marcos's answer was an acceptance of the demand, tinged with reluctance.

An order from his superior, and furthermore, from a potential future leader of the nation—the guard lacked the courage to refuse the two directives.

He stiffened his expression, his eyes flickering with bewilderment and impatience, and straightened his posture,

"Reporting. After the meeting in the main hall concluded, Knight Julius requested the use of the training grounds. Having been granted permission, Knight Julius and…"

A fleeting glance, mid-report, from the guard's eyes towards the corner of the room—towards Emilia, who stood there looking somewhat out of place.

Receiving that gaze, Emilia blinked, as if suddenly addressed, with a sense of abruptness.

Before her surprise could turn into a question, before it could form into clear words, the correct information was delivered by the guard.

"—Natsuki Subaru, Lady Emilia's attendant, engaged in a mock battle with wooden swords."

"…Oh?"

Straightening his back, the guard blurted out what he had just witnessed.

Hearing this, Al, with a hand on his chin, let out a sigh of admiration. The others, to varying degrees, also showed emotions other than confusion in their eyes or on their faces.

Among them, Emilia was the only one who could clearly express nothing but bewilderment.

"…Eh?"

Unable to grasp the meaning of the words, Emilia let out a breathy sound and blinked her large, violet eyes, her thoughts coming to a halt.

Calmly, she tried to organize the reported information in sequence.

In other words, this is what it meant: In the training grounds, using wooden swords, for some reason Julius and Subaru were engaged in a duel—even after organizing it, the meaning remained elusive.

"Wh-Why would that happen…?!"

Unable to grasp the situation, Emilia voiced the rising doubt.

Stepping forward, approaching the guard standing across the desk,

"The training grounds, that's inside the Knight's building next to the castle, right? Subaru and Julius are… fighting?"

"Begging your pardon, but it is a mock battle. To think it began due to a personal grudge, as if it were a mere brawl, would affect Knight Julius's honor."

To Emilia, who spoke with a trembling voice, the guard firmly corrected her, unwilling to concede on that point.

Listening to his words, Emilia couldn’t dwell on such minor details. The clash between Subaru and Julius had shocked her to that extent.

Emilia regretted that she had been too preoccupied with her own matters to properly observe what had become of Subaru after he was made to leave the hall.

Subaru, who had been publicly shamed in front of everyone due to his outburst. She couldn’t deny that she had felt a slight sense of relief when he, hanging his head, was led out of the hall.

Could the consequences of such selfish thoughts be coming back to her now?

In the first place, Subaru was surely not fond of Julius.

It was Julius, the knight, who had rudely brought Subaru back to reality during his monologue in the hall, and even during the incident at the guardhouse in the capital yesterday, Subaru seemed to harbor resentment towards his aristocratic demeanor.

Although Subaru had yet to clearly reveal his background, Emilia vaguely suspected that his way of interacting with Julius suggested he had reasons to feel animosity towards the so-called upper class.

The lack of such an effect on Roswaal was likely due to Roswaal himself being a highly eccentric individual among nobles.

It was undeniable that issues that had not surfaced until now, and thus had been put off, had become the spark for the current situation.

Once thoughts began to spiral in a negative direction, they would only tumble to the bottom.

Emilia, following this tendency, her imagination spiraled for the worse, and a clear look of worry appeared on her refined face,

“Anyway, I have to stop them immediately. Please lead me to the training grounds…”

"Ah, I don't think that's a good idea, if you ask me."

Quickly, to the scene, to mediate between the two.

Emilia's words, as she thought this, were interrupted by a girl with a distinctive way of speaking.

Ignoring Emilia, who frowned at being cut off, Anastasia, shaking her long blue hair, pointed a finger at the still-straight-backed guard and prefaced, "I just want to confirm something"

"About that 'mock battle,' do you know who initiated it?"

"I heard it was Knight Julius. As a result of Natsuki Subaru accepting it, the current situation at the training grounds is…"

"Oh, it's fine, it's fine, no need to make excuses. If Julius was the one who initiated it, that's enough."

No matter how he tried to gloss it over, it was a private duel—a situation that could be judged as such. The guard tried his best to prevent Julius from being disadvantaged, but Anastasia waved her hand, dismissing his efforts. However, she wasn't ignoring the guard's intention,

"—If the mock battle was Julius's proposal, then I'm against stopping it."

And so, Anastasia showed her stance of affirming her attendant's judgment, directly confronting Emilia, who was about to move to stop them.

Emilia gasped, then quietly asked Anastasia, who shrugged slightly, "Why?"

"Subaru and Julius… your knight and my acquaintance are clashing, you know? Aren't you worried?"

"Worried? About what? That Julius might go too far, and we'll have to pay for your boy's medical treatment?"

At Anastasia's puzzled reply, Emilia was speechless.

However, as if to mock her astonishment, Priscilla, who indeed had a mocking smile on her lips, said,

“Indeed. From what I saw, he is a fool who does not know when to back down. By now, he might have been so stubborn that his already unsightly face has become unbearable to look at.”

“That’s right. The courage he showed in the hall was admirable, but he seemed like a child so light he might just fly away.”

Anastasia followed Priscilla’s sarcasm, and the two exchanged malicious smiles.

At their stance, Emilia put a hand to her forehead, her violet eyes filled with agitation,

“You, you two… don’t you have something else, something more to say?”

“To discuss… Oh, how about a wager? That Natsuki Subaru, was it? Let’s bet on how long that boy can hold his own against Julius.”

“I believe one usually bets on victory or defeat.”

“Then it wouldn’t be a gamble. If you’re fine with me, the house, taking everything, then that’s fine too.”

As Anastasia made a ring with her finger and smiled slyly, Priscilla, with a bored expression, dismissed her previous statement, saying, “Nonsense.”

Emilia was speechless at their consistently ‘observant’ attitude. From her perspective, their way of thinking was utterly unacceptable.

To her, gasping and at a loss for words, came another blow,

“If we are to question the propriety of a mock battle, then I, too, do not approve of stopping it midway.”

Crusch, who had been silently observing until then, crossed her arms and held back Emilia, who was about to intervene, with a contradictory opinion.

“Why?” Emilia’s eyes clouded over, having expected Crusch, who seemed to make judgments more in line with common sense than the previous two, to say something different. To her unspoken question, Crusch closed her eyes,

“If it were Lady Emilia’s attendant who had challenged to a duel, then it would be right for Lady Emilia to offer mediation. However, if it was Knight Julius who proposed it, and your attendant who accepted, then it is out of line for you to intervene.”

“Why? Because Subaru is my…”

“If you cannot understand that, then no amount of explanation will suffice. —Though it is hasty, it is necessary.”

Spoken with a strong tone, Emilia could not press Crusch further. Crusch, too, tightly sealed her lips, as if there was nothing more to say to Emilia.

Though not exactly talked into it, with the other three united in their decision to ‘observe,’ Emilia had no choice but to consider the reasons behind their judgment. If she spoke without thinking, it would only prove that she wasn’t on the same level as them.

Emilia’s lips trembled, her face somewhat drained of color as she sank into thought. Felt, observing this exchange, including Emilia, quietly asked Old Man Rom standing beside her,

“I don’t get it at all, Old Man Rom, do you know what it means?”

“I don’t know what that boy did before I came to the hall. So, I can only guess based on what I just heard.”

“What do you think that guy did… what do you think he did?”

To Felt’s question, Old Man Rom put a hand to his chin and pondered for a moment, “Well, now,”

“He probably acted like a reckless fool in front of everyone, making a scene and challenging people, earning the displeasure of many with his words, and in the end, unable to retort, he was ordered to leave dejectedly—that's the kind of atmosphere I sensed."

"Wow, Old Man Rom. You weren't watching, were you?"

Felt praised Old Man Rom's almost perfectly accurate guess. In response, Old Man Rom touched his bald head and furrowed his brows, saying, "I just made the worst possible guess, and it turned out to be even worse…" Then the old man nodded, as if he understood,

"If my guess is right, then indeed… that knight you spoke of, he must be a terribly unpleasant person, steeped in aristocratic principles. Or perhaps…"

Old Man Rom was about to present the other possibility. However, betraying Felt's anticipation, something made a sound that changed the atmosphere of the room.

A hard, sharp thud echoed on the conference room floor, a dry burst that shook the hearts of those in the serene room.

Surprise, or perhaps a slight discomfort, filled the gazes directed at the culprit of the sound—Al, who shrugged at the attention, and tapped the rim of his metal helmet with his single arm, making it ring.

"My bad, my bad. See, I'm missing an arm, so I can't clap to get attention. So I gotta stomp instead."

"My apologies, my apologies," Al said, unapologetically, with a hand chop gesture. Then he spun around and stepped forward, pointing directly ahead,

"Come on, come on, the conversation's straying a bit from the main point, haven't you noticed? It's not unusual for two men who don't like each other to get into a brawl. It's complicated with their positions and all, but before they're knights or self-proclaimed knights, they're men."

"I don't think it's that simple…"

"You're making a simple matter too complicated, young lady. The problem isn't that they're brawling, but why this secret was brought here."

Wagging his finger, Al responded to Emilia, then pointed again at the person he had indicated—that is, the young guard who had brought the report to the room,

"If they're just fighting, a report after the fact would be fine. So why are you so flustered that you had to call the captain?"

At Al's question, the guard's face visibly paled. He looked around hesitantly, wondering how to answer, and his eyes met Priscilla's, who was smiling sweetly beside Al.

Her lips stretched into a wide grin, an expression of ecstatic cruelty mixed with an angelic smile.

The guard finally looked to Marcos for salvation, but Marcos's answer to that plea was merely a merciless shake of his head.

"The reason I called the captain was… that…"

"Clearly, loudly, and articulate, please."

"Knight Julius and Natsuki Subaru's mock battle… it is just too one-sided, so I came to ask for instructions!"

At Al's malicious demand, the guard said, almost in despair, straightening his back. Hearing the content, Marcos, unusually, changed his expression to one of bewilderment,

"…One-sided, you say?"

"I believe Knight Julius is holding back, but… it's just… too much to watch."

The guard looked at Emilia with difficulty, inadvertently making everyone in the room recall the gruesome scene he had just witnessed.

At his bitter demeanor, Emilia belatedly realized that the situation had worsened beyond her imagination, and she cast aside all her previous hesitation.

“I have to stop them…!”

Emilia let out a murmur tinged with impatience, then darted past the guard standing by the door, and ran out of the room into the corridor leading to the Knight’s quarters—to the training grounds in question.

“Wait, Lady Emilia! Hey, follow Lady Emilia!”

“—Y-Yes, sir!”

The guard sent his subordinates after the fleeing Emilia, then followed her out into the corridor.

As a result, Marcos turned back to the people left in the room,

“I apologize for the disturbance. I will now endeavor to resolve the situation…”

“No, it’s fine. Rather, let’s follow the young lady and go watch the mock battle, shall we?”

Al stopped Marcos, who was about to bow his head, and said cheerfully, then shrugged his shoulders at Priscilla nearby, as if seeking her agreement, “Right?”

“You like it too, Princess, don’t you? Watching a show where a weak creature is tormented by a beast.”

“Do not misjudge me with your baseless assumptions, Al… Well, I do love it.”

Conditionally affirming her attendant’s words, Priscilla rose from the chair she had been leaning on, lightly arched her back, and her ample bosom swayed,

“Very well. I was getting a little cramped from the tedious conversation dragging on. It wouldn’t be so bad to look down on the pathetic sight of some common fool and mock them.”

Closing her fan with a snap, Priscilla pointed its tip towards Marcos, who stood by the door.

Maintaining her unchanging arrogance,

“Lead the way to that training ground. —It is my command.”

2

Blood streamed from the shallow gash on his forehead into Subaru’s uninjured eye, staining his vision red. He roughly wiped it away, letting out a frustrated grunt.

He’d long since lost count of how many times he’d been knocked to the ground and rolled. His left eye was completely swollen shut, and he couldn’t tell if his lip or the inside of his mouth was cut; the taste of blood was too overpowering to distinguish.

He didn’t feel much pain. Sometimes, when injuries are too severe, the human brain rejects the pain, preventing it from reaching the body. Subaru had certainly experienced many life-threatening injuries since being summoned to this world. As someone who had faced death multiple times, he could attest that there truly was a kind of pain so extreme it made you feel nothing at all.

One could launch into a long, modern explanation about an overabundance of adrenaline secreted in the brain, but if he were to describe the current situation in more primal terms, what made Subaru forget his pain was simply pure rage.

“You piece of absolute, piss-soaked, shit-stained fuck!”

Subaru spat out the vulgar words, overwhelmed by the oppressive emotions swirling within him. It was rage at Julius, who stood calmly before him. It was rage at his own helplessness, unable to even land a single blow against such an opponent. And it was the rage of a child’s tantrum over an uncontrollable situation.

It was rage. Nothing but rage. Rage was all that consumed Subaru at that moment.

Again, a wooden sword slammed into his gut, sending vomit spewing. Subaru, who had been sitting on the ground, painfully got back to his feet. His knees trembled, his breathing was ragged, and his vision was a blurry red from the blood he couldn't wipe away. Yet, driven by an inexhaustible rage, Subaru refused to stop facing his unwinnable opponent.

"Perhaps it's time you acknowledged your limits."

Julius responded to Subaru's abnormal tenacity not with praise, but with exasperation. He still stood there, immaculate, without a speck of dust or a drop of sweat on his face. He merely twirled the tip of the wooden sword that had relentlessly struck Subaru.

"You should have keenly felt the unbridgeable gap between us. You must now understand what a 'Knight', whom you insulted, truly is."

His words weren't meant to appeal to Subaru's heart, but to break it. Naturally so. A climax where opponents acknowledge each other after a duel can only happen if there's mutual respect, even if slight.

Julius merely continued to strike Subaru to demonstrate the essence of a knight, and Subaru, in turn, showed his futile resistance to the reality Julius presented by continuously getting back up. There was no room for anything to be born between them. Even after this long exchange, nothing had changed.

"Any more of this, and I fear it might become life-threatening."

"Huh?"

Perhaps trying to change his approach to breaking Subaru's spirit, Julius's provocation shifted. But Subaru responded, his voice dripping with clear anger.

"Like hell I'd die from something like this! Don't act like you know everything!"

"You speak as if you're experienced."

"In this world, I'm the man who knows that better than anyone."

Subaru said it without bluff or jest. Seven times in total—that was how many times his life had been trampled since coming to this world. If he scoured his previous world, this world, or even the three thousand worlds beyond, there was no one who had confronted their own death as much as Subaru had.

That feeling told him:

It hurts like hell, it's agonizing like hell, it's frustrating like hell, and it's hell, hell, hell, but a human doesn't die from something like this.

"I don't understand."

Julius shook his head, letting out a sigh as Subaru spat out blood and defiance. He glanced at the swaying Subaru.

"Why are you so stubborn? You must surely realize by now that you're no match for me. No, I know you already understand that you can't defeat me."

"…What are you…"

"We don't need pointless exchanges. Your objective is no longer victory. No, I should say that you and I have different definitions of victory."

With Subaru still in his sight, Julius gestured with his arm as if giving a speech. He lifted his chin slightly, speaking loud enough for those around them, not just Subaru, to hear.

"Your victory condition isn't to defeat me, but to 'land a single blow' on me, isn't it? Whether that means hitting me once with your wooden sword or making me stumble, I don't know the specifics."

"—!"

Subaru bit his lip, desperately suppressing the scream that threatened to erupt from his throat.

He'd been hit where it hurt. There was only the bitter taste of being exposed.

Humiliation and shame washed over Subaru, and he desperately clung to his pride, preventing his trembling lips from forming an excuse.

“Hmm, I thought some unbearable pretense might come out… but it seems you have enough sense to restrain that. However,”

Looking at Subaru, who was draining his last vestiges of pride, Julius continued:

“To misjudge your opponent’s skill, then lower your own goal mid-battle, debasing your own worth to that extent… I can only say that such pride is undeserved.”

“—You fucking bastard!!”

Julius’s exasperated gesture, a sight Subaru had grown accustomed to throughout the match, now filled Subaru’s thoughts with pure rage. The bitterness of having his inner feelings exposed only fueled his explosion.

Ignoring the pain from the countless blows to his body and his blurry red vision, Subaru lunged with all his might, raising his wooden sword towards Julius’s composed face—

“Not elegant.”

Just before he could swing down, a thrust was delivered, piercing Subaru’s right wrist, which held the sword. The sharpness of the blow sent the wooden sword flying from his grip. As he instinctively followed its trajectory with his eyes, a second strike landed squarely in his solar plexus, easily knocking Subaru to the ground.

His breath caught, and he tumbled across the dirt, unable to even brace himself. After experiencing his world turn upside down about five times, he lay sprawled on his back on the ground. Subaru literally vomited blood, and right beside his face, the flung wooden sword spun as it fell, sticking into the ground and seemingly mocking its owner’s pathetic charge.

“Just admit it already.”

Subaru coughed painfully, struggling to expel blood and gravel. Looking down at him, Julius repeated the surrender recommendation he had given countless times before.

"You cannot reach me. No matter how many times you re-evaluate the conditions for victory against me within yourself, it will be the same. —I will never allow you to achieve it."

"…"

"I will utterly crush and break your spirit, and make you regret your actions. I will make you reflect on your presumptuous words and deeds. Then, I will make you decide."

"…"

"To withdraw yourself from Lady Emilia's side—!"

"—?!"

Subaru, who had been gasping and taking shallow breaths, suddenly jolted upright at Julius's words. The pain from the blows to his chest screamed through his entire body, but he couldn't care less. He twisted his body, baring his teeth.

"Don't you dare… What right do you have to say something like that…?!"

"Naturally, I have no authority over your disposition. Therefore, I cannot dictate your future actions. All I can do is state this."

Julius looked directly at Subaru, pausing for a breath.

"—That you should, of your own accord, leave Lady Emilia's side."

To a stunned Subaru, Julius added, as if instructing him, "Listen."

"Your actions, your words, serve only to lead Lady Emilia into hardship. I am convinced of this after witnessing your exchange in the plaza and your conduct here."

"What in the world are you…?"

"You are selfish and self-centered, and above all, your thinking is superficial, naive, and far too lenient."

Counting on his fingers, Julius systematically demolished Subaru's thoughtless ideas.

"You are nothing but a troublesome burden to Lady Emilia, forcing difficulties upon her. You can do nothing for her, nor will you ever be able to. Until now, you may have clung to her kindness and been permitted to remain by her side."

Subaru had experienced powerlessness many times. Since coming to this world, he had repeatedly choked down his frustration at unchangeable realities, struggling against his own inadequacy.

"However, she can no longer allow someone who merely depends on her kindness to remain by her side. From this point on, she walks the path to the throne. The obstacles that stand in her way are numerous and formidable, and it is easy to imagine that every conceivable hardship will befall her."

Yet, Subaru had overcome countless misfortunes until now. In situations where his own strength was insufficient, he had borrowed the power of those around him, or utilized his unique advantage of future knowledge to alter circumstances.

"Those who walk that path with her must possess the resolve and strength to overcome those hardships together. They must be able to powerfully push her forward as she strives for even greater heights."

It had all begun with his feelings for a single girl. No matter how painful, how difficult, how sad, how frustrating, how inadequate, how unreachable, how agonizing, Subaru had persevered until now because of his feelings for that one girl. And now—

"You must absolutely not be someone who clings to her kindness, pulling her down."

This man…

"You should not be by her side— By Lady Emilia's side."

Was this man trying to even take away his reason for living?

“RRRRRRAAAAAAAAAAAAH—!!”

His emotions exploded. He sprang to his feet, pulling out the wooden sword that had been stuck in the ground. With the momentum of his spin, he aimed the wooden sword at Julius’s upper body.

The tip sliced through the air, and with the centrifugal force, a direct hit would easily shatter bone. This was literally a do-or-die blow, infused with all the pent-up frustration and passion accumulated throughout their exchange—intended to smash Julius’s face.

—The sound of his wrist bone shattering echoed in Subaru’s ears as if it happened in a silent world, loud and clear.

At the edge of his vision, he saw his right arm, still gripping the spinning wooden sword, intercepted by the waiting tip of Julius’s wooden sword, completely crushed and broken. His wrist was twisted entirely backward, and a protruding bone had pierced through the flesh of his wrist, revealing a white tip. In a few seconds, agonizing bleeding would begin.

Calmly verifying this, Subaru’s consciousness slowly followed the moving Julius.

Slowly, only Julius could move in this silent world—a strange phenomenon. Trapped by the sensation of the world slowing down in a desperate, near-death situation, Subaru was utterly amazed by his own foolishness, connecting to such an out-of-place thought.

Julius’s movements as he prepared to deliver a follow-up strike to the pathetic Subaru before him—every fluid motion brought a surprisingly vivid emotion to Subaru.

“—I will merely pity you.”

The unleashed strikes of the wooden sword delivered countless impacts across Subaru’s entire body in an instant.

His arm was broken. Several ribs were fractured, and it was questionable if any part of him remained uncracked. The gash on his forehead, which had only been a cut, was now completely split open, and the tip of the wooden sword had ravaged his mouth, knocking out several permanent teeth. A blow to his throat left an undeniable mark, and the finishing strike, not a thrust but a swing, landed directly in his stomach with a dull, watery sound, as if his internal organs had ruptured.

He was sent spinning so violently he couldn't tell up from down, spitting out an immense amount of blood. The reddish-brown dirt of the training ground deepened to crimson with Subaru's bleeding.

The brutality of the outcome silenced everyone, not just Julius. The training ground remained crowded with knights and guards who had gathered to witness Subaru's public lynching at the hands of Julius. Yet, every single spectator remained silent, watching Subaru tumble like a discarded rag.

The initial enthusiasm had lasted only for the first few exchanges. An impudent man who had mocked the status of knights and insulted the Royal Selection itself, which determined the future of the kingdom. They expected him to be tortured by Julius, the head of the Royal Guard, to feel the pain of his actions, and to apologize —that was the scene they had gathered to witness.

Indeed, for the first ten minutes, they had cheered and mocked, looking down on Subaru's pathetic state and showering Julius, their colleague, with unstinting praise. However, the atmosphere had begun to change when everyone realized that this mock battle was, in the literal sense, nothing more than a genuine public lynching.

An overwhelming disparity in skill lay between Subaru and Julius. Compared to Julius, who was among the top swordsmen in the knight order, Subaru's sword skills were, to put it mildly, still at an amateur level. Since Subaru possessed no special abilities, his fighting style was nothing more than a childish threat, merely having some familiarity with long weapons.

Subaru's attacks were parried, his clumsy defenses exploited, and he was repeatedly knocked to the ground. For the first few times, laughter dominated. Beyond ten times, sighs of exasperation began to overlap. And by the time they hated even counting, voices muttered:

“He’s overdoing it.”

“Why doesn’t he just give up?”

“It’s a pathetic and boring stubbornness. Damn, what an unpleasant sight.”

They cursed him vehemently, yet as Subaru continued to get up, they covered their faces with their palms. This was truly unbearable to watch. He was too weak, too pathetic, and his disgrace deeply stimulated their sense of ‘shame.’ He should just stop. The outcome was already clear to everyone, and everyone had been able to reaffirm the superiority of the ‘Knights’. Any more of this was a meaningless fight.

However, Julius never relented in striking Subaru with his wooden sword. Ferris, who had the right to stop the fight as an observer, showed no sign of intervention, no matter how injured Subaru became. Subaru himself, brushing off the knights’ pleas, continued to stand.

What was the meaning of such a battle, such a struggle? Without a word, merely looking down at Subaru being beaten so pitifully, every spectator sought meaning in the scene below.

Everyone understood. There was no meaning, no significance, to this struggle. There was only utterly pathetic, unsightly, and worthless stubbornness.

Then, at the very least, they had to witness the conclusion of that stubbornness. The knights and guards gathered there, facing a scene that made them want to avert their eyes, yet not leaving the spot, felt a sense of responsibility for having been involved in this situation as spectators.

Blood from his shattered wrist and massive amounts of vomit stained the training ground red. Subaru’s small, trembling body lay face down, his previously insane fighting spirit having withered, completely unfit for battle.

Everyone thought it was over this time. Seeing Subaru utterly defeated, everyone sensed the end of this one-sided brutality. However, Julius's stance, holding the blood-stained wooden sword, did not relax. He looked at Subaru, whose consciousness was likely unclear, and maintained his fighting stance without a hint of wavering in his fighting spirit.

At his unwavering posture, the spectators surrounding them also understood his knightly resolve and held their breath. It wasn't over yet. For this battle to end, there was a reason why it couldn't simply conclude with one side being defeated. That was—

"—That's enough."

It was a voice that had not been heard once throughout the tragedy in the training ground. As the crowd cheered and then increasingly sighed. As Julius calmly, or with cool passion, demonstrated the essence of a knight. As Ferris, the observer presiding over the scene, occasionally let out sighs that could be interpreted as either admiration or despair.

A single young man, who had remained silent throughout, stepped into the center of the training ground—between the fallen Subaru and the poised Julius.

The red-haired young man's handsome face was devoid of expression as his blue eyes, driven purely by righteous indignation, pierced Julius.

"If you intend to continue, then I will be your opponent."

He had merely uttered a single sentence, doing nothing special. Yet, upon hearing that one sentence, a chill ran down the spines of the knights, who weren't even direct participants. They were surprised by their own body's reaction, a shiver, and then their hearts, delayed, began to ache as if frozen by the aftershock.

Reinhard, the 'Sword Saint' —The strongest being in the Dragon

Kingdom of Lugunica, no, an unparalleled power across the entire continent—his oppressive aura enveloped the entire training ground and refused to dissipate.

Even mere aftershocks were like this. Considering what it would be like to directly face this oppressive aura, one would worry about Julius's state of mind, facing his blue gaze head-on. Just as the crowd's estimation of Reinhard was too low, so too was their estimation of Julius.

Receiving Reinhard's fighting spirit, which made even knights prepared to lay down their lives tremble, Julius remained perfectly composed. Ferris, standing beside him, was similarly unfazed, proving unequivocally that they were both on a different level.

Ignoring the spectators' thoughts, Reinhard, who had merely directed his gaze, slightly narrowed his eyes at the unmoving Julius.

"I repeat, Julius. Any further action is nothing short of an act of violence. As a Royal Guard knight… no, even before that, as a human being, I cannot overlook it."

"…"

Julius's eyebrows, which had shown no movement until then, twitched at those words. Reinhard raised an eyebrow in puzzlement at Julius's reaction, but Julius, still maintaining his stance, lightly waved his free hand at Reinhard.

"Reinhard, I consider you a very good friend."

He then uttered words that further perplexed Reinhard. Julius shook his head slightly at Reinhard, who deepened the furrow in his brow in bewilderment, and continued.

"Your knightly integrity is exceptional even among the Royal Guard. There is no doubt about your loyalty to the kingdom, and your skill and effort to fulfill it are impeccable. If asked what kind of being a hero is, I would answer without hesitation that it is my friend, Reinhard van Astrea."

"…That's an overestimation."

Even though he didn't understand what Julius was trying to say, Reinhard declined the praise with a look that was more genuinely humble than merely polite.

"I, too, consider you a good friend before a colleague. That's why I cannot allow a person like you to debase yourself further with your actions…"

"No matter who denies it, even if you yourself don't believe it, you are a hero, Reinhard."

Julius interrupted Reinhard, who tried to continue his persuasion. However, while his words were indeed praising, his tone contained no pleasant emotion.

"You are a hero, too much of a hero. The divine protections you were born with, the Astrea family that has embodied your very existence in the most fitting way. And a soul so noble and pure that there is no room to doubt it, no reason to question it —That is why you are a hero."

"What are you trying to say, Julius?"

"You are a hero. —You can only be a hero."

Julius shook his head faintly, telling the bewildered Reinhard that. Then he raised the tip of his swaying wooden sword and gestured behind Reinhard.

"As someone who can only live as a hero, you likely won't see the meaning of this battle. Nor will you understand why I won't pull back my sword, and…"

Feeling a stirring presence behind him, Reinhard turned, a hint of surprise in his eyes. There,

"Why he still stands."

With ghost-like, slow movements, yet dragging his battered body, Subaru's figure was there, standing up.

3

In front of him, Subaru saw Julius and Reinhard exchanging words.

Having thoroughly purged his body of impurities, he actually felt lighter. The pain was still intermittent, his limbs remained as heavy as lead, and worst of all, his right hand, which he'd tried to place on the ground, was hideously mangled. Even so, the overwhelming fatigue that threatened to steal his will to stand had vanished, and his body, though sluggishly, was starting to obey his commands.

Since his right hand was unusable, he dragged himself by his elbow and shoulder, using his left arm, which, though not unscathed, was still functional, to push his body up. He poured defiance into his trembling lower body, turning it into energy, and after a considerable amount of time, somehow managed to stand. Finally, as he was leaving the ground, his left hand brushed against a fallen wooden sword nearby. He picked it up, used it like a cane to steady his upper body, and barely stood. He was standing.

"—Subaru."

He looked, and at a distance close enough to feel his breath, a red-haired, stern face was looking at him. Clear concern filled his eyes, and he could also see a smoldering spark of righteous indignation there.

Reinhard was standing in front of him, concerned for Subaru, confronting Julius.

His normally slow mind quickly deduced the answer. The moment he reached that conclusion, a slow, crescent smile spread across Subaru's lips. His mouth was badly cut, and several teeth were missing, so smiling brought pain. How could he not smile?

"You don't need to push yourself. I will avenge you. This treatment is far too unjust. It absolutely cannot be forgiven."

While still aware of Subaru, Reinhard's gaze was fixed on Julius, who stood opposite him. Julius merely looked back at Reinhard with a sad, quiet gaze. Subaru didn't know what kind of exchange had occurred between the two. He didn't know, but he knew this much:

"Subaru, just leave this to me…"

"Reinhard."

Subaru called the name of the young man standing before him, clearly looking into his sky-blue eyes with his one good eye. This was the third time he had been protected by him, with him standing in front.

The first time he shamelessly cried for help, the second time his life was narrowly saved, and now this time. By the third time, an optimism had bloomed, a belief that if he just left it to Reinhard, everything would somehow work out. The repeated trust between the protector and the protected—that certainty within Subaru once again presented him with the best way to navigate this situation. He should just take the outstretched hand and entrust everything to that strong back.

If he did that, all the pain Subaru had endured, all the mental suffering, would be sublimated in the best possible way by the young man before him. It would be a resounding success. A perfect, happy ending. Everyone would be happy, a truly "mammoth happy" scenario. So,

"—Get out of the way."

"…Huh?"

"…I know you're an absolutely amazing guy, that there's no malice or ill intent in your actions… That everything you do comes from a pure, unadulterated place of good will… I know that."

But,

"…That, and that alone, is wrong. This one moment, I cannot… concede."

Subaru had started this. This was a battle Subaru had accepted. There was a stubbornness only Subaru could see through, and an outcome that only Subaru should reach. It was Subaru's duty to see this end. He couldn't abandon that duty, pass the buck to someone else, and sink into defeat.

More simply, in just one word, if he had to explain it:

"A man's got his pride—"

With bloodshot eyes, blood-dripping lips, and a face stained red with gore, Subaru, as if spitting blood, clung to his utterly hopeless stubbornness. Reinhard was speechless at this unexpected answer, blinking repeatedly, unable to hide his inner shock.

"Pride, you say? For something like that…?"

"—El Dona."

His trembling, utter denial was outpaced by the mana in the air reacting to the incantation.

4

The mana filling the atmosphere reacted to the incantation that transformed itself, and its effects activated according to the caster's will.

"—!"

Suddenly, the ground beneath Reinhard's feet exploded, and clods of earth with sharp points rose from the cracks. They shot up from his feet, aiming for Reinhard's torso, pressing in to deliver a powerful blow—

"—Hah!"

Against the seismic upheaval rivaling a giant beast's charge, Reinhard's stomp detonated—the impact rippled, shaking the air, and giving Subaru, standing nearby, the sensation of being hit by a gust of wind. In front of Subaru, whose eyes were wide with astonishment, the earth was crushed underfoot before it could fully rise, its purpose utterly thwarted as it returned to its normal state.

Having countered the magical technique with sheer force, Reinhard lightly leaped backward to soften the impact of the collision. Upon landing, he brushed off his clothes, returning to his usual composed state as if nothing had happened. Then, he turned his gaze, now more serious, diagonally upward—towards a presence leaping and flying in from above, a stern expression on his face.

“What do you think you’re doing?”

“What do I think I’m doing, huh?”

As he spoke, the man in the jet-black helmet—Al—landed, kicking up dust. With his single arm resting on the hilt of the greatsword at his hip, he let out a languid groan, “Ughh,” as his neck bones cracked loudly.

“Just like you, pretty boy, I’m cutting in.”

He drew his greatsword with a clang, pointing its dull, gleaming tip at Reinhard. The well-worn, powerful guandao was probably a perfect weapon for Al, despite having only one muscular, thick arm. Even so, it didn’t seem like it would pose a threat to Reinhard. In fact, Al himself must have realized this.

“You can’t defeat me. I don’t think you’re so immature that you can’t see the difference in our abilities.”

“Normally, I wouldn’t challenge someone I can’t beat. My motto is, if you’re torn between doing it or not, then don’t… However, seeing the situation right now, I can’t just stand by.”

Al dangled the tip of his guandao and indicated the parties involved in the scene.

“Read the room, pretty boy. Can’t you see how awkward the atmosphere is?”

“Awkward…?”

At that, Reinhard looked around with a puzzled expression. Then, belatedly, he finally noticed. In the eyes of the knights and guards watching them—a crowd of several dozens—he saw a mix of fervor, the rational emotion that came from that fervor cooling, and another faint wave of emotion floating within.

“It seems you really don’t get it. I see, knights are quite the…”

Al stopped himself mid-sentence. He looked around, taking in Julius, Ferris, and the other knights observing the situation, then shook his head.

“No, ‘knights’ isn’t the right category. Ah, ‘heroes’ are a real pain.”

“What are you trying to say?”

“I’ve got nothing to say. Is there anything worthwhile to be gained from a conversation between you and me? After all, our values are different.”

Shrugging, Al announced a unilateral severance to Reinhard’s question. Al’s contradictory stance showed him maintaining a combat-ready posture while simultaneously dismissing any intent to fight. Ignoring the perplexed Reinhard, he looked towards Julius and Subaru, who were once again facing each other after the young man’s movement.

“Alright, keep going. I’ll keep this superhuman who can’t read the room in check.”

“I thought you and he were acquainted?”

Julius raised an eyebrow slightly at Al, whose intentions were unclear, and indicated Subaru with a nod of his head. Seeing Subaru, who was battered and hadn’t reacted properly since Al’s appearance, Al deftly scratched the back of his neck with the tip of his guandao.

“In a way, we’re more than friends, but eternally less than lovers.”

“Then wouldn’t there be an option to resolve this situation for the sake of your friendship?”

“I don’t think there’s a more friendship-oriented decision than what I’m doing right now. After all, hearts and bodies can heal no matter how much they're hurt, but I'm helping to save something that can't be healed from being wounded."

"I see."

At Al's muffled reply, Julius nodded, as if convinced.

"Thank you."

"Don't need it. Turn your gratitude into cash."

Al answered Julius curtly, all while keeping Reinhard in check. Receiving this, Julius's attention was already no longer on them, the outsiders.

"Sorry to keep you waiting."

"If I had been paying attention, I could've killed you ten times over during that lapse…"

To the short apology, the battered Subaru replied with a defiant retort. As Julius re-gripped his wooden sword, Subaru abandoned his broken right hand and switched the wooden sword to his left, clenching its hilt tightly.

Seeing that, Julius quietly became certain.

—The next exchange would be the final blow in this pointless conflict.

5

Subaru inwardly concluded: the next strike would be the last.

He could feel his body reaching its limit. He was already severely wounded, it was a miracle he was still standing. Only sheer, stubborn grit kept him from collapsing, but how long could that last?

If he was hit, the dam of his willpower would crumble effortlessly, sweeping away his consciousness, his pride, everything. Even if he managed to land a blow, there would be nothing left inside him to follow through. The torrent of pain and exhaustion would surely still drown him.

So why keep fighting? If the outcome awaiting him was the same no matter what, then why did he still press on?

He couldn’t see the answer. Even now, the only thing driving Subaru was a feeling of anger, akin to taking out his frustrations. He couldn’t stand the man standing before him, watching him with that smug look. He’d tried countless times to smash that guy’s self-important face, but the result was that countless other parts of his own face were smashed and broken instead.

So he decided. He decided right now. The reason he fought was because he wanted to smash that guy’s self-important face. He would land one hit. He would definitely land one hit. If only that could be achieved, he didn’t care what happened to him afterward.

Just breathing hurt his lungs. Exhaling made the inside of his mouth ache terribly. Clearing his mind through the pain, Subaru gathered every last bit of strength left in his body and waited for his chance. He waited for the moment Julius’s attention wavered, for that fleeting possibility, that sliver of a moment, a divine opportunity to smash his face in. He couldn’t miss it.

It hurts it hurts, just die.

Julius’s gaze flickered for an instant. The moment he saw it, Subaru’s body lunged forward.

He couldn’t hear any sound. Everything was left behind. Without even the luxury of a battle cry, Subaru charged at Julius, swinging his clutched wooden sword. The knight, who had briefly averted his gaze from Subaru, still hadn't reacted.

He poured every brain cell that would have considered what had distracted him into this single strike.

"—!!"

He thought he heard a voice. In a world where no sound could be heard, where everything, even the scenery, should have been left behind, in a world where nothing should exist but himself and his target.

He heard a voice. Someone's voice. Someone's voice reached Subaru's ears.

"—ru!"

It became a sound. A clear sound. His consciousness felt like it was being dragged away. Let everything be painted over by rage and forgotten. Right now, Subaru's sole reason for being was to advance towards the being in front of him.

"—baru!"

It was starting to become clear. It was starting to make sense. If he heard it clearly, there would be no turning back. So Subaru, as if shaking everything off, to escape the overwhelming terror that was closing in on him, squeezed out every ounce of his being—and shouted.

"—SUBARU!!"

"—SHAMAK!!"

Betraying the clear, bell-like voice he'd heard, he loudly chanted his own spell. Black clouds covered the reddish-brown parade ground—

A world of incomprehension unfolded. Rushing through it, Subaru simply acted as his brain commanded within that unknowable world.

His vision was gone. His purpose was no longer recognized by his brain. His heart could no longer see anything.

—He just swung his left hand, his raised left arm, down in front of him.

It was an incomprehensible action, but his left arm had begun its motion before being swallowed by the black clouds. Therefore, regardless of his consciousness, the action was completed.

Subaru, having lost everything, didn't know what results his judgment and actions would lead to. He shouldn't have known. However—

"So this is your trump card—"

In a world where he shouldn't have heard anything, that voice clearly vibrated his eardrums, and—

The next moment, receiving the blade that pressed in from beyond the cleared black clouds, Subaru's body was violently and mercilessly slammed onto the ground.

There was surprise, not pain. The vast black clouds that had erupted completely dispersed, and stretching across the sky was the same infuriatingly clear blue sky as before. Subaru finally realized he was lying on his back, spread-eagled.

"I didn't expect you to use 'Yin' magic. I admit, I was caught off guard."

A voice was thrown down from above. Subaru, whose vision was still filled with the sky, listened dazedly, struggling to grasp the reality unfolding.

"However your mastery is too low. Above all, low-level 'Yin' magic is useless unless against an opponent weaker than yourself, or an unintelligent beast. It certainly wouldn't have worked on me, nor would this tactic have succeeded against any of the Royal Knights."

Words of denial rained down. He couldn't move. He didn't move. His mind was clear, but his body no longer obeyed.

"Even after playing your trump card, this is it. You understand now, don't you?"

A pitying voice was cast down. Words that hammered at Subaru's heart, telling him to give up everything, poured down.

He thought he could change the situation. He clung to what he could, expressed what he could, and believed he could do it. Yet—

"You are powerless and beyond salvation. —You are not worthy to stand by her side."

He wanted to deny only those words, and Subaru moved his creaking neck, shifting his gaze from the sky. Somehow, he managed to glare at the man standing at the end of his vision, and —

"…"

—His eyes met the dark violet eyes of a silver-haired girl.

She was leaning over a narrow passageway connecting the barracks-adjacent building to the royal castle. Behind her stood other familiar female figures, each looking down at the scene on the training ground, their eyes holding various emotions.

None of that mattered anymore. What anyone else thought of him didn't matter to Subaru at all.

Unless… unless the one person, the only person in this world he least wanted to see him in this state, wasn't standing there.

Subaru heard the sound of something snapping inside him.

After that, his consciousness rapidly began to drift away. His previously clear mind detached, the world rapidly blurred, and this time, truly leaving everything behind, Subaru's consciousness plummeted into the abyss, and—

"—Subaru."

He felt as though he was called by a whisper that shouldn't have been heard, and everything vanished.

Chapter 25: Alone

1

What exactly does it mean to be happy?

Subaru believes that remaining unchanged is one definition of happiness.

He thinks that a tomorrow no different from today, a today no different from yesterday—the continuation of unchanging days—is what happiness truly is.

Of course, it's impossible to live without anything ever changing.

The passage of time brings about change, and through wear and tear, one eventually arrives at either evolution or degeneration.

—So then, have I, who arrived in this other world, moved forward? Or have I regressed?

If we're talking about change, there's no greater change than being thrust from the mundane into the extraordinary as I have been.

Natsuki Subaru feared, detested, and shunned environmental changes, shifts in circumstances, alterations in status, and transformations in his way of life more than anything.

That's why, even in a world where everything had changed irrevocably, he desperately searched, frantically, for something that remained constant.

He didn't want to let go of what he had once gained; he clung to it, held on tight, and yet…

Yet—I am…

2

When Subaru awoke, he furrowed his brow at the unfamiliar ceiling above him.

It wasn't the excessively lavish ceiling of Roswaal's mansion, which he'd grown accustomed to, nor the simple yet well-kept ceiling of an inn. Certainly not his own room, which he'd affectionately called grimy.

As he felt this sentiment regarding the needlessly high ceiling, Subaru drifted in a haze for a few seconds, his consciousness vague. For someone who usually woke up so clearly, the lingering, dazed feeling of just waking up was foreign. He savored this slight deviation from his norm and groped for his memories.

What had happened before he fell asleep? Where was he, anyway?

A throbbing pain near his temples made his half-opened eyes well up slightly. It was unclear if it was from the pain or the sensation of waking up. He gently wiped away the tear with his sleeve, and then Subaru noticed something odd about his right wrist.

Peeking out from his cuff was his right wrist, where he saw a gaudy, unfamiliar scar. It was etched on both the inside and outside of his wrist, accompanied by a faint numbness—

"…I remember."

He remembered how disgracefully he'd been treated to end up with such scars. The fact that these scars remained meant that…

"I… didn't die?"

Subaru didn't realize how arrogant and presumptuous he sounded when he uttered those words. Furthermore, he didn't realize what he unconsciously desired.

Then,

"Subaru, are you awake?"

The bell-like voice, which usually tickled his ears, now sounded terribly uncomfortable.

Tilting his head, Subaru turned his gaze toward the source of the voice. Next to the bed where he lay, Emilia was walking toward him.

Her appearance was the same as when he'd seen her in the Royal Selection hall earlier. Her white-based attire wasn't ostentatiously aristocratic, but it suited her pure demeanor well. The white robe, which had become so familiar when she went out, was neatly folded and now held in her arms.

Comparing her appearance with the orange sunlight streaming through the window, Subaru concluded that very little time had passed. Probably a few hours. Considering the Royal Selection started before noon, he must have been unconscious for at most four hours.

"How are your injuries? It was Ferris's healing, so I don't think there's anything strange…"

Emilia leaned in, worry in her eyes. Her amethyst eyes looked at Subaru's wrist, and she winced painfully at the severity of the remaining scars. Despite her gaze showing concern for his well-being, Subaru felt as though he was being seen in a way he didn't want, and he quietly hid his right hand behind his back,

"Ah, ah, well, at a glance, I don't see anything wrong with how it looks. No, seriously, it's amazing that I can even feel my teeth, which should have been broken."

He wiggled his tongue in his mouth, shuddering at the sensation of his front teeth, which should have been gone. He regretted not being conscious during the healing. Had his broken teeth regenerated or been reconstructed? He noticed that injuries all over his body, including the terrible state of his mouth, had been treated, and Subaru once again marveled at the versatility of this world's healing magic.

If broken bones, lacerations, and retired permanent teeth could all be fully recovered in four hours, hospitals in his original world would be out of business.

"No, wait. I don't think it can act on diseases. Thinking about it that way, hospitals still have an advantage…"

"Water magic can work on internal things like diseases, so I don't think you need to worry, Subaru."

"Magic is truly omnipotent. Farewell, White Big Tower. Say hi to BJ for me."

He made a flippant remark, trying to make his tongue feel normal again. However, Emilia seemed to sense his inner turmoil, as the sorrow mixed in her gaze remained unchanged. Yet, being "pitied" was the hardest thing for him to bear right now.

"Um, by the way, did the Royal Selection discussion end smoothly?"

Subaru offered a topic to avoid her gaze and the silent awkwardness. In response, Emilia nodded slightly and replied, "Yes."

"For the most part. Everyone had already said what they wanted to in the hall, so after that, it was just really minor details of the Royal Selection. It pretty much ended with Roswaal just nodding along."

When it came to detailed matters, it seemed to be a heavy burden for Emilia, who was still in the process of learning about statesmanship. Hearing the sound of self-lament in her voice, Subaru found a sense of relief within himself. At the Royal Selection, Emilia too had felt a sense of powerlessness and grief—a miserable empathy.

To hide the dark emotions that had sprung up inside him, Subaru looked up, quickly averting his gaze, and said,

"So, where's Lord Roswaal? He felt pretty much like background noise in the hall, though."

"Once his duties as my patron were over, he moved on to his work as a Marquis. He may seem like that, but he's relied on here. …It's not for me to say, who can't do anything without Roswaal."

In stark contrast to her confident assertion of her beliefs in the hall, Emilia's current way of thinking was somewhat negative and weak. If she was comparing herself to other candidates and feeling down about it, Subaru thought she was underestimating herself too much.

Indeed, if education received and one's birth were criteria for evaluation, Emilia's position was quite bad simply due to her half-elf lineage. However, her argument, where she emphasized not those aspects but rather how she would conduct herself in the future, was logical, and it was also true that her demeanor at the time was brimming with something that made even the rigid old man groan in admiration.

The things she lamented as lacking could be acquired later. The most essential thing she needed to claim the throne—Subaru believed she possessed it from the very beginning.

That's why Subaru considered her grief misguided and believed that what she lacked for the Royal Selection wasn't such a thing. And as if fearing she would realize this herself,

"Alright, once Roswaal's discussion there is over, we'll head straight back to the inn. Pick up Rem and figure out our future plans. Is there anything else we need to do at the castle?"

"Subaru."

"If not, that's good. We don't know where eyes and ears are placed here, so ideally, we'd go back to the mansion. We can talk more in detail there… No, since we've come all the way to the capital, maybe we should first try to win over some influential people…"

"Subaru…"

"No, no, actually, it might be better to negotiate some terms with the other royal candidates here. It's tough to figure out when and where to make a move…"

"—Subaru!"

Emilia sharply called out to Subaru, who was rapidly spouting a barrage of impromptu words. At her voice, he involuntarily stopped his verbal barrage and met her gaze. Her deep amethyst eyes stared intently, directly, at Subaru.

"—Let's talk."

Quietly, yet unshakably, it resounded heavily within Subaru.

3

Subaru sat up, using the bed as a chair, facing Emilia. She stood with her back to the wall near the entrance, tightly clutching the robe she held in both hands. Her unconsciously tense fingertips showed that the conversation they were about to have would be anything but lighthearted.

"There were so many things I wanted to ask… but I couldn't earlier because of where we were… Really, so many things."

"…Yeah, well, I guess so."

Emilia's lips trembled as she fumbled, unsure of where to start. Subaru could almost feel her hesitation and wavering. After all, he was the one who had caused all this. Everything he'd done must have been beyond her imagination, and she probably had countless questions.

So, if he had to put it into words, Emilia shouldn't just question all of Subaru's actions today, but rather their true intentions. To that, Subaru could shamelessly give only one answer. But,

"Um, well then… why did you… end up fighting Julius?"

The topic she chose wasn't what Subaru had hoped for. And, more than anything, it was the kind of question that made him frown. Naturally, a cynical smile appeared on his face, even as she carefully chose the word 'fight'.

"…What's with that really disgusted look?"

"Nothing, really. It's just, I don't think what happened was splendid enough to be described with a cool word like 'fight', that's all."

Given how utterly one-sided it had been, it should have been called a massacre rather than a fight. As Julius himself called it, a ‘chastisement’.

Regardless of Subaru’s bitter feelings, Emilia looked pained by his reply. It was understandable that she’d be surprised, as Subaru usually responded with witty remarks, but this time, he’d spoken with overt self-deprecation. Her faint eyes clouded with sorrow as she said,

“There must have been a reason, right? Knowing you, Subaru, it must have been something important…”

“A reason, huh…”

Julius had appeared before Subaru, who was dejected in the waiting room. As he was led by Julius to the training grounds, Subaru immediately knew this was payback for his insolence in the hall. He also had a fair grasp of the power difference between Julius and himself. His usual personality would have been to feign a stomachache and quickly thwart his opponent’s intentions, and he even thought that’s what he should have done.

Yet, in reality, Subaru had taken up a sword —Even if it was a wooden one— and challenged an opponent he had no hope of defeating. The result was being utterly discarded like a rag. Why had he done such a thing? The answer was,

“I wanted to strike back.”

“…Huh?”

“In the hall, and in the waiting room, he… that jerk, he said I… wasn’t worthy. I know that. I’m well aware. I know better than anyone how powerless I am; I don’t need anyone to tell me that. It’s just!”

He looked up. He gazed at the beautiful silver-haired figure standing before him, at her bewildered eyes, and continued,

“I wanted to show them. That I wasn’t completely useless. No, that’s not it. I just wanted to stand beside you. If I could show him even a sliver of that, I… I thought I’d become… better…”

His words faltered, and Subaru lowered his head, his face contorted by the tumultuous emotions swirling in his mind. He clenched his fists on his knees and bit his lip. He hated himself for not being able to express himself better. If only he could unleash all the emotions simmering in his chest, all his heartfelt thoughts, he wouldn't feel this frustrated.

"Subaru..."

"It was stubbornness, really. He said I was pathetic, useless, an obstacle, and I hated him for trying to cut me off from you... I challenged him because I wanted to make him take it back."

In the end, that's what it came down to, he supposed. Julius, who had condemned Subaru more harshly than anyone else in that hall, saying he was unfit for Emilia. But Subaru knew that better than anyone, without needing to be told. To prevent others from realizing it, Subaru had desperately put on a brave face. He couldn't forgive the man who had so easily exposed what lay beneath that desperately maintained facade. He'd tried desperately to somehow cover up what had been brought to light. And that, he supposed, had led to the pathetic result of him sinking into a pool of blood.

Emilia gasped softly at Subaru's weak, dejected answer. It probably wasn't the substantial answer she had sought. He didn't know what kind of ideal answer she was looking for. But Subaru's stubborn reality betrayed the ideal she had wanted to believe in. That disappointment escaped her lips in a faint sigh,

"For such a thing?"

"Such a thing was important... to me!"

Such a trivial thing was something Subaru couldn't concede. If only those around him acknowledged such a trivial thing, Subaru could walk with his head held high. Just thinking about such a trivial thing, Subaru was tormented by shame and became unable to move. He couldn't catch up to her back, walking so gracefully ahead.

His desperate feelings weren't understood by Emilia. She covered her mouth with her hand at Subaru's choked answer, and through the gaps in her fingers, she pushed out trembling words,

"Was that… that, was that why you fought like that, Subaru?"

"…Yeah."

"You went through so much pain and suffering, just for that?"

"That's right."

"

—You even used magic, which I told you not to?"

Subaru, who had been looking down and away, acting like a sulking child, stiffened. His trump card, his ace in the hole, his last resort—no matter how he put it, Julius had judged it a childish tactic.

It was a tangible power Subaru had gained, however awkwardly, since coming to this world. It was the power he had relied on more than anything during the second loop—the incident at the mansion. The ease with which it had been shattered had shocked Subaru considerably. It was a feeling of powerlessness, as if all his days since coming to this world had been cut short.

"Hey, Subaru, answer me."

"…"

"Did you really use magic… for that reason?"

"…Emilia-tan, you…"

Trembling words forced a confession from Subaru, who was tormented by powerlessness. She, who posed the question, couldn't know how cruel and merciless her act was. So Subaru, with a weak voice and unable to look at her,

"—You wouldn't understand, Emilia."

"…"

That's what he had blurted out.

Immediately after saying it, Subaru realized it was an unreasonable outburst, a low blow. It was the worst possible thing to say, rejecting the other person's attempt to understand and severing their connection.

Silence fell. Subaru knew his statement was a refusal to be pressed further, and Emilia must have clearly understood that too.

He wanted to avoid delving any deeper into the reason for that fight. No matter how much he dug, no matter how much he looked back, Subaru couldn't give Emilia the answer she sought. Continuing to unearth this topic would only deepen their wounds.

"—I see."

A breathy voice reached Subaru, who still couldn't bring himself to look up. The tone, almost a sigh, indicated that she had heard him out and had no intention of pursuing the topic further from her side. Feeling a sense of relief at her reaction, Subaru relaxed his shoulders and exhaled. Then, at the very least, he thought he had to be useful to her going forward, to make up for not being able to give her the answer she wanted—

"Subaru, let's talk about what happens next."

"Huh? Oh, yeah, I was thinking about that too. First, I can't make a decision until I've calmed down and heard more about the situation, but we should meet up with Ros-chi first and…"

"Roswaal and I will be returning to the mansion tomorrow. Subaru, I want you to stay in the capital."

Unable to comprehend the meaning of her words, Subaru let out a bewildered "Huh?" As Subaru tilted his head in confusion, Emilia said in a voice with as little emotion as possible,

"That was the original promise, wasn't it? You came to the capital to get your depleted gate treated. Ferris has agreed to it, so just receive his treatment and focus on recovering your gate."

"No, wait a minute."

"While you're in the capital, Ferris —or rather, Lady Crusch Karsten's household— will take care of you, and I'll leave Rem with you, so don't worry. After your treatment is successfully finished, we can talk then."

"I said, wait!"

Emilia rattled off their future plans. Realizing that his own wishes were not reflected at all, Subaru raised his voice and called out to her. He looked up, trying to meet her eyes directly, which he had been avoiding. However,

"Emilia…"

"It was already decided. Focus on your treatment."

Turning her back to him, Emilia headed for the doorway as if the conversation was over. Subaru felt a chilling premonition from her unreadable expression and uncommunicative demeanor. Instinctively, he reached out a hand to her retreating hem. His vision blurred as his blood-deprived body tried to impede his action, but his fingertips barely reached her back as she moved away.

"Why so suddenly? I…"

"…Because you push yourself like this when I'm around, don't you, Subaru?"

Emilia replied without turning her head, to Subaru's pathetic, clinging voice. As Subaru gasped at her words, Emilia lifted her head and looked upward,

"It was like that when we first met. It was like that during everything that happened at the mansion. And even today… It's all because you're with me, isn't it?"

"You don't have to put it like that…"

Calling it 'sulky' would be too cute and unfitting. It was, quite literally, a tone brimming with clear displeasure. To Emilia's uncharacteristic, negative, sarcastic remark, Subaru replied, his voice trailing off weakly.

The way Emilia put it, Subaru would gain nothing from it. The content might be the same as what Subaru said, but the path to it was different.

He just wanted her to understand that, at least.

"That's not what I'm trying to say… I just…"

"Just?"

"I just… wanted to do something for you, Emilia-tan, that's all."

"For me?"

Subaru nodded in affirmation to her repeated question. It was a gesture she couldn't see with her back turned, but she must have sensed his movement. Emilia, still looking slightly upward, paused for a few seconds, wondering what to make of his words, and then,

"—It's for yourself, isn't it?"

At the sound of her next words, Subaru could only gasp in silence.

"…"

Beyond the silence, a void swept through Subaru's mind. Pushing aside confusion, incomprehension surged, and before words could form or emotions well up, his heart was first seized by an empty pain.

He didn't know what she had said. He didn't know what she meant. Was he sad, pained, frustrated, sorrowful, angry, or wanting to cry?

"I… I just… for you…"

He wanted to do things that would make her happy. He wanted to help her achieve what she desired. He wanted to protect her from all factors that would make her sad.

Subaru had always believed that the fundamental reason for his actions was precisely that. And he had been convinced that those actions would surely convey themselves to her, even without words.

Such a self-centered assumption, oblivious to the feelings of others —

"—Whoa!"

A soft fabric struck him in the face, and Subaru, who had been in a daze, cried out in surprise. He instinctively brushed it off his face, and out of the corner of his eye, he saw it fall onto the bed —A pure white robe with an eagle embroidery. He realized it had been in Emilia's hands, and he quickly understood that it had been thrown at him.

Her rough action and Emilia's image simply didn't connect. Even if his reason accepted that Emilia had thrown it, his emotions refused to acknowledge it.

In front of Subaru, Emilia had always been kind, overflowing with motherly compassion, and though she was stubborn and didn't want to admit it herself, she was still a kind-hearted girl who couldn't stop helping others.

So Subaru couldn't accept the reality before him. His consciousness froze at such a fragile act of violence from the girl he had believed would never do such a thing.

"Em… Emilia-tan…?"

Unable to grasp reality, Subaru called her name and lifted his gaze.

Right in front of him, within arm's reach, Emilia was still standing. She had turned back to him, her long, beautiful silver hair swaying as if to reflect her emotions, and her deep amethyst eyes looked directly down at him.

He saw, for the first time, those deep amethyst eyes swaying with waves of emotion. He saw, for the first time, that strained face, biting her lip as if to suppress a tremor of strong feeling.

Why was it? Such an expression and gaze didn't suit her at all. Yet there was no doubt that both were directed at him.

Knowing it was an out-of-place sentiment, Subaru nevertheless found her… Her emotionally revealed form beautiful.

"Stop lying, saying everything is for me—!"

The waves of emotion became tears, filling her deep amethyst eyes. Shaking her head slightly, Emilia seemed to unleash everything she had held back,

"Coming to the castle, fighting Julius, even using magic… You're saying it was all for me? I never asked you to do any of that, not once!"

"—!"

"I asked you for everything I truly wanted you to do, didn't I?"

"…"

"Hey, do you remember? What I asked you to do."

"I, I…"

His thoughts froze, explicitly denied by her words. He couldn't search his hazy memories for her question.

Emilia didn't seem to expect an answer from the silent Subaru. She exhaled softly, then tightly closed her eyes,

"I asked you to wait at the inn with Rem."

"…"

"I asked you not to use magic, because I didn't know what would happen to your body if you overused your gate."

He remembered hearing both 'requests'. Both were words she had spoken, concerned for Subaru's well-being, wishing for him to be sensible. Subaru had heard them, but acted anyway. And it was all driven by a somewhat abnormal obsession, pushing him to take actions that would save her, even at the cost of his own health.

He could always make excuses for disregarding those requests, even for trampling on them, if he brought back results that justified it. Though he hadn't explicitly thought that, such a rash idea was always present in the depths of Subaru's mind. But as a result, Subaru not only disregarded Emilia's requests, but also failed to achieve any worthwhile results, only exposing his pathetic state by dragging her down.

Still, the source of his actions, their beginning, was certainly—

"I was wrong for not listening. Really. I truly regret it. It's just! It's different. It's not like that. I didn't do it for myself, I did it for…"

He just wanted her to understand that the underlying feeling was real. However, Subaru's tongue twitched as if numb, refusing to form any more words.

Subaru covered his mouth with his hand, unable to hide his frustration at his body's rebellion against his will. Emilia watched his disgraceful display with a sad expression.

In her eyes, in that uncomfortable self-imprisonment, Subaru shrunk, feebly asking,

"Emilia, you… don't believe me…?"

It was such a selfish, self-centered, self-indulgent thing to say. It was a word that should not have been spoken. It was not a word to be uttered by someone who had just refused understanding to the other person.

"I want to believe you… I want to believe Subaru."

Her voice sounded like she was about to cry. In fact, she might have been crying.

Subaru didn't have the courage to confirm it. He couldn't find the courage to look up and face the girl he should have cherished.

Even though she might be crying, even though he might have made her cry. Even though he had run all this way to prevent that face, at the most crucial moment, Natsuki Subaru—

“You said you want to believe me… but it’s you who won’t let me believe you!”

Her emotions exploded. She was usually calm and rational, and it wasn’t that she had never gotten angry before, but she had never lost control like this, letting her emotions run wild. Her restraints broke, and Emilia, speaking her overflowing feelings,

“You haven’t kept a single promise! You made a promise… but you just break them all so easily and come to a place like this, don’t you?!”

He had trampled on them. The promises they had made, which meant trust. All under the pretext of a noble cause that only benefited himself: that it was all for her.

“You won’t keep your promises to me, and yet you want me to believe you… I can’t. I can’t…!”

He wanted to scream, No! However, in reality, Subaru’s throat trembled, failing to produce words, and his head remained bowed, unable to move as if solidified by lead.

Trembling, crying, swept away by emotion, he was forced to choose to turn his back and continue betraying the girl who was surely seeking his honest answer.

So, Subaru, with childish emotion, brushed away the hand Emilia still offered. At his stubborn attitude, Emilia took several shallow breaths, and then,

“…Hey, Subaru. Why do you try so hard to help me?”

It was likely the question Emilia had often hesitated to ask. The question reached Subaru without hesitation, as if Emilia had repeatedly replayed it in her mind during her short breaths.

She had seen Subaru repeatedly run himself ragged, smiling cheerfully or stoically enduring pain, throwing himself into deadly situations. She must have harbored that question, yet kept silent.

So, it was inevitable that it finally surfaced here, in this moment. If she couldn't express it now, Emilia would have no choice but to continue keeping that question in her heart, endlessly hurting without understanding why Subaru continued to dedicate himself to her so tirelessly.

Subaru realized that Emilia had clearly shown him a path to salvation. He had believed that all his words would be hollow, that nothing he said would reach her now that he had trampled on their promises. But still, it was a question that could be conveyed sincerely.

—Why did Subaru go so far to help Emilia?

—Why had he become so obsessed with her since coming to this world?

It was because—

"From the first time we met, Subaru, you've helped me. I'll never forget what happened in that loot house. At the mansion, too. It's always been like that. Hey, why? Why do you do so much for me, Subaru?"

Emilia found it inexplicable that Subaru kept giving to her. From her perspective, Subaru had appeared out of nowhere, suddenly saved her life, then selflessly devoted himself to her without explanation, only to betray her and act foolishly once she trusted him. He was an incomprehensible presence.

Subaru had a clear reason. She seemed to believe she hadn't done anything for Subaru, but that was absolutely not true. Subaru was constantly being given to by her. And he was merely striving to return even a little of what he had received. The beginning wasn't with Subaru. The beginning was when she gave to him.

So, Subaru's answer was—

"The reason I want to do something for you is because you helped me first…”

“I… helped Subaru?”

“That’s right.”

In a world where he was suddenly summoned, disoriented and lost, exposed to unavoidable violence, a world that might have ended right then and there.

“You wouldn’t understand how much what you did for me saved me. But I… I was saved beyond words by that.”

What Emilia had done for him at that moment wasn’t just saving Subaru’s life.

What Emilia had saved at that moment wasn’t his life, but Subaru himself. He wanted to somehow put it into words, but it was the kind of thing that couldn’t be expressed. So Subaru could only vaguely, shapelessly, try to convey it with his feelings for Emilia.

“I don’t understand, Subaru…”

Feebly, Emilia’s voice trailed off as if about to disappear, and her lips trembled. Subaru, seeing her like she might vanish, stretched out his fingertips as if to cling,

“It’s okay that you don’t understand. But it’s true. You saved me. So what I’m doing is returning that favor… But now,”

The words he wanted to add, “It’s not just that,” were—

“—I said I don’t understand!”

Shaking her head, her silver hair flying wildly, she exploded with emotion. Emilia looked at Subaru with tear-filled eyes, her shoulders shaking, her breath ragged with intense feeling,

“I helped Subaru? …There’s no way. The first time you and I met was at the loot house, and we couldn’t have had any contact before that!”

"No, wait, let me…"

"If we had contact before then, if that were true, then I… I would have…"

Covering her face with her palms, Emilia, who hid Subaru from her sight, wouldn't listen. She was completely shutting herself in, and Subaru's voice had no power to stop her.

He didn't know what sensitive spot he had touched. Even without knowing, he had to form words. So Subaru, driven by emotion,

"You might not understand, but please listen. It's true! I— when I first came to this world, you were the first one to—"

The next moment—the world stopped, and Subaru realized he had touched forbidden words.

Time froze, and the world where everything's movement stalled. Even the sound of his own violent heartbeat, and Emilia's voice he had heard just moments ago, faded away. A silent world descended, where even the lingering trace of a high-pitched ringing in his ears vanished.

Subaru couldn't contain his anger at his own carelessness and the shadow of the executioner who couldn't read the situation.

A shadow appeared. Regardless of Subaru's internal indignation, the merciless executioner revealed itself. The right arm, more distinctly formed than before, instantly took shape from fingertip to shoulder and pressed close to Subaru. The similarly formed left hand was unbalanced, only reaching the elbow.

The left hand gently, lovingly stroked Subaru's rigid cheek. The right arm crept into Subaru's stiff chest, tenderly touching his life-giving heart.

His clenched teeth remained still as intense pain pierced through Subaru's entire body. The pain of being torn apart, the sense of loss so profound it felt like he would vanish, the agony that wouldn't allow him to scream or thrash—these poured down on Subaru unilaterally as punishment for breaking the shadow's forbidden rule.

He didn’t know how long the painful time lasted. Was it a few seconds, a few minutes, or even a few hours? The folly of counting time in a world where time was stopped could never be a means to distract from the pain; it was merely a thought game, a mere fluctuation.

The shadow dissipated, and the world immediately began to move again. Emilia in front of him was still in confusion, and Subaru, who had been desperately resolved to stop it, could only respond with ragged breaths and a sudden gush of cold sweat.

Pain, agony, the shadow of a curse—they interfered, trying to obstruct Subaru’s feelings. The words he had tried to speak rolled back down his throat, and the sincere feelings he should have conveyed lost their way, becoming a heavy weight on Subaru’s shoulders.

“…You’re not saying anything again, are you?”

A voice, tinged with resignation and disappointment, cold with Emilia’s emotions, struck his eardrums. The tears of intense emotion, the heart-wrenching turmoil, all of it surged like waves, churning and sweeping away Emilia’s inner feelings.

Subaru, the only one who had the means to stem it, chose silence instead of offering her a helping hand. Even if the truth was different, that’s all she could perceive. And if he tried to deny it, the black shadow would once again constrict Subaru’s entrails.

An out-of-place anger welled up within him. A boundless sadness swelled in his chest, threatening to tear him apart.

What was he supposed to do? If he tried to convey his sincere feelings, Emilia wouldn’t listen. If he tried to explain everything that had happened, the shadow of the curse would interfere and obstruct him.

“The reason I want to do that for you, for you, is because you, you first, you…”

"…That's not me, Subaru."

Weakly, haltingly, his words spun out in fear of the black demonic hand. Emilia denied them, clearly tinged with sorrow,

"You're just seeing someone else in me, not me."

"No, that's… not true…"

Subaru looked down, covering his face with his palms, weakly uttering words of denial that wouldn't reach her.

The girl who had first picked him up after he fell into this world, Emilia. That memory didn't exist within her. That history, that world, existed only within Subaru. Even so, it had certainly been Emilia.

If the same situation were prepared, she would undoubtedly act the same way. The moment she saved him, when Subaru was about to die a miserable death in that alley, when he was about to perish uselessly without doing anything, that moment would always come.

Even if it hadn't happened in this world, it had certainly happened. Even if there was a history in this world where it hadn't, Subaru was continuously being saved by her.

There was only gratitude that no amount of words could express. Yet, there were no words anywhere in this world to convey it.

Still, he had believed she understood. He wanted to believe. He wanted to convince himself that was why he was allowed to be by her side.

"Why don't you understand…?"

"…Subaru."

"I thought, Emilia-tan… you would understand…"

"The 'me' inside you is amazing, isn't she?"

Such a painful disconnect, a chasm in their hearts, was contained in that one phrase.

Before a stunned Subaru, who had lifted his head, Emilia looked away, turning her face to the side. A lonely smile played on her lips; it seemed self-deprecating, and also pitying of Subaru, who was acting like a child stubbornly refusing to understand.

"She can understand everything without being told. She can feel Subaru's suffering, sadness, and anger as if they were her own."

"…Ah."

"—You have to tell me, Subaru, or I won't understand."

He was denied. Crushed. His illusion shattered into pieces. His shoulders grew heavy, an invisible something covered his entire body, and intense nausea assaulted Subaru. His vision spun, and murky, stagnant emotions swirled in his chest—

He had thought Emilia would understand everything without him saying a word. He had believed Emilia would feel his pain and sadness as if they were her own. He had hoped Emilia would grasp and accept all his feelings and thoughts.

—It was utterly fleeting, arrogant, and a self-centered imposition.

"My…"

He was denied. He was denied it. All that he had believed in, relied on, since falling into this world.

He had fought for his life, clenched his teeth against pain, endured sadness while wiping away tears, all to protect the idol he had envisioned.

Then he saw that non-existent, selfish utopia crumble with a crash,

"Everything so far…"

His lips trembled. His eyes burned. His tongue convulsed, and his heart pounded deafeningly. He looked up. His eyes met Emilia's. Her deep amethyst eyes held only sorrow as she watched him. His own face reflected in her eyes was so miserable, so beyond salvation.

"—It's all thanks to me, isn't it?!"

He shrieked, his enraged voice shaking the waiting room.

"At the loot house when the insignia was stolen! I saved you from that damn dangerous murderer! I put my body on the line! It was all because you were important to me!!"

His fingers clutched the sheets, and blood began to seep into his palms where his nails dug in. His screaming voice cracked in places, echoing even more gratingly.

"It was the same at the mansion! I was gnawed at, desperate! My head was split open, my neck blown off, and yet I still saved everyone in the village, didn't I?! Rem, Ram, they must have ended up in the best possible state! It's because of me, because I was there, right?!"

He listed his accomplishments. He enumerated all his achievements he could think of, chasing after her fading shadow.

"If I hadn't been there, it would have been worse! No one would have been saved! No one, no one, no one! Everything, everything, everything! It was all me! It was all because I was there!"

At the loot house, Emilia should have died. Felt and Old Man Rom too. Even if they overcame that, at the mansion, Rem died, the villagers perished, and perhaps the curse might have even turned its focus towards Roswaal, Beatrice, and Ram who remained in the mansion. Naturally, there was a possibility of Emilia's life being threatened there too.

It was his achievement that he had eliminated all of those threats. It was the result of Natsuki Subaru's actions, something to be proud of, something that deserved reward.

Since he had done all this, since he had dedicated himself to this extent, “You should owe me a debt more than you can ever repay—!!”

He screamed, betraying even the very thought that had been the root of his actions.

His unrewarded feelings, his vainglory seeking praise, his craving for fulfillment, his selfishness longing to be loved, all led Subaru, in the depths of his confusion, to this point.

That was, for both of them, the decisive word.

“That’s right.”

A trembling voice, a quiet murmur, was directed at Subaru, who was sweating profusely and breathing heavily. The sound was one of acceptance, resignation, and resolve; in short, it was the end.

“I owe Subaru a lot, a tremendous amount.”

“Yeah, that’s right. So I…”

“So let’s pay it all back and end it here.”

At her clearly stated words, Subaru’s head snapped up. Seeing only emptiness spread in Emilia’s eyes, staring back at him, he reflected on his own words and realized he had said something irreparable.

Carried away by momentum, swept along by a torrent of emotion, he had said what shouldn’t be said. He had trampled on his purest feelings, the very root of his emotions, and ruined everything with a childish tantrum.

If he defined his relationship with her as one of ‘debts and favors’, then that meant—

“No… No, no, no, that’s not what I meant…”

If the scales of ‘debts and favors’ balanced, then the relationship would be over. If he brought calculation into actions that were supposed to be prompted by selfless desire, by wanting to do something for her, then that’s what it had to become.

"It's okay now. —Natsuki Subaru."

She had always called him by his first name, affectionately, since their first meeting. When she called him by his full name, Subaru understood, too late, that there was no turning back.

Emilia didn't offer a hand to the dejected Subaru. She turned her back to him, shaking her silver hair as if to shake him off,

"Rem will come later, so follow her. I'll leave everything about your stay in the capital to her, okay?"

He couldn't reply nor was he asked to. Emilia walked away, getting further. He couldn't even bring himself to watch her back, let alone reach out to it.

The physical distance grew. Even more so, the emotional distance.

"You know, I…"

Suddenly, Emilia stopped with her hand on the door, and such a murmur fell into the room. Rather than speaking to Subaru, she spoke in a quiet voice, as if to herself,

"I had hopes. That maybe Subaru… That only Subaru wouldn't treat me differently. That you'd see me like any other normal person, like any other normal girl, without making distinctions…"

She was the one who sought fair treatment in the Royal Selection hall. The fact that she was a half-elf must have forced her to endure painful times, making even such a small thing a wish. But,

"That's impossible."

Subaru, too, responded with a small, quiet murmur. Emilia's soliloquy wasn't a question seeking an answer from Subaru. So Subaru's murmur wasn't an answer to her words, but something he said to himself.

Repeating her words, Subaru weakly, helplessly, shook his head,

"Even if you brought out every single person in the world, they couldn’t. I could never see Emilia… You, like any other person.”

That, at least, was an undeniable, honest truth.

The sound of the door closing echoed, and the air suddenly fell silent. Subaru was left alone in the room, curled up on the bed, his gaze wandering.

Suddenly, his eyes caught the robe, snagged on the edge of the bed and about to fall to the floor. He reached out, pulled it closer, and clutched it. He felt as if the warmth of the person who had held it still lingered, and he embraced it tightly against his chest, as if to hold onto that fading warmth.

—On that day, Natsuki Subaru was truly alone in this other world for the first time.

Interlude:
The Knights' Thoughts

1

"So, do you have anything to say for yourself, Knight Julius?"

His low voice echoed heavily through the dim, sunless room.

The setting was the knight's barracks adjacent to the royal castle. Far from the main facilities like the training grounds and guardhouses, this particular room, the Captain's office, stood out for the stronger scent of ink than iron, located at the very back of the building.

Reflecting the owner's temperament, the room's furnishings were minimal, and contrary to his martial appearance, books occupied a surprisingly large portion of the shelves.

"No, nothing at all. Everything is as I reported."

Responding to the question posed by the man scribbling with a quill on documents at the large desk in the center of the spacious room was a young man standing ramrod straight before the desk.

The handsome man, with his neatly combed, faintly bluish-purple hair, pulled down the sleeves of his white uniform, showing no trace of his time at the training grounds. He lightly tapped the hilt of the knight's sword at his hip.

"I will not protest if you deem my conduct unbecoming of a Royal Guard Knight. Please, hand down whatever judgment you see fit, Captain."

Removing the sword, scabbard and all, from his waist, Julius offered it forward as if in supplication. Witnessing this gesture of handing over his knight's sword, the middle-aged man seated in the chair —Marcos, whose expression remained as unyielding as rock— closed one eye at the orderly display.

“Detaining an involved party during a discussion to determine the kingdom’s royal successor, then dragging him to the training grounds, beating him to a pulp, and sending him to the infirmary? Taken purely at face value, this isn’t something that can be resolved with a mere slap on the wrist.”

Marcos shrugged, as if to say “Good grief” as he recounted the misdeed committed by his subordinate, a knight who bore the coveted title of ‘The Finest’.

—Knight Julius and Emilia’s attendant, Natsuki Subaru’s mock battle.

Whether the actual content adhered to that description was another matter, but Marcos was aware of the general outline. Simply put, it was precisely as he’d just stated, and Marcos’s ‘knight’s blood’ wasn’t so thin that he couldn’t grasp other underlying factors.

“There are mitigating circumstances. I’ve received numerous petitions from the other knights at the training grounds, advocating for your actions.”

“That is undeserved praise.”

“It means they see what needs to be seen. I see no reason to deny that aspect. However, you went a bit too far.”

Marcos tossed the stack of petitions onto the desk and tapped its cover, glaring steadily at Julius with his gray eyes.

“A crushed right wrist, ruptured internal organs, multiple fractured ribs, a crushed throat, a cracked forehead, and several missing front teeth —A gruesome sight that would be beyond help without a skilled healing magic user. It was hardly appropriate conduct toward the attendant of a revered individual.”

Marcos had arrived at the training grounds at the same time as the female candidates, only witnessing the final blow.

Yet, even discounting that, the boy was covered in wounds. It was Marcos himself who ordered the unconscious boy to be transported to the infirmary and commanded Ferris to exert his utmost effort.

Seeing the extent of the boy's injuries up close, it was easy to discern whether it was merely a 'mock battle' or something that far exceeded it.

"Was it so unforgivable for someone to insult a knight's pride?"

"No matter how I try to justify it, it would only be personal vendetta. Everything is a result of my own shortcomings. Please, Captain, say no more."

Julius blocked his own escape route, maintaining his stance of accepting punishment. Marcos's gaze wandered for a moment, contemplating what words to choose for such an unyielding attitude. Just then.

"Alright, thanks for waiting! Ferris is back~!"

With a lighthearted attitude that either improved or worsened the atmosphere, a chestnut-haired, maiden-like figure entered the room. It was Ferris, a beautiful young person with semi-long hair, a vivid white ribbon, and even more vividly colored cat ears.

He entered the room casually, and upon seeing Julius and Marcos staring at each other, he placed a hand over his mouth and gave an alluring smile.

"Oh, oh, oh, oh, was Ferris perhaps interrupting? To stumble in while you're having such an intense matchmaking session, was I not reading the mood?"

"…Stop with the pointless chatter and just report. You brat."

"Oh my, Captain. You're showing your true colors, aren't you?"

Marcos muttered, hand on his forehead, grimacing at Ferris's remark. Ferris's unusually casual demeanor had disarmed him, and his true self had slipped out. Seeing the tough, rock-like face contort with bitterness, Ferris happily relaxed his cheeks.

"You're charming even when you're a little rough, Captain. You're always so polite in public, so why not let your true self out when you can take off your public mask?"

"Normally, I should be a public figure in front of my subordinates… Oh, once it's broken, it's ridiculous, isn't it? Fine, just report."

Marcos waved his hand dismissively, and Ferris finally complied with a "Yes, sir." He stood beside the upright Julius, but unlike Julius, he relaxed his shoulders naturally.

"As per the Captain's orders, I've poured all my energy into healing Subaru-kyun. I've mended his bones, closed his wounds, and restored any missing parts, so I diagnose him as fine. Oh, I'll gradually replenish his blood through alternative means, though."

"Good work. No deficiencies?"

"If Ferris misses something, no one in the royal capital will find it, nya~. His physical injuries are fine. —Though I'm not sure about his heart."

Shaking his cat ears, Ferris glanced sideways at Julius's face as he spoke. Seeing no emotional reaction there, he nodded contentedly.

"Even so, Julius, you're truly kind. How many girls' hearts have you captivated with that consideration and thoughtfulness? Even Ferris is getting flustered."

"I don't understand the intent of your statement, Ferris. As for the latter part of what you just said, I respectfully decline."

Ferris chuckled, pouting his lips with a "How mean~," while Julius, with his eyes closed, maintained his initial stance. Marcos, surprisingly, felt a sense of goodwill towards this posture, yet he couldn't help but feel it was also a precarious way of standing. As if speaking Marcos's thoughts aloud, Ferris said,

"You don't have to be so rigid. The perceptive ones already know, and for those who don't, it was extremely effective, so it's fine, isn't it? Or—"

Ferris toyed with a pure white ribbon with his fingertips, then seductively licked his lips with a red tongue.

"Do you think Ferris and the Captain are so empty-headed that we wouldn’t realize the true meaning of your actions, Julius?”

“…Your thoughtfulness leaves me speechless. You make even the diligent among us feel foolish.”

At Ferris’s mischievous question, Julius’s expression finally thawed. There was a helpless smile, like a child whose mischief had been discovered, but it quickly vanished.

“However, I’d like you to be careful with your words. The way you just put it could needlessly wound the honor of my friend.”

“Ferris thinks that’s being overly protective. Don’t children need to experience a little pain to grow?”

“His straightforward way of being is not wrong. A day will surely come when that back will serve as a guide and his sword will fulfill its role. Thinking of that day, we shouldn’t introduce unnecessary changes.”

“Ferris is saying that’s being overly protective.”

With a “Well, I guess it can’t be helped~,” Ferris smiled at Julius, who remained steadfast in his opinion, and then gracefully threw himself onto the reception couch. Julius frowned at his sloppy posture, but Ferris used even that subtle reaction as a playful spice.

“You’re the type to go to such exaggerated lengths to meddle with a boy you just met today, aren’t you? So, it’s no wonder you’re soft on your own people.”

“I didn’t intend to be kind. Rather, I intended to be stricter than usual.”

“Yeah, yeah, everyone was pretty intimidated. Since Julius beat him up so badly… There’s no need to worry about him being attacked by unbridled guys anymore, is there, nya~?”

Julius gave a wry smile at Ferris, who closed one eye and formed a sly, mischievous grin. Marcos, who had been silently listening to their conversation, lowered his chin.

"The younger knights must have been quite agitated by that brat's disrespectful remarks about the knight's status in the hall. All the Royal Guards are guaranteed to have top-notch swordsmanship and pride, after all."

Indeed, it was precisely because the situation was the Royal Selection, a matter that could shake the very foundations of the nation, that the dissatisfaction simmering within the knights' hearts was prevented from exploding. However, this also meant that once they left that place, there was always the risk of it erupting at any moment.

"Even if a hot-blooded knight had demanded an apology, I doubt that young punk would have meekly accepted it. At worst, there was a possibility he could have been cut down for his insolence."

"That's why Subaru-kyun needed to be beaten down by a knight, and fast."

Taking over Marcos's words, Ferris stated the conclusion and pointed at Julius. Then, he held the hand he used for pointing vertically, as if showing gratitude.

"Honestly, if Julius hadn't done it, Ferris was thinking I'd have to, nya~."

"It's a matter of assigning the right person to the right job. You couldn't very well appoint yourself as an attendant, could you? Besides, I had a reason that made it seem natural for me to do it."

He was likely reFerrisng to the minor altercation at the Royal Selection. Given the animosity, no one would question Julius bringing the boy to the training grounds under the guise of personal vendetta.

"If I may say so, I was confident I could handle it best."

"Ah, Ferris agrees with that. In my case, even if I couldn't possibly lose, I couldn't have pulled it off so smoothly."

When it came to sword skill, Ferris stuck out his tongue and laughed, as if to hide his embarrassment. Ferris, who possessed unparalleled skill in water magic and held the title of ‘Blue’ was an exceptionally powerful magic user in the knight order. However, in terms of actual combat ability, he was among the lowest-ranked, or possibly even the weakest, among the Royal Guard.

Julius, who held the title of ‘Finest’ was at the very top of the knight order in terms of pure swordsmanship. There were concerns among those around him that his martial prowess might not be receiving its due recognition, as it seemed almost foolish to compare him to some superhumans in terms of combat power.

“When it comes to dealing with inferiors, entrusting it to Julius was the right call. That’s why I keep telling you to practice your sword more often.”

“No way~! If I swing a sword, sweat, and toil, what if my white, translucent hands get calluses? Can you take responsibility for that?”

“A knight whose livelihood is cutting and slashing shouldn’t be concerned about such things.”

Marcos sighed, shrugging his shoulders in exasperation at Ferris, who casually brushed off his captain’s orders. Then, he wrinkled his usually stoic face and looked at Julius.

“I understand your intentions. I’m not so dense as to think that wasn’t a necessary consideration. However, what’s done is done.”

Despite his sympathy, Marcos stated this briskly. Julius shifted respectfully at his unwavering stance, not mixing personal feelings with official duties, and tightened his slender face as if to reprimand his own slight relaxation.

“Knight Julius Juukulius, I hereby hand down your punishment.”

“Yes, I respectfully await it.”

“You are placed under five days of confinement, prohibited from entering the barracks and the royal castle. During this time, I will hold your sword. Once your confinement is lifted, go to the Vice-Captain to retrieve it.”

"—Understood."

Julius closed his eyes as if to ponder the announced details, then with a graceful movement, he reverently offered the knight's sword he had removed, handing it to Marcos, who reached out. Receiving the knight's sword, the very embodiment of a knight's pride, Marcos slid his fingers over the black scabbard as if testing its weight.

"I apologize. I'm making you bear a responsibility that isn't truly yours."

His expression remained unchanged. However, there was a definite hint of concern in his murmur. In response, Julius shook his head slightly.

"Captain is doing his utmost. The fact that the Royal Guard, once disbanded, remains strong and valiant today is all thanks to the Captain's presence."

"I'm a shallow man who can't even get his subordinates to fall in line properly."

"That's not true, Captain!"

Ferris, who had been silently watching the proceedings until then, refuted Marcos's uncharacteristic self-deprecation. He shifted on the couch, sitting up, and his cat eyes and ears playfully twitched.

"There's no way everyone can be perfectly harmonious, and the Captain has a firm grip on the reins. Then, with the reins the Captain holds, Ferris and Julius strive, and then with the reins that Ferris and others hold, someone else strives."

"Isn't that how it is?" Ferris tilted his head, looking up at Marcos's face. Marcos closed one eye at the words of appreciation and encouragement from his subordinates, then bared his teeth, forming a rough, unruly smile.

"When I say I can't even properly discipline my subordinates, I'm including you, who never dresses appropriately, you know?"

"Ferris's attire being like this is hardly a new development, nya~."

Marcos snorted at Ferris, who stuck out his tongue playfully, then carefully placed Julius's knight's sword on the desk and resettled himself in his chair.

"That's all the business for now. I also have many miscellaneous tasks to handle for the Royal Selection. —I order you to leave."

The return of his first-person pronoun to 'I' was a signal that Marcos's time for being unguarded was over. Sensing this, Julius respectfully and Ferris briefly, but both with equal deference, saluted their superior.

Marcos nodded, silently observing them. As the two turned their backs and exited the Captain's office, the door closed, leaving Marcos alone in the silent space. His lips muttered faintly,

"It's not easy, is it?"

That sentiment did not reach the two who had left the room.

2

Leaving the captain's office, the young man and the beautiful girl-like figure walked side-by-side down the corridor of the barracks.

The sight of the two beauties standing together was like a painting, and the fact that one of them looked like a girl dressed as a man added a suggestive element that sparked the observer's imagination.

Anyway,

"The Captain is so inflexible. If he sees through all the hidden circumstances, then isn't being acquitted good enough, don't you think?"

"For both the Captain and me, it's not that simple. I was expecting a much harsher punishment, so I actually feel the Captain's compassion."

Julius mused about the punishment he received while calming the discontented Ferris. However, a slightly bitter expression subtly mixed with his refined features.

"Though, having to meet the Vice-Captain weighs on me a bit."

"Ah, that's just mean, isn't it? Even I went 'ugh' the moment I heard it. I thought it was amazing that you didn't show it, Julius."

The two spoke about their superior, the Vice-Captain, without lowering their voices. Normally, Julius would be the one to admonish Ferris's behavior, but now he merely offered a wry smile and vague words, making no attempt to correct him.

That alone would reveal that this was the shared understanding of the Vice-Captain for the two of them—no, for the entire Knights' Order.

"So, what will you do now, Julius?"

"Naturally, I'll spend my time at the mansion as per the Captain's orders. I'll explain the situation to Lady Anastasia… Though it's concerning that she's not one to remain quiet."

"I totally get that feeling! At my place too, I'm always on edge wondering what Lady Crusch will do. Still, that unpredictability is kind of Lady Crusch's dangerous charm, wouldn't you say?"

Ferris, sympathizing with a melancholic Julius, then blushed as he gushed in the latter half of his statement. With a dreamy expression, he poked Julius's chest with his finger, twirling it in circles.

After dutifully listening to Ferris's lovesick rambling and letting him have his way, Julius suddenly remarked,

"By the way, Ferris, about him earlier…"

"Lady Emilia is with him now. After that, it'll only be for a short while, but…I think he'll be spending time at the Karsten family mansion."

Before Julius could finish his question, Ferris's voice offered a flat, emotionless reply.

Ferris looked up at the silent Julius from close by, then chuckled, "Nfufu," and said, “You really are kind, Julius. Should I say you’re very knight-like?”

“To be called that is the highest honor. …What do you mean, ‘taken into the Karsten household’?”

“Ferris thinks it’s not good to blab about a patient’s personal information, you know?”

Ferris deflected the question with an endearing gesture. However, Julius picked up on something within his curt reply that led him to understanding, and he muttered, “As I thought.”

“I suspected there were too many suspicious points, but it seems his gate is quite exhausted.”

“…Ferris didn’t say anything, okay?”

Julius gave a small nod, acknowledging Ferris’s feigned innocence.

After all, combining Ferris’s word ‘patient’ with the discomfort Julius himself felt about Subaru made it easy to imagine the background.

The conclusion that those elements led to in the intelligent Julius’s mind was,

“Lady Emilia is truly the type of person who loses out.”

Julius believed there had to be an easier way to live.

There must be clearer ways to repay kindness and to show it. However, she didn’t know them, nor had her life allowed her to learn them.

He thought that this path, for both the giver and receiver, was a precarious and fleeting way of life that could easily lead to misunderstandings and discord.

“Don’t you think she should just live more wisely…?”

Ferris directed a testing question at Julius’s monologue.

Julius pondered for a moment in response, then shook his head, "No."

"It is precisely because she acts that way that she can live nobly and beautifully as herself. I don't wish for her to change. That's why…"

Julius started to speak further but then closed his mouth, deeming it boorish.

Some things were better left unsaid. And Ferris must have understood that too. He also seemed to grasp Julius's hesitation and touched his own cat ears.

"What do you think will happen, Julius?"

"I don't know the future. All we can do is hope. Hope that everyone can live truly and without shame, as themselves."

Julius lifted his head, looked forward, and resumed walking.

Following him a half-step behind, Ferris clasped his hands behind his back and leaned forward.

"Does that include him too?"

"Everyone, Ferris. That's why we carry swords."

Julius wondered if he would break.

If he were to break, he thought it would be a blessing to break here.

However, if he didn't break,

"It wouldn't be so bad to cross swords again with a fool who champions ideals."

Receiving Julius's words, Ferris gave a small, knowing chuckle.

Julius raised an eyebrow at the reaction and made a puzzled expression. Ferris then burst out laughing as if he'd seen something even more amusing on Julius's face.

"Even if you think that way, I bet Subaru-kyun thinks he never wants to go through that again. Not after being so publicly beaten like that.”

A smile he couldn’t completely hide even with his hand over his mouth.

“You had all sorts of motives, but did you get a little irritated after all?”

A testing tone with an upward glance. Julius reflexively started to retort, “That’s unfair,” then suddenly looked inward.

The ill-mannered behavior in the hall, the numerous insults on the training ground. As well as the outcome it produced, and the face of the woman who was burdened because of it, came to mind.

“That’s unfair, Ferris. I am a knight. I impose that upon myself, however imperfectly.”

He gracefully shook his head, as if he had nothing to be ashamed of in his actions, and placing his palm on his chest, Julius looked directly into Ferris’s eyes.

“I was only a little bit annoyed.”

“Ferris was quite a bit, though.”

As if exchanging the greatest joke, they both shared smiles.

Then, approaching the entrance of the barracks, they faced each other again, extended their hands, and shook firmly.

“Well then, until next time. I sincerely wish you and your master good health.”

“You too, Julius, you’ll have to put up with Lady Anastasia’s nagging, but good luck. As for the rest of what you did… Well, I’ll take care of it over here.”

Releasing the handshake, Ferris waved his hand casually and walked out of the barracks.

Watching his back, Julius looked at his retreating friend—and then at his enemy.

“It is Lady Anastasia who will ascend to the throne.”

“Nuh-uh, the throne truly suits Lady Crusch.”

Exchanging such declarations of war, the knights returned to their respective masters.

The red sunlight pouring from the evening sky cast an equal hue upon the two parting figures, and upon all who lived in the royal capital.

The respective Royal Selections were now about to begin.

Bonus Short Stories

Priscilla's Cheers for Me!
Entertainment Part

1

"Well now, this is quite a collection of fools who think too highly of themselves."

Looking down on the scene below her, the woman concealing her mouth with a fan spoke without concealing her contempt.

Cruel beauty, and loveliness like a poison flower. A bewitching girl, who unleashed her beauty like an attack.

Orange hair like the sun, gathered up with jeweled hair pins scattered through it, with her body wrapped in a blood-red dress that boldly exposed her shoulders and upper chest. Her bountiful breasts asserted their existence nearly to the point of spilling out, and complemented the girl with a bewitching allure that would scorch men's ability to reason.

Her blazing crimson eyes were looking down at a castle-like courtyard made of stone—the event being held there, and the feverish madness of the participants.

It was a wide yard, but lacked the artwork and flower beds that are usually found in nobles' mansions. Instead, stone paving was laid on the ground, and a circular stone stage was placed in the center of the site.

The event's participants surrounded the stage, and while raising a roar of hoarse voices and the clanging of metal on metal, their attention was stolen away by the clash of arms occurring on the stage.

"…An exhibition match, competing with martial arts. Well, what an impressive collection of people with too much time on their hands."

Looking down at the madness where jeers flew, the stage was stained with blood and sweat, and sparks flew from weapons, the girl spoke with an expression that said she couldn’t be more bored. As she did, someone down in the courtyard noticed her looking down at them, and all at once, all eyes were drawn to her.

It was a stare imbued with the intensity of a rude crowd of men wearing helmets and armor, and wielding rough weapons. While all of that focused on herself, there was no change in her cool expression.

“See that you all do your utmost. If you do that, perhaps these days that wear down your flesh and blood will be suitable for me to look upon.”

Opening her fan with snap, she haughtily cast those words down at them. Though her voice wasn’t that loud, it rang equally in the ears of everyone in the yard, and their madness erupted again.

…Even while watching that, her red eyes remained entirely cold.

2

“Priscilla! How many times have I told you?! Showing your face in front of them is too strong a shock! Just wait quietly in your room for the results!”

“This is an event that I opened for myself. If I were to not observe it, how would the zeal of the commoners be rewarded? It would be the epitome of inelegance. Indeed, you should stop repeating yourself, you bucket of bones.”

“Bucket of bones…why you… Wha… what is it you think I am to you?”

“A husband who bought a concubine for gold, are you not? Quit making such a fuss over such little things, bucket of bones. It will put me in a bad mood, and you will be the one troubled by that the most. It makes no difference to me, either way.”

“Gh…”

The old man stood, choking on his words, grinding his teeth while a vein stood out on his forehead. He seemed to be nearing the age of seventy, but he stood straight for someone of his age, and his movements were youthful. If one thought of his excessive ambition as the driving force behind this, then the human desire for gain truly is nothing to scoff at.

While narrowing her gaze on the man who was exposing his anger, the girl—Priscilla—thought along those lines.

The relationship between the old man and Priscilla was that of a couple with a tremendous age difference. However, there wasn't a trace of bonds or affection between them; it was a relationship entirely run on necessity.

To the old man, it was his ambitions. To Priscilla, it was… a result of the environment that she'd become used to by now.

"From the very beginning, I was opposed to this. You don't understand the importance of choosing a knight! Pedigree! Status! The dignity of a knight is directly connected to the evaluation of his master's person! To choose that sort of critical follower in this sort of nonsense, of all things…"

"I will do exactly as I please. Do not forget that I have only joined in your plot because it does not go against my whims. Know that the flowering of your long-held ambition depends on each and every one of your words and actions catering to my mood. See that you do your utmost, commoner."

While dealing insensitively with her husband as he spoke hoarsely, Priscilla swung the sleeves of her dress and returned to the window. Despite having been told repeatedly not to show her face, she walked onto the terrace without hesitation.

Caressed by the wind, holding a hand to her hair as it streamed behind her, she looked down at the valiant warriors.

All of them had come seeking the prize of this fighting tournament—in other words, they were men who, seeking the position of Priscilla's knight, had decided to wield their weapons and shed their blood.

Priscilla’s husband, Leip Barielle, was a man who worked in a key position in the Kingdom of Lugunica. If one were to become the knight of his wife, Priscilla, there was no question that they would be given exceptional benefits.

Normally, this was an honor that would not be bestowed on anyone who was not an ‘actual knight’, someone who was part of the royal knights. This time, it had been announced that they would gather together martial artists without official positions, and choose a knight from among them.

Penniless mercenaries, and those without the social status to hope to become a knight, leapt at the chance, and it’s resounding success had led to the fever pitch of the current events in the yard.

Every bit of this, large and small, was done at Priscilla’s initiative, over Leip’s objections.

“It is quite an assembly of commoners, indeed. But even with this many gathered…”

Even while looking down at the realization of her proposal, with so many glory-seeking warriors gathered together, Priscilla’s expression did not brighten.

Disappointment at unmet expectations dwelt in her eyes, and her heart continued to grow colder towards the mens’ fervor and conflict. It was not the face of one who was enjoying themselves. It was the look of one observing a barnyard territorial dispute.

“There is no one who would make my heart dance, then. At this rate, perhaps no one will become my knight.”

She murmured something so selfish that if Leip, still inside the room, had heard it, he might have actually burst a vein.

Neither would it have been odd if the martial artists, upon learning that nothing would come of so many of them gathering, had then and there rushed to attack Priscilla and those with her. The reason that Leip was looking pale despite his anger was that he knew he didn’t have sufficient troops stationed at the mansion to keep control of the martial artists.

All of these unfortunate futures would be decided on by a single whim of the girl known as Priscilla.

“…Hm?”

Just as she was about to give in to boredom and turn and walk away, Priscilla stopped.

Turning at the waist to check on something that had caught the corner of her eye, she walked over to the railing of the terrace. Placing her hands together on the waist-height railing and looking down at the garden, she saw it.

“…Hey now, if you cringe like that, someone could really have their feelings hurt. Who? Me.”

Saying that, a man stood atop the stone stage, glaring down at the men around him. Why did this man draw Priscilla’s attention? The answer is simple.

It’s because at the moment he appeared, the roar of the crowd ceased as though it had been doused with water. And the reason for that would be clearly understood the moment you saw him.

He was a man in an unusual outfit. His head was protected by a pitch black full helmet that covered his entire face. Despite that, below the neck he was wrapped in a cheap-looking cape, and finished off with light linen clothing on his upper and lower body. His feet, too, wore sandals woven from plants, and affixed with cloth, so he was sacrificing everything aside from ease of movement.

And more than anything else, what drew the attention of the people surrounding him, was that the left arm that should have been there, wasn’t.

It would be one thing to see that while walking around the town, but quite another at a fighting tournament where they were supposed to be competing with martial arts. Anyone would understand without even having to think about it, how much of a handicap it was to be one-armed.

“In that case, does it mean he has great confidence in that one arm?”

It’s likely that everyone there came to the same conclusion as Priscilla. With a wide-bladed sword over his shoulder, the fully-armored warrior facing the one-armed man began shortening the distance between them without letting down his guard.

In response to that, the man cracked the bones in his neck, and lazily spoke.

“Oh, oh, now you’ve gotten all serious. …Just so you know, I’ll cry if I lose.”

Drawing the sword that was sheathed horizontally behind his waist, he began casually closing the distance while tossing jokes.

3

“Interesting. Interesting, interesting, interesting, interesting. Mhmm, interesting!”

Accompanied by the sound of her fan opening and closing, Priscilla repeated that with a terribly pleased look on her face.

Walking restlessly about the room, a faint excitement colored Priscilla’s cheeks. Her appearance gave off an air of passion that was out of the ordinary, and not intended by the woman herself.

Leip, seated nearby, groaned softly at her bewitching elegance. An old man whose lust should have long since dried up, he shook his head to try and deny the thirst-like emotion pouring into his heart.

“What do you mean, interesting?! Honestly, what are you thinking?! You sent away everyone you had gathered, even the victor, and the only one left is that?! Are you insane?!”

“I have no intention of getting absorbed into a meaningless debate about whether I am sane or mad. Who, indeed, has declared you to be sane? The correctness of my actions will be proven by providence, through their results. You should not waste my time with tedious words. Instead, hurry up and bring him to me.”

“You little…”

As Leip sat unable to speak past his exasperation, Priscilla showed no hint whatsoever of giving ground to him. At the point the air in the room was stagnating to its worst, a knock was heard from outside the room.

“Leip-sama. Priscilla-sama. I’ve brought him.”

“Mhmm. I’ll permit it. Enter.”

As Priscilla responded before her husband, there was a brief hesitation outside the door. Then, a youth in his early teens came into the room, along with…

“When I’m suddenly called for by the higher-ups like this, an easily-spooked guy like me gets a little nervous.”

With the joints of his helmet rattling, the one-armed man entered. He looked around the room unconcernedly, and shook his shoulders when he realized that Priscilla was staring at him.

“It is my great honor to have been invited. …Should I kneel, perhaps?”

“I care not. There is no value in the empty posturings of the common rabble. Show me where your worth lies. If not for that, then there was no point in having called for you.”

“What a scary lady. …I hope I didn’t come to the wrong place.”

“You lout! How dare you speak to my wife like that!”

Watching Priscilla and the man exchange disrespectful words, Leip’s patience ran out. He marched over next to him, frothing at the mouth at his ongoing rudeness.

“This barbaric attitude and behavior! And what do you mean by keeping your face concealed, after having come to this place. For unseemly behavior like yours, I will strike you down here and now…”

“Bucket of bones.”

“What?! I’m in the middle of something…”

“Do be quiet.”

Priscilla’s attack was launched along with her words. Her closed fan struck the back of Leip’s head, and the red-faced old man fell without a sound. After having knocked her husband flat, Priscilla paused a moment, and then turned her eyes to the boy butler who was standing by.

“Take him away.”

At the short command, the boy butler obeyed without any sign of hesitation. Lifting the large-framed old man with his shoulder, even while his feet were dragging on the floor, the boy took him out of the room as though quite familiar with doing so.

As the door closed with a click, the only ones left in the room were Priscilla and the man.

“Well then, at last that nuisance is out of the way.”

“I’m not really in a position to point fingers, but isn’t this a little too eccentric? Also, suddenly being alone in a room with a guy who’s this suspicious-looking; it seems like you’re a little too lacking a sense of self-preservation.”

“You think you could do something to me? Don’t think so highly of yourself, commoner. The only thing that can do anything to me is my own will. Nothing aside from that can have any effect on me at all.”

Seeing Priscilla speak proudly in complete self-confidence, the man shook his head and let out a deep, deep sigh.

“I surrender. This is way harder than I imagined. What can I show you that would make you approve of me, princess?”

"Hmm, yes. …Show me you can survive."

The moment after she finished speaking, Priscilla's body spun at high speed.

She spread the folding fan she was holding and tossed it in the air to block the man's sight. He immediately swept it away with his right hand. However, by that time Priscilla had already slid to his side, and extended her hand to his waist—she grasped the hilt of the man's weapon, the broad-bladed sword, and drew it.

"Hah."

A short breath out. One flash of the drawn blade. Carried by centrifugal force, the blade mowed horizontally through the man's neck. …I definitely got him. That conviction passed through the back of Priscilla's mind.

"This is really what they mean by getting away by the skin of your teeth."

But, at the end of her swing, the tip of the sword had cut nothing more than a shallow scratch in the man's neck; he had leaned back out of the way. A head sent flying, and a fountain of blood erupting. It was a solid enough strike that one could vividly imagine that occurring. That result had been avoided by a literal hair's breadth.

"Please spare me, princess. You're not gonna try that again, are ya?"

"…Be at ease. I have seen all I needed to with that one swing. Hmm…interesting, indeed."

As the man asked that fearfully, Priscilla smiled faintly and tossed his sword back to him. Seeing the unsheathed blade spinning in the air, he rushed in a panic to where it was going to land.

"But there's no way I can catch that!"

With a sharp noise, the tip of the sword tore through the room's carpet, and buried itself in the floor.

“Look here, commoner. What sort of disrespect is that? What do you think you are doing to my carpet?”

“Hey, it’s not my fault. No matter how you think about it, it’s you that went off like that, princess. Actually, how am I supposed to look at this? Can I pat myself on the back for meeting with your approval?”

“As long as the interest you provide me continues to be more valuable than this carpet. Whether it’s this moment just now, or your performance as a sideshow… your actions have value to the extent that they entertain me.”

“…”

At Priscilla’s words, the man gulped a little. Imagining the face on the other side of the helmet, Priscilla pulled a fan from her cleavage (different from the fan that had fallen to the floor), concealed her mouth, and continued.

“And so, what do you mean by not removing your helmet even in my presence?”

“…I messed up a little, and now it’s not a face I can show to people. I wouldn’t want to put you in a bad mood, so please put up with it. What’s more, I haven’t introduced myself yet.”

“Very well, I’ll allow it. Asking the name of a jester, and placing him by my side, is part of my generosity. Tell me your name.”

Without any sort of formal exchange, and with an imperious attitude, Priscilla allowed him to offer his name.

“…Aldebaran. My name is Aldebaran. Princess. I’d like you to just go with Al, basically, but I wanted to give you my name properly. …You’re my master, after all.”

“It has a nice ring to it. You have a good name, Aldebaran. And, I am generous. I will not ignore the first request from my attendant. I shall call you ‘Al’.”

As Al lowered his head in gratitude, Priscilla sniffed softly. Then, as she watched Al pull his sword from the floor,

“After this, I will be throwing myself into a contest that will determine the course of the country. It is a contest whose outcome is already apparent, but the way will most likely be rough. Al, I command you to clear the way for me. I trust you have no objections?”

“Ah, of course. …That’s the reason I’ve rushed to your side like this.”

Aldebaran’s murmur carried a deep meaning, but Priscilla overlooked it as unimportant.

It was obvious that he was a man with secrets. She knew well that they hadn’t yet shown each other enough of themselves for him to swear fealty from his heart. Despite that, Priscilla was able to be at ease because of the conviction she held.

It was her philosophy on life itself…

“…This world is designed to operate in the way that works best for me.”

That was the reason for the absolute self-confidence and self-esteem that the girl called Priscilla Barielle continued to carry.

Continued in The Day I gave up on being a Following Star

Anastasia's Prosperity Record

1

Noticing that the arranged time approached, Julius Juukulius looked skyward.

Julius: "It's nearly time… I lose track of time every time I start working on documents."

Removing his glasses, he gently pressed his tired eyes, after a long period of looking at tiny letters. He always wore these glasses when he had to fulfill his duties as a noble, but when assuming his role as a knight, he took these off. That detail was part of Julius's philosophy, who believe he should keep his noble and knights roles separated.

???: "Nii-sama, the time to get ready has come."

Some seconds after that, there was a knock on the office door, and a moderate voice was heard from the other side.

Julius: "I am finalizing everything here. Thank you for your reminder, Joshua."

Joshua: "Put yourself in my shoes. You told me it was an important meeting for our House and consequently, for the whole Kingdom of Lugunica. It's natural for me to be worried."

In response, a man of delicate features entered the room. His hair was styled in a ponytail, and showed a gentle smile. His name was Joshua Juukulius, Julius's brother, who was 4 years younger than him, and one of his unconditional supporters. Even though he was physically weak, and wasn't blessed with sword talent, he was a class apart when it came to smarts and had an easier time with studying compared to his older brother.

Joshua: "Nii-sama? Is something the problem?"

Julius: "…No, nothing, I was just spacing out. I'm alright.

Joshua: “Good, then leave the job of cleaning this up to me, and go change so you can meet your visitor.

Julius: “I could do that myself, but… You’re better than me at that, Joshua.”

Joshua: “Haha. That’s right. Most importantly of all, you should not keep a lady waiting.”

After that suggestion, Joshua winked at his brother, who was quite surprised with that gesture, despite the fact he was quite the upright gentleman, even if he ignored his familial bias.

Julius: “I was not expecting you to make that sort of joke, Joshua. Who did you learn it from?”

Joshua: “Who else could it be but yourself, brother?”

His immediate answer was another surprise to Julius who, despite that, agreed with Joshua’s assessment, and started reflecting on his usual behavior around his brother.

2

???: “Glad to meet ya. I am Anastasia Hoshin, the president of the Hoshin Trading Company.”

The one graciously laughing in the parlor was a girl who was apparently young, and was not very tall. She had wavy purple hair, and she covered her body with a white cloth, made out of animal fur. Her soft lips were always pursed in a smile, and her light blue seemed to calm down anyone who talked with her. Julius was not an exception to this, and was swallowed by her charm, and needed a moment to compose himself.

Julius: “The pleasure is mine. My name is Julius Juukulius, heir of the Juukulius House. Thank you for agreeing to meet me, Anastasia-sama.”

With his hand on his chest, Julius performed a knights’ curtsy to Anastasia. Looking at that act of formality, the girl raised her eyebrows slightly.

Anastasia: “It’s alright, let’s not make this too formal. You sought me out, after all. I accepted the invasion because I felt both of us could get a lot outta this conversation.”

Julius: “I am glad to hear it. Was there any issue during the trip? I attempted to take precautions for every possible problem, but if there was anything that caused you discomfort, please do not hesitate in telling me.”

Anastasia: “Nah, it was so peaceful that I have nothin’ to complain about. Quite the opposite, my only worry right now is that I may be hasslin’ ya too much.”

She said, with a shy smile on her face.

Anastasia had a very noticeable accent, characteristic of the powerful country to the West, Kararagi, a federal city-state composed of many cities. The origin of that accent was deeply related to the country’s own origin as well.

The worry shown in the girl’s face, however, was easily identified if one followed the direction of her gaze, towards what was happening behind Julius’s back.

???: “Woooooow! You got a lotta expensive things, mister! It’s all shiny! How cool!”

???: “Onee-chan, calm down… Don’t touch other people’s things! If that thing falls…”

???: “Lookie here, Hetaro! It’s gold! I’m all golden!”

Hetaro: “S-S-S-Sisteeeeer…!”

Two little children had run into the room and were playing around in a corner. Neither of them was tall enough to reach Julius’s waistline, and were aptly described as feline demi-humans with orange fur, wearing a white overcoat. The way they spoke clued people into their relationship as brother and sister, but the girl kept touching and picking up every object in sight, leaving her brother exasperated at her behavior.

Anastasia: “I’m sorry for this mess, but she means no harm. I’d be happy if ya were understandin’.”

Julius: “I’m not as strict to the point of chastising children for being children. But may I inquire who are they?”

Anastasia: “In theory, they’re my bodyguards. They may not look like it, but they’re pretty strong, ya know? They’re second fiddle only to my army’s captain, who stayed behind with the merchants.”

Obviously, Anastasia’s explanation surprised Julius, who looked again at the demi-human siblings. If they were indeed strong warriors belonging to a fighting force, despite their cute appearance, that would mean that they belonged to no other but Anastasia’s renowned personal army.

Julius: “So, they both belong to the Iron Fang?”

Anastasia: “Yes, and they’re both vice-captains on top of that. In truth, they’re triplets who work together, but the last remainin’ one, who’s a lot better at handlin’ money, stayed behind as punishment.”

It was common knowledge that the Iron Fang mercenary army was the strongest of its kind in Kararagi, and it was at the exclusive service of the Hoshin Trading Company, and would step in to solve only the most extreme of conflicts.

Anastasia: “Anyways, today is only meant to be a first meetin’, so don’t worry too much ‘bout them. I promise ya I have no intention to start a fight, I actually want to keep a good relationship between us.”

Julius: “I must still apologize for my lack of temperament. Even though I am a Royal Knight, I ended up having quite the exaggerated reaction at becoming aware they belong to such an elite army.”

Anastasia: “Ya know, your reaction is actually rather refreshin’, as many people don’t believe it at all when they learn.”

Looking at Anastasia’s calculating gaze, Julius was forcefully reminded of the girl he was facing. Despite her tender age, she already had quite the list of accomplishments, having already distinguished herself in the highly competitive commercial atmosphere of Kararagi. And now, she had the wish to expand her business into Lugunica.

Anastasia: “Alright, let’s start this from zero. Currently, the Kingdom of Lugunica is facin’ an economic recession, and the public coffers have never been this dried-out before, which is makin’ it difficult for the ones in charge to manage the Kingdom. Am I right?”

Julius had to put in quite some effort to maintain a composed and inexpressive face, as Anastasia did not hold back in picking her first topic. The subject of Lugunica’s precarious financial situation, was a critical matter. As such, it was information to which the majority of nobles were not privy to; even those working for Lugunica’s government were mostly unaware of this fact. Obviously, outsiders should not know that either.

Anastasia: “Before ya start lookin’ for a culprit, I’ll assure ya no one revealed anythin’ they shouldn’t. ‘Twas a conclusion I got from sightseein’ in the city myself.”

Julius: “Sightseeing…?”

Anastasia: “Negociatin’ starts before getting’ to the table, by researchin’ the subject I want to discuss. I assume you’ve also done your research on me, no? In my case, I like walkin’ ‘round with my own two feet, and takin’ a good look with my own eyes.”

Appreciating the vague aroma of her tea, Anastasia divulged her philosophy as if it was a natural thing to do.

Originally, this meeting with Anastasia had been proposed by Julius, who had set his eyes upon the Hoshin Trading Company, which was expanding very rapidly in Kararagi and had remarkable potential for expansion. He had thought that it would have been possible to bring it to Lugunica, so that it would help with its economic comeback. Now, it was purely Julius’s responsibility to reign in the girl in front of him in a proper fashion, so that his wager would not come back to bite him. However, right now, it was Anastasia who was in total control of this meeting.

Anastasia: “To be honest, I’m not very interested in Lugunica as it is now. Even if my Company expands to this country, we’ll only be able to profit at the start of operations, and it won’t last long. That is because, in only a short time, this Kingdom’s administration’ll be in ruins, and I don’t wanna be investin’ money and manpower knowin’ that.”

She had no reserves in appraising Lugunica’s current state harshly. However, as the hair of the Juukulius Family, Julius was perfectly aware of how her words rang true, and did not know how to reply, choosing to remain silent about her statement. However, Anastasia added,

Anastasia: “That bein’ said… I see some potential in the Juukulius House. Not only you, but from what I grasped, your brother is also quite capable, ya know? Even if this Kingdom’s fated to fall, as far as I’m concerned, I don’t think it’s a poor choice to keep a good relationship with your House in the long term.”

Julius: “…”

That was a very clear provocation. Even if he knew that, if Julius remained quiet, it was because Anastasia’s words had the power to enchant his own heart.

At that very moment, his voice, his gestures, his gaze, all these things were weapons that Anastasia could use in this negotiation.

At that very moment, Julius was nothing but her opponent, an opponent she must defeat. For that reason…

Julius: “…Unfortunately, that will not be possible. The House of Juukulius swore absolute loyalty to the Kingdom of Lugunica, and it shall fall alongside the Kingdom. That being said, I have no doubt whatsoever that its greatest goal is to work tirelessly so that the worst may not come to pass.”

Anastasia: “…”

With that confident statement, which left no room for doubt, it was

Anastasia's turn to end up completely stunned. She knew she was going to be rejected, but not with such conviction. Her light-blue eyes were open wide in a genuine expression of shock, which curiously made Julius think her more attractive compared to the times she acted in calculated fashion.

Mimi: "Heeey, miss! Look at dis, miss! Isn't this cool?! This is so cool!"

Once the two sides had disclosed the first cards they held in their hands, everything pointed that the meeting would end up fruitless. Right at that time, the little demi-human girl came bursting into the conversation giggling like a madwoman. She then turned to Julius, smiling ear-to-ear, and asked,

Mimi: "Mister, is dis here yours? Why does it look like a lizard?"

Julius: "This is not a lizard, but a dragon. It is the symbol of our Kingdom."

Anastasia: "Mimi! Stop hasslin' Julius so much. C'me here, gimme that."

What the girl named Mimi held in her hand was an insignia, with an embedded jewel in its center. That was an item of ultimate importance to the Kingdom of Lugunica, and it should have been well-kept, however…

Julius: "Anastasia-sama. I don't mean to be rude, but that insignia is an artifact of great value and…"

Anastasia: "Yes, I apologize. I'll give it back, of course. But hey, this is quite the beautiful glow, ain't it?"

The girl smiled faintly when she noticed that the jewel encrusted in the insignia glowed slightly, and looked at it as if she were hypnotized.

Yet, more than anyone else present at that place, the one that was most stricken by shock was, obviously, Julius himself.

After all, that glow could only meant one thing. He could only kneel as a reaction.

Julius: “Anastasia-sama. It seems that we need to have an even more important conversation.”

Anastasia closed her eyes after witnessing that sudden change in Julius’s behavior who, in turn, began thinking on the possible results of the events that had just occurred.

The President of the Hoshin Trading Company, a foreigner, had reached the conclusion that Lugunica had no value whatsoever, to her.

But what if she had the chance to analyze the Kingdom’s workings from within? Would she keep the same opinion in not wanting to get involved with it?

More than that, what would she do if she had the power to directly influence the Kingdom’s course?

Julius: “…”

And if, by chance, she accepted to be a part of what the glow of the insignia implied…

What would Julius himself choose?

END

The Saga of the Great Duchess Crusch Begins☆

1

When Felix Argyle was young, the world was a colorless, transparent place.

Without color, without sound, without flavor, without warmth.

Nothing was given to him, and nothing was taken away. From the start, he possessed nothing.

In a room so dark he couldn't see even his own hands, atop a bed he'd laid on for so very long that his own scent had worked its way into it, passing the time by thinking about nothing was all that he had.

Occasionally, food was pushed in through the gap under the door. Depending solely on the faint light, he crawled on the floor and rushed eagerly to the food like a dog would. Grabbing the cold food in his hands, occasionally pushing his nose into the bowl like an animal, sloppily getting his face dirty while biting and chewing his food.

When he finished eating, he would push the tray and dishes against the door, return unsteadily to his bed, and pass the time silently. If the dishes happened to be removed at some point, he paid it no mind.

Even if he'd lost sight of what it meant to be alive, he had no reason to die so he didn't die. Putting the food that was offered into his mouth, too, had no more meaning than that.

"…"

He opened his mouth and tried to speak. Whether his voice emerged or not, he wasn't really sure. Perhaps his ears were dead; perhaps his throat was dead. Or perhaps in truth it was he himself that was dead?

Idly giving himself to pondering such endless thoughts, Felix passed the time. Thinking back and forth about life and death, too, was something he had repeated more times than he cared to count.

"…"

Once more, it felt like the air was shaken. His mouth was closed. He hadn't tried to speak. What was it that he thought he'd heard? Perhaps an insect had made its way into the room. His unsanitary self, and the food he'd scattered as he ate. It was the sort of environment where insects might breed and fly around.

Even though he felt nothing, the thought of passing the time in a room together with an insect was somehow unpleasant. For someone who was even less than an insect to think that; would the insect mock him for it?

"…"

He heard something again. Had he laughed, perhaps? Trying to touch his own face, his fingers sliced through thin air. He'd lost track of even the location of his face. He let out a sigh at his completely broken mind.

…It was the next moment.

"I will take a lack of response as agreement…!"

Right after he thought he'd heard a gallant voice, the door was kicked open from the outside with a violent crash.

The hinges were sent flying by the impact, and the dishes that had been heaped in front of the door were scattered. At the sudden intrusion and sound of breaking pottery, Felix's body shook and, from atop the bed, he looked towards the door.

Brilliant light poured through the doorway that had lost it's door, and even the agitated dust could be seen floating in the air like something from a fantasy. A small silhouette advanced calmly through that light.

"Is Felix Argyle, the firstborn of the Argyle family, here?"

Felix felt that the voice was terribly strained with emotion.

After all, if you listened closely, it was the voice of a young child. A high-pitched voice suited to that age was intentionally ornamented with gallantry and firmness, turning it into a voice that would pass through the eardrums and pierce the heart.

But, it wasn’t something that seemed overdone. There was nothing forced in the attitude of the voice’s owner. It was simply that the development of the speaker’s body couldn’t keep up with the speed of her heart.

“…”

Still lying prone on his bed, Felix stared wordlessly at the intruder. Her eyes were narrowed in the dim light, and when they adjusted to the darkness, she finally noticed Felix.

And, changing her expression to a little smile,

“I see you there. …Come now, the time has come for you to be freed from this injustice.”

Saying that, she clasped Felix’s filth-covered hands without any hesitation.

2

As warm water was being poured on his head, Felix was at last able to feel that this was really happening.

The water traversed his long-grown hair, and washed off the grime all over his body. The clear water that had been poured on his head had been colored pitch black by the time it reached the floor of the bathing room.

“This is quite refreshing, isn’t it.”

Watching as the filth was washed off of Felix, the one bathing along with him spoke cheerfully. It was a young girl, wearing nothing on her pale body. Her green hair was long, and a strong conviction dwelt in her eyes. Her beautiful, dignified features made her seem more fearless than one would expect from her age.

Even though she was no older than him, Felix couldn’t help but turned his gaze downward due to the great difference he felt between them.

“Don’t cast your gaze downwards. Your eyes will become clouded. If your spirit grows dim, you may lose sight of your reason to live, as well.”

She smoothly cut off Felix’s fears. Taking the arms that Felix was still unable to move properly, the girl’s skin touched his as she cleaned his body with a washcloth.

While having the filth washed away from his body, Felix finally wondered who she was. Why had she taken him out of that room, and why was she close to him now?

“The Argyle household is under my household’s jurisdiction. Seeing a problem, and taking action, are only natural.”

“Juris…diction…”

“That’s right. It seems there had been rumors for quite a while. The eldest son of the Argyle family was an illegitimate child, he was seen as detestable, and his existence was hidden deep inside the mansion, they said.”

“…”

At the words “illegitimate child”, Felix’s body trembled slightly.

They were words he’d heard many times before he was thrown into that darkness. Even though he didn’t understand their meaning, he knew that they meant something unacceptable. That was why he was put in that place…

“You were seen as an illegitimate child because of those ears atop your head, you see.”

“These…”

“The Argyle household is a family of humans. Naturally, both of your parents are human as well. For you to have demi-human ears in spite of that, it was only natural for infidelity to be suspected. However, it’s already been proven that that was an error.”

“…huh?”

On the verge of looking downwards again, Felix raised his head at the girl’s declaration. Her face was right in front of his eyes, close enough to feel her breath, and his cheeks began to redden involuntarily.

“Because of a blessing I’ve had since birth, I can see through the lies of others. Your mother was not unfaithful. I confirmed it myself. After that, I climbed up the Argyle family tree and found the cause. Your ears are a throwback, a recessive trait from a distant relative four generations back.”

Felix was holding his breath. She smiled at him, and continued.

“It was all begun by a misunderstanding. …It is no sin for you to be alive.”

“…”

“Raise your head, look forward, and live with unclouded eyes. It might be difficult to do it right away, but I will help you as well. So for now, please believe in me.”

At that time, the smile she ended with looked like the carefree girl’s true face.

3

When the bath was over, the new clothing he put on was his first in longer than he could remember. Having the fabric not stick to his skin, and being able to slide his fingers along the cloth, were quite nostalgic as well.

The wind blew across his freshly-cleaned skin, and the flaxen hair that had grown long was waving in the breeze. Following a servant of the mansion going before him, he pressed forward bit by bit, with a faltering motion, as though remembering how to walk.

"…Felix-sama, we have arrived."

Saying that, the elderly butler opened a door, and with a burst of wind, a large room came into view.

In the Argyle manor's great hall, food was placed out buffet-style, and he could see that preparations had been made to welcome back the eldest son who had been freed from the darkness.

All eyes were focused on him, and Felix became aware that his heart was beating rapidly. His pulse became more strained, and he started feeling short of breath. He started feeling that he wouldn't be able to stand without leaning on something, and looking around for something to support himself with, Felix placed a hand on a nearby table.

"Felix…"

Out of the quiet murmuring, that voice found its way into Felix's ears.

Without thinking, Felix looked towards it and noticed. It was the voice of a woman looking intently towards him with trembling eyes, a woman with long flaxen hair.

Mother. Mother's expression was stiff, and she was covering her mouth with a hand. Next to her was a bearded man, and he finally realized that the person holding his mother's shoulder was his father. His parents were standing right there.

"Felix, I'm sorry. I…we…"

The parents who had thrown him in a place like that, were right there.

"…"

His mother took a step forward, and tried to speak with a sobbing voice, but Felix wasn't listening. His hand wandered about the table that had been supporting it, and the moment it felt something hard and cold, it gripped firmly. A knife. Holding it in a reversed grip, he looked up at his mother as she walked unsteadily towards him.

"…!"

If he stepped forward, it would reach. The moment he was sure of that, Felix's body sprang towards his mother.

But after being shut away for so long, his legs faltered, and the strike he'd aimed at his mother's chest cut through the air without even grazing her. She let out a shrill scream, and his father and the others nearby realized the cause of her cry. But there was no longer any way for him to stop.

Hate. Hate. He hated everything. He hated everything so very much, and he could not stop.

"…Aah!"

He jumped once more towards his mother, who had fallen backwards and was now scrambling away. He wouldn't let her get away this time. He raised the silvery sparkle over his head, and it's point shone as it aimed for his mother's chest…

"You fool…!"

The feeling of the blade burying itself in flesh filled his hand, and Felix was struck by a fierce impact, falling to his side on the floor. The knife clattered on the floor after being ripped from his hand, and the great hall's carpet was spotted with red.

He'd definitely stabbed her. He'd done it. With these hands, the object of his vengeance had…

"…"

The stagnation that had pooled in his chest vanished as though it was draining away through a newly-opened hole. A dark smile appeared on Felix's face at that sensation, and he raised his head.

…The green-haired girl was bleeding, and lay collapsed on the great hall's floor.

"…huh?"

At this scene he had not imagined, Felix's thoughts came to a halt.

Sound faded from the world, color faded, and it seemed as though even motion had faded. A world opened up, the same as the one he'd been in in that dark room, and the only difference was that the girl's bleeding would not stop.

While no one else was unable to move, Felix made himself crawl over to the girl, and arrived at her side. Taking her listless form in his arms and raising her, he spoke.

"Wh…why… why did you…?"

"…fool."

The girl's eyes were closed, and she gave a brief answer to Felix as he trembled. She feebly forced open her long-lashed eyes, and looked at his wretched face.

"Open your…eyes. Raise your head, and look forward. To live with unclouded eyes… does not mean to fulfill the darkness you have inside."

"But, but I… then what should I have done? It's cruel, isn't it? It's unfair, isn't it? After being treated like that… how can I forgive everyone…?"

"There's no need… to forgive…don't misunderstand. Your feelings are legitimate. It's only natural. It's simply that you tried to go about it the wrong way…"

"Wrong way… What's… the right way?"

"A way of living, that brings no shame to your soul."

Her weak voice became clear for just a moment as she passed on that conviction. Strength returned to her eyes, she raised her head, and she looked straight at Felix as she spoke.

"Never forget, Felix. …Live in a way that brings no shame to your soul.”

“Ah, aah, aaah!”

Having said what must be said, the strength left the girl’s body. When he could tell that the body in his arms was becoming heavier, even as the life in it became lighter, Felix was assaulted by a horrible sense of dread.

Back in that place, during the time when he couldn’t even tell if he were dead or alive, he’d been conscious of his own death many times. A fear that he never felt during any of those times, ruled him now.

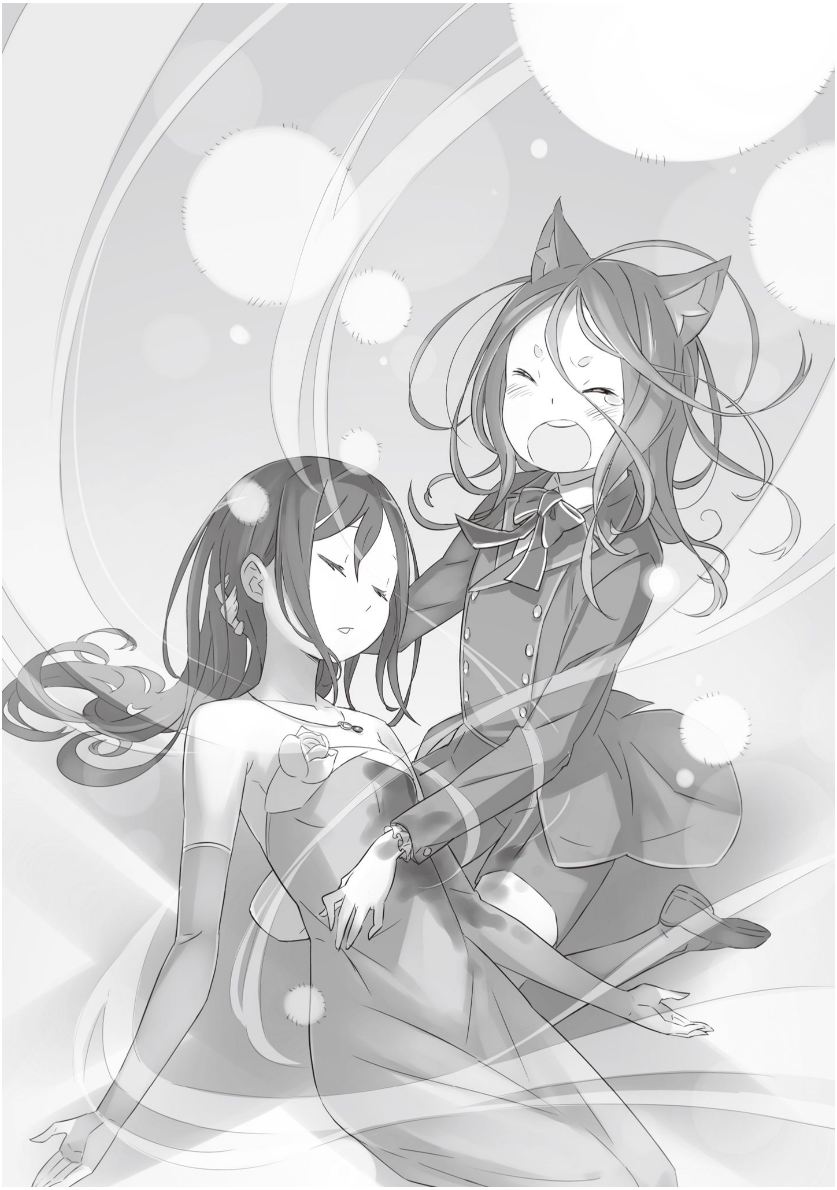
“N…no. No. No, no, no, no… You…can’t. You can’t…!”

A life being lost. The one he owed a debt to. The girl’s honest eyes, that looked forward. His own soul.

Countless words flew around in his confused head, and Felix looked up at the ceiling and screamed aloud. With his throat shaking, and crying out until it seemed he would cough up blood, he denied the deepening shade of death enveloping the girl.

Instantly, blue-white light poured from all over Felix, and it then spread to the girl’s body.

“…”



Felix blinked. It was a talent for magic that even he himself was not aware of, that had never had a chance to blossom—Felix Argyle the “Blue”, who would become able to utilize healing power sufficient to have his name recorded in the history of the kingdom. It was the light of his first healing.

The healing power bestowed vitality on the girl’s body, closed her wound, and compensated for her life’s mana that had flowed away. Color returned to her pale cheeks, and her halted breathing began again.

“…It appears I… escaped death. It would seem… you are telling me to live on.”

“…Mhmm. Um…yeah. I mean, yes.”

As the girl opened her eyes, Felix nodded at her, and spoke politely.

Beyond any doubt, there was only respect in his voice. The girl had used her body as a shield to protect him from his mistake. When he’d been as good as dead, she made him raise his head, and taught him how to live.

If she wished for him to live in a way that brought no shame to his soul, then…

“Please let me stay beside you. I want to use up my life by your side. I know it will be the best place for me to make my soul shine.”

He could tell that her eyes narrowed once as she listened to the words of one who had stabbed her. The girl sighed at him as he waited fearfully for her answer, unknowingly holding her tighter in his arms.

“Crusch Karsten.”

“…huh?”

“My name is Crusch Karsten. You should learn the name of your master, at least.”

Though her body still would not move on it’s own, she smiled proudly.

When he realized that he would be allowed to stay with her, Felix looked upwards, and cried.

“…ah”

With a loud voice, with tears dripping and dripping, like a child that had forgotten to cry, like a child that had recalled how to cry, like a newborn babe raises its voice.

With Crusch stroking his head with her palm, he continued crying for a long, long time.

Continued in The Saga of the Great Duchess Crusch Begins, The Book of Vows☆

Felt Gathers Thugs

1

Sitting in the dragon carriage with my legs on top of the bench, I sighed, and decided to finally break the ice.

???: “So, in the end, everythin’ went exactly as you planned.”

Look, in all my life, I think I have never been so upset before. They put me in a disgusting and uncomfortable dress and threw me into a meeting that had nothing to do with me all of a sudden, without bothering to explain anything at all.

Still, the redhead in front of me had a few words of choice.

Reinhard: “Felt-sama, even if you are not in public, you should strive to keep up a dignified front. A real lady should act with poise, even among close friends or alone.”

Felt: “Well, I wish those ladies would just explode! And did you really have the nerve to call yourself an close friend of mine to my face? Stop kiddin’ around, get outta here!”

I’ve lost track of the sheer amount of times Reinhard has nagged me with etiquette and finesse and all those pretty things, but I will not refrain from showing my displeasure and my pouting face to him. Worst of all, I’ve now been involved in this deal called a Royal Election or whatever, and I will be forced to spend too much time around this bastard, since he’s appointed himself as my Knight in this whole ordeal.

Felt: “I kinda let myself go with the flow there, I should have thought about it better… I’m already regrettin’ having to deal with your shit for such a long time.”

Reinhard: “I believe it would have been difficult to pick any knight other than myself, Felt-sama. As far as the Royal Election is concerned, your unknown pedigree and having been raised in the slums are very delicate matters. At the very least, I cannot think of anyone else that would be courageous enough to support you during the meeting…"

Felt: "Hey, I know all that! It's exactly because of that that I call you a damn bastard! I'm plenty sure that a lot of those knights and fancy nobles think you're wrong in the head!"

???: "Calm down, Felt-chan. I know it's a waste of time telling you to calm down but throwing a tantrum will not do you any good."

The only reason that I wasn't in an even fouler mood was the owner of the hoarse voice that interrupted the conversation, Rom-jii, who was sitting next to me, making the dragon carriage look smaller because of his presence.

Felt: "Yeah, ok, fine, but I have a number of things on my mind that need to be spo-… Okay, fine, whatever, nevermind, in the end they're nothin' but excuses."

Rom: "You don't need to put up a tough front in front of me, Felt-chan."

Felt: "I'll do that once things get really bad. I can't complain about everything when the so-called Royal Election has just started."

I am happy that Rom-jii is always worried about me, but I cannot depend on him forever… I know, today I'll sleep perched on his big arms just a tiny bit. Then, Rom-jii patted my head and turned to Reinhard.

Rom: "Sword Saint Reinhard van Astrea… I think this is the first time we are able to talk calmly face-to-face."

Reinhard: "That's right, when I found you at the loot house the other day, you were already unconscious. By the way, how is your condition? When word arrived that you had escaped the guard post, I got worried."

Rom: "Yeah, I can see that you're worried… Luckily, I'm alive. But I'm not the one who matters most right now, it's Felt-chan. You… You really want to make her the King?"

With a serious, lower tone, Rom-jii asked that of Reinhard as if threatening him. I actually felt him putting more strength into his arm, and it really got the impression Rom was really going to jump Reinhard depending on his answer. The thought of warning him that his chances of succeeding were none passed my mind, but…

Reinhard: “Yes, I do. Felt-sama was chosen by the insignia, officially becoming a Royal Candidate. I am her knight, and will gladly give my life so that her ambition may be realized.”

Rom: “It is, to put it lightly, strange that someone such as the Sword Saint is that obsessed with a girl as little as Felt… I’ll have you know she’s small even when compared to girls her age.”

Felt: “Hey, Rom-jii!”

I started kicking up a fuss, but Rom-jii held my head in his large hands and continued, turning to Reinhard,

Rom: “I did not want to mock you, I am serious. Now that you are a part of that Royal Election business, everything that may happen is not just child’s play. I cannot let you go on this journey without trusting your companions. Because of that, we need to have an honest conversation with the Sword Saint. Do you understand?”

Reinhard: “Absolutely. May I call you Rom-dono?”

Rom: “You can call me jiji if you want to, but I can imagine it’s not really your taste. So what, are you gonna tell me your true intentions or not?”

Rom-jii crossed his arms, changing his posture on the bench, and I did the same looking straight at Reinhard’s annoying face. A few seconds later, however, he removed his sword from its place at his waist, and extended it to me while kneeling.

Felt: “…And what am I supposed to do with that?”

Reinhard: “Before anything else, I want to demonstrate my absolute loyalty towards Felt-sama. This is the proof that Felt-sama is my master, and that my sword belongs to her, and her alone. We can continue this talk after it is accepted.”

Rom: “Come on, Felt, take it. I feel it’s the right thing.”

With Rom-jii’s approval, I took up the sword. It was heavier than expected, with a large slash mark halfway along the white scabbard, as if a gigantic animal had stuck its claws in.

Rom: “According to the legends, the Holy Dragon Volcanica itself engraved its claws upon that scabbard.”

Felt: “Volcanica? That dragon from the legends? You’re pulling my leg, aren’tcha?”

If that was true, it would mean that the sword was hundreds of years old. If it had been inherited over several generations until today, it meant it was quite the treasure. But my hands were shaking while I held it, and it was not because of how valuable it was, and how much money it was worth. Then,

Rom: “So, there is no higher proof of loyalty than handing a sword like this to Felt-chan, is that it?”

Reinhard: “Precisely. This is the Dragon Sword Reid, and only the Sword Saint is able to draw it from its scabbard in times of great need. As there is only one Sword Saint in any given generation, I’m sure you understand the magnitude of my gesture, handing it to Felt-sama.”

Felt: “I guess I understand. Let’s see… Ehhh.”

If it was truly such an amazing sword, I thought of taking a quick peek at its blade and attest its sharpness. But when I tried to remove it from its scabbard, it did not budge even a tiny bit. Almost as if the blade had fused with its scabbard.

Felt: “Oy, it’s not going out! This sword is broken or something!”

Reinhard: “As I said Felt-sama, it can only be withdrawn from its scabbard in times of need. Right now, not even I am able to draw it.”

I wasn’t sure if that was exactly the truth, but if Rom-jii had not said anything, it was no regular sword at the very least. I gave up trying to look at it and simply put it on my lap, looking at Reinhard.

Felt: “Okay, good, the sword’s here with me. So you can start talking.”

Reinhard: “About my motivations and my real intent in supporting you to become the next King of Lugunica, correct?”

Felt: “Yes, yes, exactly. That’s the first step, without that, we cannot-”

Reinhard: “I know the true reason why the old Order of Royal Knights was disbanded.”

Rom: “…!”

I really could not understand what Reinhard was trying to say, but Rom-jii’s reaction made it obvious as to its significance. He was looking shocked, eyes wide open, and a trembling voice.

Rom: “H-How… How do you-?”

Reinhard: “I believe you know the answer to that, Cromwell-dono.”

Rom: “I do… So you know about me as well… You must also be aware that you will be ignoring that person’s wish?”

Reinhard: “If that is what destiny has chosen, then so be it.”

With Reinhard’s reply, Rom-jii forced the yellow smile of someone who did not want to accept defeat. I had no idea as to why, even if the subject of the conversation was me.

Rom: “…Felt-chan, this young man will not betray you. Rather, he cannot betray you. I guarantee it.”

Felt: “What do you mean? Just like that? Damnit, you need to explain what’s goi-”

When I tried to raise my voice and object, Rom-jii just put his hand over my mouth and pet my head once again. He knew I was unable to get mad at him whenever he did that.

Rom: “…You are my grandchild, my only family. Trust me, Felt-chan.”

Felt: “…You’re playin’ dirty.”

He didn’t tell me anything, but he didn’t let me ask anything either. So the only thing I could do was to look back at his face while holding back the tears. Through my misty sight, the only thing I could see was Rom-jii with the happiest sight of the day.

???: “…Enviable.”

I got the idea that someone said something along those lines, but I was not sure if it was just my imagination. After all, at the same time, I blew my nose pretty loudly.

Felt: “Hmph!”

2

Felt: “Wow, everything was blown away, huh, Rom-jii?”

Rom: “Yes, nothing was left standing, but it is better like this. Otherwise, we would probably want to fix everything or build it back up.”

Reinhard: “As the one responsible for this, it makes me glad to hear that.”

Felt: “We’re not trying to rid you of your guilt, so quit actin’ so pleased with yourself.”

I was talking to Rom-jii and Reinhard, in front of a small mountain-sized pile of rubble. It had been the place where the loot house once stood; I had ordered the dragon carriage to come to this location while returning from the Royal Castle.

Felt: “Will you guys let this stay like it is, or will you build somethin’ in its place?”

Reinhard: “…Right now, all public construction in the capital has been halted. Some say it’s due to the economic crisis affecting the Kingdom right now, but I personally believe it’s not the only reason.

Felt: “If you let a pile of trash just sit around, then naturally the trash will flock to this place, yeah? You people who look down from up high really make me sick… Damnit.”

I kicked a pebble on the ground due to my rage. It was plain to see it was an uncomfortable matter for Reinhard as well, so he just stared blankly. But, suddenly, he stepped forward and said loudly,

Reinhard: “…Who’s there?”

In the direction he shouted to, I saw three shadows not-so-very-hidden in the middle of the street. Looking better, it looked to be three punks who had been beaten up, a little dude, an average one, and a tall fella. They looked bruised and blood-stained, almost as if they had just gotten escaped from a fight. Seeing that, Reinhard gave up being on alert, and actually showed some worry.

Reinhard: “They’re beaten up? Something must have happened…”

???: “Shut the fuck up! Gimme all your valuables, now, if you want to live!”

The one yelling that was the guy in the middle, the one with normal height, stepping forward with a knife in his hand, menacingly.

???: “Calm down, Rachins! Now is not the time…”

Rachins: “You fucking idiot, now is the only time! We fucked up using Russell’s name, they’re gonna kill us three! We need money to escape from here!”

That guy looked desperate, and really wasn’t looking like he was open to debate with his companions either. He again turned to us, pointing his knife and getting closer and closer. Honestly, I think I could have done something about it, but…

Reinhard: “…That’s enough.”

…Reinhard was faster than I was and socked the punk. As he had cut through cloth using nothing but his hand in the past, I actually thought he was about to behead the guy right there, but luckily, he only fainted.

???: "…What?"

Seeing that their friend had been knocked out in a blink of the eyes, they were stunned. The knife the average height guy held went spinning into the air, being grabbed by Reinhard as if it was nothing. And only then did the punks realize just who they were dealing with.

???: "Red hair, and sky-blue eyes… Sword Saint, Reinhard van Astrea??!!"

???: "Are you kidding me?! Why must a guy like this show up right at this time…?!"

Reinhard: "If you know who I am, then this becomes easier for all of us. Your friend is just unconscious, his life is not threatened in any fashion. I promise not to do anything more if you leave this place right now. What do you say?"

Those poor sods were shaking in their boots in fear. The way Reinhard spoke, it seemed like he was giving them the option to tuck their tails between their legs and run, but in reality, it was nothing but a veiled threat. The real problem is that the sucker honestly thought he was being the good guy, and that annoyed me to no end. Wanna know why? That's exactly what the rich like to do to the poor, what the Kingdom does to the common rabble.

Felt: "Wait a second there, Reinhard."

Before even thinking about it, I stuck my nose in between them. Reinhard was a little surprised, but I stepped over the guy laying on the ground unconscious, and turned to the other two.

Felt: "That fella there on the ground, he said you guys need to run away. What the hell did you do?"

???: "Ugh…"

When faced with that question, they looked defeated, as if they had reached rock bottom. That is the reality of those who live in the bottom rung… That's what the Kingdom does to these people.

Felt: "Take a good look, Reinhard. You see what the slums are really like? You tried to be the good guy and let them leave unharmed, but that's not going to do any good. Here, our lives are worth less than a grain of rice. I'm betting on them becoming' dogfood by tomorrow."

Reinhard: "I feel the same, Felt-sama. What do you propose we should do, then?"

Felt: "It's what I said in the Castle. I hate this Kingdom. I want to burn it all down. And when I say 'all', I mean both the ones on top,"

I said, pointing at the oppressing Castle in the distance,

Felt: "…And the ones here below."

I said, pointing at the rubble of the loot house.

Finally, I pointed at the three idiots next to me, and said,

Felt: "Come with me, you three. Let's turn that shit you call your life upside down."

Reinhard: "Felt-sama?!"

"Oh man, Reinhard even squeaked a lil' bit there, how delightful", I couldn't help but think.

But he was not the only one surprised; obviously, the punks were also shocked. Well, if they did not understand it, I have no choice but to make it clear to them.

Felt: "I will destroy this Kingdom. I will build a new, improved one, in its place. And how will I do that, if I am not able to change the lives of 3 scoundrels livin' in the slums?"

No one was saying anything. But I did not regret what I did, calling over those 3 to join me, and I was not gonna change my mind. After all, I could trust in the backing of my only family member.

Rom: “Young man, I suggest you just accept it. Once an idea pops up in her head, that girl will not change her mind. Besides, isn’t it fun?”

Rom-jii walked up to Reinhard and threw those words at him, before picking up the guy fainted on the floor.

Reinhard: “Fun…?”

Rom: “She’s a slum dog, the incarnation of the Kingdom’s greatest shame! The first companions she picks are a trio of half-baked thieves! If that’s not fun to you, I don’t know what is, Sword Saint.”

Felt: “Not that it’s a lie or anything, Rom-jii… But there are nicer ways to say that, you know!”

With my hands crossed behind my head, I laughed at his words. Then he turned to the punks, and continued.

Rom: “Come with us, you three. Even if you just want to hide from Russell, if he’s truly after you. Meanwhile, get to know Felt-chan, and decide by yourselves what you wanna do with your life.”

After he was done talking, Rom-jii walked away from the slums, where the dragon carriage had been left.

???: “Oy, wait! I don’t understand anything you’re talking about…!”

???: “Me neither, but we can’t just leave Rachins alone! I’m going with them!”

The big one was doubting the whole thing, but when the little one ran after Rom-jii, he made up his mind and followed. For some reason, seeing those two really made my heart jump a little bit. Then, I turned to Reinhard.

Felt: “What about you? Are you gonna just stand there or what?”

Then, he just closed his eyes and turned towards me, standing there until I decided to go towards the dragon carriage as well, thinking how to explain the presence of these rascals to the grandpa and grandma waiting for us.

Reinhard: “…Felt-sama… I’m not mistaken, you truly should become… So, I…”

Unfortunately, I was already a bit too far away to hear Reinhard’s whisper, so I was not able to pick up on what he said.

END

Volume 5

Chapters 26-40

Chapter 26:
Rotting Spirit

1

A clear, blue sky stretched out above Subaru as he lay on his back.

It had been about a month and two weeks since he was summoned to this other world.

How many times had he found himself looking up at the blue sky like this since then? Large cumulonimbus clouds blocked out the sun, yet the bright, near-noon light still pierced through their thickness and poured down on him.

The sensation of his eyelids burning from the dazzling sunlight. He instinctively narrowed his eyes, feeling tears well up from deep within them, and then, without rhyme or reason, Subaru thought,

“Come to think of it… I haven’t encountered a single rainy day in this world yet.”

He still hadn’t come across a day where it rained deeply and continuously from morning till night.

There had been a few times when a light drizzle fell late at night, leaving the trees and grass damp in the morning, but he hadn’t experienced a proper rainfall here.

The temperature felt a bit too warm for long sleeves—he figured it was probably similar to June or early October in his original world. Considering the lack of rain, perhaps this was the dry season in this world.

“Shall we conclude for today?”

Subaru, engrossed in his idle thoughts, was suddenly addressed by a voice.

He slightly lifted his head, still lying on his back, to see who was speaking—a single old man stood a few meters away from where Subaru lay on the ground.

He was slightly taller than Subaru, with a neatly combed head of abundant white hair for his age. Dressed in a solid black butler's uniform, he exuded a disciplined aura befitting his starched attire.

Though his posture was ramrod straight and elegant, the man himself appeared quite relaxed, with gentle wrinkles etched on his mild expression.

However, in the old gentleman's hand was an unusually long wooden sword.

"Nah, not yet. I was just doing a bit of philosophizing."

"Oh, how interesting. What were you pondering?"

"Up above, a great fire; down below, a flood… What am I?"

He swung his legs up and then down, using the momentum to stand.

There was a heaviness remaining in his core, but the impact of the blows, which left no lasting damage, was negligible. Taking advantage of the moment he stood, he checked various parts of his body, then spun the wooden sword he was still holding and pointed it forward—at Wilhelm.

"Alright, one more round, please instruct me."

"By the way, what was the answer to your philosophical riddle?"

"Oh—wetting the bed and then getting angry about it."

Saying that, he stepped forward, striking with his wooden sword in a low, arcing sweep from below.

The tip sliced through the air, gathering enough wind to crush bone, with no holds barred. But,

"Ugh!"

"You're tensing up too much. Your hands, feet, neck, waist, and face."

Wilhelm's wooden sword was inserted into the trajectory of the blow, and the circular motion smoothly twisted away, missing its mark. As the intended head shot sailed over the taller opponent's head in a feint, a fierce counter-strike from the old man's revolving body swept across him.

Jaw, throat, solar plexus, groin—all vital points along the body's center line. Wilhelm's wooden sword carefully caressed these weak spots, and with just a touch, the impact sent Subaru flying.

The force of the blow, merely returning his own momentum, was slight. Yet, the impact on his vital points still stole his breath, and the sting of pain was enough to dye his vision red.

Subaru tumbled backward, flung back the same distance he had advanced. Once again, he lay spread-eagled on the ground just as before, and as his reddened vision cleared, the blue sky above seemed to mock him.

"Shall we conclude for today?"

Wilhelm's call, devoid of any intonation, not a hint of sarcasm or contempt.

How many times had he heard that voice, asking for his will—?

"It's the twenty-third 'no'."

"Oh, you're diligently keeping track, aren't you?"

"Of course I am. I'm the kind of guy who forgets the memories of things I did that people hated, but never forgets the memories of things people did to me that I hated… that's me."

Boasting about something that wasn't really a boast, Subaru's body slowly and deliberately began to rise. The damage was minimal; the moderation of the blows was, as always, exquisite.

He stood, leaning on the re-gripped wooden sword, and after cleaning the dirt-covered tip with a practice swing, he pointed it at Wilhelm once more.

“One more bout, please.”

“As many as you wish. Perhaps, this time, we shall change our approach a little.”

As soon as he heard the affirmative reply, Subaru charged without waiting to hear more.

From a low stance, almost clinging to his waist, this time his attack was not a line but a point—that is, a thrust, minimizing the striking area, aiming for revenge.

A master’s technique, like the old man’s, striking four vital points in an instant, was impossible no matter how he struggled. Therefore, Subaru’s thrust was a single blow, but imbued with all his might.

The target was the large torso, aiming to hit anywhere near its center—the tip of the wooden sword, imbued with that intention, slowly drew into the center of the old man’s black clothes.

“It hit—?!”

It was a blow intended to hit, but the shock came from the unexpected success. However, the lack of resistance from the wooden sword, which should have directly hit, stole the celebratory end of his cheer, and,

“F-Fumble—?!”

A sensation of his feet being swept out from under him made him lose his balance, and the world spun upside down.

His brain couldn’t keep up with the sudden release from gravity, and the ground loomed large in his inverted vision. He instinctively closed his eyes, anticipating the intense pain of his full weight hitting his face, when,

“Majolica!”

Just before his face hit the ground, a hard pole pressed against his abdomen. It felt like he had vigorously run into a horizontal bar, and his inverted body righted itself again—his two feet landing correctly on the ground, defying gravity.

His arms, which he had instinctively lifted in reaction, extended straight, and Subaru froze in a pose like a gymnast who had just finished a floor exercise.

He didn't know what had happened.

A mysterious voice in his head said, 'A spin?' and then Subaru suddenly realized that the wooden sword, which he had been holding so tightly, had vanished from his palm.

"Ah."

As he frantically turned his head to look for it, his eyes met those of the old man smiling beside him. In his hand, Subaru saw two wooden swords, and,

"No, I don't want it to hurt."

Countless gentle, light blows struck his entire body, and Subaru was once again sent flying helplessly, rolling across the ground and ending up covered in grass.

The taste of dirt spread in his mouth, and spitting it out, he waited for reports of damage to various parts of his body. Arms, moving. Legs, numb but fine. Stomach, getting hungry now. Face, bad eyes are genetic. All in all, still exquisitely moderated blows.

"You're certainly putting in the effort."

His twenty-fourth rendezvous with the grassland.

The crisp voice came from a higher vantage point to Subaru, who was face down, strongly burying his forehead in the earth.

He rolled onto his side to get a view, and Subaru looked towards the sound of the voice. There, looking down at Subaru sprawled out in the garden, was a woman leaning against the terrace railing.

"I only heard your voice, but it sounds like you're quite enthusiastic."

"Is this hindering your duties, Lady Crusch?"

To the appearance of the green-haired woman —Crusch— who was propping her chin on her hand while leaning on the railing, Wilhelm, who was looking up at her from the same ground as Subaru, expressed his humble apologies. However, there was no trace of the emotion implied by his words in his tone, and Crusch, the recipient, waved her hand.

"No, I was just about to take a break."

She replied to Wilhelm, and then continued, "Besides,"

"I do not think it arrogant to consider someone's earnest efforts, whether their own or another's, a hindrance. It wouldn't do to let a hired hand just sit idly by. Work me hard, old man Wilhelm."

"Understood. However,"

Wilhelm deeply bowed at Crusch's magnanimous words, then subtly glanced at Subaru,

"Shall we conclude for today?"

"I don't think I'm so oblivious to the mood that I could say 'let's stop' with how things are going now."

Brushing off the grass from his body, Subaru stood up, checked his body for the third—no, twenty-fourth—time, spit out the dirt from his mouth, and then,

"Being utterly thrashed while a beauty watches… I kinda feel like it takes a toll on a guy's masculinity. My manliness meter is getting severely chipped away."

As Subaru made his quip and rotated his wrist, Wilhelm silently tossed him the wooden sword he had taken. Subaru caught the spinning sword safely, and a wry smile appeared on his face as he felt its sensation in his palm.

"There's no need to worry. This isn't the first time I've seen you get beaten up."

"Ugh."

"I've only heard the circumstances, but I can't deny that Lady Crusch's words just now were a bit too direct."

Crusch raised an eyebrow and wore an innocent expression at Wilhelm's sympathetic words to Subaru, who was clutching his chest and groaning.

"It is only natural that one cannot reach an opponent whose abilities surpass their own. Yet, if one still demonstrates an unwavering will, I believe there is no shame in it, only regret."

Subaru felt an uncomfortable prickle as Crusch touched her chin and spoke those words. To some extent, her words evaluating his disgraceful state were unexpected, and it didn't change the fact that the outcome was irrefutable regardless of what she said.

That's why she was in front of Subaru—

"Furthermore, if being instructed under the gaze of a woman is painful for you, then surely it must have been an endless repetition already, no?"

Crusch said, allowing a gentle smile to grace her lips, as Subaru was on the verge of sinking into a sea of thought. Leaning halfway over the railing, she cast a meaningful glance across the terrace—her gaze passed over Subaru and Wilhelm, who were facing each other directly below, and then towards the edge of the garden.

There,

"…It's a different feeling than embarrassing myself in front of my own people."

"I suppose it's also a problem to constantly expose one's hand to an opponent who will eventually become an enemy… If I'm letting such an opponent into my mansion, then I'm just as bad. It's surprisingly difficult to understand one's own heart."

Subaru tried to consciously avoid acknowledging where Crusch's gaze was directed, as he listened to her self-reflection overhead.

After a period of contemplation, she said,

"Wilhelm."

"Yes."

"I feel like moving my body a bit. I'll finish up my remaining tasks and come down there shortly. It's earlier than planned, but I ask you to instruct me today."

"Understood. Please, take your time."

"Considering my current state of mind, that's a rather difficult request."

With a faint smile, Crusch moved away from the railing and turned towards her office with a dignified bearing. Her agile movements caused her long green hair to swirl gracefully, glinting deeply in the sunlight as she disappeared from Subaru's sight.

Watching her go, Subaru let out a faint sigh of tension, releasing it.

Subaru gave a wry smile at his body's undisguised relaxation.

No matter how much Crusch was a type of person he struggled with, expressing it so openly would only leave the worst impression.

Anyway,

"Shall we conclude for today?"

"Since it's not a question, I suppose that means it's over."

Subaru heard the question mark disappear from the end of Wilhelm's words as he slowly readied his wooden sword—and understood that this intense yet peaceful time was coming to an end.

The old man closed one eye at Subaru's clearly disappointed expression.

"Since Lady Crusch will be coming down, I must fulfill my role as instructor. That is why I am employed by the Karsten household, after all."

"I won't be selfish any more than this. Even though it's your free time, you've already given up so much of it; it would be super bad karma to ask for more."

There was a sense of loneliness that the training was ending, but stopping him would only inconvenience him. He was already in a weak position, making bold requests. He wanted to avoid incurring displeasure. Though it might be quite late for that now.

"—Here I go."

"Anytime."

Following his declaration, Subaru's body kicked off the dirt and leaped forward.

No feints, nothing. For his twenty-fifth, and final, challenge, Subaru chose a straightforward, no-frills attack.

He raised his wooden sword high above his head, gripped it firmly with both hands, and swung it down with all his might.

The full-force downward strike cut through the air, its tip losing its destination and plunging into the ground. Subaru, unable to fully stop his momentum, stumbled forward.

And then,

"—!"

Subaru felt as if countless slashes had flashed simultaneously as he was struck down.

2

Two days had passed since Subaru arrived at Crusch Karsten's mansion.

Mansion—though in this case, it didn't mean the main residence of Crusch's ducal Karsten family. Her primary estate as a duchess, overseeing her territory, wasn't in the capital. The mansion where Subaru was currently staying was a separate residence used only during stays in the royal capital.

This mansion stood in the upper district of the royal capital, a particularly high-ranking part of the aristocratic quarter where clusters of estates, rather than mere houses, lined the streets.

Its scale certainly didn't match Roswaal's estate, which had been haphazardly developed on vast rural land, but the interior and decorations were, to an amateur's eye, on par or even superior.

Considering that a ducal family would need to entertain guests in the royal capital, paying attention to such details would likely be necessary.

That it wasn't simply nouveau riche taste was evident from Crusch's pragmatic personality. Though, it also felt far too expensive to be considered merely part of necessary expenses.

In that regard, the garden's simplicity, which didn't require such embellishments, somehow felt comfortable, as if reflecting the temperament of the mansion's owner.

The trees surrounding the mansion were meticulously maintained by gardeners, and the garden itself was nothing more than a wide expanse of low-lying grassland, completely devoid of anything unnecessary. In any case, the garden's simplicity likely suited its intended purpose.

Its main use was as a place for combat training, just as Subaru had been doing. The lack of a flower garden to delight the eye seemed to indicate Crusch's preference for iron over flowers.

"Can you stand, Subaru-dono?"

Wilhelm's voice reached Subaru from a distance, pulling him from his aimless thoughts.

He raised a hand in silent acknowledgment, and as he heard the old man's sigh of relief from the edge of his eardrum,

"Thank you again today."

"Oh, it was merely you humoring an old man's boredom. Rather, I am ashamed that I am not good at teaching others."

"Isn't it bad for someone hired as a sword instructor to say that?"

"To Lady Crusch, it's less about instruction and more about accompanying her in developing her mindset for actual combat… that's the gist of it. I don't often teach her with words."

Wilhelm responded to Subaru's words with a wry smile, then, with a cool, un-sweaty face, he tidied himself up.

"You're probably exhausted and can't move right now. There's still some time before Lady Crusch comes down. It would be best if you remained as you are until you can move again."

"I'll take you up on that. The feeling under my head is super comfortable! I might be losing on all fronts, but at this moment, I'm the winner!"

Wilhelm nodded slightly at Subaru, who was triumphantly lying down in an undignified manner, then straightened his back and looked down at Subaru and beyond him.

"I will take a stroll around the mansion. After your rest, it would be best for you to do as you please, same as yesterday. —Please take care of Subaru-dono."

"—Yes, thank you for your concern."

Someone who had been standing silently right beside the reclining Subaru, without uttering a word until now, replied.

She knelt on the ground, still in her familiar black apron dress, and softly cradled Subaru's head on her lap.

Under her short blue hair, a maid adorned with a white headdress—it was Rem.

She had silently watched every moment of Subaru and Wilhelm's mock battle—a misnomer for what was essentially a relentless training session—from the corner of the garden.

Now, she had rushed to Subaru's side after he had pushed himself to exhaustion, tending to his fatigue with a lap pillow.

Her devoted demeanor was a model for a servant, and in her gaze, as she doted on Subaru resting on her lap, a sentiment clearly beyond that of a mere attendant flickered. However, Wilhelm, having noticed it, did not comment.

That gaze was precisely the same radiance he had witnessed countless times in this mansion.

Thus, the old man did not touch the blue-haired girl's heart at all. With a refined gesture, he bowed at the waist.

"Then, if you'll excuse me. Ferris should be back in the afternoon. It would be helpful if both Madam Rem and Subaru-dono were in your rooms by then."

"We apologize for the trouble. We will do so."

Rem quietly accepted Wilhelm's words. The old man drew his chin in, seemingly satisfied with her graceful response, then narrowed his eyes slightly and looked at Subaru.

Then, without another word, he turned his back and disappeared from the garden for good this time.

As the old man's peculiar presence vanished, the tension that had filled the garden suddenly dissipated, replaced by a sense of openness.

It was as if even the plants and trees had been holding their breath; with the overwhelming pressure gone, the garden transformed into an open grassland with nothing to obstruct the wind or the chirping of birds.

In the midst of it all, Subaru simply closed his eyes, vaguely, surrendering his entire body's sensations and his mind to the soft feeling beneath his head.

Rem said nothing as she cradled him.

She simply accepted Subaru's weight with tenderness, and occasionally, as if to remind him that time hadn't stopped, she would run her fingers through Subaru's black hair with gentle strokes.

"…I am-"

Suddenly, Subaru broke the silence of the nearly motionless time.

Hearing his voice, a whispered rasp from trembling lips, Rem's fingers stopped moving. Indulging in her kindness, which patiently waited for his words, Subaru took a long time before continuing.

"Weak."

He muttered, stating an undeniable fact.

The wind blew, and the bangs Rem had been caressing were relinquished to the air. He felt Rem's knees shift slightly at the sensation, making her stir.

"That's right."

After a brief silence, Rem said softly.

It was such a natural affirmation that he was slow to realize it was an answer to his earlier statement. Once he did, he accepted the content of her words. Lying on her lap, Subaru looked up at an inverted Rem, as if glaring.

"Hey, isn't this normally the part where you'd cheer me up by saying, 'That's not true at all, Subaru! You're super wonderful, cool, incredibly strong, and extremely happy! You make my heart pound!'?"

"If Subaru wishes for that."

Subaru, making his request in a slightly high-pitched feminine voice, was met with Rem's unchanging expression. Taking a breath, Subaru prefaced his next words with a "Alright,"

"Okay, take two. —I am… weak."

"Yes, that's right."

"Did you hear what I just said?!"

"Subaru, did you hear Rem's answer?"

Subaru protested by stiffening both his legs at the unexpected comeback, but Rem merely tilted her head with an expression of unwavering affection at his reaction.

Subaru choked on his words, then slowly replayed what Rem had said in his mind. And then,

"Rem, you're amazing."

"Yes, but Sister is more amazing."

"I don't understand that Ram-supremacy mindset, but you are amazing."

Loosening the tension in his legs, Subaru let his entire body go slack as if all his bones had vanished, surrendering himself completely to Rem's lap.

Rem once again ran her fingers through Subaru's bangs as he closed his eyes, fiddling with them.

"Rem is here to do what Subaru wishes for."

"…You mean, affirming my self-deprecation about being weak is what you want me to do?"

"Isn't it?"

Tilting her head to the opposite side, Rem asked with a genuinely pure gaze.

Subaru didn’t reply with words, only exhaled a deep, long, low breath through his nose, choosing silence as his answer.

Quiet, undisturbed, lazy time continued to flow.

Before sinking into a sea of thought, Subaru found himself on the verge of being swallowed by the drowsiness that crept up, drifting between reality and dreams, losing his sense of place.

“Shall we go back soon? We shouldn’t bother Lady Crusch and Sir Wilhelm.”

However, the passage of time continued equally for all.

Subaru pondered Rem’s words as she shifted her knees, then twisted his neck, shifting his position so that his cheek rested on her leg.

“Just a little longer. Your thighs feel nice.”

“Yes. —If Subaru wishes for it.”

Rem, who had been about to tense her knees, relaxed them, and Subaru’s suggestion was accepted.

Indulging in her boundless kindness, Subaru sank deeper and deeper into the muddy comfort of not thinking about what he didn’t want to think about.

Three days had passed since the day the Royal Selection was declared, and the day Subaru and Emilia parted ways.

Natsuki Subaru was steadily, thoroughly, corroding.

Chapter 27:
The Voice of the Town

1

If Subaru had time to think, he'd be thinking, "What went wrong?"

Even though he hated it, his thoughts kept returning to that evening, to the countless times he replayed the scene of the silver-haired girl turning her back to him and walking away.

"What went wrong?" Subaru wondered every time the thought surfaced.

Subaru himself admitted that his words had been too harsh. He'd been cornered by her relentless accusations, and the physical beating he'd taken earlier probably played a role too. What came out was completely different from what he'd truly wanted to say, and it ended up driving a wedge between them.

Were they just impulsive words, something he blurted out in the moment?

Or, precisely because they were impulsive, were they thoughts that had always lingered in his heart?

He no longer knew where his true feelings lay in that moment. For Subaru, who had been dazed and lost immediately after that parting, his next memory skipped ahead to being led out of the royal castle's waiting room by Rem and riding in the dragon carriage toward Crusch's mansion.

While Subaru was still out of it, he could tell Crusch and Ferris were talking with Rem. He couldn't grasp the content of their conversation, but the only saving grace was that Rem held his hand the whole time they were talking. Feeling that warmth was the only thing that made him realize the last thread hadn't snapped.

"—Hey, bro."

His consciousness, which was shifting from recollection to reminiscence, was pulled back to reality by a sudden call. He heard a gruff voice from in front of him, and Subaru blinked, bringing his mind back to the present. When he looked ahead,

“Come on. Don’t go making scary eyes like that in front of someone’s shop.”

He saw the shop owner, a stern-faced man with an impressive scar running down his face, furrowing his brow. Looking directly at that impactful face so soon after returning, Subaru slowly rubbed his eyelids with his fingers, letting out a deep sigh.

“Hey, pops. I don’t think it’s right to intimidate your customers like that.”

“I’m not! I’m worried about you, dammit! I wanted to tell you how much I panicked when I couldn’t get in touch with you!”

The shop owner yelled, slamming his thick arm onto the counter, causing the fruits on the display stand to bounce violently and fly out of their basket. They arced through the air towards the bustling crowd, about to fall to the ground and get bruised or become shoe-soles’ stains, but—

“One mustn’t treat food carelessly.”

With a fluid motion, her skirt hem fluttered as Rem gracefully landed in the space in front of the shop. Lightly pinching and lifting, the fallen fruits were softly caught and collected inside her apron. Kadomon let out a sigh of relief and admiration for her nimble feat. He held up a hand to Rem, who offered him the picked-up fruits.

“Oh, thanks, little lady. So, listen to me, I’m telling you for your own good. Stop hanging around with this weird-eyed guy. He’ll just bring you bad luck.”

“Whoa, whoa, whoa, what are you saying? I can’t believe you’re saying that? My companion just saved your merchandise from getting ruined, you know? Come on, let’s hear some words of gratitude!”

“You were the one who almost ruined it in the first place, weren’t you? Besides, I don’t think I’m saying anything wrong.”

Rearranging the goods on the display shelf, the shop owner, with arms crossed, snorted and compared Subaru to Rem, who stood beside him.

“This is a different girl from the one you brought last time, isn’t it? The previous one… ah, for some reason, I don’t really remember her, but if I don’t remember her, it means this girl’s cuter, right? You’re unprincipled, you should go to hell.”

“What’s wrong, pops? Are you the type who thinks friendship can’t exist between men and women? Don’t link everything to romance. Besides…”

Subaru almost asked why he’d forgotten Emilia, but he realized it brought a terrible pang to his chest and bit his tongue. And then, with that pain, he remembered the reason for the shop owner’s forgetfulness and understood. Kadomon gave Subaru a quizzical look as he fell silent, then secretly lowered his voice to Rem.

“See? This shameless attitude. If you fall for someone like this, you’ll have a hard time.”

“Thank you for your concern. …But Rem does this because she likes to.”

Blushing, Rem glanced sideways at Subaru. Feeling the warmth of her gaze, Kadomon shrugged his shoulders regretfully, sensing that further words would be boorish. But then he immediately widened his eyes and, prefacing with “That said,” continued,

“Romance aside, my opinion that he’s a dangerous guy hasn’t changed, you know? …I can’t believe he snuck into the castle by hiding in a delivery. He must have a death wish.”

Amidst the clamor of the crowd, his words wouldn’t have been heard by those around, even at a normal volume. Kadomon, considering the gravity of the content, carefully lowered his tone as he muttered that. Subaru felt a bitter taste rise in his mouth at those words and, scratching his head awkwardly, began to make excuses.

“Ah, about that, I thought… or rather, I might have thought… or maybe I didn’t think at all, it’s like a mountain.”

“So, did you think it or not, which is it?”

“My bad. For not reporting it immediately afterward.”

“Exactly!”

Looking down at the back of Subaru’s lowered head, Kadomon exhaled his anger with a sigh. He remained furious.

“Even Old Man Rom stopped contacting me. I thought this was seriously bad, so much so that even Henehehe was preparing to skip town. I was agonizing over how to fool and persuade my wife and daughter.”

“You should just be honest since you did something bad and let them despise you, smuggler.”

“Shut up, mastermind!”

The shop owner clicked his tongue at Subaru, who casually dismissed his previous respectful attitude. Then he said, “Well,” tracing the scar on his face with his finger,

“A really big thing happened at the castle that day. We were lucky your petty crime didn’t become public amidst all that commotion.”

“Yeah, you’re right. Thanks to that, we found a hole in that castle’s sloppy security. Next time, let’s aim for the treasury and pull off a big job, boss.”

“I’m never helping you again! Next time, get caught and get your head chopped off!”

Subaru shook his head, feigning fear, as the owner made a chopping motion at his neck with his hand and stuck out his tongue. Then he focused on the “big thing” the owner mentioned and let out a breathy “Oh, right.”

“So, the details of the Royal Selection are already known throughout the capital?”

“Of course! For the citizens, it’s not something they can just laugh and watch as if it’s someone else’s problem. We’re choosing a queen, after all! It’s not just about the next few years; it’s a turning point that will carry on the kingdom’s 400-year history. Everyone’s talking about it.”

Kadomon, who had overheard Subaru’s murmur, spoke with a somewhat feverish look. Then he said, “Look,” and turned his head, guiding Subaru’s gaze. In the direction he indicated, there was a tall, prominent signboard, like a standing billboard, set up in the market street.

“Well, I can’t read anything unless it’s in the ‘I’ script.”

“What? You’re uneducated? Then can you read my shop’s sign?”

“I feel like it has hieroglyphs similar to ‘I’ script, but the handwriting’s too messy to read.”

“Nonsense! Writing it in a cool, stylized way like this is what’s popular now!”

“It’s a bit hard for someone learning to read. Once I thoroughly learn the ‘A-B-Cs’ of this world’s writing, I’ll popularize a gyaru-moji derivative.”

Subaru’s ambition to revolutionize the history of writing. What’s needed is the ability to perceive letters not as letters, but as images, or a recognition that blurs the line between reality and unreality. He’s quite confident in the latter. Anyway,

“So, what does the sign say, in the end?”

“I’ve told you the headline many times already, haven’t I? It says ‘Royal Selection Begins’.”

Subaru frowned at the unhelpful reply, and Kadomon waved his hand, saying, “Alright, alright.”

“Then I’ll read a bit for you. —Little lady, can you mind the shop for a moment?”

“Understood.”

As Kadomon casually stepped out from the side of the shop, Rem, without any protest, slipped into the shop to take his place. Feeling nothing but strangeness from her seamless action, Subaru shook his head in disagreement.

“Don’t just let an amateur in so easily! And Rem, don’t just accept it so casually!”

“It’s just taking the price written on the tag and the payment, and giving change. Besides, no customers are coming anyway.”

“He finally admitted it himself!”

Led by Kadomon, who looked almost refreshed in his frankness, Subaru stepped towards the bustling crowd, leaving Rem behind in the shop. They crossed the street, where various races mingled, large and small, and stopped beneath the tall signboard, which was two heads taller than even the tall Kadomon. Joining the fence of people who had stopped for the same purpose, their eyes scanning the words on the sign, Subaru craned his neck and, though unable to read, followed the characters.

“It says the start of the Royal Selection and its outline. It’s about deciding the queen before the Divine Dragon Ceremony in three years and then performing the subsequent rituals. It also briefly mentions the candidates.”

Subaru’s interest, already waning in familiar content, was piqued by the word ‘candidates’. His eyebrows twitched in surprise, and Kadomon, noticing Subaru’s expression, nodded, his eyes reflecting understanding.

“Seems you’re curious about the candidates. There are five candidates for the Royal Selection in total. Among them, the most well-known are Duchess Crusch Karsten and Anastasia, the daughter of Hoshin Trading Company."

"Are they famous?"

"She's a Duchess, you know? There's hardly anyone living in the capital who doesn't know her name. As for the Hoshin Trading Company, there's no way a merchant wouldn't know it, at least. The rumor about its representative being a young woman, whether true or not, was also famous."

As Kadomon said this, touching his scar, Subaru naturally pictured the two women in his mind. Crusch, with her sharp, sword-like presence and impressive dignified demeanor. And Anastasia, with her light purple hair and overly distinctive Kansai accent. Subaru, having seen the latter directly, would likely confirm that she matched the rumors. Though, considering the precedent of Ferris, there's nothing absolutely certain in this world.

"Well, if there were a bunch of 'male daughter' types, they wouldn't be rare, and their characters probably wouldn't overlap."

"I don't know what you're agreeing with, but… anyway, for now, these two are the strong contenders. Personally, I think Lady Crusch of the Karsten family, a kingdom stalwart, is more likely than Anastasia, who's from another country."

"She was called the strongest contender, indeed."

However, that likely shifted considerably after her own policy statement. Nevertheless, it was a fact that her position and family lineage were powerful backing. For the common people who hadn't heard her speech, it would undoubtedly seem that her smooth ascent to the throne was the most uneventful outcome.

"Crusch is the favorite. Anastasia is the dark horse… So, who's the long shot?"

"How do you know such an old-fashioned expression? A long shot… it's hard to say, but excluding those two, the remaining three are virtually unknown."

Kadomon read out the names Priscilla, Felt, and Emilia one by one, then snorted and pointed at the signboard.

"They're candidates whose names even I don't know. Priscilla, at least, seems to be a noble from her family name, but the remaining two don't even have family names apparent. The fact that the head of the Hoshin Trading Company is a candidate honestly makes me question how the candidates were chosen."

On that point, Subaru would completely agree if he didn't know the circumstances. There was the head of a ducal house, then a young, shrewd merchant leader, then a minor noble whose name wasn't widely known, and the rest were enigmatic figures with ambiguous family names.

This information alone was unhelpful to the citizens watching the Royal Selection. Just as Subaru thought this, "However… The fact that there's a half-elf among the candidates is just crazy, I tell you."

Kadomon narrowed his eyes, twisted his lips in disgust, and spat out the words harshly. For a moment, Subaru's thoughts froze at his blatant display of discomfort. But as his words quickly sank in,

"Half-elf… you mean?"

"The candidates' backgrounds are written to some extent, and it seems there's a half-elf named Emilia among them. It's no joke."

"Is there a problem with being a half-elf?"

"Oh, come on, save the jokes for your reckless lifestyle."

Shrugging his shoulders and shaking his head, Kadomon reacted exaggeratedly to Subaru's question.

"This isn't just talk, half-elves are despised everywhere you go. You see demi-humans in the capital sometimes, but unlike lizardmen or hobbits, elves are rarely seen roaming around. And a half-elf at that? They're naturally resented by both sides of their mixed blood."

Kadomon naturally corrected Subaru's ignorance. The shop owner, seemingly oblivious to Subaru's silence, glared hatefully at the words on the signboard.

"For all the bigwigs who decided this, it's a foolish idea. Of all things, a half-elf… no, how can a half-demon be entrusted with the country?"

"Half-demon…"

"That's what they call half-elves. It's a fitting name for the Witch's kin, isn't it?"

Subaru couldn't respond to the shop owner, who looked down at him as if seeking agreement. So much had that last phrase shocked Subaru.

Subaru had, to no small extent, felt favorably towards this scarred shop owner. It was because he was almost the first person Subaru had spoken to on his first day of being summoned, and also because of his character in their subsequent interactions. He was someone fun to talk to, and Subaru considered him a good man who was not difficult to deal with.

It was surprising that such demeaning words towards others came so easily from his mouth. What's more, they were slanders against a person Subaru absolutely couldn't overlook.

"Not everyone is involved with the Witch, you know."

"Huh?"

"Don't just lump half-elves together and dismiss them. That Emilia girl, she might be… like, really thinking of the country, you know? She might be a really good person, you know?"

Kadomon furrowed his brows suspiciously at Subaru's hurried, fragmented defense and held up a hand, saying, "Hold on."

"I don't know why you're so desperate, but stop defending half-demons. You never know who might be listening."

"That's exactly the kind of unnecessary worry. Walls have ears, Mary has windows, there's a chance the person you're talking about is right behind you and will stab you from behind, so correct yourself!"

Kadomon sighed, pressing a hand to his forehead, looking helpless at Subaru's confused mix of "Mary" and "Merry."

"I told you to stop. I apologize for my words getting out of hand. See, like this."

"…Tch."

Though it was an insincere apology, Subaru took it as a truce and lowered his guard. Just as Subaru lowered his spirits, Kadomon took a breath and said, "But you know," "However you feel about it, a half-elf becoming queen is impossible."

"Not that again…! Why? Is it because of the Witch of Envy? That Witch was a half-elf, which makes all other half-elves are dangerous?!"

"—That's right."

To Subaru, who was spitting out his irritation at the restart of the argument, that voice sounded unexpectedly cold. A single word affirming Subaru's shout— Kadomon, who uttered it, extinguished his momentum, and Subaru's voice choked in his throat as he looked up at the stern face. Kadomon's eyes, meeting Subaru's head-on, clearly showed fear.

"The Witch is terrifying— That's obvious, a common understanding that no one needs to be told. I don't know how ignorant you are, but for most people, that reason alone is more than enough to shun them."

Listen, Kadomon said, as if lecturing a silent Subaru,

"The Witch —the Witch of Envy— was a monster of unimaginable proportions, they say. Four hundred years ago, half the continent was swallowed by the Witch's shadow, and countless renowned heroes and even winged dragons fell before her. If it weren't for the Divine Dragon's power and the Sword Saint of that era, the world would have been destroyed."

Subaru recognized a few keywords he couldn't afford to miss, but he couldn't tear his eyes away from the trembling pupils of the speaking shop owner. He trembled with parched lips.

"Yet, the true identity of the Witch who did such monstrous things remains a complete mystery. All that's known is that the Witch was a silver-haired half-elf. She couldn't speak, communication was impossible. She simply rampaged, destroyed, killed, and consumed everything relentlessly, as if she hated everything but herself."

Subaru also knew that much from the summary in the picture book.

Kadomon's narrative, infused with negative emotions, was colored with raw feelings that a monotonous text could never fully express. The Witch's tale, passed down not only through picture books but also through oral traditions from relatives, would have changed its course in countless ways through each teller, yet the endpoint always remained the same.

That is,

"The unknown Witch is terribly frightening. So, how could anyone not keep their distance, even with the little information we have?"

"So, that's why you discriminate against half-elves?"

"At least, it's true that many half-demons have twisted personalities. —Though, whether that's from birth or due to their environment, I don't know."

Kadomon's grimace, as if he'd bitten into something bitter, hinted at his own struggle in response to Subaru's strained words. Despite their short acquaintance, Subaru believed Kadomon was fundamentally a good person. He himself understood that what he'd said wasn't logically correct. It was just that the emotions that surfaced when he thought of "the Witch" wouldn't allow him to argue with that logic.

"Most people would agree with me. No one would willingly side with a half-demon and shift votes from other candidates. That's just common sense."

"…"

At the way he tried to abruptly conclude the conversation, Subaru acutely felt that Emilia's plea at the Royal Selection was indeed true. Being a half-elf. It was an inseparable destiny for her, an iron chain that would never allow her to stand at the same starting line as others.

As long as the Witch existed, Emilia would continue to be shackled by her own lineage. That was an unreasonable obstacle that she herself could do nothing about.

"So, as long as she's seen that way, she has no chance from the start. Who on earth would willingly back her… It's outrageous."

Kadomon crossed his arms, showing his displeasure. His anger now seemed to be directed from Emilia, the candidate, towards the person who had put her on a hopeless pedestal. This stance certainly showed his good nature, but as long as the negative impression of half-elves was ingrained, it offered no comfort.

Kadomon had called Subaru ignorant. Ignorant of the history of how half-elves had been oppressed, and of the Witch's atrocities that caused it.

But, Subaru thought.

"Don't screw with me," Subaru thought.

Indeed, Subaru was utterly ignorant of this world's history. As for the Witch's evil deeds, he probably couldn't imagine anything beyond the literal words. There was no way he could empathize with how much people feared half-elves, or how half-elves in that environment might, in turn, feel about humans.

It's just,

"—That's enough, you villains."

That clear, silvery voice had severely shaken Subaru's eardrums back then.

Crawling on the alley ground, about to collapse in pain and humiliation, the hand she offered to save Subaru showed no doubt whatsoever about her actions.

Subaru didn't know this world's history.

Subaru didn't know the history of half-elves.

Subaru didn't know how terrifying the Witch of Envy truly was.

But he knew Emilia.

Subaru knew that silver-haired, stubborn, utterly good-natured girl who acted without considering her own gain or loss, had absolutely no reason to be equated with the ‘Witch of Envy’. Subaru knew that this girl, who must have lived in a harsh environment, still possessed a heart capable of showing kindness to others.

No matter how cruel this world was to her, Subaru alone would always—

“Is that really true?”

Suddenly, that doubt crept into his thoughts.

The unsettling tone of the voice that crossed his mind made Subaru hold his breath and blink. The voice questioned a conclusion he was about to reach: “Is that really correct?” He looked back, pondered, and yelled at the invisible voice, “What’s wrong?” But,

“Do you really know her?”

To the voice of pure doubt, Subaru tried to respond with a defiant “Of course,” but couldn’t. A strange sensation, as if his inner voice was blocked. It was a simple yet difficult act, a kind of contradiction involved in deceiving his own heart. The moment he couldn’t clearly respond to the voice of suspicion, Subaru realized the voice was his own inner voice. The voice repeated in Subaru’s tone.

“Do you really know her?”

He tried to answer loudly, “I know,” but his throat, unable to completely deceive his own heart, refused to tremble.

Subaru didn’t know what kind of life she had lived.

Subaru didn’t know why she sought the throne.

Subaru didn’t know what she thought of the people who equated her with the Witch.

Subaru didn’t want to know what she thought of him.

"—Hey, you alright, bro?"

"Huh?"

Before he knew it, the surprised-looking scar-faced man was peering at him. Subaru instinctively recoiled, lightly stepping back to create some distance.

"Wh-What is it…? Don't suddenly get so close, you'll suck out my lifespan, please spare me."

"What a terrible thing to say! I was worried when you suddenly got that blank look in your eyes. What, do you have some kind of chronic illness?"

"Everyone has a miniature garden of delusions within their hearts. People eventually forget the importance of that place, but every now and then, there are adults who never forget that garden. I'm one of them, you see."

"I get it, you have a bad disease. That's enough, let's go back to the shop."

With a light jest to conceal his discomfited inner self, the shop owner, unwilling to humor him further, began walking through the crowd back towards the shop. As he followed the broad back leading the way, Subaru became aware that his own back was damp with cold sweat.

What emotion within him had caused that sweat? Trying to figure that out felt particularly unsettling, and Subaru's steps were heavy. Then,

"Also, it might be unnecessary, but,"

Kadomon muttered as he walked, without looking back at Subaru. His voice was so faint that Subaru could barely hear it.

"Don't publicly utter the word 'Witch' on the street. Including me… you never know who might be listening."

It probably wasn't a rehash of their earlier conversation. Given the serious tone of his voice, Subaru remained silent, taking it as a sign of acceptance.

Seemingly understanding his intention, Kadomon didn't add any more words. He just said,

"No telling who, or where."

That lingering, broken phrase was quite striking.

2

Subaru and Kadomon walked back, a heavy atmosphere hanging between them.

Honestly, Subaru was struggling to sort out the emotions swirling inside him, and Kadomon, for his part, seemed to be ashamed of getting so heated during their argument. So, the two of them pushed through the crowd and returned to Kadomon's shop in silence.

"—Welcome back. The last customer just left."

Rem, who had handed over the goods and change, bowed politely, and seen off the customer, said this. Kadomon stared at her, mouth agape in bewilderment. Before his dumbfounded gaze, the display shelves lay empty, cleared out of most of their merchandise.

It wasn't that Rem, left in charge of the shop, had gone wild and yelled, "Take it, thieves!" while tossing free fruit to passersby—that much was obvious from the basket overflowing with coins. This meant,

"M-My shop's daily average sales, in such a short time…"

Kadomon covered his face with his hands, trembling, confronted with a fact he didn't want to accept. Returning the shopkeeping duties to him, Rem smoothly slipped outside and practically flew to Subaru's side. She leaned in, looking up at him.

"How was that, Subaru? Rem's versatility. Rem heard you said he was your benefactor, so I tried my best to be of help. …You can praise Rem, you know?”

Rem swayed the hem of her skirt, peeking at Subaru out of the corner of her eye. Her actions, so clearly betraying her words, and the sight of Kadomon struggling to accept reality in front of them, made Subaru’s chest feel a little lighter.

He wasn’t sure if it was because he was relieved to see Rem acting normally, or if it was because he felt some satisfaction seeing Kadomon, who had just made him feel bad, so shocked.

“Either way, it’s definitely thanks to Rem.”

Reaching out to her blue hair, Subaru gently stroked her head, his fingers enjoying the familiar texture of her hair. Rem closed her eyes contentedly, savoring the feeling of Subaru’s palm stroking her, her cheeks flushed with an ecstatic expression as she made a strangely alluring “Mmm” sound in her throat.

Behind the two of them, Kadomon kept tracing the scar on his face, over and over again.

“Was it my looks after all…?”

He was now, far too late, verbalizing the reason for his business struggles.

Chapter 28:
Backwards Ambition

1

“I see, so that’s why we have this mountain of appa’s as a souvenir, huh?”

Felix speared a fork into a pile of sliced red fruit, bringing the dripping, juicy piece to his mouth, smiling with a playfully alluring gesture.

“Well, I handed most of it over to the kitchen, but I made sure to save some for tasting. Anyway, stop with the suggestive glances and lip-licking. It’s making my back cold.”

Subaru frowned at Felix’s behavior, waving his hand, and sighed as he sat down on the bed in the guest room assigned to him.

It was snack time before evening, and the sliced appa had been brought in for that purpose. Rem, who had returned with Subaru from sightseeing in the royal capital, had prepared it. She was currently changing in her own room and was supposed to meet Subaru in his room afterward.

The plan was to discuss the day’s results and future plans while eating the appa, but—

“Then a ‘femboy’ got here first and occupied the room, huh? It’s true I didn’t lock the door, but isn’t that a bit rude for a knight?”

“Oh, come on, don’t you think it’s proof that Ferris trusts you? I could never show myself looking this sloppy to Lady Crusch, you know?”

As he spoke, Felix practically threw himself onto the bed right next to Subaru. The soft mattress bounced, transferring the impact to Subaru’s backside, and the similarly bouncing Felix rolled over into a lying position. From there, he looked up at Subaru from a ninety-degree angle.

“Did your heart skip a beat just now?”

“It seized up. No offense, but I don’t have that kind of taste at all. My sexual preferences are completely normal—girls only.”

No matter how cute someone looked, it couldn’t possibly transcend the barrier of gender.

Subaru sighed at Felix, who was striking a pose as if he’d been shocked, and then continued, “Besides,”

“I can’t think of any reason for you to trust me. I don’t recall us ever getting particularly close. Am I, like, exuding that kind of dangerous pheromone?”

“Oh, that’s a simple story. —Subaru-kyun is definitely weaker than Ferris. You’re so weak, so I feel at ease.”

Hearing Felix say this so casually, looking up at him while resting his cheek on his hand on the bed, Subaru was momentarily at a loss for words, but then said,

“You have a terrible personality, you know that?”

“Oh? That’s surprising. I thought you’d get angrier.”

“Facts are facts. I’m not going to get defensive.”

Being reminded of his own weakness was something he had experienced countless times.

Ever since coming to this alternate world, Subaru had been repeatedly beaten down by his own powerlessness. If facing that detestable knight in the training grounds was the peak, then being defeated by Wilhelm at the Karsten estate was the most frequent.

It was foolish to vehemently argue about his own weakness. Before coming to this world, he might have fantasized, “I’ve been working out, so I might actually do pretty well!” But once you experience the wider world, you realize how much of a big fish in a small pond you were.

So, what Subaru wondered about was the opposite:

“What about you, always calling me weak? I mean, since you’re a knight, I assume you’ve trained quite a bit, right?”

“Hmm, Ferris? My swordsmanship is completely hopeless, you know? The sword hanging at my hip is only there because my parents nagged me to carry it, and if I swing it, I just get thrown around by its weight.”

Subaru was taken aback as Felix recounted this, kicking his legs playfully.

While sensing a certain frankness in how readily he admitted his weakness, Subaru couldn’t help but feel a hint of suspicion at the way he made it seem not like a weakness at all.

His inner thoughts must have shown in his gaze. Felix looked up at Subaru with a sidelong glance, drawing out the end of his sentence, “Bu-ut,”

“Ferris’s strengths lie elsewhere, you see. So, I don’t mind at all being a clumsy knight.”

“Is that so? If you’re happy with that, then that’s fine. —That’s fine.”

It was probably because he had a solid foundation for his confidence. Felix’s statements were brimming with it, making Subaru feel uncomfortable and avert his gaze.

Then, Felix suddenly twisted around on the bed, positioning himself behind Subaru and extending both hands to his shoulders—as if to give him a shoulder rub.

The sensation of fingers touching the hair at the back of his neck was ticklish, and Subaru shrugged his shoulders, but then he felt warmth begin to flow from where Felix’s palms touched, and he stopped moving.

A torrent of water mana, emitted from Felix's palms, began to circulate throughout Subaru's body, starting from his shoulders. Subaru felt the flow of energy, much more palpable than the circulation of blood, and closed his eyes, surrendering to the sensation.

"Slowly, moistly, softly. Oh, a split end. Subaru-kyun, you seem to be experiencing quite a bit of hardship, don't you?"

"Could you stop talking while you work? Honestly, this feeling of mana surging through my body is actually pretty gross. It's hard to keep my head straight, and I feel like I'm going to get dizzy."

Subaru thought of the current discomfort, akin to how he felt when he once tried on a magnetic necklace his father used, which was supposed to improve circulation.

Healing with water mana—on the surface, it sounded quite refreshing and gentle, but experiencing it firsthand, it was clearly not such a mild procedure.

Given the state of Subaru's physical wear and tear, it was a natural consequence.

Subaru's physical ailment was due to damage to his gate, the entryway for mana, caused by forcing the dregs of mana, generated through doping, through his depleted gate.

Felix's treatment involved repairing the damaged gate with water magic while expelling the solidified mana dregs from his body.

"So, basically, it's like plugging holes in a leaky hose while pushing out the mold and trash accumulated inside the pipe, right…?"

"I don't know. What you're saying makes no sense, but I feel like you're using a really unflattering analogy, nya~?"

"It's self-deprecating humor, don't worry about it. Ugh, I feel sick."

Subaru turned his head, complaining to Felix behind him about his worsening nausea, and endured.

Three days had passed since he started staying at Crusch's mansion—meaning it was his third day of receiving Felix's treatment. He felt he was starting to get used to it a little.

On the first day, the surging urge to vomit had been unbearable, and he had given up immediately.

"Well, the first day couldn't be helped, could it? Part of it was directly injecting it into the most clouded area, and also being in such a battered state with no stamina had an impact."

"You really hit all my sore spots, don't you?"

Felix, who couldn't possibly see his expression, read his intentions just from his fidgeting, which was irritating. And how he unhesitatingly dug into his emotional wounds.

Subaru forced an awkward laugh to brush it off, trying to avoid touching that emotional scab. But Felix, as if to mock Subaru's thoughts, said,

"So, Subaru-kyun, are you thinking about revenge after all? Your training with Old Man Wilhelm isn't entirely unrelated to that, is it?"

"…Could you stop poking at such delicate parts of a guy? You know how it feels… or do you, in this case?!"

"I might know a little, meow? Ferris also had a period where I thought, 'I want to be strong, no, I must be strong!' But well, now I don't think such reckless things at all."

Casually avoiding any mention of his own "femboy" aspect, Felix spoke without a trace of sympathetic sentiment for Subaru.

He consistently touted his lack of martial talent. On the other hand, he also boasted of the talent he possessed that more than made up for it.

Subaru could empathize with much of the first part. However, when it came to the latter part, he couldn't empathize to the point of self-deprecation. Unlike Felix, he found nothing in himself.

He had always believed that his stubbornness, his guts, and above all, his feelings for her were second to none.

“Isn’t it better not to think about dark things like revenge? I don’t want to say this, but… if it happens again, you might die, you know?”

“…I know that.”

Subaru averted his gaze sullenly, responding with a mumbled whisper.

In his previous fight with Julius, Subaru had been utterly defeated beyond words. Despite being so thoroughly beaten, he understood that Julius had shown him mercy.

Otherwise, there would be no explanation for why he had been struck, pierced, and wounded so many times, yet had sustained not a single fatal injury.

There was a desperate gap between him and Subaru.

Understanding that, Subaru was studying under Wilhelm. He wasn’t dreaming of becoming incomparably strong after just a few days of training. He just…

“It’s fine, just wallow in laziness. Subaru-kyun, you’ve been through a lot, your body’s in terrible shape, far from its best, and now you have a valid reason to just relax under the guise of treatment. No one can blame you for it, there’s no reason to. It’s a win-win, isn’t it?”

Felix spoke rapidly, giving Subaru no time to make excuses.

His slightly irritating phrasing lacked consideration for Subaru, but the content seemed exceedingly sweet to Subaru’s current state of mind.

But then—

“—Sir Felix. Please don’t mislead Subaru so much.”

A quiet voice echoed in the room, and Subaru, feeling a slight surge of anxiety, turned around.

Behind Subaru, who was sitting on the bed—Rem stood with her hand on the door to the room, her blue hair swaying just past her shoulders. She should have returned to the guest room assigned for changing, but her attire looked the same as when they went down to the lower district of the royal capital.

Noticing Subaru's questioning gaze, Rem lightly pinched the hem of her skirt.

"Rem has changed from her going-out maid uniform to her visiting maid uniform."

"Oh, right, of course. Rem, you always understand what I'm thinking."

"Yes. Rem always want to be a fresh Rem in front of Subaru."

"I'm happy, but saying it like that makes you sound like raw fish!"

Subaru responded to Rem, who was emphasizing her "freshness." Rem didn't respond to that, instead turning her gaze to Felix sitting behind Subaru.

"Thank you for Subaru's daily treatments. However, please stop using it to manipulate Subaru."

"Manipulating? That's a terrible thing to say! Ferris is just saying what she thinks is best for Subaru-kyun, meow!"

Felix grinned mischievously, then leaned further forward, his arms around Subaru's shoulders, practically hugging him.

At the soft gesture, and the distinctly firm, masculine sensation against his back, Subaru cried out, "Hey!" in protest, but Felix overrode his complaint by running his palms over Subaru's jaw and chest.

"A kindness that slowly spreads throughout your body… If you think of it as Ferris's heartfelt concern, then perhaps it's not so bad to fall for it, nya~?"

The whispered voice in his ear, accompanied by a breath, gently caressed Subaru's earlobe.

Despite knowing that Felix was Felix—the same sex—Subaru inexplicably couldn't actively respond to his actions. His thoughts subtly dulled, and he remained held, unable to move, accepting the embrace. But then,

"Sir Felix—"

"Ugh."

"Please refrain from your playful antics. With all due respect… some jokes can go too far."

A shocking impact, as if pulling his dulled thoughts back, hit his neck.

A white fabric covered Subaru's vision as he gasped and came back to his senses. Squinting, he realized it was cloth pressed against his face, and immediately connected it to a familiar apron.

He realized he was being hugged by Rem, who was holding his head.

"Whoa, whoa, Rem. This is a little too aggressive in public…!"

"Subaru, please be quiet for a moment. —Sir Felix?"

Rem hugged Subaru even tighter, trying to cover up his embarrassment with a lighthearted remark, and called Felix's name for the third time, her voice icy, as if for an official occasion.

In response, Felix let out a small, long sigh and muttered, "Oh, I see."

"Rem can use some water magic too, can't she? In that case, it might not be a surprise that she saw through Ferris's tricks, nya~."

He spoke in a tone that sounded resigned, or rather, like a child whose scheme had been exposed. Felix then rested his chin on Subaru's shoulder, wrapping his arms around him to hug him tighter.

"Hey, Felix. It's too late now, but getting squeezed by a femboy isn't cute at all, it's more like a letdown, or… wait, Rem, Rem-san? It's nice that my head is enveloped in a blissful sensation, but your grip is a bit strong… no, not strong, it's too strong…! Gyaaaah—!!"

"Ah, Subaru, I'm sorry. Sir Felix wouldn't let go… I thought I'd rather break you than have you taken by someone else…"

"Is this a sudden yandere moment?!"

Subaru scrambled out of the grasp of both Rem and Felix, holding his creaking skull. He glared at them from the corner of the room with extreme caution. Seeing his gaze, Rem shook her head slightly.

“Poor Subaru… you must have had a truly frightening experience.”

“Your last comment hit me the hardest! Don’t your eyes look even darker now, for some reason?!”

Subaru’s protest was ignored, and Rem and Felix exchanged glances, leaving him behind. Rem narrowed her eyes slightly, and Felix awkwardly ran his fingers through his chestnut hair.

“Rem’s anger is perfectly understandable, but Ferris isn’t doing this entirely out of malice, you know? It’s just a tiny bit for Subaru-kyun’s sake.”

“The part that isn’t just a tiny bit?”

“The rest is out of consideration for Ferris’s friends… and everything else is for Lady Crusch, isn’t it?”

Felix said this with an unrepentant expression, then tilted his head and asked Rem,

“Isn’t that obvious for a attendant? Or is Rem different?”

“No, I am not. Therefore, Sir Felix should know Rem’s answer.”

Rem shook her head at the challenging words, and looked directly at Felix again. Seeing whatever was in her intense gaze, Felix held up both palms as if surrendering.

“Alright. I get it. I’ll stop trying to brainwash him under the guise of treatment.”

“From now on, Rem will always accompany you during treatments.”

“Oh my, so distrustful. It’s fine, though.”

Rem moved sideways, standing to shield Subaru from Felix's gaze. Felix laughed at her blatant caution, then stretched to see over her and looked at Subaru, who was silently pursing his lips, unable to follow the conversation.

"Rem scolded me, so that's enough for today. Next time, let's meet somewhere where we won't get caught, okay?"

"I didn't realize it's a tryst, and besides, you just said 'brainwash,' didn't you?! The thought of being alone with someone who says such dangerous things creeps me out!"

"Yes, yes, you're just inviting it."

"Don't say things you pretend to understand but don't!"

Felix stood up from the bed with a gesture of understanding. He stretched, then headed for the door. Just before stepping out, he turned back.

"Rem."

"Yes."

"I don't expect you to believe this, but… what I was doing for Subaru-kyun wasn't a complete lie, you know?"

The words were directed at Rem, who stood in front of Subaru, not at Subaru himself.

Subaru, who could only see Rem's back, couldn't tell what expression she made in response to those words. He only noticed,

"—I understand."

That Rem's brief reply contained a very slight hesitation.

"Oh. Well, that's good then. Bye-bye."

This time, Felix spoke his farewell and elegantly exited the room.

However, since they would likely be sharing the dinner table when evening came, the idea of "farewell" didn't quite fit.

As Subaru inwardly made such pointless remarks, Rem turned back, calling his name, "Subaru."

"Oh, hey. I don't really get it, but… was I perhaps rescued?"

"I wonder. Sir Felix doesn't particularly bear ill will towards Subaru, and as for his recent actions… I'm not sure of his true intentions."

Subaru, who couldn't quite grasp what had been done to him, and Rem, who avoided explicit mention of it. That subtle discrepancy felt unsettling, and Subaru frowned.

"Um, so, what exactly was going on just now?"

"Just now, Subaru was receiving Sir Felix's treatment, and your entire body was under the influence of water mana, wasn't it?"

"I don't really get it, but probably something like that? It's true I felt like I was soaking in lukewarm water, like 'Viva Nonnon.' Feeling sick from too much of it, if you think of it as 'bath sickness', then it's not entirely unrelated to the risks of bathing, I guess."

"To have another's mana intervene with the mana circulating within your body means to some extent, you accept that person into yourself. You were in a state where you were much, much more susceptible to Sir Felix's will than usual."

"That sounds pretty dangerous depending on how you hear it?!"

Subaru spun on the floor on his backside, getting up with a breakdance-like maneuver. Then he flailed his limbs about, pointing and checking each part of his body for any abnormalities.

"Am I okay? Am I not weird or anything? Like, do I feel a little feminine somewhere, or is my speech ending with a cute, cat-like suffix?!"

"You're fine, please rest assured. You're the usual Subaru."

"Really? Seriously? Reeeeally?"

"Of course. Please trust Rem, who is always watching Subaru."

Subaru felt as though he'd heard something he shouldn't just gloss over, but he let it pass and breathed a sigh of relief. Then he shook his head slightly, prefacing with a "Good grief,"

"When you think about it, this place is, in a way, one of the enemy's strongholds, isn't it? I've been pretty relaxed and my guard was completely down."

"Please rest assured. Rem will stay vigilant so that Subaru, who is so lax and carefree and helpless, doesn't have to worry about anything."

"I'm sorry for being so lax, carefree, and utterly oblivious?!"

A shocking truth was now revealed. Tears welled up as Subaru thought about how much Rem had fought alone while he had been slacking off, but setting aside that unbearable sentiment, Subaru tilted his head.

"I'll try to be a bit more careful from now on. The people here are… all 'enemies', after all."

"…Enemies, you say?"

Subaru tightened his resolve, which had been lax, or rather, focused too narrowly. Rem mumbled something quietly at Subaru's posture, but Subaru, rotating his shoulders to switch his mindset, didn't notice.

After thoroughly checking his physical condition, Subaru looked at Rem.

"Alright, then, let's get to our daily routine until dinner is called. Rem-sensei, please."

As he spoke, Subaru sat opposite the desk set up in a corner of the room. On it was a notebook for writing practice, brought from the mansion, and several black-spined books stacked up. These were textbooks and practice notebooks. In other words,

“No matter how many times Rem hears it, Rem never gets used to being called that.”

“Well, you’re teaching me, so that’s definitely your position, isn’t it? If you don’t like it, I’ll stop, but what do you say, Teacher?”

“No! Please, keep calling rem that! It’s Rem’s, Rem’s only way of being called! You mustn’t say it to anyone else!”

“When you’re so pushy, I don’t know what to do with this unexpected performance! Ngh, damn it, I won’t lose…!”

Subaru let out a strange cry of defiance, fiercely confronting the desk.

Standing behind him, Rem gazed quietly at Subaru with a loving emotion, and an opposing, wavering emotion in her eyes.

Her eyes held a sorrowful tint as she watched Subaru diligently apply himself to his studies.

“—Sensei, I don’t quite understand this part.”

“Oh, Subaru, you’re such a helpless person. You can’t do anything without Rem. You can show your gratitude for that with actions sometimes, you know?”

That tint, however, vanished the moment Subaru spoke.

2

—Thus, Natsuki Subaru’s days at the Karsten household passed.

In the mornings, Wilhelm thoroughly thrashed him; in the early afternoons, he’d tour the capital with Rem, calling it sightseeing, as they wandered through the city. In the evenings, he’d receive treatment from Ferris, who had returned after finishing his errands, and after dinner, under Rem’s supervision, he’d diligently study to learn how to read and write.

His days were remarkably wholesome and genuinely fulfilling.

Occasionally, he'd have brief exchanges with Crusch when she had some free time, but he hadn't had the chance for a proper, sit-down conversation. Indeed, the mansion saw a continuous stream of visitors daily, and Crusch was often called upon to attend to them, leaving her with little free time.

Even so, it was impressive that she still managed to set aside time for her daily training with Wilhelm. Or perhaps, considering she carved out that time by sacrificing other commitments, one might call her a sword-crazed woman, despite her gender.

In any case, from outward appearances, Subaru's time was passing productively.

He was treated impeccably as a guest, and Subaru himself, within the environment provided, sought something he could do, diligently learning and training.

There was a sense of pride, a kind of boyish resilience, evident in him—even after being defeated, he neither bent, broke, nor succumbed.

At least, from outward appearances—.

3

The tip of the wooden sword struck his forehead, and the next moment, he was sent flying by a centrifugal blow.

As he was thrown backward, using his head as a pivot, Subaru experienced the usual sensation of the world turning upside down. He rotated his arms, braced himself against the ground, and executed a perfect roll.

His gray tracksuit, his outdoor wear, got dirty with mud, but there was virtually no damage from the fall itself. He licked his lips at the success, only to taste the mud stuck to them, and hastily spat it out in disgust.

"Ugh, blech, blech, blech. Tastes like mud and grass, ugh."

"Shall we conclude for today?"

"You jest. Did I look like I was broken by that? I'm still spry as ever, hey!"

Subaru thrust his wooden sword forward like a home run prediction, twisting his waist to show his high fighting spirit. In response, Wilhelm, standing opposite him, let out a small chuckle.

Day after day, morning after morning, Subaru and Wilhelm's sparring continued like this.

Subaru's attacks still couldn't reach Wilhelm, but there was a dramatic change in Subaru's reactions to Wilhelm's attacks. That is,

"If I may say so… your falling technique has improved remarkably."

"It's a bit pathetic to say it's the result of perfecting how to fall without pain, but hey. I'm not treading water in the same spot forever!"

Subaru gave a thumbs-up in response to Wilhelm's words, declaring his triumph.

Wilhelm's words were true; over the past few days, Subaru's skill at taking falls had improved to a degree that even a professional would be astounded by.

After all, he had at least thirty practical opportunities a day. Don't underestimate a mere fall; it is still a fall.

Falling defenselessly naturally carries a high risk of injury. Even if Wilhelm's strikes were exquisitely restrained, he couldn't control Subaru's injury rate once he was sent flying and rolling on the ground. Therefore, Subaru had to protect himself.

"My talent for taking falls is blossoming now— I feel like my spirit's about to break, seeing as how I'm only improving my 'getting hit' skills day by day!"

"In truth, that technique is useless in a real sword fight, not with wooden swords."

“Can you not state facts?! My one steadfast pine tree of a heart just cracked!”

Considering a real sword fight would end abruptly, the polished skill was indeed a training-mode-exclusive technique, predicated on sparring with wooden swords. Moreover, it wasn’t for offense but a defensive, “loser” stance, assuming he would be hit. Nevertheless,

“One more time, please guide me.”

“Anytime, from anywhere.”

Given permission, Subaru braced himself, lowering his stance, and charged again. Wilhelm, holding his wooden sword in an easy posture, was slower to initiate. Although he was large, his opponent was an old man; it was unthinkable that he could keep up with Subaru’s sweeping motions. But,

“Too much wasted motion.”

“Ugh.”

Even when he consciously made minimal movements, unnecessary tension and wasted kinetic energy emerged. Wilhelm’s sword moved through these gaps, avoiding Subaru’s attacks with minimal movement and effort. Then, the flashing blade approached Subaru’s torso,

“Franken!”

The moment he thought the flat of the sword hit his side, Subaru’s body was effortlessly sent flying through the air by Wilhelm’s sword strike, which didn’t seem to have much force behind it.

The airborne trajectory, fueled by his charge, soared over the white-haired old man, and he flew through the air, inverted. If he fell headfirst like this, a disaster would be unavoidable. But,

“This is nothing!”

Just before he began to fall, he shook his head, curled his body, and cradled his head in a defensive posture. What he executed mid-air was the “Coconut” stance he’d once shown Roswaal. It was a beginner’s amateur defensive technique to increase defense by compacting the body tightly.

Whether his spinning body would land headfirst was largely a matter of luck, but it was a shallow stance that could prevent some damage if he at least didn’t land on the back of his head—however,

“Did you say this was the end?”

Subaru’s plan was thwarted before he could fall, by the tip of the wooden sword inserted into the gaps of his clasped limbs.

For Subaru, whose consciousness had completely shifted to the fall, this follow-up attack was entirely unexpected. The inserted tip moved in a circle, and his firmly bound limbs were easily pried apart, naturally causing Subaru’s body to spread out mid-air,

“Gyah!”

He was slammed onto the ground spread-eagled, taking massive damage without a shred of a controlled fall.

His face smashed into the ground, a kiss with the earth for the umpteenth time. Feeling the warmth of pain slowly spread throughout his body, Subaru rolled onto his side and shot a protesting glare at Wilhelm, who was looking down at him.

“Wasn’t that a bit too cruel, even for you?!”

“Until you can take a fall even in situations beyond your expectations, it cannot truly be called progress in the proper sense. More than anything,”

Wilhelm brushed aside Subaru’s protest with a slightly stern voice, then paused, looking down at Subaru with calm eyes.

Subaru felt uneasy at the tranquility of those eyes and the unfathomable depth of emotion within their brilliance, and he fell silent. To Subaru, Wilhelm declared,

“I would not be able to accept teaching a fighting style that involves attacking from the start with the intention of losing.”

“Ugh…”

It was a direct hit.

He understood that there was a power difference that made victory impossible. For Subaru, Wilhelm was that high of a wall. However, understanding the power difference was entirely different from challenging someone while having already given up.

To Subaru, who was speechless, his weak mindset seen through, Wilhelm held up a single finger and asked, “Is that clear?” then continued,

“Before I teach you how to swing a sword or the technique of taking falls, let us discuss something more fundamental.”

“Fundamental…”

“—If you decide to fight, fight with all your heart and soul. Do not let your guard down for an instant, for a second. Use any means, any dirty trick, to greedily cling to victory. If you can still stand, if your fingers can still move, if your fangs aren’t broken yet, stand. Stand. Stand, stand, and cut. As long as you live, fight. Fight, fight, fight!”

“…”

“That is what it means to fight.”

In that instant, Subaru was taught that the tension dominating the garden had dissipated by the fact that his own heart was beating so loudly.

At the same time, he also realized the obvious truth that his heart was indeed beating the pulse of life.

—He hadn’t felt truly alive until now.

The moment he began to speak about the mindset of fighting, Wilhelm's aura transformed. Until then, he had an atmosphere that highlighted his gentle, gentlemanly demeanor, making him seem like someone untouched by strong emotions like anger.

Subaru clearly sensed from the current exchange that this was merely a superficial part of Wilhelm's true self. Or perhaps, the expression he showed just now was the real Wilhelm.

The warrior invited as the sword instructor by Crusch Karsten, the main favorite in the Royal Selection, who fully wielded his power—Wilhelm van Astrea.

Feeling something that made his heart tremble, Subaru hid it and stood up.

His limbs and fingertips were faintly numb, whether from pain, fear, or perhaps some other emotion, it was uncertain. But,

"Indeed… I've been quite rude. I have."

It was true that he had been deeply moved.

Shaking his head, not even brushing off the dirt on his body, Subaru gripped his wooden sword again, turned to face Wilhelm, and said,

"Even knowing I'll lose, I'll challenge to win. It sounds contradictory, but I understand that I truly must do that… not with my head, but with my emotions."

"That is most fortunate."

"If I can do that, will I become a little stronger?"

To Subaru's question, Wilhelm closed one eye and said, "Well,"

"That's a different matter. Wanting to be strong and actually becoming strong are entirely separate stories."

"Don't you think the story would be more beautiful if you just honestly affirmed it?!”

“I do not permit myself to tell cruel lies.”

“Sometimes, I think that itself becomes a cruel truth!”

The conversation, which was almost neatly concluded, started to fall apart, and Subaru slumped his shoulders in a huff, dropping his gaze to the ground. Then, he mumbled,

“Do I have any talent for swordsmanship?”

“In my humble opinion, unfortunately, no. Subaru-dono’s talent for the sword stops at mediocrity—much like mine.”

Denying the question, Wilhelm let a self-deprecating smile touch the corner of his lips. Subaru raised an eyebrow in surprise, so unexpected were his words,

“You’re being oddly humble. Saying Wilhelm-san has no talent for the sword.”

“It’s the truth. I have no talent for the sword. If I did, I surely would not have continued to wield a sword for so long. Therefore, Subaru-dono can reach the same place as I, if you so desire.”

“…By the way, how much effort would that take?”

“It’s nothing much. You just have to dedicate half your life to swinging a sword.”

“Just…”

Naturally, it wasn’t as simple as “just.”

It’s often said that the ability to continue making effort is true talent. In reality, even if Subaru was told he could reach the same level as Wilhelm, he had neither the resolve nor could he think of a reason to dedicate the same amount of time to the sword as Wilhelm.

Besides, the very reason Subaru was studying under Wilhelm like this was—,

“Hmph.”

He sighed, shifted as if giving up— The tip of Subaru’s wooden sword gouged the earth, kicking up a spray of dirt towards Wilhelm’s face.

The moment he saw the clods of earth obscure the old man’s vision, Subaru’s attack aimed for Wilhelm’s feet. It was an action he had just been advised to take by the man himself.

—If you’ve decided to fight, use any dirty trick.

The complete miss of his full-force blow was conveyed by the lack of any sensation from hitting his target. But Subaru didn’t stop there; using the recoil from his rotation, he unleashed a roundhouse kick, and a second, even more forceful sword strike followed shortly after.

In response to these coordinated attacks, Wilhelm, who had deftly dodged the blinding surprise attack, showed his teeth in a genuinely amused smile for the first time,

“That’s more like it.”

The wooden sword cut into his crotch as he kicked, and Wilhelm, having closed in, turned his back and plunged into Subaru’s space. The free hand grabbed the collar of Subaru’s tracksuit, which now overlapped him, facing the same direction, and the moment Subaru realized it, his feet were off the ground.

His vision spun around, and he was slammed onto his back with such speed that he had no time to comprehend being thrown. His breath hitched from the impact, his thoughts stopped, and before the pain could pierce his entire body, he became aware of the tip of the wooden sword pressed against his face.

“Shall we conclude for today?”

Upon being told this, Subaru completely relaxed his body and closed his eyes.

The coldness of the ground beneath him spread from his back, and naturally, a painful numbness began to permeate his entire body. Then,

“Looks like I can’t do anything with all these distractions.”

“I don’t think that’s the case.”

“Isn’t it true that to improve your swordsmanship, you need to be completely focused on the sword? Like, you only grasp something as a swordsman once you devote yourself to it wholeheartedly?”

“You won’t suddenly grasp something and become strong, and regardless of whether you’re focused or full of distractions, the fact that the one who ultimately cuts down their opponent wins remains unchanged.”

As Wilhelm gave his dry opinion, he continued, “Besides,”

“If I may say so, I have rarely swung my sword wholeheartedly. Especially when I first started swinging a sword, I wasn’t thinking much about the sword at all.”

“Then what were you thinking about when you swung it?”

“Only my wife.”

“Wilhelm-san, sometimes you hit hard with your wife stories!”

Subaru remembered the doting husband remarks from their first meeting, but even so, Wilhelm’s partiality for his wife was excessive.

Subaru sat up, looking up at Wilhelm with narrowed eyes,

“Putting aside the heartwarming anecdotes about your wife… I’m surprised you’d say something like you don’t need to dedicate yourself solely to the sword.”

“Decide to become strong, and then continue to swing your sword with ingenuity to achieve that. Ultimately, there’s no other way to become strong than by spending that time. Unless you’re born with a divine protection, neither I nor Subaru-dono are.”

“Haha, that’s harsh,”

Subaru said, unable to hide the wry smile etching itself on his cheek.

Being told he had no talent for the sword was somewhat painful. He had, after all, dabbled in kendo in his original world. The pride he had cultivated, what little he had achieved, was utterly shattered.

Despite that, Wilhelm looked at Subaru, who managed a bitter smile, and, running his fingers through his abundant white hair to straighten it, said,

“In any case, that’s the mindset for becoming strong. Well, perhaps it wasn’t very helpful advice for Subaru-dono.”

“What do you mean?”

Not understanding the true meaning of the words, Subaru rested his hand on his chin and tilted his head. Seeing his gesture, Wilhelm continued, “No,”

“I thought it would be meaningless to preach the mindset for becoming strong to someone who has no intention of becoming strong.”

“…”

For a moment, Subaru’s expression froze, not understanding what he had been told.

However that stagnation lasted only an instant. Subaru immediately thawed his frozen expression and shrugged his shoulders in an exaggerated manner,

“Whoa, whoa, whoa, Wilhelm-san, what’s with the sudden surprise? Don’t say shocking things like that. Me, what?”

“If you are self-aware, then to elaborate further would be tactless.”

Subaru fell silent, unable to continue speaking, as Wilhelm shook his head, resignation in his eyes.

Anxiety mounted within him, wondering what Wilhelm was trying to say. Understanding that feeling, Subaru questioned his own inner impatience.

—Why do I need to feel anxious?

"—Subaru-dono, it seems our morning session is concluded."

"Huh?"

Wilhelm told Subaru, who was breaking out in a cold sweat from an inexplicable sensation. When he looked up in surprise, the old man's gaze was directed not at Subaru, but at the mansion.

Following his gaze, he saw a figure running from the mansion towards the two in the garden. —It was Rem.

Her face, which she consciously kept devoid of overt emotion, nonetheless carried a quiet tension as she ran.

Something had happened.

For Subaru, at that moment, it was also a relief.

For Subaru, who felt an inexplicable pain from facing Wilhelm, Rem's expression of anxiety and unease was even a salvation.

"Subaru. —Rem needs to speak with you."

With that, a period was put to the daily routine that had been flowing uneventfully.

The mundane ended, and the extraordinary Subaru had longed for began— There, Subaru would once again face despair.

Chapter 29:
A Situation in Motion

1

When Subaru, led by Rem, burst into the reception room, he found three people there: Crusch, Ferris, and Wilhelm, who had arrived at the mansion just before Subaru.

Crusch narrowed her eyes within her stern gaze as she watched Subaru rush into the room, out of breath and his shoulders heaving.

“It seems you’ve already heard the news, judging by your state.”

As if to say the troublesome preamble was unnecessary, Crusch stated this with a glimmer of shrewdness on her face, showing no emotion. Feeling that he had been preempted, Subaru shook his head slightly.

“Not the detailed story yet. Rem doesn’t seem to know much beyond the vague parts either.”

Turning his head, Subaru looked at Rem, who stood close beside him. Receiving his gaze, Rem lowered her chin, her expression blank but with a hint of tension.

“What Rem felt was purely through Sister’s senses. —Unlike directly from my sister, I didn’t see anything specific. It would be different if I could use clairvoyance.”

Rem frowned regretfully, biting her lip, lamenting her own inadequacy. However, watching her, Crusch let out an impressed “Oh,” as if she understood.

“I had heard tales of the twin maids under Marquis Roswaal’s care. I see, so a certain amount of information exchange is possible even when separated by the distance between the capital and the domain.”

“As Rem mentioned, it was vague. As an untalented individual, that was the best Rem could do.”

Rem bowed, humbly acknowledging Crusch’s praise. Subaru, watching their exchange from the side, stepped forward, waving his hands and saying, “Wait, wait!”

“Now’s not the time for that kind of talk. I want to hear the crucial part. From the way it sounded earlier, you know a bit more, don’t you?”

“Our information’s a little unreliable in terms of accuracy, too, nya~. It’s information that’s slipped through the cracks of quite a few people, after all, nya~?”

Ferris directed his usual mischievous gaze at Subaru, who couldn’t hide his impatience. Subaru glared back at him, and Ferris, putting a finger to his lips, tilted his head adorably.

“What if that vague feeling, combined with Rem’s sixth sense from earlier, starts to pull things together nicely, nya~?”

“Stop stalling, just get to the point!”

Ferris still maintained his teasing attitude, so Subaru put his hands on the reception desk and threatened him by leaning his face in close. However, it wasn’t Ferris who clapped his hands to get attention in response to Subaru’s demand.

“I understand your impatience, Natsuki Subaru.”

It was Crusch, calling Subaru by his full name and shaking her green hair as she looked at him. Hit by the sharpness of her gaze, Subaru suddenly felt as if he had been doused with water, and he involuntarily gasped and recoiled. The height difference between the tall Crusch and Subaru was at most five centimeters, with Subaru still being taller. Nevertheless, Subaru felt an oppressive sensation, as if he was being looked down upon by her, despite them standing at the same level.

Perhaps the difference in their inherent capacities created this difference in their perceptions. As Subaru was unnecessarily reminded of the difference in their biological standing, Crusch spoke with an air of knowing nothing of his inner turmoil.

“What if I simply refused, stating that there’s no reason for us to disclose information to you in the first place?”

“Wha—?”

“It’s the reply you should have expected, isn’t it? You are currently a guest under our care. Your position doesn’t guarantee anything more. There’s no reason for us to involve a mere guest in the affairs of the Royal Selection, including our own household’s progress.”

Crushed head-on by such irrefutable logic, Subaru twisted his lips, unable to utter a sound. At the same time, he felt anger at his own thoughtless and naive weakness. Hadn’t he just realized it the other day? This was, after all, the “enemy’s” territory, a place where they would undoubtedly bare their fangs at him if anything went wrong. Naturally, Crusch and Ferris would surely adopt a similar stance towards him. It was ridiculous to think that showing up nonchalantly and asking for information would work.

“Lady Crusch, Sir Ferris—that’s enough of your jesting.”

Subaru, with the flame of animosity burning in his heart, was racking his brain on how to extract information. Halting his thoughts was Wilhelm, who had remained silent until now. He looked at his mistress and her attendant with a reproving gaze.

“While such leeway might be acceptable in peacetime, we both know this is an urgent matter. Unnecessary arguments will only leave behind bitter roots for the future.”

“If there is a future, that is, nya~.”

“Ferris.”

“Alright, alright, I’ll be quiet, nya~. Humph, you’re scary, nya~!”

Pouting, Ferris bounced onto the sofa and then covered his ears and eyes, falling silent. Wilhelm sighed at his childish behavior, and Crusch chuckled. Subaru blinked, unable to follow their attitudes.

"I apologize for my rudeness, Natsuki Subaru."

"Huh?"

"That was merely a small test for you. It holds no significant meaning. However, I want you to keep in mind that this is a place you cannot help but be conscious of."

Crusch apologized to Subaru, who responded with a blank voice, but her warning was not absent. At her words, Subaru once again realized his standing, experiencing a sharp awakening of his consciousness. In short, whether he wished it or not, Subaru was now in a position where he could not afford to simply settle for the given circumstances.

Though his mind wasn't quite calm enough to say he was pulling himself together, seeing Subaru switch his mindset, Crusch nodded, as if her intentions had been conveyed.

"There's been some troublesome activity near Marquis Roswaal's domain. I've heard that the territory has entered a state of alert under the Marquis's orders, but…"

"Troublesome activity? State of alert?"

Alarming words had been spoken, and Subaru frowned, questioning them. Receiving his question, Crusch nodded and folded her arms.

"Originally, these developments were anticipated. From the moment the Marquis declared his support for Emilia as a royal candidate— In short, his support for a half-elf."

"What, so the sto— The common folk are going to explode with dissatisfaction or something?"

"Naturally, that will happen too. As the Witch of Envy's ill reputation spreads, being a half-elf inevitably means battling such prejudices."

Subaru voiced his immediate concern, and it was readily affirmed. Again, he couldn't tolerate Emilia's lineage being a hindrance to her. Though it was not her fault, how much would the world hold her back? He couldn't help but despise the faceless "common folk" who spoke ill of her based solely on prejudice, without even knowing her character.

"She herself chose this path, prepared for it. Your indignation is misplaced."

"Like hell it is! This isn't about her being ready for insults or being used to them. I'm saying there's no reason for her to be insulted in the first place!"

Subaru retorted with a grim face to Crusch's words, then pulled the conversation back to its original direction, saying, "Anyway,"

"So, because of that idiotic reason, there's trouble brewing in Roswaal's territory? Is it going to be more than just a minor incident, like a huge fire?"

"An interesting analogy, but it hits the mark. The details aside, the general gist is correct. Doesn't that also explain your attendant's senses?"

A question was posed, and the gazes in the room converged on Rem. With a poker face that revealed no emotion, Rem met the closest gaze—Subaru's—and nodded, as if responding to the intent of his eyes.

"The sensation that came from Sister was a mixture of impatience and a lot of anger… Rem believes it wasn't something she intended to convey, but rather something that leaked out because she couldn't suppress it."

"Is that synchronicity something you two feel for each other that often?"

"No. We control it to a certain extent. Even so, with very strong emotions, they can sometimes overcome that control and be transmitted between us."

As she continued, Rem's words lost their power. If her words were to be organized, this wave of emotion transmitted from Ram to Rem was irregular. If Ram had used synchronicity to ask for Rem's help, it would have arrived in a clearer and more continuous form. Despite this, the synchronicity this time was a single leakage and did not continue afterward. This meant, in other words,

“She’s trying to keep me from getting involved…?”

Subaru muttered to himself, feeling a burning sensation from his own imagination. If Ram’s intention was as he imagined, it wasn’t hard to guess who had ordered Ram to do so, or whose machinations were at play.

Subaru was currently receiving treatment at the Karsten estate. Rem was accompanying him. For it to be transmitted to Rem was synonymous with it being transmitted to Subaru.

—Did she truly want to keep Subaru from getting involved in her path that much?

“She’s in trouble, isn’t she…?”

The situation had reached Crusch, who resided in the capital. And the situation was so dire that Ram, who should have far greater self-control than Rem, couldn’t suppress her emotions and let them leak out. She still had few reliable allies, and unreasonably many enemies. In such a situation, how many truly honest allies could there be?

Yes, that’s right.

That’s why—

“I have to go help her, don’t I?”

Subaru looked up and muttered, and this time, all eyes turned to him. Crusch closed one eye, Ferris narrowed his mischievous gaze slightly, Wilhelm’s deeply wrinkled face remained unreadable, and Rem—

“N-No, Subaru…!”

Rem tugged at his sleeve, her small lips trembling and her large eyes wide. In her eyes were impatience, confusion, and a desperate plea.

“We must obey Lady Emilia’s and Lord Roswaal’s orders. Subaru is to focus on his treatment at Lady Crusch’s mansion. Rem, Rem agrees. Healing your injured body is your top priority right now…”

“What if something irreversible happens while we’re doing that? Then we wouldn’t know what hit us. It’s about choosing which is more important.”

Pushing past Rem’s clinging demeanor, Subaru stepped forward and looked at Crusch’s face. He met her quiet amber eyes, then straightened himself.

“You heard him, Crusch-san. Rem and I are returning to Roswaal’s mansion… to Lady Emilia. Treatment will be put on hold until this matter is resolved…”

“—If you leave here, you will be my enemy.”

Interrupting Subaru as he began to speak of future plans, Crusch stated this with absolute coolness. The sheer sharpness of her words made Subaru feel as if he had literally been cut. And as the meaning spread like pain from a wound,

“Wh-What do you mean…?”

“Let me correct your understanding. The only reason I treat you as a guest and allow Ferris to treat you is due to a contract.”

“A contract…?”

Subaru questioned, and Crusch nodded, saying, “Yes.” She raised a single finger from her folded arms.

“The contract made was between Emilia and me… through Ferris, but the content is your treatment and its compensation. With mutual consent, it was established, and I have welcomed you as a guest. But there’s a reason I’m upholding this contract.”

“…”

"I am upholding my contract with Emilia because it was made before the Royal Selection. Our relationship, Emilia's and mine, after the Royal Selection, is one of political adversaries. Therefore, there is no inherent leniency to be shown to someone from Emilia's faction. A contract is a contract."

Repeatedly, Crusch emphasized the matter using the word "contract." As he listened, Subaru heard that word as "promise," and he felt an uncomfortable connection to the last conversation he had with Emilia.

Crusch, prioritizing the fulfillment of a "contract," and Subaru, who had not kept his "promise." She sharpened her gaze even more on Subaru, who tried not to let his inner guilt show on his face.

"If you leave my household, this contract will be considered abandoned midway. With no lingering resentment between us, Emilia and I will be complete enemies. You, acting as part of Emilia's faction, will naturally become my enemy."

"So if I leave, my treatment's off, is that it…? That's a pretty low move, isn't it? You just don't want us to help Emilia because she's in a bind, right?"

"I want you to understand, nya~."

It was at that moment, as Subaru tried to hide his inner feelings with a provocative jest, that Ferris, who had been silently observing the situation, cut in with a slightly stern gaze and his chestnut-colored cat ears perked up.

"What Lady Crusch is doing for Subaru-kyun right now isn't being mean, it's kindness, nya~. It wouldn't harm us at all if Subaru-kyun went back to help Lady Emilia, nya~? The only reason she's holding you back is…"

"Ferris, stop."

"No, I'm going to say it. His misunderstanding is just too severe, so I have to correct him on that point, nya~!"

Shaking his head at his mistress's brief attempt to stop him, Ferris looked at Subaru again. Then he slowly, deliberately, said:

“Subaru-kyun going wouldn’t change the situation. It would be a waste to go. The promise of treatment that Lady Emilia paid for would also be wasted. Instead of doing something like that, it would be better for you to quietly observe the situation and heal your body, nya~.”

—A sound.

Subaru heard something pop in his head. When he realized it was the mouth of the bag that had been holding back his temper, Subaru nearly bit through his lip in unimaginable humiliation.

“I’ve decided.”

Without letting any of those emotions show on his face, Subaru quietly uttered those words. The tempestuous emotions still raged in his chest, but that heat chose not to erupt outwards, instead scorching Subaru’s insides and leading him to one conclusion.

“I’m going back to the mansion… to Emilia. It was a short time, but thank you for your care.”

“Subaru!”

Rem cried out, her voice clinging to him as Subaru clearly stated his departure. Subaru held up a hand to silence her, then looked down at the Crusch faction in front of him. Hearing Subaru’s words, Crusch’s inner thoughts remained unknown as she closed her eyes. However, Ferris, sighing deeply beside her, clearly had a difficult expression. He shook his head, looking at Subaru without trying to hide his exasperation.

“I think accepting advice gracefully is also a measure of a person’s character, nya~?”

“Your advice helped me make my decision. Thanks.”

Ferris shrugged at Subaru’s distinct sarcasm, seemingly giving up on forming any further words. Instead, the conversation was taken over by:

"Natsuki Subaru."

Calling his name, Crusch looked up at Subaru with wide eyes. Stared down by her stern gaze, Subaru tightened his resolve not to succumb to her piercing stare. No matter what she said, he had no intention of retracting his words. Even if he was criticized as powerless and foolish, what did it matter?

But—

"I regret to inform you that all our long-distance carriages are currently out. We only have slow transport carriages to lend, and those intended for mid-distance travel that require changing ground dragons along the way."

Ignoring Subaru, who was inwardly fuming, Crusch spoke of a completely different topic—no, words that in a sense affirmed Subaru's decision.

For a moment, Subaru blinked, not understanding what she had said. Crusch looked at him with a slight hint of bewilderment, then turned to Ferris beside her.

"Ferris, did I say something strange?"

"Ferris always gets dizzy from Lady Crusch's amazing ability to switch gears, nya~… You see, Subaru-kyun probably didn't expect you to offer to lend him a carriage, nya~?"

At Ferris's answer, as he held his hand to his cheek and squirmed, Crusch made a gesture of understanding, saying, "Ah." Then she looked at Subaru again.

"I respect your decision. Whatever the judgment, carrying through with what you've decided yourself comes with significant responsibility. If you're going to bear that responsibility anyway, you should do what you truly wish to do. So that your own soul doesn't feel ashamed. —Isn't that right?"

"…Yeah, that's right. You're absolutely correct. My soul is screaming that it doesn't want to be shameless. When she's in a bind, I shouldn't be leisurely recuperating."

Responding to Crusch, who affirmed his intentions, Subaru embraced the change within himself. With unexpected support, Subaru's decision would no longer waver. Rem must have sensed this as well. She closed her eyes for a moment, as if blaming herself, choosing silence, and when she opened them again, her usual impassive expression had returned.

"On behalf of my master, Rem express our gratitude for your kindness until today."

"It's fine. It benefited us as well. I'd like to discuss arrangements for transport to your domain."

"If you would be so kind as to assist us, we would be most grateful. Now, more than anything, Rem wishes to return to the domain as quickly as possible and be of help to my master."

Bowing, Rem accepted the generosity Crusch offered. Realizing from the previous conversation that this was likely about a carriage for travel, Subaru raised his hand and spoke up without thinking.

"Just to ask, how far is Roswaal's mansion from the capital?"

If Subaru's memory served him correctly, the journey from the mansion to the capital had taken approximately seven to eight hours. He had departed in the early morning and arrived late in the afternoon, so that must be right. If so, the travel time should be at most half a day, but—

"Considering transferring carriages… it should take two, or perhaps three days."

"Three days?! It didn't even take half a day to get here!"

There had been talk of no long-distance carriages available, but even for that reason, the difference in travel time was too great. It was hard to imagine such a difference even if they drove continuously day and night. However, Subaru's natural question was denied by Rem's shake of the head. With her refined features, she frowned slightly, looking troubled.

"The Lifaus Highway, which we used to get here, is currently unusable. Unfortunately, it's entered the season where 'fog' occurs… so we have to go around the main road."

"What's so bad about fog? Just drive right through it…"

"The fog is created by the White Whale, nya~? If you encounter it, you won't survive. That's common sense, nya~, you shouldn't even have to be told."

Ferris interjected, dismissing it as a matter of course. Subaru frowned at the unfamiliar term "White Whale" again, but the discussion continued smoothly, leaving Subaru behind in his lack of understanding.

As a result, Crusch and Rem's negotiation settled on "borrowing a carriage from the Karsten household and changing carriages at villages along the way for the return journey."

Subaru felt frustrated, thinking about running without rest, but since the vehicle was pulled by living creatures, there was no escaping the reality of their fatigue. It wasn't like an automobile that could keep going with more fuel. In this regard, he keenly felt the difference in convenience between his original world and this one.

In any case, the situation had begun to move. There was no longer any room to hesitate and waste time.

2

Once that plan was decided, things moved quickly.

Subaru and Rem hadn't brought much luggage to the Karsten household to begin with. When they left the mansion, having practically stumbled in with just the clothes on their backs, the sum of their belongings was something Subaru could easily carry in both hands.

As the two quickly gathered their things and headed out of the mansion, a dragon carriage was already waiting by the gate, the only thing separating the inside from the outside within the iron fence. Wilhelm, who was seated on the driver's platform, noticed their approach. Still holding the reins, he agilely leaped down from the platform, landing at their level. He tidied himself with a quick comb through his hair.

“This is the fastest ground dragon among the carriages remaining in our household. Even so, its caliber is significantly inferior to the ground dragons used by the Marquis, I ask for your forgiveness.”

“Just being lent one is more than enough. I’ll definitely return it… though I guess that’s probably not going to be easy anymore, is it?”

Lowering his voice, Subaru took the offered reins and looked at Wilhelm. Only the old man stood before the gate to see them off—Crusch and Ferris had bid them farewell at the mansion’s entrance hall, and there was a clear sense of finality in that parting. At the very least, it was clear that smoothly returning the borrowed ground dragon after the matter was resolved would be awkward.

Wilhelm lowered his deeply wrinkled face at Subaru’s words, which betrayed his anxiety, and prefaced his reply with “Indeed.”

“Given my position, I have no choice but to follow Lady Crusch’s judgment. After you leave the mansion, the relationship between my master and Subaru-dono’s master will be as stated earlier. — Consider this carriage a parting gift, including the unfinished treatment and sword lessons.”

“I don’t recall them saying anything like that when we left the mansion…”

The words that master and attendant had spoken to the two as they left the mansion were, in their own way, overly characteristic farewells.

“I wish you good fortune. May you always make choices that bring no shame to your pride and soul.”

“Since you’re pushing away Lady Crusch’s kindness like this, you’d better make up with Lady Emilia quickly, nya~, or you’ll be in trouble, really. Hurry up and go.”

Perhaps those last individual remarks were the most memorable.

There was no hint of the consideration Wilhelm spoke of.

“I, too, serve Lady Crusch. I understand my master’s thoughts to some extent.”

“By the way, how long have you been working here?”

“About half a year, I suppose…”

“Your work history is shorter than I thought, huh?! Are you two communicating properly as master and subordinate?!”

It would be no laughing matter if he were to take Wilhelm’s words at face value, borrow the carriage, and then inadvertently deepen the conflict between Crusch and Emilia. That would be the beginning of the ‘Borrowed-But-Never-Returned War’. It would be truly regrettable for his name to be etched into history textbooks for that.

While Subaru and Wilhelm talked, Rem, who had rushed to the carriage, was diligently checking the vehicle and the ground dragon itself. She snatched the reins from Subaru, hopped onto the driver’s platform, then quickly dismounted again, bustling around to check the condition of the ground dragon pulling the carriage.

From a quick glance, the ground dragon pulling the borrowed carriage seemed about a size smaller than the one they had departed with from Roswaal’s mansion. The carriage itself was also smaller, so horsepower probably wouldn’t be an issue, but the difference in speed was still a concern.

“—Understood, then listen. Yes, good boy, good boy.”

“Rem, how is it?”

The ground dragon lowered its head, following Rem’s instructions. She reached out to the lizard’s snout, gently stroking its hard reptilian skin, then looked back at Subaru.

“It was a bit temperamental, but Rem has now shown it who’s boss, so there’s no problem. Rem believes it will follow Rem’s instructions.”

"Oh, I see… you really established the pecking order, huh? You're surprisingly athletic, aren't you?"

While Subaru was talking with Wilhelm, Rem apparently had a "discussion" with the ground dragon. The details were unknown, as he didn't have the courage to delve into the content, but he couldn't help but feel a pang of sympathy for the ground dragon that was about to be worked hard. However, there was no room for mercy that would slow their pace.

"If we bypass the fog and go around the plains, we should pass through two villages before reaching the Marquis's territory. Within those, at a village called Hanumas, closer to the territory, we should be able to arrange for a replacement carriage."

"By the way, how far is it to Hanumas village?"

"Approximately fourteen or fifteen hours, I'd say. If we push the replacement carriage to its limit, we might be able to reach the territory in about half a day from there."

In any case, it would undoubtedly be a frustrating journey of over a day and a half. Subaru scratched his head, gnashing his teeth in vexation, but still bowed to Wilhelm.

"Thank you for everything, I'm sorry. Speaking of which, our training was cut short…"

"I believe I've conveyed the most important lesson. If you wish to further improve your swordsmanship, there is nothing left but to relentlessly swing your blade. I wish you well."

Subaru and Wilhelm firmly shook hands, gripping each other's outstretched hands. Then, following Rem, who had already climbed onto the driver's platform, Subaru also swung himself onto the carriage's bed. Looking back at the mansion from the carriage bed, he could vaguely see two figures standing on the terrace overlooking the gate across the garden. From their silhouettes, he assumed it was Crusch and Ferris. Though he knew they wouldn't see him, Subaru waved to them, and then called out to Wilhelm one last time.

"Alright, we're off. If fate brings us together again, let's get along."

"If you enjoyed a welcome that involved being thrashed with a wooden sword, then by all means."

Wilhelm smiled gentlemanly, then politely bowed as he saw them off. The ground dragon whinnied, and with a slow initial burst of speed, the carriage gripped the ground and began to move. The mansion and its inhabitants slowly receded into the distance. Subaru resolved in his heart that he would definitely get a hit in on the distant white-haired figure, who continued to dutifully bow until he was out of sight.

Descending the slope, passing through the entrance to the noble district, crossing the guardhouse, going straight down the main street of the lower district, and exiting through the main gate that connected the capital to the outside world, they would reach their destination road. Feeling a barely perceptible tremor beneath him, perhaps due to the ground dragon's blessing, Subaru couldn't contain his impatience and let his gaze wander to the scenery outside the small window.

Having been unconscious upon his arrival in the capital, this was his first time seeing the area around it. However, even around the capital, once they were on the main road, there wasn't much change from the scenery they had just left near Roswaal's mansion. At most, the well-maintained road was wider, and in the far distance, he could see the imposing cityscape of the capital. Even that disappeared completely after only about ten minutes of travel.

As his vision became dominated solely by the vast green plains and the blue sky, Subaru suddenly had nothing to do but lean against the inner wall of the carriage, lost in thought. On the way there, he had company in the carriage, so boredom was minimal, but this time, his only companion was Rem, who was on the driver's platform. He couldn't distract her as she focused on controlling the ground dragon, so all Subaru could do was sink into contemplation.

For a carriage used by a ducal family, the seat on the cargo bed where Subaru sat wasn't particularly comfortable. Its small size probably meant it wasn't for someone of Crusch's high status, but rather for those who served as her hands and feet. Considering the constant comings and goings at her mansion, there was a reasonable explanation for why the long-distance carriages were all out.

Participating in the Royal Selection created that many connections with others. A ducal family would have a considerable number of acquaintances, and aiming for the throne would require an even wider and greater network of relationships. Emilia would have to delve into such political issues from now on. And awaiting her, before those hardships, was an unnecessary trial.

“That’s why I have to go, quickly.”

Of course, Subaru didn’t overestimate himself enough to think he could handle political issues or securing powerful supporters. In his original world, he had never had the slightest interest in politics or economics. Even when Japan’s prime minister changed, Subaru was the type who thought, “If heads keep rolling like this, it’ll be the same no matter who does it…” and had no further interest.

Therefore, Subaru had no concrete vision for rushing to Emilia’s side. Only a subtle sense of urgency, unknown even to Subaru himself, was diverting his attention from the problems he should have been considering.

“She needs me… then she’ll understand.”

An unfounded conviction—no, only a wish—existed there. Emilia was in a predicament. If only he could rush to her side, everything would somehow work out, he hoped, a fragile hope that felt like it could be extinguished at any moment.

He wanted to prove his worth; he had to. If Emilia was facing difficulties, Subaru could do it. No, it had to be so. For Subaru to find and make known his worth, she had to be in a bind—

“Right… she needs me. Absolutely.”

Muttering, Subaru sank into thought alone. In his mind’s eye floated the silver-haired girl he should love. Her smile was covered by an unknown darkness, buried by malice that sought to crush her noble heart.

Subaru envisioned that scene, biting his lip and closing his eyes. Alone in the carriage, Subaru quietly waited for the time to pass. Alone in a place where he felt no presence other than himself, except for Rem on the driver's platform.

Subaru looked down, closing his eyes. He never even noticed that his mouth was slightly distorted.

Chapter 30: Rem's Intentions

1

It was about six hours of subjective time after leaving the capital that Subaru noticed the dragon carriage beginning to slow down.

As the scenery outside the small window gradually softened, Subaru furrowed his brows in puzzlement and reached for his chin. The stubble he felt confirmed that his sense of time was quite accurate.

Rubbing his sore backside from sitting for so long, he stood up and moved towards the front window of the carriage, which led to the driver's seat. He hadn't used it during their full-speed journey, not wanting to disturb Rem, but now he had no choice but to use it to ask her true intentions.

"Rem, why are we slowing down? We don't have time to dilly-dally…"

"It will be nightfall soon. Traveling at night increases the chances of encountering bandits and witchbeasts. Rem thinks we should find an inn in a nearby village tonight."

Without turning around, Rem edged slightly closer to the driver's seat and began to speak.

Hearing her suggestion, Subaru rested his hand on his chin, furrowed his brows in thought, and asked,

"A nearby village… Is that one of the two villages Wilhelm-san mentioned? I think the one where we could exchange lizards was called Hanumas, is it that village?"

Subaru asked, hoping it was, even though he suspected it wasn't. Rem shook her head, saying "No."

"It will take another six hours to reach Hanumas. The village you'll see soon is called Fleur, not Hanumas. Rem is sorry."

"No, it's not your fault… We can't keep going for another six hours? Then we'd be halfway there, right?"

Subaru responded to Rem, whose voice had dropped, suggesting they continue their journey. However, Rem still shook her head at his proposal.

"Rem is afraid not. If we go to Hanumas from here, we might arrive around midnight. Then we might not be able to find an inn, and in any case, arranging for a dragon carriage in the middle of the night would be difficult."

"Ugh… you're right. It's not just about getting to Hanumas."

Rem must have had as much time to think as Subaru had been deep in thought. Naturally, her current suggestion was based on considering the options Subaru was now mentioning.

Subaru closed his eyes, pondering Rem's proposed plan. But he quickly reached a conclusion.

"Let's get an inn in Fleur and leave first thing tomorrow morning. That way, the ground dragon can rest, and maybe we won't even need to find a replacement dragon in Hanumas."

"Yes. If we leave early in the morning and can make good use of Hanumas as a stopover, we might even be able to return to the mansion tomorrow night."

Perhaps surprised that Subaru accepted so readily, a strong sense of relief was evident in Rem's voice as she held the reins.

Sensing her demeanor from behind, Subaru suddenly realized he was constantly burdening Rem as well.

Her devotion to her master— Knowing that some kind of crisis was approaching the mansion, Rem's mental burden must have been immeasurable, feeling it more keenly than Subaru.

With her already shouldering such pressure, if Subaru were to add to her burden by being unreasonable and difficult, it would only increase. Since he had already brushed aside her insistence on staying at Crusch's mansion, further distressing Rem was not Subaru's intention.

Fortunately, they quickly managed to find an inn upon arriving in Fleur.

Subaru and the others, after tethering the ground dragon in the stable adjacent to the inn (or should it be called a "dragon stable" in this case?), had begun preparing for an early night.

Subaru, having forced down a meal that was too meager to be called dinner and taken a quick wash to clean off the grime, burrowed under his futon, trying to rest his body immediately.

However,

"I can't sleep…"

His concern for Emilia's well-being and the impatience to rush to her side mingled, and his heightened emotions simply kept sleep at bay.

Still, he lay on the bed, unable to stop wishing for the sun to rise quickly.

He had had plenty of time to think.

And he would have plenty more throughout tomorrow.

Moreover, not just during their journey, but he had been given an immense amount of time at Crusch's mansion. It was after repeatedly envisioning and pondering during that time that he arrived at his current actions.

Therefore, what Subaru needed wasn't time to worry and fret, but simply action to bring his will to fruition.

Then,

"…Subaru, may Rem?"

A knock came at the door, followed by the creaking sound of it opening hesitantly.

Subaru rolled over to look, and it was Rem, changed into her sleepwear, peeking in. She had shed her usual maid uniform and was in the thin nightgown he'd seen sometime before.

He tried to recall when he had seen her in it, but before he could remember, Rem noticed Subaru was awake and walked over.

Subaru sat up and responded to Rem, "What is it?"

"If you're lonely and can't sleep by yourself, that's a bit of a bad situation. If I were a bit calmer, I'd hit you with my best joke, but right now…"

"That sounds like a very exciting offer… but that's not the main topic. Before you sleep, shall we continue your treatment?"

"Treatment?"

Still sitting up on the bed, Subaru crossed his arms and tilted his head at Rem's words.

If the word 'treatment' was ringing any bells for Subaru recently, it could only be the 'gate restoration' performed by Ferris.

However that was supposed to be a treatment based on the premise that no one else but Ferris could do it.

"I can't think of any other ailments… Rem, what are you talking about?"

"As Subaru imagined, it's about the gate treatment. Rem observed Mister Felix's treatment method, so I somehow know how to do it. The effect will probably be much weaker than Mister Felix's, though."

She said, then looked up at him with an upward glance, "It should still make you much more comfortable than not doing it at all."
Other than Rem, among those skilled in water-attribute magic at Roswaal's mansion, the only other person he had actually seen use it was Beatrice.

Suddenly, he was reminded of the curly-haired girl he hadn't seen in a while, and he felt a pang of nostalgia for the days when they used to bicker without any hard feelings.

"Subaru?"

"Oh, ah, sorry."

Rem called out to Subaru, who had become pensive from the budding nostalgia, and he quickly cleared his throat to mask his emotions, then nodded.

"Alright, please do. I couldn't sleep anyway, and if it has even a little effect, it'll ease some of my debt to Ferris."

"Is that so? That's good."

Rem smiled, letting out a sigh of relief that Subaru had accepted her offer.

As Subaru sat with his back to her on the bed, Rem placed both hands on his shoulders from behind.

Her small, delicate fingertips, much smaller than Ferris's, tickled his nape, and while feeling a ticklish sensation, Subaru surrendered himself to the sensation of warmth slowly spreading.

It was the same surge of mana he had felt countless times from Ferris's palms over the past week.

Compared to Ferris's treatment, it felt a little lacking, but perhaps due to the difference in the amount of mana controlled, there was no sign of the unpleasant discomfort he sometimes felt.

Instead, he began to feel enveloped in a soft sensation, like being gently rocked in a cradle, or floating face-up in lukewarm water.

"Whoa, awesome. Honestly, this feels way better than when Ferris does it."

“Is that so…? Rem thought she wouldn’t be able to satisfy Subaru much with her inexperience, since it requires concentration.”

“That’s not true. It feels good, and somehow… it makes me sleepy…”

Indeed, if he let his guard down, he felt a drowsy sensation tickling his eyelids.

His nerves, which had been unable to sleep just moments ago, seemed completely different, but considering that sleep was essential, agreeing to Rem’s suggestion was clearly the right choice.

“It’s perfectly fine if you fall asleep. Rem’ll make sure you’re properly tucked in, cover you with the blanket, and enjoy your sleeping face before Rem leaves.”

“I’m not worried about catching a cold by sleeping with my stomach exposed, and there’s a lot I want to retort about ‘enjoying my sleeping face’, but Rem’s doing her best, so how could I fall asleep mid-treatment?”

He wanted to believe he didn’t possess the insensitivity to be that selfish.

Rem seemed to let out a small laugh at Subaru’s reply. She moved her hands slightly from Subaru’s shoulders, then wrapped them around his neck from behind, as if embracing him.

Subaru felt his eyelids grow even heavier, sensing an increased warmth from her palms. He rubbed his eyelids to resist it, trying to stay conscious by speaking.

“Still, I’ll probably get yelled at at first, huh…”

“…Perhaps. Rem might also be scolded by Sister, saying, ‘Why did you come back?’”

“I’ll explain to Ram. That I forced Rem to come with me. Emilia-tan…”

What should he say? His mind was slow, and the words wouldn’t come.

As Subaru's eyelids grew too heavy to keep his vision clear, Rem extended the hand she had on his neck further, embracing him from behind.

"—If you take your time, truly face her, and express your feelings properly with words, she'll surely understand someday. Subaru's sincere feelings."

"Is… that so. You're right… I feel so… strongly, after all…"

Sounds began to fade. No, Subaru's consciousness was beginning to detach from reality.

The drowsiness had already surpassed comfort and was closer to a curse; his eyelids had become an unyielding cage, impossible to open.

Unable to maintain consciousness, the strength left his neck, and his head dropped forward.

Just before his thoughts completely separated from reality—

"So, please keep a small corner of your heart for Rem, too."

As she spoke, he thought he felt Rem's lips brush against the back of his head, tickling him.

With that overly convenient illusion as the last sensation, Subaru's consciousness plunged into darkness.

2

When consciousness began to return, Subaru felt the heat of the sun burning his eyelids.

Still lying on the bed, he vaguely raised a hand to shield his eyes. The strong sunlight streaming in through the large window filled the room with heat, making the blanket pulled up to his shoulders feel uncomfortably warm.

As he indulged in these sensations and registered his surroundings, he noticed something amiss.

“Sunlight strong enough to burn…?!”

Startled, he kicked off the blanket, jumped out of bed, and rushed to the window. A cool breeze poured into the room as he impatiently pushed the window open. Looking up at the sky, his bangs gently caressed by the wind, he saw it—the sun, high, high in the sky.

“No way, seriously. Oversleeping at a time like this…?”

Looking at the sun, already too high in the sky, it was undeniable that this was hardly “morning.” It was lunchtime, or worse, even later.

“What’s wrong with me… Am I an idiot?!”

Slamming the window shut, Subaru frantically darted out of the room and into the adjacent one.

Rem should have been sleeping in there, and the fact that she hadn’t woken him meant her consciousness was still surely in the dark.

“Rem, Rem, wake up! We totally overslept!”

He pounded on the door, calling out, cursing his own carelessness for having slept for over half a day. Rem, who had never overslept before, could be excused, perhaps due to the fatigue from driving the dragon carriage and other stresses, but for Subaru himself, it was simply a pure oversight.

His frustration at his own incompetence and impatience became unbearable, and he naturally hit the door with more force.

Still, there was no response from inside. Was Rem’s sleep that deep, or was there some other reason?

“Ah, damn it, fine. Rem! I knocked, remember!”

Saying this, Subaru gently opened the door and peered inside.

He had been considerate, thinking she might be changing or sleeping in an immodest position, but all his concerns proved to be unfounded.

Because—

“…Rem?”

The room was empty.

Pushing the door wide open, Subaru stepped inside and looked around.

The unrumpled bed showed no signs of anyone having slept in it; in fact, the undisturbed sheets showed no trace of anyone even lying down.

Feeling a terrible premonition run down his spine, Subaru nevertheless desperately continued to search the room for any trace of Rem.

However, no matter how much he searched, there was no sign that anyone had been there, save for a ceramic vessel on the table that seemed to have held a partially drunk beverage.

His few pieces of luggage, which he should have brought— The fact that even those were nowhere to be found made Subaru feel dizzy, and with his heart pounding and blood draining from his face, he hurried downstairs.

At the inn’s reception, the same proprietor who had welcomed them last night was seated. Seeing Subaru rush down, looking frantic, he said,

“Well, good morning to you. It seems you had a good rest last night.”

He rubbed his hands together, offering a practiced, businesslike smile.

However Subaru paid no attention to the proprietor’s demeanor; he slammed his hand on the counter, leaning forward.

“What happened to the blue-haired girl who was staying with me?!”

“O-Oh, sir… please don’t get so agitated. You’ll startle the other guests…”

“Answer me! Rem, where did my companion go?!”

The proprietor flinched at Subaru’s belligerent tone, who was clearly not listening, then stammered haltingly, choosing his words carefully.

“Your, your companion… well, late last night. Uh, she used the dragon carriage you arrived in, yes…”

“I can’t hear you! What?!”

“I said! She left during the night! She took the dragon carriage you arrived in, and left your companion’s… your lodging fee and luggage!”

Uttering the answer as if screaming it, the proprietor produced a bag from beneath the counter. He placed it on the counter and pushed it towards Subaru.

“This is your luggage. The lodging fee was prepaid, and quite generously, so there’s no problem whatsoever…”

“No problem… whatsoever?”

The proprietor seemed to be trying not to provoke Subaru, who was overcome with emotion, but his chosen words still infuriated Subaru again.

“No problem…?! How can there be NO problem!!”

He roared, slamming his arm down on the luggage on the desk, and then clutched his head.

Rising questions, doubts, anger, sadness, and the struggle against injustice swirled within his skull. Subaru tore at his black hair and looked up at the ceiling.

“What… What are you thinking, Rem…!!”

Even his trusted confidant had forced incomprehension upon him, and Subaru’s desperate cry echoed emptily into the sky.

3

“To Subaru,”

“When Subaru reads this letter, Rem is sure Subaru will be very angry with Rem.”

“Rem won’t ask you to forgive her for leaving Subaru behind and heading to the mansion. However please, understand.”

“Taking Subaru back to the mansion now is very dangerous. Both considering the situation at the mansion, and Subaru’s own body.”

“So, please wait for Rem’s return in this village, in Fleur. After everything is sorted out, Rem will definitely come to pick you up.”

“Rem is leaving all the money for you. I’ve given the innkeeper enough money and spoken with them so you can stay for as many days as you need.”

“Please, take care of yourself. Until Rem returns, Rem begs you, please wait. —Please.”

4

Subaru buried his head in his hands, letting out a long, deep sigh as he finished reading the letter tucked away in his luggage.

He was in the inn’s first-floor common room, sitting alone on a sofa.

There were few guests to begin with, and the innkeeper seemed wary after Subaru’s outburst earlier, not showing his face since guiding Subaru to the common room.

Amidst battling an uncontrollable wave of emotions, he'd found the letter in his luggage and slowly, painstakingly, read it— That was his current situation.

"Rem, you idiot…"

Neatly penned, the entire letter was written in "I-script."

The fact that Subaru was still learning and could only read and write in "I-script" was well known to everyone at the mansion, especially the twin sisters, who often acted as his instructors.

The deep sense of care etched into the stationery made it impossible to jump to the overly paranoid conclusion that this was a conspiracy by someone who had abducted Rem.

This meant the letter was undeniably from Rem, and its contents were unmistakably her will.

She had decided, on her own, to leave Subaru in the village and return to the mansion alone.

The letter expressed concern for Subaru, who was still far from fully recovered, and assured him of his future. But Subaru's heart was too full to accept such kindness right now.

For him, the only sentiment he could glean from Rem's letter was this:

"Rem… are you saying I'm useless and powerless too…?"

It was a succinct expression of his own pathetic self-assessment, purely based on the fact that he'd been left behind.

He reread the letter again and again, desperately searching for any hidden meaning. Or perhaps something written that only Subaru would understand.

However no matter how many times he read it, the words offered him no different interpretation than the first time.

"Is that so… Fine, then. I get it. If you're going to leave me behind… I won’t rely on you either.”

He gnashed his teeth, muttered, and stood up.

On the table, in the open bag he looked down at, were significant amounts of gold and silver coins, just as the letter had stated.

Rem had been managing their travel funds, likely entrusted to her by Roswaal when they left the capital. Even Subaru, whose financial sense hadn’t quite adapted to this new world, knew it was enough money to live comfortably for over a year.

In other words, if used wisely, it was a kind of power that would easily allow him to achieve his goal.

“I just need to hire a dragon carriage and a driver with this money and go to Roswaal’s mansion. I don’t know the market rate… I’ll have to make it work.”

At worst, as long as he reached it, he didn’t care if he arrived completely broke.

Once he decided how to use the money, all that was left was to act.

Grabbing his bag, Subaru exited the common room, his footsteps echoing loudly as he headed to the reception. The innkeeper was sitting there, making himself small, and seeing Subaru approach, he flinched as if afraid.

“Wh-What can I do for you, sir…?”

“I just have a quick question. How much would it cost to hire a dragon carriage to go from here to Marquis Roswaal’s… ah, Mathers territory?”

“A dragon carriage, you say…?”

Initially, the innkeeper’s demeanor was somewhat cautious, but once he judged that Subaru had regained some composure, he immediately considered the question.

He glanced at the bag in Subaru’s hand and the prepaid lodging fee

Rem had given him—factoring in all that information, he replied,

“If you’re purely looking to rent a dragon carriage, four gold coins should be enough. If you want a higher-quality ground dragon or cart, the price will vary. It also depends on whether it’s a round trip or how long you’re renting it for.”

“Is that all…? That’s totally within my budget. By the way, what about with a driver?”

“With a driver, the period is more clearly treated as short-term. On the other hand, if you don’t use the dragon carriage for the return trip, that changes the cost… hmm, if it’s just a one-way trip, you could probably rent the entire dragon carriage for five gold coins.”

“I’m not an expert, so I can’t be certain,” the innkeeper added, and Subaru expressed his gratitude, understanding that at least he had a general idea of the market rate.

Considering the amount of money in the bag Rem had left, such an expenditure would still leave him with plenty of change. “She pulled a fast one on me,” Subaru thought, letting his lips curl slightly, realizing he had underestimated Rem’s tenacity in carrying out her will. But that thought was immediately shattered by the innkeeper’s next words.

Subaru had assumed he had a way to follow her, but the innkeeper said, “However,” and then lowered his gaze hesitantly.

“Regarding the dragon carriage you requested, sir, there are hardly any shops in Fleur that rent them out. You’d have to wait for a shared dragon carriage and go to the capital or Hanumas first…”

“What…? Seriously? There’s not a single place that rents dragon carriages?”

“We apologize for the inconvenience. It’s even harder to say, but the next shared dragon carriage won’t arrive for over two days… the ‘Fog’ is particularly strong this time of year.”

Subaru was told this shocking fact by the apologetic innkeeper, and he immediately retracted his previous thought—he found himself gasping at Rem's ironclad thoroughness.

Her scheme likely began yesterday, when she suggested taking an inn in Fleur. Leaving Subaru in a village where it was difficult to arrange a dragon carriage, and making it hard for him to find legitimate transport.

Subaru, who had no means of operating a dragon carriage, couldn't even resort to criminal acts like stealing a ground dragon and riding it as a last resort.

It was all a plan to keep Subaru in this village and prevent him from getting involved in the situation.

"Sir, are you alright?"

Seeing Subaru resting his forehead on the reception desk, the innkeeper, concerned, furrowed his brows and asked.

Subaru managed to reply, "I'm fine," and then set his mind racing to find the next course of action.

If he couldn't arrange a dragon carriage, the worst-case scenario was to try and go on foot. Subaru alone couldn't deal with the bandits or witchbeasts Rem had been worried about, and above all, he had no way of accurately navigating the roads.

What he regretted now, far too late, was the fact that Subaru had never bothered to look at a map of this world with his own eyes until now.

He had no idea where the capital was on this world's map, how far Roswaal's territory was from the capital, or how large it was.

It was all the price of ignorance. The cost of being unlearned. The excuse that this world was an "another world" for Subaru no longer held true. Despite having had opportunities to learn and know, Subaru had let all those opportunities slip away— This was the karma that had befallen him.

"Walking is out. No shops to rent a dragon carriage. …Isn't there any way? Think…"

He mobilized everything he had seen, learned, and experienced in this world so far. Or even from the seventeen years he'd spent idly in his original world.

Subaru desperately racked his brain, searching for any usable idea.

The option of giving up and simply wasting time here, following Rem's instructions, was never an option from the start. If he were to choose that, he wouldn't have left Crusch's mansion in the first place.

Subaru was determined to rush to Emilia's side, even if it meant trampling on her kindness towards him. So, any more disgrace was out of the question.

At that moment, Subaru's brain began to spin at a scorching pace.

All the pent-up frustration and hardships accumulated until this very moment, this instant—those memories and humiliation intertwined, and facing an end where he might not be able to make any comeback, his brain roared like a fire.

Then, within the memories of his past days, Subaru found a hint that might break through this situation. It was:

"I want to ask the innkeeper something."

"Y-Yes, what is it?"

The innkeeper, who had been withdrawn from Subaru's silence and bloodshot eyes, was startled. But Subaru paid no mind to his reaction, looking at him with his still bloodshot eyes.

"This village has merchants with their own dragon carriages, right? I want to negotiate with them. Can you mediate?"

Chapter 31:
Negotiation, Business Talks, and Interruption

1

Subaru had ridden in a dragon carriage only four times— A number he could count on one hand.

First, there were the two round trips between the capital and the mansion. Then, there was the unconscious ride after Elsa’s blade struck him down on the day he was summoned, bringing the total to three.

The fourth time was—

“That cargo dragon carriage I used when I snuck into the castle, going along with Kadomon’s devious plan… that was the fourth time.”

He recalled the details of his clandestine entry into the castle, crammed into a fish-smelling cargo bed. While all his memories of the castle were unpleasant, it was precisely because of that experience that he’d come up with his current idea.

Namely, if there were no shops that officially rented out dragon carriages, then:

“I just need to borrow one from someone who already uses a dragon carriage for travel.”

Even Kadomon, the fruit seller who wasn’t popular in the royal capital, handled a dragon carriage. He recalled that it was a shared dragon carriage among the shopkeepers in that area, but it wasn’t unlikely for itinerant merchants without their own shops to pull their own dragon carriages.

“In fact, I’ve passed dragon carriages many times on streets filled with street vendors. In light novels I read a long time ago, merchants who hadn’t set up a shop yet were usually working as apprentices or traveling merchants with horse-drawn carriages.”

This idea was affirmed by the innkeeper, who nodded in agreement.

According to him, there were indeed several people in the village who owned dragon carriages for personal use.

Their existence barely kept Subaru’s fading hope alive. However,

“Ground dragons are essential for their livelihood, and for itinerant merchants, they’re truly a lifeline. I think negotiations will be quite difficult.”

The innkeeper conveyed this, implicitly warning him that it would be a challenging proposal.

However, Subaru had no other option available to him now. Therefore, Subaru shook his head, declining the innkeeper’s concern, and said,

“No, I’ll try anyway. Please tell me which houses have dragon carriages.”

With that request, he chose the path of negotiation.

2

As the innkeeper had feared, the negotiations proved to be quite difficult.

First, the households in the village that owned shops and used dragon carriages for stocking supplies or trading with other villages absolutely hated the idea of unscheduled dragon carriage use.

For them, a dragon carriage was a tool of their trade, not something they could easily lend out. Moreover, with their daily business to attend to, not a single eccentric person raised their hand to accompany Subaru on his journey.

After being rejected by all these shop-owning candidates, things got even tougher with the itinerant merchants who operated their own dragon carriages.

Subaru had assumed that these merchants, whose selling point was their light footwork and not staying in one place, would be perfect for this kind of request.

"It's the Mathers territory, isn't it? Sorry, but going there right now is impossible."

The tall, slender man tossed the words aside, cutting off negotiations with Subaru.

He was a person with a covered wagon and two slender ground dragons, just like himself. He looked at Subaru, who was still searching for words to persist, with reptilian eyes and said,

"If I may say so, I don't think I'm the only one refusing, you know? In my case, it's purely due to my cargo."

"Cargo?"

"My cargo is iron products for weapons and armor. I hear the market price in the capital is quite high right now. Tomorrow, I'll have to rush my dragon carriage over there and join in on that profitable venture."

Tapping his wagon lightly, the man spoke, gazing distantly towards the direction where the sun was setting—likely the capital.

Noticing Subaru's silence, he scratched his head and continued, "Besides,"

"The reason this village, Fleur, is relatively prosperous for its size is because it's a hub for folks like me who travel back and forth to the capital. So, I think there are quite a few people you could negotiate with… but they're all refusing you, aren't they?"

"…Yeah, you're the sixth person to refuse me."

Subaru bit his lip in vexation, announcing the results with a grimace.

Indeed, he saw a few people who met the preconditions for negotiation. As the man said, it was probably because this village was on the main road to the capital.

Subaru had eagerly approached them with the negotiations that shop-owning merchants had rejected, seeing it as a happy miscalculation, but,

“Now’s the time when folks who’ve been elsewhere are heading back to the capital non-stop. Can’t be helped, you know. There’s an uproar about the Royal Selection. All I smell is money.”

“So that’s how it is…”

Listening to the man, Subaru once again realized his own naivety.

It was a natural conclusion if he considered why itinerant merchants engaged in their trade. They weren’t just merchants who moved around. Their light footwork was essential vitality for jumping on profitable opportunities, and they went through the trouble of transporting goods precisely because those goods would lead to profit at their destination.

Currently, with the entire nation abuzz with the Royal Selection, there was no way an itinerant merchant would miss out on business opportunities in the capital.

His enthusiasm was crushed by his lack of foresight. Perhaps feeling sorry for Subaru, who was frustrated by the receding glimmer of hope, the man touched his aquiline nose thoughtfully and said, “Let’s see…”

“Besides, there are some fishy rumors flying around the Mathers territory right now. Even if the profitable deals in the capital fall through, hardly anyone would want to go there.”

“Fishy rumors… are those also related to the Royal Selection, by any chance?”

“I think it’s just a rumor. Something about a half-elf being a candidate and someone supporting her… The Royal Selection is still in the stage where rumors are flying around. Do you know anything about it?”

“…No, I don’t really know either.”

Subaru instantly lied, evading the man’s question. Perhaps not expecting much, the man simply accepted it with a “Is that so?” without appearing particularly disappointed.

Glancing at his reaction, Subaru realized that the environment surrounding Emilia was caught in a more vicious cycle than he had imagined.

Just as he was starting to grow weary of the formidable obstacles standing in his way and Emilia’s path, the man suddenly clapped his hands and said, “That’s right!”

“Hey, rejoice! I might have just thought of someone who might take you up on your offer!”

“—! Seriously?! I was almost giving up just now, with rape eyes!”

“I don’t know what you’re talking about, but it’s true. I’ll call him over for you.”

As he spoke, the man casually patted Subaru’s shoulder and jogged across the road. Subaru followed the man, who darted into a barely visible shop, and looked up at the shop’s sign.

“…Probably something like a tavern?”

He wasn’t entirely sure, but some of the characters carved there used the ‘Ro’ script he had just begun to learn, and he could barely decipher them. Furthermore, a faint, alcohol-laden scent wafted from beyond the double doors, making one question the character of anyone lingering there, even though it was still broad daylight.

Since the man had eagerly rushed in, the person he was looking for must be inside.

“What if he brings out some super dependent alcoholic… Is it okay to drive a dragon carriage while drinking in this world?”

Would there be jail time or license revocation for drunk driving? Or perhaps the concept of a dragon carriage license didn’t even exist.

Subaru quietly decided that if a stern-looking, alcohol-soaked self-employed type appeared, he would casually scatter some gold coins and make a run for it.

Just as Subaru was steeling himself with this grim resolve, the door opened, and,

“What, I told you to wait, but you came over here?”

The lean man laughed, looking somewhat taken aback. As he laughed, he reached an arm inside the shop, apparently pulling someone out by their clothes.

Subaru peered into the shop and shifted his gaze in that direction.

“I’m specifically asking for a favor, so it would be incredibly rude to make you walk over here. …So, this is the person?”

“Oh, right, right. This is him. Here, Otto, say hello!”

Pulled roughly by the arm, a young man with gray hair stepped forward before Subaru.

He was slightly shorter than Subaru and had a slender build. He seemed a little older than Subaru, probably around twenty years old. If he straightened his posture and composed his expression, he had a refined face that could pass for handsome, but,

“I’m Natsuki Subaru. Sorry for dragging you out. I heard you might be able to take on my request and… ugh! You reek of alcohol! Ugh, I’m getting drunk just from the smell!”

He tried to start the negotiation amicably but was immediately knocked out by the wafting stench. A potent alcoholic odor that made his stomach churn emanated from the gloomy-faced young man in front of him.

As expected—no, even more than expected, he seemed to be thoroughly drunk. Indeed, the young man stumbled a mere few steps with a staggering gait and somehow managed to stand before Subaru.

"I'm hooome… I've been introtuh-duced… as Otto… ugh… I mean. Ugh. Hic. Ugh."

He retched three times during his short greeting.

Otto, as the young man introduced himself, surveyed Subaru and the other man alternately with a drunken, flushed face that didn't suit his refined features.

"Sooo, what was it again? A business deal? Was it a business deal? Ugh, a business deal for me, ugh, ahaha, ugh. Isn't that a funny stoory, ugh."

Finally, Otto squatted down, laughing for reasons unknown to Subaru.

Feeling completely disheartened by his behavior, Subaru shot a resentful glance at the man who had introduced him. The man, flustered, raised his hands.

"Wait, wait, wait, I didn't trick you!"

"If you're serious about this introduction, it makes me question your judgment. This isn't just drunk driving; at this point, he'd be stopped by the police even if he was just walking!"

He had been introduced to a man who was not just tipsy but utterly plastered.

Perhaps understanding Subaru's skepticism, the man who was being glared at roughly shook Otto's shoulder, who was still squatting.

"Otto! Hey, wake up! You're the one who said to introduce you if there was a chance for a big reversal of fortunes! Are you gonna ruin it with alcohol, huh?!"

"A big reversal of fortunes…?!"

Otto's dead eyes suddenly flickered. He shook off the man's hand that was gripping his shoulder, and with a movement that belied his drunken state from moments ago, he stood up.

“My sincerest apologies. My name is Otto Suwen. I am a humble merchant who makes a living through trade.”

Otto’s determined expression was so sharp it almost seemed to make a sound.

Subaru was speechless at his sudden transformation. Otto observed Subaru thoroughly from head to toe, let out a sigh of “Hmm,” and then said,

“I see, so you are guaranteed a certain status. This could indeed be a valuable customer. Ketty, thank you very much.”

“Alright, alright. See, now the conversation can proceed, right? Well then, if you’ll excuse me. Young man, give me your business if we ever meet again. Otto, you owe me one next time.”

Once Otto displayed an attitude sufficient to dispel any doubts, the man dramatically exhaled in relief, patted his chest, and then raised a hand to them before leaving the spot.

After throwing words of thanks at his retreating back and seeing him off, Subaru turned back to the young man. Standing before him, evaluating him, Otto showed no trace of the lingering drunken stupor from moments ago.

“Now, let us begin negotiations. —What is it you seek, customer?”

Clapping his hands and raising a finger, Otto put on a beaming smile and proposed.

3

“I don’t mind taking it on, truly.”

That was Otto’s reply after Subaru finished explaining his situation, briefly and somewhat vaguely.

Subaru, who had only held a slight hope of not being outright refused due to the introduction from the merchant named Ketty, was, in a way, astonished by this ready acceptance.

However, he quickly grasped the meaning of the response, and immediately, Subaru gripped Otto's hands tightly.

"Ah, thank you! Really, you'll do it? That helps! It really helps!"

"Ow! Ow, ow, ow! Hold on, you're so strong! Wait, please! I'm glad you're happy, but I have conditions too!"

As his arms were swung wildly up and down, Otto raised his voice and shook free. Opening and closing his now empty hands, Subaru tilted his head, asking, "Conditions?"

Otto lightly shook his freed hands, grimacing slightly, and said, "Yes."

"This is my tool of trade, or rather, my lifeline, so I can't just accept easily. Of course, not for the price of a regular rented dragon carriage. Especially since there are many uncertainties heading to the Mathers territory right now."

"That's understandable, of course. I can't really say 'name your price,' though."

Glancing down at the bag he held, Subaru hesitated, unable to imagine the sum Otto might propose. At the very least, if he demanded more than the money Subaru had left, it would be an immediate no-go. Even then, he couldn't easily agree if some kind of exchange condition was brought up.

As Subaru revealed his caution, Otto winked an eye.

"Well then. How about… all the money you have?"

He shrugged his shoulders with both hands raised, speaking in a jesting manner.

For him, it was the first step in negotiations. In other words, he was laying a groundwork. The clear gleam in his eyes showed his intention to gain control of the pace from there and lead the conversation forward.

It was the start of a negotiation battle, a comparison of words and arguments—

“Is that all right? Okay. Then, I’ll entrust this bag to you. Can we depart right away?”

That’s not what happened.

Subaru, casually offering the bag he was holding, left Otto dumbfounded, making him instinctively accept it. Feeling its significant weight in both arms, he swallowed hard, then turned his trembling eyes to Subaru.

“Wha—no, that’s not right?! Normally, this is where a debate begins, where we slowly move closer to each other’s demands! To accept so easily…”

“It’s a waste of time, and I’d lose the debate anyway. So I’m not going to fight a battle that’s useless, and if what’s in that bag is enough, then it’s a dream come true for me.”

At worst, he could have lost everything in the bag and still failed to achieve his objective. Thinking of that, if he could get a one-way ticket by spending all his money, it was a cheap price to pay.

Otto, seeing Subaru’s decision, put a hand to his forehead with an exasperated look.

“This… could it be that I’ve been introduced to a truly troublesome person?”

“Don’t worry. Personally, I don’t intend to bother anyone. In my heart, at least.”

Neither Subaru himself nor Otto, whose acquaintance was far too brief, could possibly know that his statement had not a shred of persuasiveness.

“Alright. I put forth my conditions for taking on the job, and you accepted them immediately. I have my pride as a merchant. No matter how paltry the sum, I’ll see it through… Ugh?! Wh-What is this huge amount of money?! To just hand over something like this… ugh-bleh.”

Ignoring Otto, who retched in renewed nausea after checking the bag's contents, Subaru clenched his fist before the opportunity he had finally grasped.

Various obstacles stood in Subaru's way, but he could somehow overcome all of them. He still didn't know what stood in Emilia's path, but he was sure he would understand once he stood by her side. He was certain he could do something about it.

"Wait for me, almost there… almost there."

Clearly, the corner of Subaru's mouth twisted into a smile.

He didn't even realize he was smiling, unable to tell if it was because he could finally achieve his goal or because he had a vision of the beloved girl.

4

"Then, let's confirm the contract's terms. Our destination is the Mathers territory, under Margrave Roswaal L. Mathers. The condition is to reach it as quickly as possible, even driving through the night… I'm accepting this because of the payment, but it's an unreasonable condition, you know."

"Don't complain, you're the one whose eyes lit up at the sight of the gold coins! Please, thr future depends on this."

"I think the future depends on various things simultaneously, you know."

As he spoke, Otto skillfully managed the reins, and the ground dragon neighed, kicking the ground and setting off at a run.

Otto's dragon carriage was a large, covered wagon, and the ground dragon pulling it was a powerfully built, enormous creature to match. Subaru was concerned about its speed given its rather heavy-duty appearance, but,

"On the other hand, its stamina is exceptional. It's a breed particularly known for its endurance among long-distance types, so it won't break down even if it runs for three days straight."

"If you make it run for three days, the person riding it would probably break down first."

"About two years ago, I also pushed it hard so I wouldn't miss a business opportunity. When a person is desperate, they can do surprisingly much. I collapsed right after the business deal was done, and then hovered between life and death for about a week."

"Desperate, huh?"

He glanced at Otto's face, and noticing his gaze, Otto looked at him as if to ask, "Something wrong?" Subaru waved his hand in response to the unspoken question and tried to change the subject, looking down at the running ground dragon.

"Anyway, so there's no need to replace this one along the way, then. In that case, we can just pass through Hanumas village, right?"

"That's right. Hanumas is a better transit point than Fleur, but if you have your own dragon carriage fully loaded with water and food, there's no value in stopping. And since the request is for an express trip, we'll pass straight through."

Despite his plan being a complete spur-of-the-moment decision, Otto's orderly explanations contained not a hint of anxiety.

For him, it was just one of many roads he had traveled countless times. They were likely not far apart in age, yet he exuded a dignity that seemed unfitting for his refined appearance.

Even as such a person, he had agreed to Subaru's reckless request. While it was true that the payment was a factor, Subaru still had his doubts.

"Hey, why did you agree to my request? The fact that you were so drunk is also a bit of a mystery."

"Y-You're very blunt with your difficult questions, Mr. Natsuki."

Otto made a face that was more a grimace than a bitter smile at Subaru's question.

Subaru straightened his posture before the person who, for the first time since he came to this world, called him by his family name. Realizing, for the first time in a while, his own low social skills for asking such a direct, difficult question, he said,

“Well, what’s done is done. You might as well just confess.”

“You say that so easily… Well, to put it just as simply, I messed up due to a slight miscommunication of information.”

Sighing at Subaru’s almost brazen attitude, Otto began to narrate the cause of his earlier drunken spectacle at the tavern.

When the word “messed up” came up, Subaru furrowed his brows, and Otto turned his head towards the loaded cargo bed.

“Over there, in the cargo bed, is all of my current cargo… What do you think it is?”

“…At first glance, it looks like a bunch of jars or something. Were you planning to sell pottery?”

“Wrong answer. The merchandise isn’t about appearance; it’s what’s inside. The jars are full of oil. Originally, I planned to take it north to Gusteko, but…”

Shrugging, Otto chuckled self-deprecatingly at his miscalculation.

“It must be related to the Royal Selection. Passage to Gusteko, a northern country, has been temporarily closed. I desperately resisted when I realized my goods wouldn’t sell… I was turned away without success.”

What was supposed to bring a fortune in the cold Gusteko had been rejected, and he now had to somehow dispose of it within Lugunica. To add insult to injury, Otto had traded for the oil using various iron products that had been virtually worthless until recently.

As a result, he missed the chance to make a killing on iron products, lost the market to sell the oil he now had, and apparently, in despair, he got drunk.

"Even in the capital, it's impossible to sell this much oil easily… If I were to sell it for next to nothing, I'd be ruined as a merchant. I had half given up on life, thinking I was finished as a merchant, when your offer came along, Mr. Natsuki."

"Can that money somehow cover your losses?"

"Even if you bought all this oil at its market price, you'd still get change back. This somehow saved my neck. I'm truly grateful."

To Otto, who was bowing his head as if worshipping him, Subaru waved his hand, saying, "Stop it." Subaru was just as grateful to him. In fact, he was almost certain his gratitude was no less than Otto's.

For a while, they continued their charade, saying things like, "It's thanks to you," "No, no, it's thanks to you," "I exist because you were there," and "Yes, we were destined to meet this way," deepening their sympathy for each other as time passed.

When a lull fell in their conversation and silence suddenly settled between them, Subaru looked away from the road they were traveling and squinted at the endless plain.

"Hey, Otto. Can't we just cut across this plain?" he muttered.

Hearing Subaru's whisper, Otto burst into laughter as if he had heard the most exquisite joke, slapping his knee and saying, "Oh, come on!"

"That's not even remotely funny. When the 'Fog' covers the plain, the White Whale appears. It's one of the most famous witchbeasts… If you encounter it, you won't survive."

"Is it that dangerous? Hasn't it ever been subjugated?"

"As long as you avoid the 'Fog'. the damage is minimal. Apparently, there were expeditions organized to subjugate it in the past, but you can guess the results from the fact that the White Whale is still alive and well."

In other words, the subjugation failed, and the resulting damage made subsequent expeditions hesitant.

Listening to this, Subaru felt a complex emotion at the mention of the word "Witchbeast." For Subaru, witchbeasts brought to mind the hordes of Juggernauts that inhabited the vicinity of Roswaal's mansion.

He had thought there were some sympathetic aspects to the fate of those beasts, whose nests were all eventually burned down and eradicated. Of course, even for Subaru, who had been killed by them, the fact that they were creatures with an ecology too difficult to coexist with was undeniable.

"The White Whale, huh. Is it shaped like a white whale?"

"According to the few people who witnessed it and survived, it's apparently so massive they still can't quite tell what it was. They just desperately threw everything away and saved only their lives while everything around them was crushed."

"It's a terrifying story," Otto said with a long sigh, seemingly unwilling to talk about the White Whale any further.

For him, an itinerant merchant who traveled across various regions, the White Whale, which occupied the plains for days and forced detours, must have been an object of detestable hatred.

"It would be great if it were subjugated, but I don't want to get involved with it." Such an intention could be sensed from his attitude, and Subaru also ceased further inquiry at that point.

In any case, Subaru couldn't reach the territory without Otto's cooperation. He had to avoid displeasing him with strange talk and becoming unfriendly.

Otto, focused on handling the ground dragon, didn't notice Subaru quietly looking at him with suddenly emotionless eyes.

Subaru himself also couldn't tell what kind of gleam was in his own eyes at that moment.

The situation was slowly, yet surely, progressing with distortions.

—As a result of the forced march, continuing even through the night without rest.

"We can see it now. Once we cross that hill, we'll enter the Mathers territory."

About half a day and three hours had passed since their journey began.

Subaru and the others arrived at their destination, the Mathers territory, in the early morning when the sun that had set after their departure began to rise again, brightly illuminating the world.

"We've been running non-stop… Maybe we even overtook Rem."

"No, no, it's tough to catch up to someone who left more than half a day ahead. More importantly, are we heading to the Mathers territory's…?"

"Yeah, the mansion of the lord, Margrave Roswaal. Do you know the location?"

"Roughly. Well, leave it to me."

Otto responded to Subaru in a dependable voice, deftly moving his hands on the reins.

Unlike Subaru, who had managed to get a few shallow sleeps during the journey, Otto had no time to rest while driving and was practically running on fumes, but his reply had a strong, fatigue-free resonance.

“Hahahahaha! Go! Go! I can see a shining path before me now!”

In fact, seeing him utter such slightly over-the-top, excited lines made him seem like he was running purely on adrenaline from staying up all night, which was rather endearing.

Anyway, setting aside his fellow traveler’s condition, Subaru thought of the mansion, now very close, and brought to mind the reunion scene he had tried to avoid contemplating until now.

He probably wouldn’t be easily accepted. Subaru, who was supposed to be in the capital for treatment, was returning mid-treatment. He had to be prepared even for harsh words.

Still,

“I came back to do what I have to do. There’s nothing to be ashamed of. That’s right, nothing at all.”

As if to justify his actions, or to make excuses to someone not present, Subaru repeatedly whispered the magic words that had continued to sustain his morale.

When he uttered them, he could temporarily banish the anxieties that threatened to crush his chest. That’s why Subaru repeated those words.

Disregarding several other words he should have remembered, Subaru continued to support his fragile, crumbling self with such phrases.

Subaru’s resolve, bolstered by such temporary confidence, was then, “Mr. Natsuki… Could you forgive me if I stop here?”

Dashed by Otto, who suddenly stopped the dragon carriage after they had approached the mansion and driven through a forested area for a while.

5

“What do you mean? You’re not going to say the contract’s over just because we’ve entered the Mathers territory, are you? That’s not fraud, but it’s close enough!”

Subaru grabbed Otto, who had suddenly refused to proceed further, from the driver’s seat of the stopped dragon carriage. He pulled Otto by the collar, about to hurl more insults, but swallowed the words as he saw Otto’s pale face.

Released from the collar, Otto silently straightened his disheveled clothes on the driver’s seat. Then, he bowed deeply to Subaru.

“I apologize. I intended to stay with you until the very end. However I can’t find the courage to go any further.”

“What are you talking about? Courage has nothing to do with this, does it? We’re almost at the mansion. The road isn’t even bad. Come on, Otto.”

“I can’t, even if you ask. I can’t accept all the payment either. I’ll return half of it. So please, let me turn back here.”

To Subaru, who was trying to brush it off lightly, Otto put his hands on the driver’s seat and bowed his head, earnestly pleading for forgiveness.

Subaru gasped, taken aback by his utterly desperate demeanor.

“What’s wrong, all of a sudden? What could make you act like that…?

”

“The ground dragon… It’s afraid. This has never happened before!

This is why itinerant merchants use dragons for travel; they can tell when something should be avoided!"

Otto, his face pale, looked down at the ground dragon, his hands gripping the reins trembling slightly. Looking at it, the ground dragon, standing on its feet and awaiting its master's command, was quietly taking ragged breaths. But it repeatedly snorted towards their direction of travel —their destination— and shifted its body as if signaling danger, urging strong caution.

From the ground dragon's behavior and Otto's reaction, trusting it, Subaru understood.

An unimaginable threat awaited them ahead.

He couldn't force Otto and the others to face it with him. There was no choice but for Subaru to challenge it alone.

"Thanks for everything. Sorry to put you through something scary, Otto."

"Eh?"

Hearing a surprised voice behind him, Subaru leaped from the driver's seat to the ground. Landing beside the ground dragon, he lightly patted his tingling legs and looked up at Otto.

"I'll walk to the mansion from here. It's not that far, really. It's enough that you brought me this far. Take all the money."

"I can't possibly… No, more importantly, Mr. Natsuki! Don't go! Let's turn back together. There's a mist here right now!"

"Are you saying the White Whale will appear?"

"I mean it as an ill omen for merchants! When mist covers your destination, it's a matter of life and death for us… Never mind that, just reconsider, please…"

"I'm sorry, but…"

Seeing Otto desperately raising his voice, concerned for Subaru,

Subaru forced a bitter smile. Perhaps a merchant with such good nature, where deceit and trickery were common, wasn't suited for this profession.

Questioning the benevolent Otto's suitability for his job, Subaru raised a hand, then turned his back on the dragon carriage and Otto.

"Just as you weigh your life and money on a precious scale, I too am weighing something as important as my life. That precious thing is ahead of me."

"Mr. Natsuki!"

"I won't think badly of you for turning back. In fact, it's the right choice to turn back when you know it's dangerous. Just knowing that beforehand is enough for me."

Ahead on this road, at Subaru's destination, lay a danger that even dragons feared.

He had to hurry. He had to rush there. The answer Subaru sought must be waiting there.

"—Mr. Natsuki!"

Leaving Otto behind, who called his name, concerned for him until the very end, Subaru pushed off strongly from the ground of the deep forest and ran.

He ran, and ran, and kept running, leaving behind the person who had genuinely worried about him, and continued towards his destination.

The exact distance to Roswaal's mansion was unknown.

However, the familiar clusters of trees were undoubtedly those of the mountains surrounding the mansion. A clear path suitable for a dragon carriage remained, and there was no doubt he could reach the mansion by following it.

Before that, the nearest village— Very close to the mansion, a village Subaru had visited many times—should greet him, but he felt no need to focus on it now.

He just wanted to reach the mansion as quickly as possible.

If he did, the dangling emotions tormenting Subaru now might find some resolution. Whether in the form he desired or not, he wished for a change now.

He thought of Emilia. He thought of Rem. He thought of Emilia. He thought of Ram. He thought of Emilia. He thought of Beatrice. He thought of Emilia. He thought of Roswaal. He thought of Emilia. He thought of Puck. He thought of Emilia. He thought of the villagers. He thought of Emilia. Emilia, Emilia, Emilia, Emilia, Emilia—

Subaru continued his dash, too many thoughts for it to be mindless.

His feet stopped, not because he had arrived at his destination—

What stopped Subaru's running feet was a sudden sense of unease that flickered through his mind.

Even Subaru, who had been focused on running and ignoring any anomalies around him, clearly perceived an abnormality—namely,

"It's too quiet, isn't it?"

Other than the sound of the wind passing by, all other sounds had vanished from the world.

Looking around, all he saw were standing trees; there was nothing actively producing sound. But Subaru, who had spent nearly a month in this land, knew.

The abnormality of this forest's overwhelming stillness, where not even the chirping of insects could be heard.

—Then, it suddenly appeared, slipping into the gap of Subaru's consciousness.

"Wh-What?!"

Crying out in surprise, Subaru instinctively recoiled.

His face pale, unable to accept the reality before him—there, quietly standing, was an unknown figure cloaked entirely in black.

However, his astonishment didn't end there.

"This… no, these people…!"

Subaru turned his head, forming words with trembling lips. As if following his gaze, black shadows sprouted up, one after another, in various parts of the forest path.

Their number quickly exceeded ten, surrounding the wary Subaru.

Even more abnormal was the fact that despite their inexplicable appearance, the same profound silence continued as before.

The black-clad figures watched Subaru silently, without even a hint of a breath.

Feeling instinctively that they were not friendly, Subaru could say nothing, merely waiting for their next action.

How long did this standoff last?

The tension was so extreme that Subaru felt the flow of time become terribly ambiguous.

His heart should have been pounding painfully, yet the silence was so violent that he couldn't even hear his own heartbeat—and that equilibrium shattered as abruptly as it began.

Then—

"…"

All at once, the black-clad figures bowed respectfully towards Subaru.

—Completely, Subaru's brain gave up trying to comprehend the scene.

The inexplicable figures appeared, showed inexplicable reverence, and then, leaving the inexplicably bewildered Subaru behind, vanished as inexplicably as they came.

Unable to utter a single word, with nothing to do but stare in astonishment at the scene before him, the black-clad figures who had raised their faces began to move, gliding smoothly.

They passed by the frozen Subaru without doing anything, then disappeared from the edge of his vision with the same silent gait as when they appeared.

They likely appeared the same way when they first emerged, slipping through a gap in his awareness. Even having realized that, everything else about their existence remained incomprehensible.

Therefore, after freezing for several minutes, Subaru understood that he had been completely left behind. He gave up on trying to understand them further and started running again.

Their presence had unpleasantly gnawed at Subaru's current anxiety.

To shake off the shivers and unease that ran up his spine, Subaru ran through the forest path again, single-mindedly, as if to forget everything.

Subaru gave up trying to understand the incomprehensible black-clad figures.

Because of that, he couldn't notice.

The fact that the direction the gliding black-clad figures vanished towards was the same direction where Otto should have been left behind.

Subaru never once reflected on that fact.

Chapter 32:
The Illness Called Despair

1

Anxiety— A gnawing anxiety that made him want to claw at his own throat—dominated his entire being.

His feet were moving forward, his heart toward the future, his will toward his goal, yet he felt an unknown terror creeping up on him from behind, inch by agonizing inch. The nausea was overwhelming. A constant ringing hammered in his ears. His heart pounded so violently it felt like it would burst from his chest, and the feet kicking the ground felt so fragile and unreliable that if he wasn't conscious of them, they'd seem to vanish from the tips of his toes.

How had it come to this?

Everything was supposed to go well. Everything was supposed to be headed in the right direction. It was just bad luck. Just bad timing. He could do it if he tried. If his objective was clear, he should be able to proceed without hesitation.

He knew what he had to do: save Emilia. If she was in dire straits, it was Subaru's role to rescue her. He'd always done so. He'd do it this time too. Then everything would be fine. She'd surely look at him in a new light. She'd think, "I really can't do without Subaru," and keep him by her side.

He didn't want to be abandoned. Didn't want to be deserted. Didn't want to be underestimated. Didn't want to be given up on.

With desperate thoughts, fervent will, and a resolve to die, Subaru repeated these words to himself.

He was out of breath. His lungs ached, his overworked body groaned, and he could feel various parts of his still-healing body screaming in protest. Yet, he couldn't stop.

He had to run, even a second faster, even a tiny bit faster. Otherwise, he'd be caught. Whatever was closing in from behind would devour him.

He hated that. That alone he hated. Right now, only that was terrifying.

He wanted to see Emilia, wanted her to smile at him. Why had Rem left him? Where had the warmth he'd touched last night vanished? Beatrice's sharp tongue and Ram's impertinence now felt incredibly nostalgic and precious. How much peace would Roswaal's eccentricity or Puck's tranquility bring to his heart?

He should have just stayed in that place forever. His time should have been buried in the days at that mansion, forever and ever.

Going to the capital was a mistake. All the time he spent in the capital was the cause of his current predicament.

Reinhard, Felt, Old Man Rom, Crusch, Ferris, Julius, Anastasia, Al, Priscilla, the faces of the Council of Wise Men, the Knights—one after another, they flashed through his mind, and all of them could only be objects of hatred for Subaru now.

Be cursed, suffer, taste the limits of pain and die.

If only they weren't there, Subaru wouldn't have lost himself. If he could return to the mansion, reconcile with Emilia, and go back to those exhilarating days, he'd gladly throw everything away.

There was nothing left, nothing remained. Everything had slipped through his grasp. So, now he'd go and pick it all up.

For that, for that, for that, he kept running. Through the pain that scorched his lungs, the regret that shattered his heart, the ringing in his ears that threatened to drown his consciousness—Subaru endured it all and ran.

Like a ceaseless repetition, feelings of resentment and regret passed through his mind. How long had he been running forward with such a negative mindset?

Suddenly, the dense trees around him began to thin, and signs of human activity cutting into nature emerged. The ground he kicked gradually felt more packed, and Subaru, looking up with a start, noticed the gently rising slope and involuntarily forced a smile.

He had vaguely come out onto a familiar path. There were no obvious landmarks, and to an observer, it might have seemed like the same forest path continued on. But to Subaru, who had desperately sought change, who had traveled this road many times, he knew it was the end of this endless green labyrinth.

He hadn’t arrived at the mansion. Just before it, before Subaru’s eyes, beyond the slope, was the village closest to the mansion.

Suddenly, faces of people he’d interacted with frequently and befriended during those days, not just the mansion residents, flooded his mind. The overly familiar children, the strangely unguarded villagers. The eccentric folk who didn’t laugh at his otherworldly knowledge as absurd but accepted it as it was.

It was so nostalgic, tears almost welled up. He didn’t even know why he’d forgotten. Besides the mansion, there were still places that would warmly welcome Subaru.

There, too, his worth as Subaru remained. He had saved that village. It might have disappeared without him. It was his achievement. As a result of his actions, there was nothing better than this. Remembering his refuge so close at hand, Subaru’s steps quickened even more.

Beyond the slope, rising above the screen of trees in the early morning sky, was the white smoke, a symbol of daily life. Cooking, perhaps, or boiling water. Maybe from a blacksmith or metalworking shop. In any case, it was proof that someone was there.

For now, that was enough. He just wanted someone who knew him, someone who would accept him, to call his name. To prove, with familiarity and friendship, that he belonged there.

He ran. He climbed. The end of the slope neared, and the source of the white smoke became visible. He reached the top. Sweat trickled down his forehead, suddenly getting into his eyes. Subaru impatiently wiped it away with a rough hand, and then, with a refreshed feeling, looked at the village.

—And then, Subaru was finally overtaken by the nightmare closing in from behind.

2

When Subaru rushed into the village entrance, the first thing he did was scan his surroundings for any sign of a villager— Then he noticed something off and furrowed his brow.

The moment he stopped, the accumulated strain immediately hit his cardiorespiratory system. He gasped for air, spitting out saliva and phlegm, hands on his knees, bent over, trying to recover. All the while, his gaze remained fixed upwards.

At first glance, nothing seemed amiss in the village. But he distinctly felt that something was wrong. The cool morning air in the early village was crisp, and the waking light poured into his groggy mind. Yet, he couldn't sense anyone's presence anywhere.

Subaru crossed his arms, pondered for a moment, then realized, "Ah." He'd been running all night, so he wasn't fully aware, but it was still early morning, when few villagers would have begun their daily activities. That's why he probably wasn't seeing any figures outside their homes, starting their chores.

Convinced by this explanation for the lack of people, he then headed towards the rising white smoke to ascertain its source. They say there's no smoke without fire, and where there's smoke, there must be human intervention. He figured he'd encounter someone there.

That plan also failed, and Subaru met no one. When he reached the edge of the village where the white smoke was rising, there was already no one there. Only the faint embers causing the smoke were weakly burning, and looking around, there was no sign of whoever had started it.

This time, a clear, not vague, anxiety enveloped Subaru.

His breathing quickened for reasons other than fatigue, and his heart began to pound faster again. Driven by these reactions, Subaru couldn't stand it any longer and roughly knocked on the door of a nearby house. No response. Driven by a dreadful premonition, he violently pushed open the unlocked door and burst inside. However it was empty too. No one.

"Are they all out doing field work?" he muttered a pointless joke, forcing a dry laugh as he stepped back outside. Without stopping, he went to the next house. This time, he skipped even knocking and just stormed inside. No screams, no scolding from residents about his trespassing—nothing. This place was also deserted.

He was beginning to lose his grasp on the situation. The unknown chill he felt eerily resembled what he'd experienced with the black-clad figures in the forest, and Subaru desperately searched for people, oblivious to everything else.

No matter how much he ran around, how much he called out until his throat was hoarse, how many places a mischievous child might hide he scoured, he couldn't find a single soul.

Silence had fallen here too, and Subaru was left behind by the world.

He slumped heavily to the ground, his body devoid of strength, and let out a long, deep sigh. No matter how many times he encountered it, he never got used to situations that made no sense. Of course, illogical developments that he did understand were equally bad. His current predicament, constantly assailed by both, couldn't even be described with words like "surrounded by enemies" or "facing numerous difficulties."

Suddenly, a sharp pain seemed to reverberate in his skull, and Subaru instinctively put a hand to his forehead. But the moment he touched it, an unpleasant sensation spread across his skin. He saw that his right hand, which he'd placed on the ground when he sat down, was completely covered in mud from the wet earth, and he must have unwittingly smeared a large amount of it onto his face.

The sensation of reddish-brown mud trickling down the bridge of his nose was the epitome of discomfort. Subaru used his clean left arm to wipe it away, then cast a resentful gaze at the ground that had soiled his right hand.

He'd been concerned about it while running around, but this morning, the ground was terribly muddy and difficult to run on. It was especially bad at the village entrance and around where the smoke rose; he'd almost lost his footing countless times while searching for villagers. He'd tried to choose less muddy ground to sit on, but judging by his right hand, his backside might be significantly worse off. As he became aware of it, he felt a gradual dampness in his lower abdomen, and another massive sigh escaped him.

"I must be going crazy", he thought. That was only natural. He'd been traveling under harsh conditions for over a day and night with almost no sleep. He'd only eaten some bland emergency rations Otto had shared, so it was hard to say he'd eaten enough. Plus, his brain had been working frantically, constantly worrying about Emilia's safety, whenever he was conscious. If he wasn't tired after all that, Subaru wouldn't be human; he'd be a super-high-performance AI.

A pointless joke came to mind, and Subaru again let out a dry laugh. He brushed off his backside, then reluctantly rubbed the dirt from his right hand onto a wall before turning his body to search the village again. This was his last desperate effort. He'd called out so earnestly, run around so much, and yet no one had shown their face. He probably truly was alone in the village. He couldn't grasp where everyone had gone or why, but if he accepted that much, he had no choice but to move on.

He circled through the village once more, finally returning to the edge where the white smoke still wafted. It was the only place where time seemed to flow, gently swaying in the wind, as if to soothe the loneliness of being left behind by time itself.

When he reached his destination, the smoldering white smoke was about to die down, its heat fading. The weak smoke was beaten by the breeze, wavering unreliably from side to side before dissipating.

Feeling a sense of melancholy at the sight of the disappearing smoke, Subaru scanned his surroundings with unexpecting eyes. Still, no one was in sight. His search had apparently been in vain.

He sighed for what felt like the hundredth time, then kicked the ground in frustration. His toes dug into the muddy earth, and the splashing mud delivered the final blow to the nearly vanished white smoke. A tiny, faint death rattle as the fire died tickled his eardrums, and the smoke, its source extinguished, vanished into the sky. When the last wisps of white smoke were carried away by the wind and completely gone, nothing remained.

Watching the disappearing smoke, Subaru slowly lowered his gaze. With the smoke gone, that spot was now like any other, a place where time stood still, cut off from the world. There was nothing left there to draw Subaru's attention.

Only the village elder, who had been generating the white smoke, was lying there.

Scratching his head, Subaru then shifted his awareness outward and looked around. Near the wall, a young man with a close-cropped haircut lay as if discarded. A weapon was plunged into his chest, where he lay on his back, and copious amounts of blood stained the earth red. In the first house he'd entered, he now noticed a middle-aged man and woman collapsed, piled on top of each other in the corner of the first room. The next house, and the one after that—the people Subaru had desperately searched for were nowhere to be found. All that remained were their remnants, stripped of dignity, their lives violated like discarded rags. The sheer number of these accumulating remains was enormous, and as Subaru witnessed them, he continued to search for a living soul. He just desperately wanted someone to call his name.

However, no matter how many times he circled the village, Subaru's wish was not granted.

There was nothing Subaru sought here. Understanding only that, and casting aside all other understanding, Subaru abandoned his actions in the village and headed towards the path leading to the mansion. He had taken an unnecessary detour. This was the result of not seeing his initial resolve through. He had wasted valuable time and still hadn't reached the peace he should have already found. It was useless. All of it was useless. There was only futility here. Including Subaru himself, there was nothing but futility.

Muttering this like a curse, Subaru stumbled forward. Then, on the path out of the village, he suddenly tripped over something and fell. The moment he realized his footing had slipped, it was already too late. There was nothing around to prevent his fall, and with all his momentum, he hit the ground hard, shoulder-first. Pain pierced his brain, and Subaru let out a groaning sound that erupted from deep in his throat. Tears welled up reflexively in the corners of his eyes as he glared at the cause of his fall.

—He met the empty, unseeing eyes of Petra.

"AAAAAAAHHHHHHHHH—!!!"

3

—He couldn't escape.

Subaru continued to heave sobs from a throat raw from screaming, tears streaming down his face as he cradled Petra's lifeless body, which had been tossed aside on the ground.

Petra's body had long since grown cold, her limbs beginning to stiffen. An unconscious body should be much heavier than a conscious one, yet Petra's felt too light, even considering her small size. Surely, too much blood had flowed from the wound that pierced her chest.

Petra lay dead, her eyes wide, a look of surprise on her face. The absence of any trace of pain in her expression was the only mercy, signifying her instant death from a shattered heart. This child had no reason to endure pain, not with a death that left a hole in her chest.

Her once lovely features had lost all color, and her brownish curls were now stained with blood and mud, unrecognizable. He at least wanted to close her wide-open eyes, but her stiffening eyelids denied her even that mercy.

Subaru laid Petra's body on the ground, covering her wide eyes with his jacket as a small atonement, praying for a peaceful sleep to find her.

Then, fearful of looking at what he had been avoiding, he slowly raised his gaze— Finally accepting the reality that his familiar village had turned into a hell.

The smoldering white smoke had been the burning body of the village elder. The young man from the youth group must have fought with a sword. The familiar sword now pierced his chest, forming a pool of blood that submerged its owner. The man and woman lying on top of each other were a couple. The husband had embraced his wife as if to shield her, and they had both been run through by a weapon, dying together.

There were brutally murdered bodies. Bodies burned to death. Bodies torn apart. Bodies crushed. Bodies beaten to a pulp. Only bodies.

Death lay scattered everywhere in the village. A suffocating silence hung over the village littered with corpses, everything having ended long before Subaru arrived. Now, only Subaru bore witness to the conclusion of the tragedy that had unfolded here, reaching out his hands far too late, gasping for air, with no one to grasp them.

What had happened? Something had happened. Something immense had occurred.

That "something" had ravaged this village with merciless brutality, violated the dignity of every life, and massacred the innocent villagers. No one was breathing. Not a single survivor remained. Every hiding place had been meticulously overturned, as if in a relentless search, and he even found bodies that seemed to have been burned to death while hiding.

His mind wasn't working. Liquids flowed ceaselessly from every orifice of his face. Tears, snot, drool— They continued to defile a face that had lost the will to resist.

He understood the facts of what had happened. However he couldn't comprehend it. He didn't understand anything about what had happened. Yet, there was one thing he did understand.

That this tragedy couldn't possibly be confined to this place alone.

When this belated realization struck, an unprecedented chill swept through Subaru's entire body. It was the greatest terror he had experienced since falling into this world, even after repeatedly overcoming —or succumbing to— life-threatening situations.

His teeth chattered. His eyes, stinging from too many tears, flickered, and his unsteady vision looked up at the sky. A hateful blue sky, and beneath it, the mansion awaited him. The place he had so desperately wanted to return to, the place he had constantly sought, now seemed terrifyingly close.

He didn't know what had happened. Something had undoubtedly occurred. That "something" surely wouldn't have overlooked that place.

He was scared. Terrified. He didn't even want to consider the possibility. If he allowed that possibility to enter his mind, let alone speak it aloud, it felt like it would become reality, and that was terrifying.

So Subaru shook his head, trying to cast off that thought. However, once it had crossed his mind, it slipped past his attempts to shake it off, refusing to be forgotten, as if whispering in his ear. Therefore, Subaru gave up trying to shake it off and clung to another method.

If speaking that possibility meant endangering her… if it meant his own heart would break… then he should find another sacrifice.

"Rem… is she…? What happened to Rem…?"

The girl who should have arrived here before him. By uttering words of concern for her safety, Subaru tried to deceive his own heart with the lowest means possible.

“If Rem had made it back, she wouldn’t have overlooked the village being like this…”

It was an excuse. In a place where only he existed, he was making excuses that couldn’t even fool himself.

“Did something… happen…? No, surely no trouble on the way…?”

It was the lowest. The worst. He didn’t want to understand, but he did. He had deceived his heart, telling it that if the possibility of losing the girl he loved would break him, then he should prepare another sacrifice. He had betrayed their trust.

“That’s right… Rem… Rem… Rem is…”

Subaru swayed as he stood up, beginning to move with weak, listless steps. Leaving Petra’s body behind, he dragged himself slowly towards the village exit —towards the mansion— moving at a snail’s pace.

He didn’t know what awaited him ahead. He didn’t want to know, yet he knew he had to know, but he couldn’t muster the courage to run.

Dragging his feet, clinging to her name, the name of the girl who was his anchor, Subaru slowly, slowly ascended the slope, continuing his trek towards the mansion.

4

—Rem was dead in the garden.

Chapter 33:
White

The garden, which had witnessed countless identical dawns, had transformed into a hell it had never seen before.

The small yet vibrant flowers of the flowerbeds were blown away and incinerated, and the trees that had lined the perimeter of the mansion were snapped in half, lying as fallen timber.

Here and there, the gouged ground was the result of an immense mass exploding, and its raging force had scattered not only dirt but also numerous pieces of flesh.

Black-clad corpses lay sprawled, their bodies staining the green lawn with dark, murky blood, sinking into eternal darkness. Most of these scattered remains were unrecognizable, with heads blown off, torsos crushed, and bodies torn apart, presenting a horror that surpassed anything seen in the village.

This was surely proof of the immense rage with which the executor had transformed those pitiable victims into mere husks.

The blood-stained iron ball, the culprit responsible for this gruesome scene, was connected by a chain to a handle. It had crushed and annihilated many adversaries— Yet, it had been abandoned by its owner halfway through and now lay discarded in a corner of the garden.

The “Oni” who was thought to have fought valiantly with it in hand…

“—Rem.”

Subaru was greeted by Rem’s corpse, riddled with countless blades and with her left arm severed.

The sheer number of corpses in this garden, excluding hers, made it clear.

She had fought. Fought against the malice that had massacred the villagers and turned its fangs towards the mansion. She had fought bravely, striking down many, becoming covered in wounds, pierced by numerous blades, losing her weapon and the arm that wielded it, yet still resisting—and dying.

Her black-based apron dress was torn in many places, riddled with holes, and stained dark red by blood gushing from everywhere.

The brutal weapons impaled in her body were so numerous that one would instinctively avert their eyes from counting them. Shaped like crosses, they were a grotesque design with bladed tips, and more than enough to fill the fingers of both hands were driven into her small frame.

Adding to the repulsion, despite the number of weapons impaled in her, the scars remaining on Rem's fallen body were far, far more numerous.

Again, and again, and again.

They had plunged blades into her fallen body, pulled them out, tormented her while she still breathed, toyed with her life, desecrated her dignity, insulted her way of living, and then plunged them in, leaving indelible wounds.

What sin could she have possibly committed to deserve such a fate?

What were they thinking, those who killed her? What did they know about Rem? She was diligent, a hard worker, caring, sometimes a bit quick to jump to conclusions, she spoiled Subaru gently but could also be sharp, she was there for Subaru in his struggles, but she also left him behind, she adored her sister, disliked herself, but had just started to like herself a little—

She had just begun to walk her own path in life, after constantly telling herself her life was a substitute for someone else's.

Rem was motionless. Even when he shook her, her cold body was already stiff, and her soft blue hair, which he had stroked so many times, was matted with blood. She lay face down, and Subaru didn't have the courage to look at her face.

Whether she wore a face of sorrow, or a desperate expression of final resistance, or even a peaceful look of death, he lacked the courage to accept it.

Rem had died because of Subaru.

Subaru, who had knelt and was shaking the unmoving Rem, vaguely lifted his head. He suddenly noticed the unnaturalness of the spot where Rem had collapsed.

Her body, having fought against despair in the garden-turned-battlefield, was discarded away from the mansion, at the edge of the garden—far from the flowerbeds, in a space where people rarely ventured.

It wasn't particularly strange, he thought. She might have been outflanked by enemies during the fight, or driven into this corner while evading, and thus met her end here.

Subaru found the situation odd.

As he struggled to think with his unresponsive mind, he realized the true nature of that oddity.

Rem's posture, falling forward, arms outstretched— Since her left arm was missing from the shoulder, it seemed as if she had been fighting with her right arm extended, against something at her back, and had collapsed there because she died in the midst of it.

Looking up, behind the fallen Rem, was a wooden shed where gardening tools, flower seeds, and other items were stored.

This place, also temporarily used to store disused furnishings, was a small hut, despite being called a shed.

Standing up, Subaru crawled towards the entrance of the shed, and as he approached, he noticed it.

A sensation he had experienced many times before. A damp, sticky caress on his skin, a dryness that parched his mouth, and a gloomy, dense presence that dulled his thoughts— The scent of death.

Reaching the front of the entrance, keenly smelling the odor of death, Subaru lowered his gaze. On the ground, beneath the closed shed door, a large amount of blood flowed out, staining the young grass.

He gasped, swallowed his saliva, forced down the rising nausea, and reached for the door. His hand trembled not from caution, but from terror.

There was no sign of anyone inside. There was no need to worry about such a thing, and anyway, Subaru had no mental capacity to spare for such thoughts.

His fingertips brushed against the doorknob, repeatedly fumbling as if refusing to grasp it. Frustrated, tears welled up at the pathetic state of his own uncooperative body. Yet, as he repeated the action, his little finger finally caught the knob, and the door creaked open.

The moment it did, an immense stench of blood, so pervasive it seemed to fill his nostrils and still be insufficient, spread throughout the shed.

Instinctively, he covered his nose and mouth with his hand, suppressing the rising urge to vomit as Subaru peered inside. He abandoned any attempt to imagine what scene awaited him, choosing instead to simply imprint the reality onto his eyes.

—Inside the shed were the village children.

The moment he realized it, Subaru's mouth filled with rising stomach acid, and he stumbled out of the shed, nearly falling.

He collapsed face-first onto the lawn and vomited violently, uncontrollably. His stomach was empty, and only yellowish gastric fluid came out. Yet, he continued to retch. To retch without end. Even as his internal organs screamed in pain, his throat burned with stomach acid, and sourness ravaged his mouth, Subaru kept vomiting.

He was not allowed to vomit in there, in that shed.

No one, no one at all, had the right to defile those children any further.

“Rem… she…”

She had fought to protect the children, and had died for it.

The only child’s corpse Subaru had found in the village was that of a girl named Petra. He hadn’t searched through all the villagers’ bodies, so the possibility of survivors had been completely dismissed from his consideration.

The adults had fought in the village, sending only the children to flee to the lord’s mansion. Even there, despair had struck, resulting in the same unchanged outcome.

Mercilessly, cruelly, lives had been extinguished.

“Hah.”

Suddenly, a strangled cry escaped Subaru’s throat.

Nothing had happened. He had simply become terrified.

Subaru had returned to the village, to the mansion, seeking someone he knew. Yet not a single living soul remained, and only the silent dead reproached his return.

He felt as though they were speaking. Their empty, unseeing eyes.

He felt as though he was being blamed. Their gaping, blood-dripping lips.

He felt as though he was being hated. By the memories of the days he had spent with them, laughing together.

“No… no, no, no, no, no…”

—Why were you the one who survived?

—Why did we have to die?

“No… I’m not… I didn’t wish for… something like this…”

He had an ideal. A hopeful delusion.

When he heard Emilia was in danger, Subaru thought he had received a divine revelation. He believed he had been given an opportunity to make her, who had abandoned him, reconsider him.

As always before, Subaru believed he would save Emilia, be thanked by her, bridge the small gap of their misunderstanding, and walk hand in hand with her.

He had taken for granted that the predicaments, dangers, and tragedies that arose were merely stepping stones for that. He had underestimated that no matter what happened, he could recover.

If this vast number of dead was the price for that.

“It’s not my fault… I, I…”

Shaking his head, he stood up, turning his back on the shed and Rem’s corpse, and ran towards the mansion.

“Someone… someone, someone, someone, someone, someone, someone, someone, someone, someone, someone…!!”

He cut across the lawn, circled to the front of the mansion, and tried to force open the front door. The door remained stubbornly shut, as if deeming Subaru an outsider; no matter how many times he slammed his body against it or kicked it violently, it showed no sign of opening.

Frustrated, he gave the door a final kick and turned back towards the garden. He trampled and leaped over the fallen black-clad corpses, heading for his objective.

He picked it up, dragging the incredibly heavy object that made his arm ache, and made his way to the mansion’s garden-side terrace.

Then, taking a deep breath and tensing every muscle in his body,

"—Ah!"

The iron ball spun with the centrifugal force of the grasped chain, and the shattered glass burst into countless fragments, scattering widely inside the room.

He hastily squeezed through the forcibly created entry point, and Subaru slipped into the mansion. Fragments of the broken window barely cut his skin, leaving numerous lacerations on his limbs, but Subaru felt no sharp pain at the moment.

"Someone, someone, someone, someone, someone, someone, someone, someone, someone, someone, someone, someone, someone, someone, someone, someone…"

Pleadingly, obsessively, Subaru's lips continued to seek the presence of others.

It was similar to when he had rushed into the village, but now what he sought had shifted to something different.

Namely,

"It's not my fault… It's not my fault… It's not my fault…"

He wanted someone living to affirm that.

Rather, the mere fact that someone survived would be that affirmation.

Subaru desperately sought out the living. He craved them. He had to find them.

Otherwise, Subaru couldn't affirm himself.

If he were to convince himself that this catastrophe was caused by his own thoughtless actions, his mind would never be able to maintain equilibrium.

To prevent his mind from shattering, and to avoid bearing the responsibility for the deaths of this vast number of people, he had to protect himself with plausible excuses.

Stumbling, his upper body swaying, Subaru ran through the mansion.

Unlike the garden, the interior showed no signs of disturbance or damage. The familiar sight of the mansion unfolded before him, and despite the abundance of death outside, this place, which had not lost its normalcy, seemed strangely terrifying.

He reached for the door of a nearby room, violently opened it to check inside, then clicked his tongue and slammed it shut with force. Compared to the enormous number of rooms, too few people actually used this mansion.

There were four mansion staff members whose presence Subaru had yet to confirm— Subaru continued to randomly open and close doors until he found one of them.

“Damn it… damn it! Why… why is no one… usually…”

He muttered in a choked, half-sobbing voice, violently raking his fingers through his hair.

Normally, Subaru could reach Beatrice’s library so easily he didn’t even need to aim. Yet now, when it mattered most, he couldn’t find it.

He yearned for that hateful, sarcastic tongue more than anything right now.

He could endure being treated like vermin, endure her exhaling her undisguised displeasure. If only she was alive, and could affirm him with her very existence.

“Come out… come out… please, please… save me… save me…!!”

No longer able to hold back his tears, Subaru ran through the mansion, his cheeks drenched. Only sobs and effeminate pleas for someone to pull him out of this despair escaped his lips.

He ran past the guest room where he had first awakened in the mansion, trampled the carpet that Beatrice's magic had turned into an endless loop, crawled through the dining room he had frequented, turned his back on the kitchen where he had struggled to make mayonnaise, left the large public bath, the most strenuous of his assigned cleaning duties, ascended to the floor where the servants' rooms were clustered, and began to overturn every nearby room, peering inside—

In the seventh room, he found Ram's corpse.

Subaru, having seen so much death in such a short time, instantly knew that Ram, lying on the bed, wasn't merely sleeping.

Her translucent white skin was pale, drained of blood, while her lips, in contrast, were more vividly crimson than usual. Unlike her sister, whose appearance was so similar, Ram's body, even with what seemed like death makeup, possessed a strangely delicate deathly beauty.

He used to joke that if she kept quiet, she could easily pass for a cute maid.

Lying on the bed, she surely hadn't simply breathed her last in her sleep. Someone had carried her to the bed and arranged her deathly appearance like this.

Most likely, it was Rem. What had she thought, facing her sister's death? How many tears had she shed while applying the death makeup? What feelings had she carried, leaving her sister behind alone?

Now that Rem herself had been so brutally murdered, the state of her heart would remain forever unknown.

He touched Ram's cold lips with his finger, and a faint trace of crimson makeup adhered to his fingertip. Rubbing his fingers together, he toyed with the color on his fingertip, and Subaru realized he had unconsciously slumped to the corner of the room.

Vaguely, he lifted his head. The sight of the deceased, so peaceful that if told she was merely sleeping, he might have believed it, lay before him.

Her silent presence, greeting Subaru's return, now condemned him as the living.

Just like the many hollow eyes that had looked up at Subaru in the village.

Lips that would never tremble again continued to pour out a silent curse upon Subaru.

"Hah!"

Subaru crawled, scrambling out of Ram's bed. He forced his trembling arms and uncooperative knees to stand up, then stumbled, leaning on the wall, trying to get away from that room as quickly as possible.

"Stop it… no… it's not me… I, I, I didn't do anything…!"

He covered his ears, shook his head, and spun words of self-defense with a hoarse throat, trying to distance himself from the whispers of resentment. But the voices, the despair, followed him relentlessly, mocking his escape.

He dragged his feet, running down the corridor. He reached the landing with the stairs. He placed his hands on the ground and climbed the stairs on all fours. Along the way, he stumbled and fell countless times, blood dripping from his bruised lips, yet he continued to challenge the upper floor corridor he had finally reached.

Only the dead greeted Subaru. Ram was dead, leaving three survivors. His feet naturally avoided Emilia's room, which was on the same floor. Ram had died in her own private room, assigned to servants, on the second floor. The image of Ram, dead in her own room, flickered in his mind, and tears that should have run dry welled up again. He thought he had expelled all the moisture from his body, that his sobs and gastric fluid should be empty, yet an endless sorrow, aching deep in his chest, urged Subaru to run.

If it weren't for that, he would have just sat down, buried his head in his hands, seen nothing, heard nothing, known nothing, sought nothing, given nothing, lost nothing, loved nothing, been loved by nothing, started nothing, ended nothing, changed nothing, and remained stagnant.

With whimpers and tears streaming down his crumpled face, a stumbling Subaru reached the top floor—before Roswaal's office. The heavy double doors remained silent, and their sturdy appearance suggested they could repel even the malice that had assailed the mansion.

Such hope vanished fleetingly.

In this place where everything had ended, there could be no safe place, no permissible place, nor should there be.

He pushed them open, and a chilling wind flowed into the corridor.

The coldness pricked his arms, and Subaru suddenly remembered that he was lightly dressed and vulnerable to it. He wondered where his jacket was, then remembered giving it to Petra in the village, and became exasperated at the useless thoughts he was having to protect himself.

He stepped into the room. It was undeniable that he felt a sense of resignation, half-expecting to find Roswaal leaning against the office desk, a corpse.

With Rem dead, and Ram's life extinguished, it was difficult to maintain hope for others. He no longer knew if he was running around the mansion searching for the living, or if he was dragging despair with him to trample on memories in order to lose hope.

However, the world, which had betrayed Subaru's hope three times—in the village, in the garden, and in the private room—did not offer a fourth betrayal this time.

No one was in the office.

He scanned the deserted room, crawling under the desk, beneath shelves where furnishings were placed, and behind the reception table, yet he couldn't find any trace.

A sense of relief, however slight, pervaded Subaru.

It was relief at not having to confirm Roswaal's fate—and self-pity for not having to add more reasons to be tormented by the dead.

"—?"

Suddenly, the sound of a window rattling in the wind made Subaru turn around.

He saw that the moment he opened the door connecting to the corridor, a peculiarly bone-ch-chilling wind flowed into the room, hitting the window and rustling the leaves of a potted plant in the corner.

A current of air was being generated.

Having found a passage through the door, it carried cold air, circulated around the room, and blew out. Experiencing this fact on his skin, Subaru searched for the source of the wind, relying on the sensation of the breeze and his intuition—

"Such a contraption…"

The moment he fiddled with a mechanism hidden beneath the ebony desk, the sound of gears meshing echoed. Then, with a low grinding sound like a millstone, the bookshelf installed in the back wall of the office slid nearly a meter sideways.

Before a stunned Subaru, bewildered by the unexpected mechanism, a gaping black hole appeared beyond the shifted bookshelf.

He cautiously approached, and gently peered inside, seeing a stone-built passage that continued for a few steps, beyond which a spiral staircase descended.

"A secret passage, huh?"

It was likely for emergencies, no doubt.

For Roswaal, with his status as a margrave and his role as a lord, securing an escape route as a means of self-defense was naturally something he should have prepared. Whether there would be an actual opportunity to use it was another matter, but it was easy to see that a person like him would have gleefully prepared it.

He never imagined that such an opportunity to use the passage would actually arise.

The cold wind flowing through the room seemed to be coming from that opening. In other words, the wind was blowing through the passage beyond that opening, originating from somewhere even deeper and colder.

Subaru gasped, took several deep breaths, and waited until his rapidly beating heart had calmed down even slightly before he plunged himself into the opening.

The wall, cool to the touch, glowed with a faint, pale blue light, revealing his surroundings for a few meters ahead. He relied on this light, feeling his way along the wall with his hand, and carefully descended the spiral stone staircase, taking care not to miss a step.

The anxiety of stepping into an utterly unknown place—where it led, how far it went—tightened his insides. Even stronger than those negative emotions, burning his back, was anger at the existence of this hidden passage.

The fact that wind was blowing meant there was an exit.

In other words, someone had used this secret passage to escape to the outside. There were three survivors he hadn't seen in the mansion—considering whose office this passage led from, it was clear who had abandoned the mansion's devastation and fled.

Had they abandoned all that, abandoned such devastation, abandoned the girl who adored him so much, and fled? Had they shamefully fled for their lives?

Subaru didn't notice his teeth chattering with anger and, strangely, with joy.

Anger towards the person who had abandoned justice, run to a despicable, contemptible vice.

Joy at finding someone onto whom he could project all the resentment, curses, contempt, insults, and blame of the silent dead.

With a crazed smile, emotions swirling, endless tears streaming, and blood dripping from his bitten lip, the madman descended.

How many steps had he descended? In terms of distance, it was considerable, and in terms of height, it was far beyond merely from the third floor to the ground. The secret passage seemed to lead to the mansion's basement, and at the end of the stairs, another straight passage appeared to continue. The wall material was still the same blue-glowing mineral, and Subaru, pressing his palm against it as it drew heat from his fingertips, advanced with a strained smile.

He was chasing the lingering traces of the living. That single point made Subaru happy now.

He was happy at the fact that whoever was ahead would be a being who had made an equally, if not more, terrible choice and deserved to be cursed.

He was truly happy to find someone living in a world of only the dead, to confirm whether he was truly alive right now, or if he had already died.

"Ugh, oh…"

Suddenly, his palm, which had been pressed against the wall, lost contact with it and swept through empty space. His body, instinctively swaying, moved forward, and what opened up was a small room, slightly larger in all four directions than the passage before it.

In the dimly lit space, several pillars stood scattered. He felt an irregularity in the unevenly spaced pillars, but if this escape route itself was something hastily constructed, then he couldn't help but nod at its shoddy design.

Accepting this, Subaru passed by the obstructing pillars. At this point, his limbs felt terribly heavy and sluggish. A weariness, as if his fingertips were filled with lead, weighed him down, and even his already vague thoughts began to slow.

He struggled even to take a single step forward, yet he pressed on. His mouth was parched and even painful, and the blood that had been flowing from his lips had stopped at some point.

His eyelids were heavy, his movements restricted as if a heavy weight pressed down on both shoulders, yet only his stubbornness, his resentment, his madness, relentlessly pushed Subaru forward.

Avoiding the scattered pillars in the wide room, Subaru passed through the small room and found an iron door at his destination, visible in the blue light. Passage, stairs, passage, small room, then a door—would what he sought be beyond this?

—What was he looking for, anyway?

His bloodless fingertips reached out faster than his sluggish thoughts could find an answer. Standing before the door, Subaru opened and closed his mouth, gasping for breath, abandoning his blank thoughts and grabbing the doorknob out of a sheer sense of mission.

—The moment he touched the doorknob, a searing pain shot through his right hand.

"—Agh!"

His throat screamed in agony, and Subaru flung his right hand away as if ripping it off. The burning pain spread across his entire palm that had touched the knob, and groaning in pain, Subaru looked down at the gruesome state of his injured right hand.

—His right index finger was gone.

"—Huh?"

Dazed, stunned, Subaru held up his right hand and spread it open, looking at it.

His discolored white hand, with the skin of his palm ripped to shreds—among the five outstretched fingers, only the index finger was missing from its base.

Slowly, his gaze shifted to the door in front of him. Stuck to the doorknob he had supposedly grasped was what used to be Subaru's right index finger.

—Must attach it quickly.

With only that fleeting thought, Subaru reached his right hand towards the doorknob to retrieve the detached finger. But moving his body was even harder than before; his will wouldn't transmit from his shoulder to his elbow, or from his elbow to his hand. His uncooperative arm frustrated him, and Subaru stepped forward to close the distance to the door—his right ankle shattered at the base, and he collapsed sideways.

"—Aaaargh!"

An inarticulate cry escaped his throat.

He didn't know if it was a scream of pain, or merely a meaningless torrent of life. But amidst his confusion, one thing he did understand.

The moment he opened his mouth to release the cry and inhaled, his insides were filled with something white, and became immobile.

His lungs spasmed, and his breathing became shallow and difficult. He took short, shallow breaths, desperately trying to send oxygen to his uninflated lungs, as Subaru's eyes darted frantically in the abnormal situation.

He didn't know what was happening. His entire body felt terribly vague.

His right ankle had shattered, a pain and sense of loss he had never experienced before. And the moment he collapsed, his right side, which bore the weight of his fallen body, also began to crumble and disintegrate in parts, just like his right ankle.

From his now trembling lips, he barely exhaled the breath that connected him to life. Subaru belatedly noticed that the expelled breath was visibly white.

His face, pressed against the ground, stuck to the floor; he knew if he moved his neck, his cheek would peel off. He felt no pain anymore. He moved violently, and a large chunk of his cheek and the outside of his right eye fell off. It didn't matter. Finally, in his supine vision, he saw the small room he had passed, now upside down.

Looking up from below, Subaru finally understood why the pillars scattered in the small room had been unevenly arranged: it wasn't due to shoddy, incomplete construction.

All of those standing in the small room were human icicles, people who had died frozen in ice.

They were victims who, like Subaru, had wandered into this white demise and become ice statues. That was the end that would soon befall Subaru as well.

His breathing had already stopped.

Limited oxygen circulated in his brain, but his brain was so sluggish that it was a wonder he maintained consciousness, his existence on the verge of fading in this arctic world.

He understood nothing.

He saw nothing.

From his toes, his body gradually turned into ice fragments, ceasing to be Natsuki Subaru.

If it came to that, perhaps it was no longer Natsuki Subaru who was here, but merely a madman wearing his skin.

The sensation in his lower body vanished. His arms were nowhere to be seen. Now, his right eye fell out. It was strange that his remaining left eye could still see. Where did life reside—in the brain, or in the heart?

The answer would not be found in this frozen world—

"—You are too late."

A lifeless murmur echoed in the world dominated by white,

—Natsuki Subaru shattered into countless fragments, disappearing from the world.

Chapter 34:
On the Verge of Madness

1

The awakening began with the darkness being torn apart, and the painful searing of my eyelids by sunlight.

"—Hey?"

The sensation of a body that should have vanished, warm blood flowing to my fingertips and toes, and the feeling of my lower half, which should have been shattered, firmly treading the ground. The phenomenon of all lost functions returning in the blink of an eye mercilessly slammed every bit of information into my freshly-activated brain, literally making my head spin.

Before I knew it, the world, once dominated by ringing in my ears, was now filled with the chaotic sounds of human activity. People bustled along the dusty thoroughfare, smoothly dodging my standing body as if I were in their way, casting annoyed glances that oddly resonated with my frayed nerves.

"Hey, I said, HEY! Are you listening?"

A rough voice, tinged with a click of the tongue, sounded close by, and I swayed my eyes in that direction. In front of me stood a stern-faced man with a vertical scar on his face, frowning. Taller than me by a head, he lightly traced the white scar with his finger and said,

"Give me a break, bro. Don't just stand there spacing out."

"Eh, ah?"

"What kind of dumb answer is that? Well, whatever. More importantly, what are you gonna do?"

The man sighed at my faint reply, then pressed for a conclusion. In his hand, nestled in his large palm, was a small red fruit— A terribly mismatched combination with the man's appearance, which somehow undermined the sense of reality. I stared at it blankly, remaining silent. There was a significant defect in my ability to comprehend the situation. However, the stern-faced man showed no inclination to consider this,

"Are you gonna stop messing around? I'm just asking you one thing: are you buying this appa or not? Answer me carefully."

He leaned forward, and the man's arm, extended across the counter, grabbed me by the collar. I was roughly pulled forward, and my body stumbled into a shelf. The shelf, laden with goods, swayed from the impact, and items threatened to fall. The man panicked,

"Wh-What are you doing! Stand up straight. You're letting your legs go limp…"

"Legs… legs?"

"You've got two perfectly good ones from your waist down, don't you? Did you hallucinate that your legs were gone?"

The man tapped his finger on his head, spinning it around, then pointed his finger towards my lower abdomen. Following his finger, I looked down to see my own legs, trembling slightly. They wobbled so unreliably that they couldn't support my body; I was only standing by leaning my upper body against the counter.

"Please, stop fooling around. I'm already getting thrown off by all these unbelievable things happening, things that usually don't."

The man shook his head with an exasperated look at my weak, limp posture leaning against the counter. Such an exchange on the thoroughfare would have a negative effect on the people watching from a distance. Despite his words, prompted by his concern for this, my body didn't react in the slightest.

I couldn't perceive reality as reality. A somewhat hazy sensation, an inexplicable feeling of alienation like a thin film, caused all information to pass through my brain and spill out.

What was I doing?

What had happened?

I felt like something had happened, but what was it?

What, what, what—?

My rambling thoughts lost their exit, endlessly circling the narrow labyrinth of my skull, constantly wearing down my mind. Perhaps if I had been completely worn down, or simply exhausted and vanished, I might have found peace. However, that sense of lonely disappearance was—

"—Subaru?"

Suddenly, a girl's voice vibrated my eardrums, pushing it aside in an instant.

"…"

Without a sound, slowly as if not startled but with wide, fixed eyes, I raised my face. Across the counter, behind the towering figure of the man, stood someone rearranging the items on the shelf that had been displaced by the collision.

She wore a black-based apron dress with a white apron and a white brim. Her small, delicate body moved busily, and noticing my gaze, she turned, a blank expression on her lovely face. Her blue hair, shoulder-length, swayed with her movement, further emphasizing her cool impression.

Tears welled up.

"—Hey?"

"Subaru?"

A sob escaped, and my vision blurred. Frightened that the girl who should have been clearly reflected there was becoming indistinct, I desperately, roughly rubbed my eyes. Yet, the girl moved further away, and the murmuring grew louder.

Before I knew it, my body had lost the support of the counter and I had fallen onto the street. No strength or will reached my feet, and I lay prone on the thoroughfare, shedding tears and gasping for breath. No, it wasn't breathing.

"Fufufu… Hihhi, hahaha. Hehi, hihahaha…"

It was laughter.

The murmuring expanded, and I could feel the accelerating increase in the number of conscious gazes directed at me. Someone was looking at me. Recognizing me. I wasn't alone. I wasn't isolated. Just knowing that affirmed my current state, sprawled out like a rag.

"What's wrong, Subaru? Are you alright? Pull yourself together…"

Impatient to walk around, the girl climbed over the counter and knelt beside me. I felt her embrace my fallen body and pull me up,

"Eh?"

I instinctively pulled her vulnerable approaching body into a tight hug. The girl, astonished, accepted the embrace. Her momentary breath was close, its warmth feeling incredibly comforting, and I buried my nose into her shoulder, hugging her even tighter.

"Wh-… eh, Subaru? Um…"

She was saying something. Every single word, every syllable, every single character, the fact that they were indeed being spun from her lips, brought good tidings every second. Firmly, I didn't release my embracing arms. The girl, who faintly stirred, quietly accepted the embrace and didn't try to break free.

Feeling her warm body, the pulse of life, the presence of another being closer than ever before,

"Hih… uh-hih, hihihihi."

Natsuki Subaru —the madman— simply continued to laugh quietly.

“Honestly, there’s nothing more I can do,” Ferris declared, sitting in a leather chair, a finger pressed to his cheek.

The beautiful person, his cat ears twitching and chestnut hair swaying, looked at Subaru lying on the bed, then turned a pitying gaze to the girl standing beside it.

“The only wounds Ferris can heal are physical ones, inside or out. The heart… that’s beyond my power.”

“…No, thank you for your efforts,” Rem said, bowing her head and thanking Ferris, who was apologizing for his lack of ability. However, her voice, lacking intonation, was devoid of emotion. Unlike her usual conscious control, this was due to the immense turmoil within her.

Ferris averted his eyes from Rem as if pained by what he saw. Rem, still with her head bowed, didn’t notice his reaction and gently tilted her head, focusing on the person on the bed.

Lying on the bed, being cared for by the two, was a black-haired boy—Subaru.

Despite being the center of attention, his body showed no reaction to those focusing on him.

He wasn’t asleep. His eyes were wide open, intently staring at the ceiling directly above. Occasionally, he would force a pained smile as if remembering something, then suddenly burst into tears. He had been in an unstable state.

Rem didn’t know the cause.

Until this morning, no, even after noon when they were strolling through the lower district of the royal capital, he had been himself. Although there was some strain in his demeanor, he had tried his best to act normal, and Rem, by treating him normally in return, had built up their routine.

Yet, his heart shattered so suddenly.

There seemed to be no trigger.

The moment Subaru's condition drastically changed, Rem, regrettably, wasn't right next to him. Still, while helping at the shop, she must have overheard his conversation with the owner.

He had been discussing buying appa's to take back to Crusch's mansion. The owner, not imagining it was for a grand noble's estate, had been readily agreeing to the deal. It was during that negotiation that Subaru's heart suddenly broke.

Subaru collapsed in the bustling merchant street, tears streaming down his face—joyful and sorrowful at once—and letting out distorted, convulsive laughter that sounded like his lungs were seizing.

They left the scene, and, knowing they were imposing, carried him to Crusch's mansion, where Ferris was reluctantly asked to examine him for possible magical interference.

The results were not good. If the problem was beyond Ferris's reach, it meant it was a difficult matter that no great magician in the entire royal capital could heal.

Magic had nothing to do with his current state. His mind had simply lost its balance without warning.

"I hate to say this, but what are you going to do?"

"Until we know the cause, there's nothing we can do… Rem apologizes for troubling you, Sir Felix."

"No, that's fine. In fact, now that he's not causing a fuss, it's actually a convenient state for my treatment, wouldn't you say?"

Looking down at Subaru, who was mostly unresponsive and bedridden, Ferris continued, "Still…"

"I'm wondering if I should continue the treatment."

"…What do you mean?"

Rem finally looked at Ferris, lifting her head and averting her gaze from Subaru's expressionless face. Receiving her gaze, Ferris prefaced, “Please don’t get angry, but…”

“Treating Subaru-kyun’s gate is meant to ensure he can lead a normal life in the future, right?”

“Yes.”

“However he can’t lead a normal life anymore, so isn’t it pointless to only heal his body?”

“—! Subaru is!”

“Are you saying it’s not over? Looking at this state? Seriously? It’s true a lot has happened, but I don’t think someone whose heart breaks this easily from something like that will ever truly recover.”

Ferris maintained his skeptical attitude toward the agitated Rem. His gaze, looking down at Subaru, clearly held a discernible contempt.

For someone given the title of ‘Blue’ and known as Lugunica’s foremost water magic user, this attitude seemed incredibly cruel.

To Rem, who was silenced by Ferris’s demeanor, Ferris gave a wry smile and shook his head, saying, “Please don’t misunderstand…”

“It’s not that Ferris hates Subaru-kyun or particularly dislikes him, that’s why I’m saying this.”

“But…”

“It’s not about Subaru-kyun personally, okay? Ferris just purely dislikes people who lack the ‘will to live’.”

Ferris interrupted Rem, who was about to retort with pouted lips, and pointed at Subaru.

“All Ferris can do with magic is heal wounds. Even so, Ferris is quite busy using these hands for various people. Everyone is desperate to live, and it’s fine to help them, isn’t it? I don’t dislike being thanked, and I can owe important people favors to help Lady Crusch, too, right?”

"…"

"I hate using my power to heal the bodies of people who don't want to live. Even if their bodies are healed, such people will just waste their lives away afterward, right? Then just let it end. No, it is already over."

With a sharp declaration, Ferris turned his face away.

Behind his stubborn demeanor, Rem truly felt the sincerity toward the countless lives Ferris must have seen. Though his words were cloaked in frivolousness, it was his established view on life and death, learned from the life and death he had witnessed until then.

Against someone with such firm convictions, it was meaningless for an outsider like herself to argue based solely on emotion.

Rem merely looked at Subaru, frustrated, as if crushed by Ferris's words.

Subaru, unaware that he was the center of conversation, was now faintly emitting fragmented laughter that left scratches on the listener's heart.

Seeing him with his heart shattered, Rem felt an unbearable emotion reverberate within her chest. She somehow managed to suppress it without showing it.

To do so would dishonor Subaru, or tarnish Roswaal's authority, and most importantly, it would betray the feelings Rem herself harbored.

"—Ferris's opinion is a bit too harsh."

The voice suddenly resonated clearly in the awkwardly silent room.

Rem, whose consciousness had been deep in thought and hadn't noticed the person's arrival, snapped her head up. In contrast, Ferris, who had noticed the visitor after their knock, maintained a cool demeanor. No, the eyes he turned towards the visitor were those of a quietly fervent devotee.

"Lady Crusch."

"I would not go so far as to say that weakness is a sin. However, I do agree that it is a sin to embrace weakness and to remain complacent without correcting it."

Crusch entered, holding out a palm to the hastily standing Rem, and with her long green hair swaying, moved to the side of the bed. Then, looking down at Subaru's face, which was still twisted in a ghastly smile, she said,

"Indeed. This is certainly a grave situation. Do you know the cause?"

To Crusch's question, Ferris shrugged and raised his hands in surrender, saying, "No."

"Rem said he suddenly collapsed, and I've examined every inch of his body, but there's no sign of strange magical interference."

"Is there a possibility of influence from Northern… A curse arts user? It's unlikely, but there's a chance of interference from Gusteko towards those involved in the Royal Selection. Perhaps it's a demonstration from another faction."

"Both are unlikely. It's too bad a time to make a move, and what gain would there be in targeting Subaru-kyun anyway? His disgrace is well-known among those involved, and besides, there's no magical interference, including curse arts, to be found."

Breaking his words, Ferris tilted his head, and gently leaned next to Crusch, who had her arms crossed, saying,

"Or, Lady Crusch, do you doubt Ferris's abilities?"

"Nonsense. I could never doubt your abilities, your character, or your loyalty. Even if you were to stab me with a dagger from the front, that thought would never change."

"Oh, Lady Crusch, what an unbelievably fatal charm… I'm completely weak at the knees."

Putting aside the writhing Ferris, Crusch looked at Rem again. Rem, who had silently watched the exchange between master and servant, straightened her posture and met Crusch's sharp gaze.

"Ferris says this. If Ferris cannot help, then there is no one in this household who can treat Natsuki Subaru. My apologies for our inadequacy."

"—No, Rem is rather speechless at your generous treatment."

Rem bowed politely in response to her master's apology.

In truth, she had received kindness that no amount of words or gratitude could ever repay.

She didn't believe Ferris had held back, nor that Crusch had made an arbitrary judgment regarding Emilia's associate, who was a political rival.

Rem herself had some involvement with water magic. She understood Ferris's high skill and also that it was meaningless in the face of the anomaly that had befallen Subaru.

As for Crusch's character, though their encounter had been only a few days, there was no doubt about her sincere and upright nature. She possessed the ability and sense of responsibility to inherit a ducal house at such a young age, and as a woman, as well as the qualities of a great noble. This was evident from the many opportunities they had to speak and converse.

In short, there was no fault in them whatsoever.

This current situation was an unavoidable one that had simply come to be.

"—Witch."

Rem alone clearly understood that the increasingly strong stench surrounding Subaru was the cause.

The witch's presence surrounding Subaru —the Miasma— had grown even thicker.

Whether it was the direct cause of Subaru's collapse was unknown, but it was a fact that the presence had swelled just before he fell.

Only Rem could detect that stench; no one else could.

Therefore, she couldn't blame them for concluding there was nothing to be done. It wasn't in her nature to blame others, especially when she herself couldn't find a fundamental solution.

Being able to sense the witch's miasma was one of the very few ways Rem surpassed her older sister.

She believed she'd had a relatively keen sense of smell even before Ram lost her horn. She was confident in discerning the mana in the air, and her ability to track prey scents in the mountains rivaled her sister's.

However, the ability to sniff out the witch's presence was a new acquisition, gained after the night her entire family was slaughtered.

The cause was unknown. Rem herself thought it might be a result of her body mutating in an extreme state, a way for her to never forget that night.

Rem had never told anyone about this peculiar sense of smell. She just became more cautious than usual around anyone who carried that stench.

Physiological revulsion, a prejudice, would kick in.

However, such biased thoughts were eventually dispelled by the boy who, until then, had exuded the witch's miasma most strongly.

Even so.

Even so.

She —an Oni— was well aware that this Miasma brought nothing good.

4

“Thank you for everything. On behalf of my master, Rem expresses our gratitude for your kindness up to this day.”

Rem bowed deeply, bending at the waist.

Standing before her were Crusch and Ferris. The three of them met in the entrance hall of Crusch’s mansion— A farewell.

“I am sorry I could not be of more help. It would be presumptuous to accept payment for this.”

“No, it is our decision to terminate the arrangement midway. Lady Crusch has shown us the utmost consideration. Payment is certainly due.”

Rem replied firmly, looking up at Crusch, who had lowered her gaze slightly.

In response, Crusch apologized once more, saying “I’m sorry,” but said nothing further. She likely understood that any more conversation would be purely formal.

“It feels a little incomplete, but I guess it can’t be helped. Take care, Rem. As for Subaru-kyun… should I say ‘take care of himself’?”

So, Ferris spoke next on behalf of his master.

He closed one eye, pointing a finger, looking towards Subaru, who was behind Rem—leaning against the door in a loose, somewhat slovenly posture.

Subaru was still slow to react, and it was questionable if he was even aware of them, but he would follow if led by the hand, and he could now stand without collapsing. However, his sudden bursts of laughter and tears remained unmanageable.

“Regarding the rudeness of our companion, no amount of apologies from us would suffice. Rem sincerely thank you for your generous treatment."

"He is someone with whom I had a contract and exchanged no small number of words. There was no way I could treat him dismissively. I imagine things will be difficult for you from now on, though."

"That is… what Rem have prepared herself for."

With Subaru still swaying and faintly smiling beside her, Rem gripped the hem of her apron tightly, expressing her resolve.

Rem hadn't forgotten the words he'd once said to her. She replayed that scene over and over, hundreds of times, in her mind.

Therefore, she had to return to him the same as he had given her.

"It is regrettable that I cannot accede to your request," Crusch said, her eyes closed, to Rem, who was deep in thought. Though the words lacked a subject, Rem understood they referred to the private conversation between herself and Crusch. Rem lowered her chin, then shook her head at Crusch, who had cast her eyes down.

"It is entirely due to Rem's own inadequacy. —Though the result is regrettable, Rem wishes Lady Crusch all the best in your future endeavors."

"Tell Emilia as well. Let us both fight a battle we can be proud of in our souls."

That exchange alone made Rem realize her role in this place was over. Subaru's treatment was halted halfway, as were Roswaal's instructions.

Neither could continue with Subaru in this state. She couldn't keep an unprotected Subaru in this potentially hostile territory indefinitely.

"It's fine to go back to the mansion, but do you have a plan?"

"At the very least, if Rem can meet Lady Emilia…" Rem replied to Ferris's question, suppressing her regret.

No matter how many times she spoke to him, no matter how many times she touched him, no matter how diligently she cared for him, Subaru never gave Rem the reactions typical of him.

Yet, even in such a state, Subaru occasionally uttered meaningful words.

Those were:

“Name…”

“Hm?”

“Sometimes, he says names. Rem’s name, Sister’s. And…”

While she was happy her name was among them, it was also sad that he never responded to her efforts.

However, the most frequent name among those whispered was—

“If I can meet Lady Emilia, perhaps something will change.”

“Didn’t you have a harsh parting? It’s only been about three days, so maybe some time apart… No, that’s impossible for you, isn’t it?”

“Rem know it’s not a commendable approach. This is no longer a situation Rem can handle with my own judgment. Rem needs to return to seek instructions.”

Rem disguised her true feelings by making statements that showed concern for her master.

Using that as a justification, she understood what her heart truly desired.

It frustrated her that her own presence wasn’t enough for that.

“—Wilhelm has arrived.”

Suddenly, Crusch looked up, narrowing her eyes.

Following her gaze, Rem turned to look behind her—beyond the mansion’s outer edge, past the iron gate, a dragon carriage had arrived, and she saw a familiar old gentleman sitting on the driver's seat.

"That's the last long-distance dragon carriage we have. We almost sent it out for another purpose."

"You were lucky. If you push straight through on the Lifaus Highway, you'll probably reach the mansion by the time the day changes."

Looking at the arrived dragon carriage, Rem squinted her eyes at the increasing brightness of the rising sun.

It was nearly noon, and if they drove the carriage at full speed now, they would indeed reach the mansion in about half a day. With arrival so close, she might even be able to convey her intentions to her sister through empathy.

"I wish you well."

"Good luck~"

Seeing them off, Rem bowed deeply one last time, then took Subaru's hand and left the Karsten mansion.

At the gate, she took the reins from Wilhelm, exchanged a few words, and then climbed onto the driver's seat.

"Subaru, over here."

"…Huh?"

She pulled his arm, seating Subaru next to her on the driver's seat. It felt quite cramped with both of them, but she held him close, wrapping one arm around his waist and firmly gripping the reins with the other.

They would have to keep driving like this for a long, long time.

She worried about the burden on Subaru, and she would have to protect him even after they reached the mansion. Roswaal and the others surely wouldn't welcome Subaru.

She alone had to be an ally to Subaru, who might lose all his friends.

If not, he—if not, he—

Rem, her resolve firmly set, pulled the reins, and the ground dragon kicked off, starting to run.

Slowly, the carriage wheels began to turn faster.

It was as if this motion, through the reins, conveyed to her the state of her own heart at that moment.

Chapter 35:
The Way Back

1

Swaying, swaying, swaying, swaying, swaying.

Shaking, shaking. My legs are shaking.

The madman laughed to himself, a soft chuckle, as he vaguely and leisurely sank into the creaking seat, surrendering to the sensation of the dragon-drawn carriage.

There's nothing particularly funny, but oddly enough, laughing brings a sense of peace.

If I don't, a terribly painful feeling bubbles up in my chest, and if too much of it accumulates, my mind feels like it will explode into chaos.

To prevent that, I chuckle even when there's nothing amusing. I search for something funny, chuckling, chuckling.

Then, if the laughter suddenly stops, a sharp pang of loneliness unexpectedly takes hold.

When that happens, I can't hold it back anymore, and tears stream down my face. Even if I try to stop them, they won't, and trying only makes it hard to breathe. So, to avoid that suffocating feeling, I let the tears flow freely, soaking my face and clothes.

So, to keep my chest from hurting and my heart from aching, I repeat this cycle of laughing and crying. Always, from somewhere, Blue appears, stroking my head or wiping my wet cheeks with a cloth.

That's why I liked Blue. When Blue was by my side, my heart felt warm. When Blue left, I instantly felt uneasy, as if my surroundings had grown dark. My chest would ache, just like when I felt like crying, and even if I tried to laugh, I couldn't; only tears would stream down, stream down.

I guess the sad things happened when I wasn't with Blue. When Blue leaves, I remember that sadness, and that's why I cry. So, I always wanted Blue to be by my side. Blue, as if understanding this, stays with me as much as possible.

That's why I liked Blue.

Green isn't so bad either.

Green didn't gently stroke my head like Blue, nor did Green come to see me repeatedly like Blue, but Green was both hard and soft. Hard and soft, and I didn't dislike it.

It was Blue that Green came to see, and I think Green came because Blue was there. Green and Blue talked about various things, but I was busy chuckling and weeping.

When they finished talking and were leaving, Green stared intently at me. Those eyes were very hard yet soft, and I didn't dislike them.

Brown and White are scary. I don't like them. Scary. They make me tear up.

Brown came to see me after Blue, but when Brown touches me, I feel sick, and tears stream down, so I don't like Brown. Those angry-looking eyes are scary. Even with a soft face, it's scary. Blue strokes me so I won't cry, but I still tear up.

White is even scarier. White doesn't touch me. I've only seen White once. Yet, it's scary. Those eyes that stared intently, as if seeing nothing at all, are scary. I don't like White. I don't like White.

Dreams, I dream.

Swaying, swaying, swaying, swaying.

Swaying and shaking my legs, leaning on a shoulder, feeling the wind, vaguely and leisurely, the madman dreams.

In the dream, a silver color appears, swaying, swaying.

I don’t understand the silver color.

My chest feels warm and cozy. My chest aches and tingles. My chest feels tight and constricted. My heart pounds and throbs.

I don’t know if I’m happy, sad, joyful, or in pain.

I feel like I might like it, like Blue, or it might be bitter, like Brown, or soft, like Green, or scary, like White.

I don’t understand the silver color. But thinking about the silver color, I don’t dislike it.

Swaying, swaying, drifting, drifting.

Wavering, drifting. Gently swaying.

2

Rem looked sidelong at Subaru, who was dozing off, his head resting on her shoulder as he drifted to sleep, and a faint smile touched her lips.

She was happy with the fact that he was so unguarded, so defenseless, completely entrusting himself to her like this.

Rem knew that this wasn’t the usual Subaru, that his current state wasn’t what he truly intended, but even so, to be trusted so completely was the greatest joy.

“Subaru, come closer.”

“…Mmm, ugh.”

Though his sleeping breath was already close, Rem pulled Subaru even closer, pressing their bodies together. The driver’s seat was meant for one person, so sitting together was quite a squeeze. Normally, the smaller Rem should be leaning on Subaru, but doing so now would put them both in a precarious position.

After getting into the dragon carriage, Rem settled Subaru half-lying on her lap. She embraced his waist with the hand not holding the reins, then readjusted her posture and pulled on the reins again.

She tried to maintain a position that would put the least strain on Subaru. As a result, Rem's posture, giving up most of the driver's seat space, was quite uncomfortable. She would spend nearly half a day in that position, so for an ordinary person, it wouldn't be surprising if their strength gave out halfway through.

In that regard, Rem was far superior to an ordinary person in terms of physical strength. Her mental endurance, too, was top-notch when it came to quietly enduring. More than anything, the situation where her efforts would benefit Subaru was the greatest source of motivation for Rem.

Rem hadn't been told the details of what transpired between Subaru and Emilia, or what kind of rift had formed between them.

That day, when the Royal Selection was announced at the capital, Rem, who had, on Roswaal's orders, allowed Subaru to enter the castle, was greatly shocked by Emilia's haggard appearance upon her return.

She seemed utterly exhausted. She roughly explained what had happened at the castle to Rem, and then told her to go fetch Subaru, who had been left at the castle, and proceed to Crusch's mansion.

There was no reprimand for letting Subaru go.

Rem didn't think Emilia would have simply forgotten that part, so she assumed there was some reason for it and didn't bring up the topic herself.

She simply and quietly obeyed Emilia's command, took Subaru, and entered the Karsten estate. She had spoken briefly with Roswaal before that, but that conversation was a secret from both Emilia and Subaru. And at this point, it was a conversation that no longer held any meaning.

At any rate, once they were at the Karsten estate, Subaru's treatment began in earnest.

Rem was welcomed as a guest at the mansion and, unlike Subaru, wasn't in need of treatment, so she was given a great deal of freedom in her actions. Most of that free time, Rem spent by Subaru's side.

Partly, it was because she wanted to unconditionally affirm his admirable effort to maintain his usual demeanor despite being utterly exhausted, but frankly, it was for more personal reasons.

At Roswaal's mansion, Rem didn't get to spend much time with Subaru.

He was primarily assisting Ram with household chores, while she handled most of the mansion's upkeep. Their respective duties and responsibilities were different. Consequently, the time she spent with him was inevitably less compared to her sister, and this, to no small extent, planted dissatisfaction and anxiety within her.

Aware of this, she felt terribly unseemly and couldn't bring herself to voice it.

"Subaru, it's alright."

Subaru squirmed, as if uncomfortable in his sleep. Rem gently readjusted her hold on him and spoke softly, still gripping the reins.

Subaru, eyes closed and deeply asleep, didn't respond to her voice. Yet, she felt that the lines around his eyes had relaxed just a bit. Rem refocused her attention and looked ahead.

She had intended to reach the mansion by morning, but it might be better to camp out once somewhere. It was just past noon when they left Crusch's mansion, and now, about halfway to their destination, the moon had begun to cloud over.

Their pace was considerably slower than planned. This was a result of Rem's efforts to avoid burdening Subaru, causing the ground dragon to run much slower than its usual speed.

In another two or three hours, they would have covered half a day's travel as planned, but at this pace, would they only reach the mansion by morning?

"If that happens, it'll be difficult to communicate with Sister too."

Empathy requires a certain distance and for both parties to be awake.

Especially when Rem initiates contact with Ram, the conditions for both mental energy and distance are quite strict. At least from their current distance, it would be impossible to report the situation to Ram, and by the time they were close enough, it would be deep into the night.

Looks like we'll have to camp out after all.

Having made that decision, Rem manipulated the reins, signaling the ground dragon to stop.

The ground dragon, which had been at speed, obeyed, slowing its pace to a gentle halt. It let out a rough snort and looked up at her.

Rem carefully placed Subaru in the driver's seat, then agilely leaped down, landing on the road and surveying her surroundings.

The sun had already set, and the Lifaus Highway was lit only by the moonlight and the light from the lagmite ore lamps affixed to the dragon carriage Rem had been driving.

Fortunately, tonight's sky had few clouds, so the moonlight provided ample visibility. Assuming that the likelihood of bandit attacks was low under such conditions, Rem quickly climbed into the carriage's compartment, stacked blankets neatly, and created a makeshift sleeping area. Then,

"Subaru, excuse Rem."

She scooped up the sleeping Subaru in a princess carry and tucked him into the makeshift bed.

After laying down Subaru, who was surely tired from sitting and running all day, Rem lightly stretched to check her own condition. Then, she stepped out of the carriage to stand guard for the night.

She wasn't overly concerned about bandits, but it wasn't uncommon for witchbeasts or wild dogs to attack on the road at night, taking advantage of the sparse dragon carriage traffic.

Rem, who had encountered such cases several times in the past, understood that these opponents were far more dangerous than humans. Nevertheless,

"Since you're with Rem tonight, Rem doesn't think we have much to worry about."

Extending a hand, Rem stroked the ground dragon's face as it lowered its snout towards her.

They had been connected for half a day, albeit through the reins. She had grown quite fond of it, and it had listened well to Rem, despite it being their first meeting. The proper training it had received spoke volumes; it was truly commendable for a ducal house's ground dragon.

However, the ground dragon's understanding wasn't entirely unrelated to the fact that Rem was an 'Oni,' a biologically superior being.

Among dragon species, ground dragons are remarkably friendly with humans. A considerable number are integrated into daily life, and their docile nature makes them highly valued.

With flying dragons and water dragons, special training or raising them from infancy is essential, so their numbers are limited compared to ground dragons.

Nevertheless, while ground dragons are the most human-friendly of the dragon species, their quality as a race naturally sets them apart from other beasts. There are almost no foolish wild animals that would purely attack a ground dragon, and ground dragons themselves have a keen sense for danger.

Unless it's a large pack of witchbeasts or a group of bandits, they won't attack a ground dragon, and such groups are almost always detected by the ground dragon beforehand.

Therefore, there isn't much to worry about when camping with a ground dragon.

"Please rest well."

The ground dragon and herself were more than enough personnel for night watch.

Rem glanced up at the sleeping quarters, murmured those words, then patted the ground dragon, which nudged its nose against her, and made it sit down. Leaning against the ground dragon's hard skin, she pulled out a blanket to cover herself and sharpened her senses for the watch.

If they set off at dawn, when the sun began to rise, they should be able to reach the mansion by tomorrow morning.

She would have to meekly accept the reprimand for bringing Subaru back and for not achieving their objective. More than anything, she was the only one who could protect Subaru in his current state.

“If there’s someone who can bring Subaru back to normal…”

It could only be Emilia. That fact frustrated Rem.

For Rem, Emilia was a very difficult person to interact with.

Roswaal had welcomed her as a guest, and now she was treated as someone superior to Rem, a royal candidate. In fact, Rem and Ram had been instructed to treat her as such.

Rem had no particular objection to treating Emilia more highly than her master, Roswaal. Ram, who was devoted to Roswaal, seemed displeased, but Rem’s emotional attachment in that regard wasn’t as strong as her sister’s. Of course, her sister wasn’t foolish enough to show it in her face or words, so Ram’s feelings were merely something Rem sensed.

It was such a strong dissatisfaction that it resonated deeply with her empathy, something she usually didn’t consciously acknowledge.

The reason Rem’s feelings towards Emilia were complex was due to Emilia’s origins, unrelated to Roswaal.

—The fact that Emilia was a half-elf. In other words, a half-demon.

Intellectually, Rem understood that Emilia herself was blameless. However, it was also true that there was a part of her emotions that couldn’t fully accept it.

It wasn’t Emilia’s fault. The existence of half-demons had had too great an impact on Rem’s life to be trivialized.

It was difficult to choose between treating her with kindness or with malice.

As a result, Rem had firmly decided that her approach to Emilia would simply be to never deviate from the roles of ‘guest and servant’.

Suppressing her emotions, Rem responded to Emilia’s instructions like a machine. Perhaps Emilia also sensed Rem's attitude, as she never made any unnecessary fuss.

Days passed with such a relationship, and Rem had thought it would remain unchanged regardless of the Royal Selection's outcome. Due to her duties, she had little chance of being present at the end of the Royal Selection. Considering the position she had imposed on herself, she had also admonished herself that strong feelings, whether good or bad, towards Emilia were superfluous.

Yet now, Rem's feelings towards Emilia had completely changed from before.

That fact greatly frayed Rem's heart.

For Rem, who wasn't so childish as to deny her own feelings, Emilia's stubbornness was incomprehensible in every sense. And knowing that Emilia had an understandable past that led her to be that way, Rem felt disgusted with herself for thinking such thoughts.

These emotions swirled, harboring a single boy at their center, threatening to explode.

Sighing, Rem felt weary of her own ugliness.

In this soundless world, enveloped in an environment where even light sources were uncertain, her thoughts naturally drifted aimlessly.

The passage of time felt vague and slow; no matter how many times she looked up, the moon seemed to have not shifted from its previous position.

The night is long. A solitary night is endlessly deep, cold, and long.

Suddenly, Rem was overcome with the urge to slip into the carriage compartment behind her, where she was protecting him.

How wonderful it would be if she could slip in beside the boy who lay wrapped in a blanket, peacefully asleep without dreaming, and share his warmth.

A temptation arose, wondering if she could just give up everything and do just that.

Even if they returned now, what awaited him was a harsh reality far from ideal.

Right now, no matter where she drove the dragon carriage, there would be nothing to blame her but her own conscience. If she continued to care for Subaru over time, he might eventually recover his humanity from his childlike state, and while different from before, they might be able to share time together again.

The travel funds Roswaal had given them were a considerable sum. She could disappear with it and live in seclusion with Subaru.

“Heh, a pipe dream…”

Shaking her head and pressing it into her clasped knees, Rem gave a bitter laugh at her own delusion.

There was no way she could make such a choice, one that would disregard everything. It was a cruel thought that, by rights, she should have avoided even thinking.

There was no way she could leave her sister, Ram, and abandon the mansion. Her sister was truly half of her, and above all, if she left her in that mansion, how much burden would fall upon her? Her kind sister, who was so sweet to Rem, would surely forgive her anyway. Precisely for that reason, she could never betray her sister.

Roswaal, who entrusted such a large sum of money and a crucial role to Rem, despite her even contemplating such betrayal. Betraying that trust was also an unthinkable act for Rem, with her scrupulous character.

Above all,

“There’s no way I can just leave Subaru like this, is there?”

While diligently caring for Subaru, Rem was filled with a sense of immense happiness.

Rem was inherently aware that she had a possessive personality. If possible, she wanted to keep all her cherished people close to her. By dedicating herself to others, she could feel the value of her own existence—one could even say she was born with the disposition of a maid.

Therefore, caring for Subaru in his current state was not a hardship for Rem. On the contrary, she felt fulfilled by the realization that Subaru couldn't do without her.

However that was not the real Subaru.

For Rem, the person Natsuki Subaru had always been—

3

With the morning mist dampening her bangs, Rem slowly raised her head.

She recognized that it was time to depart, intoxicated by the sensation of her consciousness drifting in a state she could only call semi-wakefulness, a space between sleep and reality.

Throughout the night, nothing notable happened; neither witchbeasts nor bandits showed any sign of their presence. Nevertheless, Rem wasn't without fatigue. Unable to endure the unchanging hours, and with her consciousness nearly succumbing to sleep, she had transitioned into the aforementioned semi-wakeful state, allowing herself some rest.

She stood up and stretched in the cool morning air.

It was a sloppy, unladylike gesture. She would never do it if others were around, but now, even if she was being watched, it was only by Subaru, who lay beside her, breathing softly—

"Su-Subaru?!"

Startled, Rem recoiled, realizing the boy wrapped in a blanket was right beside her.

The boy, who had been leaning against her, lost his support and slowly rolled onto the grass, wincing and stirring.

In a panic, Rem looked between Subaru and the dragon carriage behind her. He must have gotten down and rolled beside her during the night, while her consciousness drifted from full wakefulness.

She shivered at the fact that she hadn't noticed, yet, at the same time, her face flushed as she realized how much she had let her guard down with Subaru.

While having such a maidenly reaction, Rem inwardly wondered if Subaru's current action was a good sign.

Subaru, who, when awake, mostly reacted with either a blank expression, laughter, or tears. He had now climbed down from the dragon carriage by himself and taken this deliberate action.

Rem harbored hope that his fragmented mind was gradually coming together, reconstructing his personality.

"—Alright, let's go home, Subaru."

If a change had occurred, surely things would turn for the better from now on.

It was an uncharacteristic thought for her, but it was likely a result of being influenced by the boy before her. And that internal change, to Rem, felt somehow endearing.

Rem gently picked up the still-sleeping Subaru again. After getting into the driver's seat, she roused the ground dragon. She spoke to the awakened dragon, gave it some water, and then they set off again.

The wheels gripped the road, slowly picking up speed as they began to move.

They had roughly half the journey left, which would probably take about seven or eight hours.

She felt more energized than yesterday when she'd set off with only a sense of despair regarding her mental and physical state. Gazing at Subaru’s deeply sleeping profile, Rem transferred her surging emotions to the reins, increasing their speed.

Surely, everything would turn out for the best.

—Rem believed so.

4

—The air feels wrong.

Rem, driving the dragon carriage, realized this as she rested Subaru’s restless head on her lap, her arm slipped into his black hair, stroking it gently.

Perhaps it was due to having ample time to think last night.

Rem, having come to terms with the complex emotions within her, had felt a certain lightness in her heart when Subaru had nestled close to her in the deep of the night.

If that was the reason she was so late to notice such an obvious anomaly, then she was foolish beyond salvation.

“It’s too quiet…”

Driving along the Lifaus Highway, she hadn’t passed a single other dragon carriage.

Though she was following the road, Rem was also taking a slightly less-traveled route, aiming for the shortest path to the mansion. She could feel the sensation of the wheels crushing grass beneath her, yet she should have been concerned by the complete absence of any other presence in their unobstructed surroundings.

Even last night, when she was on alert for witchbeasts or bandit attacks, there had been several strange points.

Before even the complete absence of hostile presences, there was the anomaly of not hearing even a single insect’s chirp.

A bad feeling rushed through her mind.

This kind of silence, and a situation where living creatures hold their breath—such things are always a prelude to abnormalities beyond human comprehension.

The increasing sense of unease as they drew closer to the Mathers territory, to the mansion.

Rem poured her inner anxiety into the hands gripping the reins, urging the already frantically running ground dragon to go even faster.

She knew she was pushing it, but now she had to ascertain the truth of this anxiety as quickly as possible. If it was just a false alarm, then so be it. She would apologize to Subaru and the ground dragon for putting them through a strenuous journey and then face the problem anew.

If the anxiety smoldering in her chest was real—

"—Sister?"

Suddenly, what arrived in Rem's heart was a storm of emotions that weren't her own.

—It was an unbearable anxiety, and the fact that it immediately vanished made Rem panic.

Her sister, who usually appeared composed, was indeed brave at heart. It was rare for her to be truly disturbed by anything unrelated to her master or, presumptuously, to Rem, her younger sister.

For her to feel such 'anxiety' that it reached Rem through empathy, and for it to vanish so quickly, meant she had controlled herself to prevent it from reaching Rem.

That anxiety, which likely wouldn't have been transmitted if they were further apart, had reached Rem, who was returning from the royal capital.

Upon receiving it, Rem,

“Rem has to get back, fast—!”

She hurried, gripping the reins even tighter until her knuckles turned white.

As things stood, if everything at the mansion was proceeding as planned, only her sister and Emilia should be there. If, in such a state, some problem arose that was beyond their capabilities. And if that problem was not unrelated to this anxiety—

Rem was driven by a sense of urgency. Outwardly expressionless, and inwardly trying to remain calm, she actually had the flaw of becoming oblivious to her surroundings when she exerted herself.

That flaw, this time too, bared its fangs at her.

—In a world where time stood still, Rem watched as the ground dragon’s head exploded before her eyes.

Chapter 36:
A Howl of Blood

1

The ground dragon, pulling the carriage, had its neck severed at the base. Its masterless, colossal body collapsed, sending the carriage careening off the path, bouncing violently, and overturning.

The overturned carriage gouged into the ground with a spectacular roar, kicking up a plume of dust. Wood splintered, and the fallen dragon's body became entangled in the wheels, creating the sickening sound of flesh being torn apart and a spray of blood mist. In an instant, the scene transformed into a gruesome spectacle.

This occurred in the mountains, just after exiting the Lifaus Highway and entering a forest path, at the very entrance to the Mathers territory. They would have reached their destination after crossing several forested areas and hills, roughly two hours of travel. However, the dragon carriage lay brutally destroyed midway, and only the empty whirring sound of the spinning wheels echoed forlornly at the accident site.

The land dragon lay as a mangled heap of flesh, the carriage reduced to wreckage. The dust cloud, mixed with dirt and blood, wafted an unusual stench.

Into this scene,

"…Ugh, aaoooh…"

A boy, thrown clear and covered in abrasions, groaned.

He lay slightly separated from the ruined carriage, having landed in a patch of grassland off the forest path. The thickly growing green, crisscrossed with vines, must have cushioned his fall somewhat. Despite being at the center of such a horrific scene, the boy's injuries were miraculously minor.

Even so, the pain from being thrown defenselessly was not insignificant. Abrasions and several bruises. Fortunately, there were no broken bones or major bleeding, but the agony was more than enough to make the small, defenseless child curl up.

"Ah-fuh, ugh-fuh… Ahh…"

The black-haired boy, rolling out of the grassland, groaned in pain and shed tears. His face was streaked with blood from a scrape on his forehead, further accentuated by tears and drool. His rough attempts to wipe it away only spread the reddish-brown across his face, and his mud-stained sleeves were also tinged red. It was a pathetic sight for a grown adult, and coupled with the horrific wreckage of the carriage, it evoked only a sense of tragedy in anyone who saw it.

At this moment—

"…"

Figures in black cloaks emerged one after another, a dozen or so of them encircling the boy and the carriage. The figures examined the fallen, headless ground dragon, confirming its death, then quietly turned their gaze to Subaru, who lay weeping.

The black-cloaked figures had their hoods pulled deep over their heads, making their faces and even their genders indistinguishable. These shadowy figures, whose breathing was uncertain, moved with a wavering, gliding motion as they surrounded Subaru. Looking down at him, reacting only to his pain,

"—Ra."

One of the figures whispered a single word. As one spoke, another uttered the same word. The chain of words then flowed rapidly, and all those encircling him began to whisper in a continuous murmur.

In a world devoid of insect chirps or any sign of life, only the sound of wind rustling branches and the whispers of the black figures echoed—a distorted scene, as if the world itself were self-contained.

Then,

"—Agh. Ahh! Ahhh, ah-bwahhh!"

Gradually, as the whispers intensified, a change came over Subaru, who had been groaning in pain. He writhed, arching his back while lying face up, emitting cries of anguish. He was still enduring pain, but its nature was clearly different from before. It was an agony on another level from the abrasions and bruises, a movement as if he were trying to suppress something erupting from within, as if the seeds of rampant pain within him were about to sprout and torment him.

Anyone observing would have realized that this was a scene in response to the whispers of the surrounding black figures. Looking down at the suffering Subaru, the figures did not cease their curses. However, as if reaching some conclusion from Subaru's desperate state, they continued to whisper as they reached out to his body—

"—Bo!"

An iron ball, hurtling with a roar, exploded the head of the man who was about to touch Subaru. Blood and fragments of skull splattered around, raining down mercilessly on the suffering Subaru. The collapsing figure's movements were accompanied by the light clinking of an iron chain, which writhed like a snake around the dead figure—lashing out at the other black cloaks.

"…"

The black cloaks were quick to react. Immediately disengaging their minds from their comrade's sudden demise, they silently scattered to avoid the chain's pursuit. As they did so, the black cloaks drew cross-shaped blades from their robes. These dully gleaming weapons had a gruesome design, with blades at their tips. Wielding one in each hand, the black cloaks cautiously scanned their surroundings.

There were eleven of them. All positioned themselves to cover each other's backs, forming a commendable formation that eliminated blind spots and prepared for a surprise attack. However, this only applied if their opponent could be confronted in a two-dimensional space.

"—Shhh!"

From above, an apron dress fluttered as a girl kicked off the trees. Her body, launched diagonally downwards with incredible speed, was slightly faster than the shadows' consciousness, which had reacted to the sound.

The hilt of the descending weapon pierced the black cloak's head from directly above. With a sharp sound, a hole was opened in the top of the head, and the shadow, spilling blood and brain matter, swayed and fell. Kicking off its body, the girl leaped back, obstructing the vision of a nearby black cloak. However, the shadow whose comrade's corpse had been kicked showed no hesitation. It charged, impaling its approaching comrade's body from the front with its cross-shaped blade, and lunged at the girl, intending to pierce her along with the corpse.

That shadow's body, along with the impaled corpse, was torn to pieces by a tempest of spiked iron balls. The girl, who had thrown the iron ball straight. As the chain stretched to its full length, she tilted forward as if overcome by the weight of the iron ball—the thrown cross-shaped blade passed through the space where her head had just been. A hard thud of the blade piercing a tree trunk echoed, and the tilted girl, maintaining her posture, gained initial velocity, leaping horizontally and causing the ground to erupt.

"Rwaaaah!"

Screaming, the girl bared her fangs and roared. On her blood-soaked blue hair, a pure white, sharp horn protruded and gleamed.

A black cloak, mid-leap, was caught in the girl's high-speed movement. The arm wrapped around its waist shattered the shadow's lower body, and the unfortunate, paralyzed figure was slammed with force into a tree behind it, expelling most of its internal organs from its mouth and rear, its life extinguished.

With a single swing of her arm, the demon flung away the dead black cloak's body and retrieved the iron ball. Its adorable face was stained with blood, and its eyes glowed brightly as it glared at the black cloaks. Then, spotting the boy lying at the feet of the still-silent black shadows,

“Rem won’t let you touch Subaru.”

The girl —Rem— declared in a voice full of vigor, dragging her blood-soaked left leg and swirling the iron ball above her head. This injury was sustained when she couldn’t completely avoid the splintering wood during the carriage’s overturn. If Rem had been alone, she might have escaped unharmed, but that was impossible.

The moment the ground dragon’s neck was severed, Rem immediately knew the carriage would overturn violently. Realizing the gravity of the situation, her immediate thought was how to safely protect Subaru, who was sleeping on her lap, from the overturning carriage. Her mind raced at dizzying speed, her eyes scanning. The moment she caught sight of a tangle of grass and vines in her peripheral vision, she threw Subaru there. The precious split-second she had for escape was used up, and Rem was left to share the fate of the now-wrecked carriage.

The result was a laceration on her forehead and a deep wooden splinter embedded in her left thigh. She had forcibly re-set her dislocated left shoulder, and the intense pain that coursed through her as she moved it sent shivers across her pale cheek.

Rem stepped forward, showing no signs of her injuries affecting her stride.

“Witch Cultists…!”

She glared at the group of black cloaks, spitting out the words in a voice filled with hatred. In response to Rem’s call, the black cloaks still showed no reaction. They continued to maintain their ambiguous, seemingly unaware posture, remaining motionless with their cross-shaped blades pointed at the enraged girl.

The balance shattered in an instant.

Rem, who had been swirling the iron ball above her head, cut to the chase, realizing that this stalemate would lead nowhere. The iron ball, propelled by centrifugal force and her added strength, was a steel-forged end that would crush all obstacles in its path. A single blow would not only break bones but also take a life, utterly destroying anything it hit.

The blow, with the chain fully extended, snapped trees, scattering splinters and chunks of dirt as it bore down on the black cloaks. However, the black cloaks dodged it by leaping or running low to the ground. After Rem unleashed her attack, leaving her vulnerable, they instantly lunged at her. Rem, having created a large opening with her powerful swing, twisted her body, pulling back the iron ball she had just released. But the lethal blades would reach her faster than the iron ball could return.

“—Raa!”

The lead black cloak’s jaw was completely gouged out by Rem’s upward-swinging toe. It wasn’t a gentle kick; his lower jaw was literally scraped off from directly below by her toes. The shadow, now jawless, its pink tongue dangling loosely. Yet, it lunged at Rem, unconcerned by its fatal injury, and raised its cross-shaped blade, intent on plunging it into her chest.

—Faster than that movement could be completed, Rem’s retrieved iron ball blew away the shadow’s remaining upper jaw along with its skull.

Amidst the splattering brain matter, the iron ball shot out. Rem caught it with her raised palm as it approached her face—the spikes pierced her left hand, and bright red blood stained her pale cheek. But she clenched her hand tightly, and instantly spun around, slamming the iron ball, along with her fist, into the face of a black cloak about to swing its cross-shaped blade sideways, crushing it.

That made six. Having halved the assassins from the initial twelve, Rem gasped for breath, her eyes, wet with murderous intent, fixed on the remaining enemies. An obsidian spear, sharpened to a needle point, flew towards her face. She tilted her head, dodging it by a hair’s breadth. Her hair and the side of her head grazed the rock, rasping against it, and pain and shock made her dizzy.

Her vision turned crimson, and the impact to her head robbed Rem of her judgment. Suddenly, her footing felt muddled. Her instincts reacted to the chilling sensation of sinking, and she gained momentum by slightly bending her knees, leaping diagonally with only her right leg. She then jumped onto a branch of a large tree ahead, intending to assume a surprise attack posture as she had done initially, but—

“Damn—!”

She cursed her own shortsightedness for easily jumping when facing an enemy with long-range attacks.

The branch she intended to land on was scorched by scorching flames, and a fist-sized fireball, which had burned through the large tree, emerged from beyond it—the sensation of intense heat searing her skin spread across her front. Rem instinctively held out her blood-stained left hand.

“Huma!”

A thin membrane of water expanded in front of Rem. The moment it collided with the fireball, white steam erupted, and the dying shriek of burning water echoed through the forest. However, though the fireball’s intensity was somewhat diminished, it was not so weak as to be extinguished by a hasty incantation.

“—!!”

Her clenched left hand now had a hole in its palm, and it was uncertain whether it would be usable in future combat. Therefore, she raised her clenched fist and, without hesitation, slammed it into the fiery projectile, exploding her own fist along with the flame.

“—Uaah!”

Caught in the mid-air explosion, Rem’s body was sent spinning and slammed into a tree trunk. She then tumbled down onto a mass of writhing roots, groaning in agony from the dull ache in her left arm as she looked up.

Her left arm was charred from the wrist down, her pinky and ring finger carbonized. The skin up to her elbow was horribly red and festering, and she had no sensation of pain beyond her shoulder. Unless she was treated by a mage as skilled as Ferris, her left arm would never move again.

Pushing through such severe injuries, Rem stood up, bringing her consciousness back to reality and forgetting the pain. She bit back her groans, instead roaring furiously, invigorating herself and letting her enemies know that her fighting spirit had not waned, hoping to divert their attention from Subaru, even slightly.

However—

"…"

A bare-handed black cloak, approaching silently, slammed its palm into Rem's torso with an impact that drove her back against the large tree behind her. Her internal organs twisted, and her sternum groaned under the force, causing Rem to cough up a large amount of blood.

Her throat burned with the hot sensation of vomiting blood, and her body sank with the agony of being squeezed dry. The withdrawn palm thrust out again, and she barely dodged it as it tried to crush her skull. The trunk behind her was punched through by the palm strike, and the unbelievably light large tree flew through the air. The black cloak, which cracked the ground with a single step, was clearly different from the opponents she had faced so far. Rem, dodging the follow-up attack with a sidestep, rolled and spat out the blood remaining in her mouth, her gaze wandering as she searched for the iron ball she had dropped.

"—!!"

An obsidian spear grazed her face, and her unsteady body was struck from behind by an earth hammer. Her spine groaned violently, and her small body bounced off the ground, sent flying. Where she bounced, the bare-handed figure who had overwhelmed Rem earlier waited. The shadow held the iron ball Rem had dropped in its hand and raised the iron mass, aiming it at her bouncing form—

"—El Huma!"

The blood she had spit out during the incantation froze, and a blade of pure blood cut halfway through the arm of the man holding the iron ball. The pain caused the weapon to fall from the black cloak's hand. And then,

"Gaurururuu!"

Slamming the ground to stabilize herself, Rem reached out her right hand and grabbed the hilt of the iron ball the black cloak had dropped. At the same time, she kicked the iron ball on the ground, sending it behind the shadow. Wrapping the chain around the shadow's thick neck, she pulled it tight with immense force.

The wet sound of the chain tightening around flesh, and the black cloak's neck, along with its shinbones, twisted and broke. Its face, now turned 180 degrees backward, looked at Rem, and its eyes lost their light. Rem relaxed slightly, believing she had defeated a formidable foe—at that moment,

"—!!!"

The black cloak's body, which should have been lifeless, moved, and a kick of tremendous force swept through Rem's torso.

The kick, directly impacting her left side, completely shattered Rem's left ribs and broke her left thigh, slamming her to the ground. And with that final blow, the black cloak finally perished. Its body lay face down, looking up at the sky—a gruesome corpse.

"Ugh, aah…"

Groaning and spitting blood, Rem urged her unresponsive left side, including her arm, to move as she struggled to stand. She had disposed of what was likely the most skilled opponent in the enemy group. However, the price she paid was not cheap.

Five remaining. Since no bare-handed individuals had mixed in, there should be no one skilled in close combat. If that were the case, she could finish them off by approaching and twisting each of their necks.

Could she do it with her trembling, injured body, with only her right side functioning?

She shook her head, biting back her weakness, and chastised herself for wavering. It wasn't a question of whether she could do it. She had to. What did it matter if her left side was dead? Her right side still moved. If her right arm failed, she could crush them with her feet. If her right foot failed, she would bite them to death.

If she killed every last one of them and Subaru survived, Rem would win.

This was already a large-scale battle, and they were already within the Mathers territory. Though she wasn't consciously aware of it, there was no way her sister wouldn't sense her own bloodlust. Soon, her sister would pinpoint this location. Her own life or death didn't matter then. If she could only protect Subaru's life, what hesitation would there be in expending herself here?

A hint of lingering regret distorted Rem's heart. To kill off that last hesitation, Rem glanced at where Subaru should have been lying. If only she could see him one last time, then it wouldn't matter what happened to her.

But—

"—Subaru?!"

He wasn't there. Subaru, who should have been groaning in pain, suffering, and fear, was nowhere to be found.

Panicked, Rem frantically scanned her surroundings. Could he have been caught in the aftermath of the earlier fight and thrown somewhere? But she searched and searched, and his figure was nowhere to be seen. Then, with a start, Rem realized.

"One, missing…"

There were five black cloaks remaining in the group. But now, no matter where she looked, there were only four. The black cloaks, with their cross-shaped blades lowered in both hands, stood blocking the beast path in front of them, subtly moving to obscure their fleeing comrade from Rem's sight. —To keep her away from the comrade who had carried Subaru away.

"You… bastards…"

A trembling voice escaped her trembling lips. Her lips, pale from massive blood loss, were stained with the rouge of blood overflowing from her mouth. Amidst this gruesome war paint, Rem's adorable face transformed into that of a true demon,

"Not content with stealing Rem's reason to live…"

She tensed her right arm, gripping the iron ball, and bent one leg, gathering explosive power. Ahead, tension ran through the black cloaks, and at the moment they were about to lunge at her,

"Are you even going to steal Rem's reason to die here and now—!!"

Rem's roar exploded, and her body launched forward with a kick that seemed to blow the ground away. In front of her, facing the charging Rem, were not only the black cloaks holding their cross-shaped blades as a diversion, but also a myriad of fist-sized fireballs being chanted from behind them—so numerous they covered her entire vision.

"—!!!"

A scream erupted, and immediately after, a chain of crimson light ignited in the morning forest. Intense heat raged, burning away trees, and the world shrieked in agony as the immense heat turned everything into scorched earth.

—In the scorched wasteland, a scorched fragment of a white apron dress fluttered down, then vanished in an instant.

2

Swaying, aching, swaying and aching.

Subaru drooled, helplessly swaying on the shoulder of the black-clad figure carrying him.

He barely felt the pain from the fall out of the dragon carriage anymore. It wasn't that he felt nothing, but his consciousness was so dominated by an even greater pain that he lacked the will to move, sinking deeper into it.

At the scene of the overturned dragon carriage, the black-clad figures had surrounded Subaru and begun their whispered incantations. As he listened to those whispers, Subaru's body felt like it was being torn apart from within by an unknown sensation, and his head was overwhelmed by a disturbance far beyond what could be described as ringing in his ears.

Something black raged inside his chest, his belly, his skull, at the very core of his being, as if trying to utterly destroy his existence.

He shuddered to think what would have happened if that had continued. That kind of pain could crush a person's spirit. It could twist a person's mind. It could change a person entirely. It was the kind of thing that stripped one of their humanity. If it had continued, Natsuki Subaru would have been—

"Hee-hee-hee, hee-hee-hah, heh-foo-hee…"

Suddenly, as if remembering something, a mad cackle spilled from the corner of his lips, along with drool.

As his self began to return to his consciousness, which had been dominated by pain, his mind naturally revealed its shattered state, but in a different way than the pain itself.

Parts of his body ached. His head felt particularly like it was splitting open. Blue wasn't there. Blue wasn't by his side. He was being carried by a black figure. What was this black figure? Where had Blue gone? Where was he being taken?

The black-clad figure ran through the forest, almost flying along the animal path. Despite their slender build, not appearing particularly trained, their ability to carry a limp human and move like the wind was utterly surreal. Like shadows moving in sync with the sunlight, the black-clad figure carrying Subaru glided through the mountains, traversing unmarked animal paths as if they owned them.

After about ten minutes of running, the black-clad figure suddenly stopped in the deep, sunless gloom of the forest. Directly ahead loomed a cliff face, prominently displaying moss-covered rock. It was so tall that it was clearly insurmountable without special equipment.

Facing this cliff, the black-clad figure scanned their surroundings and headed towards a particularly noticeable boulder. Placing a palm on the boulder,

"…"

Subaru's body tensed as he heard the shadow whisper a word. This was a reaction born of fear, dreading the repetition of the incantation that had echoed in his mind earlier. However, the single whispered word seemed different from the previous incantation, and its effect did not cause his skull to creak.

"…"

Before the black-clad figure who had whispered the incantation, the massive boulder suddenly vanished. As if it were a dream or an illusion, it dissolved into the air. Accepting this as normal, the black-clad figure readjusted Subaru on their shoulder and stepped into the cave that had appeared where the boulder once stood.

In the chilling air of the cold cave, only the regular sound of the shadow's footsteps echoed rhythmically. After proceeding about ten meters into the cave, the light from behind suddenly vanished. Presumably, the cave entrance had been sealed again by the boulder.

In the cold, biting cave, the black-clad figure showed no signs of panic, nor did their footsteps falter. Then, the dim light ahead of the unhesitating shadow was suddenly dispelled by a faint, white glow. The glow of lagmite ore.

Minerals were embedded at regular intervals along what appeared to be a passageway, and lights illuminated one after another, guiding the shadow's path.

Deeper and deeper into the cave, into the darkness. Was the goosebumps on his bleeding skin due to the cold, or something else?

Still carried, Subaru shivered slightly, hot tears spilling from the corner of his eyes, as he continued to laugh aimlessly.

Then, the end of the dark, cold, rock-walled passage came into view. The glow of the lagmite ore was slightly stronger here, illuminating a natural chamber significantly larger than the rest of the cave, clearly set up with proper lighting.

It was there that Subaru would come face to face with an embodiment of malice.

3

He was a gaunt man.

The man, surrounded by other black-clad figures, was himself shrouded in a black priestly robe. He was slightly taller than Subaru, with dark green bangs trimmed to fall just above his eyes. His cheeks were hollow, and he possessed a body so devoid of vitality that it felt accurate to describe it as just skin and minimal flesh stretched over bone, barely maintaining a human form.

That is, if you ignored his eyes, which gleamed with a maniacal, unsettling brilliance.

The man leaned in, intently observing Subaru, who was bound and slumped against the wall. He bent at the waist, then tilted his neck a full ninety degrees, staring at Subaru with bulging eyes and an unnerving lack of inhibition. His posture alone revealed a bizarre, abnormal quality, and indeed, the man’s actions were far removed from those of an ordinary person.

“I seee… Thiiis is, indeed, quiiite interesting, yes?”

After a prolonged gaze, as if licking Subaru with his eyes from head to toe, the man nodded in agreement to the surrounding figures. The black-clad shadows acknowledged his affirmation with a slight dip of their chins, silently awaiting his next words.

The man paid no mind to their respectful silence. Instead, lost in thought, he clasped his right hand over his left—then jammed his thumb into a wound on his wrist, unconcerned by the dripping blood, gouging into his own flesh.

“Youu… You aren’t ‘Pride’, are you, by any chance?”

Still bent at the waist, the man twisted his head back up to look at Subaru. He put his blood-stained thumb, fresh from the wound, into his mouth, savoring the metallic taste on his tongue with an ecstatic tremor in his dull, glinting eyes as he posed the question.

Subaru gave no reply to the query. He simply stared blankly up at the man, maintaining a vacant, out-of-place smile.

Watching this, the man noisily withdrew his finger from his lips, then said,

“Ah, is that so? My apologies, my apologies. How thoughtless of me, I haven’t even introduced myself yet, have I?”

Responding to Subaru’s smile, the man slowly split his pale lips into a horrifying grin, then bent deeply at the waist with slow, deliberate movements.

“I am a Sin Archbishop of the Witches Cult—”

Maintaining his bowed posture, he deftly raised his neck to look directly at Subaru.

“—Petelgeuse Romanee-Conti, in charge of ‘Sloth’!”

After proclaiming his name, the man —Petelgeuse— pointed at Subaru with the fingers of both hands and let out a cackling laugh.

Cackle, cackle, cackle.

Chapter 37:
Sloth

1

Peals of laughter echoed against the dim, cold walls of the cave.

With cackling, hysterical laughter, Petelgeuse bared his blood-stained, mottled teeth, continuing to chortle as if something was endlessly amusing him.

Petelgeuse seemed like he'd go on forever if no one stopped him. Facing this bizarre spectacle, Subaru, the object of his ridicule, remained hunched over, glaring at the ground.

Subaru had been dragged deeper into the hall by the robed figures, roughly thrown down, and bound to the wall. The iron shackles gripped his limbs so tightly they were discolored, and a tingling numbness, as if his blood vessels were being squeezed, gradually began to spread.

"Fufufu, hihihe…"

As his limbs went numb, Subaru offered a strained smile, as if he knew no other expression. Seeing this, Petelgeuse clapped his hands with even greater glee.

"Ah, how comical this is! It truly is quite, quite, quite, quite, quite the exciting sight, I daresay. My brain, it trembles… truly, truly, truly, truly!"

He let blood drip from the wound on his left hand, then wiped it with his right fingers and smeared it across his own forehead.

Drawing a mottled pattern on his forehead, Petelgeuse, with a maniacal grin, was utterly deranged.

Subaru giggled, seeing something other than reality, while Petelgeuse was utterly immersed in a world of pure madness. As the mad laughter of these two, slightly detached from reality, converged in the space, a shadow suddenly emerged.

It was a different figure from the one who had carried Subaru into the cave. The tall shadow moved fluidly, making no sound, and settled beside the laughing Petelgeuse.

"…"

It muttered something in a low voice, just loud enough for Petelgeuse to hear.

Upon hearing it, Petelgeuse abruptly dropped the maniacal grin that had twisted his cheeks and ceased his clownish antics.

"Is that so! Ahh, that is, ahh… my brain trembles, yes!"

With the same nuance that had kicked off his previous maniacal laughter, but now with a sinister, spine-chilling expression, Petelgeuse bit down on the nail of his left pinky finger.

He bit, bit it off, and as the nail peeled back and blood flowed, he paid it no mind, gnawing even on the flesh.

"…Ah, it hurts. It hurts, hurts, hurts, hurts, hurts. My brain, it trembles. Go on, it says! Keep going! No time to stand still! It screams! It calls! My brain truly trembles!"

He swung his arm, and blood from his gnawed left hand dripped onto the cold cave floor.

The black shadow watched dispassionately, tilting its head slightly—and with a gesture of respect, whispered to Petelgeuse, who continued his mad display.

"My left ring finger is ruined?! Ah, what a sweet ordeal this is! Despite my diligence in facing it… The world is still not kind to me today!"

"…"

"Ah, that's fine. The remaining count for my left ring finger will merge with the adjacent fingers. Oh, no, I still have nine, nine, nine, nine, nine, nine fingers! There's nothing to worry about!"

"…"

"Yes… that's right! A ordeal! A ordeal! This is a ordeal! Everything is a ordeal for us to follow the divine will! Shine, gleam… ah, my brain trembles!"

Petelgeuse laughed, spitting saliva in ecstasy, clutching his head, and spinning around on the spot.

The black-robed figure's voice was muffled, making it impossible to hear even in the confined space of the cave. Consequently, the conversation between Petelgeuse and the black shadow seemed almost comically like a monologue by Petelgeuse, further accentuating his bizarre behavior and unsettling aura.

"Ah, yes, yes, yes, yes, yes, yes, yes, yes, yes, yes, yes, yes, yes!"

"…"

"Yes… Ah, him, you mean? You're concerned about him? No, no, no, no, no, no, no, no, I understand completely… yes!"

Bending at the waist, crouching low, and twisting his body even further, Petelgeuse crept closer to Subaru. He thrust his face near, exhaling a somewhat foul breath, and Subaru, still giggling vacantly, looked up at his deranged display with emotionless eyes.

Facing Subaru's black eyes, Petelgeuse rolled his own grayish eyes with such intensity they seemed ready to pop out.

"Indeed, indeed, indeed, indeed, indeed, indeed, indeed, indeed, it's strange, unsettling, inexplicable… at this juncture, with the ordeal before us, why is a being like you here?"

"…"

"The dragon carriage! Ah, the dragon carriage is good! Ground dragons are delightful and very pleasing! Unlike humans, they harbor no unnecessary emotions. Above all, their diligent obedience to human commands, their diligent work, and their diligent attitude are splendid!”

“…”

“Killed! Ah, that’s also good! It was unavoidable to bring him down! Ah, you are also diligent, aren’t you! Excellent, that is good! By my side, as the fingers of my two hands, diligence is the most important thing! Good! Good! So, so, so, so, so, so, so, so, so, so good!”

Petelgeuse arched his body, showing such flexibility that his head almost touched the ground. With an enraptured expression, he then sprang upright with the recoil of a drawn bow.

“The diligence of my fingers! It brought down an earth dragon, a creature that is a very embodiment of diligence! Ah, my brain trembles. It trembles, trembles, trembles, trembles, trembles, trembles, trembles, trembles, trembles!”

His face flushed with excitement from a madness incomprehensible to ordinary people, and suddenly a single stream of blood trickled from Petelgeuse’s nostrils.

He licked it before it reached his mouth, staining his face crimson. Petelgeuse then smiled languidly, enraptured, his cheeks softening.

“Ah… a dead ground dragon is truly ‘slothful’. isn’t it.”

He muttered this with fervent eyes, and Petelgeuse trembled in ecstasy.

Then, he roughly wiped the nosebleed with the sleeve of his robe, and with a chilling demeanor, as if he had discarded his previous intense emotions somewhere, he said,

“Immediately clean up the site where the dragon carriage was destroyed. Before the coming day of the ordeal, we must prevent our existence from being revealed. There should have been no witnesses since the area was cleared, but… what about the passenger? Did you kill them properly?”

“…”

“A report on that? Ah, I shall hear it. With generosity, with grandeur, with immense love. For I shall treat my fingers with mercy.”

Spreading his arms wide, the hem of his robe swaying, Petelgeuse nodded solemnly.

Seeing this behavior, befitting his self-proclaimed title of Archbishop, the black shadow lowered its chin and continued to stubbornly keep its voice hushed.

“…”

“One passenger… a blue-haired girl. The tip of the left ring finger grazed her, destroying the dragon carriage. A battle ensued when attempting to secure him… the destruction of the ring finger was caused by that girl… status unknown.”

Receiving the black shadow’s report, Petelgeuse shook his head from side to side, cracking his neck bones.

He then continued to turn his head from side to side, twist it, contort it, spin it, sway it, like a clock pendulum, and finally snapped it forward.

“Sta-tus-un-known… Is that it?”

He finished, then slowly, slowly raised his trembling head, turning his vacant gray gaze towards the black-robed figure.

“You are truly ‘slothful’, aren’t you?”

As he spoke, Petelgeuse brought his raised left hand, specifically his ring finger, to his mouth.

Then, without any hesitation, he furiously bit down on the tip of that ring finger.

A nauseating sound of flesh being ground between molars and violently pulled apart echoed. Petelgeuse bit his nail, chewed his flesh, letting the resulting blood pool in his mouth. He then spat it all out together and grabbed the black shadow’s face with his blood-stained left hand.

“A situation where things might be exposed, right before the ordeal! Is that! Is that! Is that, that, that, that, that, that, that, that, that, that, that how you sincerely repay the Gospel?! Ah, how slothful! Sloth! Sloth, sloth, sloth, sloth!”

From what source of strength in his bony frame, Petelgeuse swung the opponent, who had been capable of carrying Subaru, from side to side by the face. It was likely aided by the black-robed figure’s lack of resistance, but Petelgeuse, violently shaking his opponent, looked up at the ceiling and cried out,

“And! The sloth of my finger is my sloth! Ah, forgive the sloth of this body of mine, which cannot repay such favor! May I be forgiven for living, for existing, with utmost diligence in my entire being, to follow the Gospel!”

Releasing the black shadow, Petelgeuse knelt, tears streaming down his face. He clasped his blood-stained hands, pleading and clinging as if he saw something there.

The roughly handled black-robed figure also followed Petelgeuse’s prayer, looking up at the ceiling behind him, silently confessing his own unworthiness and sin.

—It was an abnormal sight.

Petelgeuse’s emotions, joy, anger, sorrow, and pleasure, switched indiscriminately, without warning, rolling from one to another. This wasn’t merely emotional instability; it was emotional disappearance.

The black-robed figure, who accepted this as normal and showed no reaction even to the assault on himself, was also bizarre. Seeing him obey Petelgeuse, who called himself an Archbishop, perhaps he should be called a follower. More accurately, a fanatic.

“Love! I must repay this love! To be slothful is unforgivable! I must obey the Gospel! I must repay the given love with love!”

“…”

“Find the girl whose status is unknown! If she’s alive, stop her breath! If she’s dead, sever her head and bring it here! I must personally clean up and apologize for being slothful!”

The black shadow responded to the piercing command, melting away into the cave’s darkness.

After its presence faded, Petelgeuse remained kneeling for a while, breathing heavily, seemingly dazed.

“Now, now, now, now, now, now, now, now, now, now, now, now…”

Still kneeling, Petelgeuse shuffled on his knees towards Subaru.

The movement of dragging his knees across the hard, sharp rocky ground was self-mutilation, needlessly tearing the skin beneath his robe.

Disregarding the pain and wounds, he peered at Subaru.

“Just what, exactly, are you?”

“Ugh… augh…”

“You don’t seem to have been guided by the Gospel, yet such dense favor emanates from your body. Truly, truly, truly, truly, truly, truly, truly, truly interesting!”

He brought his face close, his tongue flicking out so near he seemed about to lick, and Petelgeuse gazed at Subaru. But Subaru was in no condition to answer his questions.

To Subaru, still staring blankly into some other place, Petelgeuse murmured “Ah, my brain trembles” in ecstasy.

“I should know faces other than ‘Pride’, yet I can’t believe someone so favored has no connection to the Gospel.”

He murmured, then reached into his robe—and pulled out a book.

It was a black-bound book, about the size and thickness of a dictionary. At first glance, it just looked like a cherished book, but,

“Ah… I feel the Gospel. My brain, it trembles…”

The way he caressed the black spine with his fingers and exhaled with fervent sighs left no doubt that it was something far more.

Holding the untitled book, Petelgeuse savored its feel for a while, then slowly and solemnly began to turn its pages.

“You are not written in the Gospel. Of course, not a single thing about the problems that arose before this great ordeal! That! That means!”

He snapped the book shut, lifted it, and spat as he cried out,

“Your existence is insignificant! Your existence, unwritten in the Gospel, is entrusted to me! Despite receiving such deep, deep, deep, deep, deep, deep, deep, deep, deep, deep, deep, deep favor… how contradictory you are! Ah, my brain, my brain, my brain!!!”

He pressed his finger to his temple, moving his nail with such force it seemed about to gouge. The skin tore, and blood began to ooze.

Even seeing this, Subaru still gave no reaction. He merely giggled vacantly, literally overlooking Petelgeuse’s self-mutilation.

“Ah-ah-ah-ah-ah-ah… Ah, being ignored, it’s lonely! Even though, even though! I am treating you with such goodwill, good-will, good-will, good-will, good-will, good-will!”

Petelgeuse’s extended hand seized Subaru’s face, fixing his gaze, which seemed to be looking nowhere, and forcing it to meet his own eyes.

Even in his dazed state, Subaru, at such rough treatment, finally frowned and tried to resist, but,

“—Look into my eyes.”

Quietly, with the least emotional fluctuation in any of his previous statements, yet with an undeniable, powerful force in his voice and eyes, he commanded.

Subaru’s body trembled with a jolt, and though dazed, he obeyed, looking into Petelgeuse’s gray eyes, which glowed with a deranged light.

Then,

“Answer me. Respond to me. To my questions, to my demands. Why are you here, and why are you so favored? Do you not possess a Gospel? Then have you directly heard the Gospel?”

“Ah, eu… hihehe”

“This is getting nowhere… perhaps I should change the order.”

His rapid-fire questions deflected, Petelgeuse tilted his head ninety degrees to the right.

With his face turned sideways, Petelgeuse leaned in even closer.

And then,

“I must ask you something.”

“—Auuuu!”

Petelgeuse, having drawn his face close, extended his tongue and licked Subaru’s left eyeball.

Subaru reacted with revulsion to this unnatural touch, the licking of his eye by another, and trembled, the chains of his shackles rattling.

That was only until he heard the next words.

“—Why are you feigning madness?”

2

I’m scared of gray.

The eyes staring at me, fixed on me, are terrifying. I try to tremble, turn my face away, and escape those eyes, but the hands gripping my face are so firm, and the chains binding my body are so cold, that I can’t escape.

Everywhere on my body aches terribly. Thrown from the overturned carriage, the abrasions covering my body haven’t been treated at all. Beneath my torn clothes, the raw, red wounds accelerate the pain just by looking at them, and the oozing blood felt as if it were directly connected to some terribly unpleasant memory.

Where has Blue gone? Blue, who was always by my side. Blue, who gently touched me. Blue, who fed me, and held my hand when I was anxious. If Blue were here, if Blue were with me, I wouldn’t have to be this scared.

Green, Brown, and White aren’t here either. All that’s here is the pitch black that sees nothing, and the gray in front of me.

The silent, unanswering Black was scary too. But Gray is far, far more terrifying than that.

“Have you, perchance, directly heard the Gospel?”

I don’t understand what he’s saying. My mind isn’t working to comprehend it. A strong desire to reject this unpleasantness overwhelms me, and I turn my body, my face, my heart away in refusal. But he doesn’t allow it, and Gray brings his face even closer.

“This is getting nowhere… perhaps I should change the order.”

Saying this, Gray brought his face closer. The tongue stretching from his mouth, an unnaturally long tongue, a red tongue freshly licking blood, mercilessly pressed towards me.

“I must ask you something”

—His tongue tormented the surface of my left eye, right above the pupil.

A surge of revulsion, an overwhelming dread, made the chains clank, revealing my rejection. However Gray didn’t stop. He even more gleefully moved his extended tongue to the back of my eye, toying with my eyeball as if rolling it on his tongue.

Disgusting, no, please stop, help me, I’m scared, I’m scared, I’m scared, I’m scared. I’m scared, I’m scared.

“—Why are you feigning madness?”

I’m scared, I’m scared—?

I didn’t understand what he said.

The discomfort of my eye being licked, the unpleasantness of being stared at, the rejection born from fearing the visible madness—my trembling body came to a sudden halt. Stunned, dumbfounded, with my mouth agape, my wide-open eyes still being licked,

“Why are you feigning madness?”

I heard Gray’s repeated question.

“Ahhh! Aaaah! Aah!”

“No, no, no, no, no, no, no, it’s a genuine question, you see. Why, for what reason, are you pretending to be consumed by madness?”

I shouldn’t listen. I shouldn’t let it enter my ears. I’m not allowed to know. I shook my head, rattling my hand and leg shackles loudly, cutting off my consciousness. I pushed the man’s words away from my ears. I must not hear, must not notice, must not know.

“I won’t offer convenient escape routes like ‘unconsciously’. You are aware, you understand yourself, and on top of that, you are pretending to be mad.”

“Aah! Ugh! Ugh, aah!”

“Your insanity is too rational. There is no way one can go mad so cleverly, so quietly, so as to gain sympathy, so as to be loved.”

I screamed, my throat feeling like it would burst, trying to drown out the man’s voice. But the man, rather, mocked my actions, slipping his words into the gaps of my consciousness as if to taunt me.

“That’s the act of a failed madman. If you were truly mad, if you were truly immersed in the world of madness, you wouldn’t be conscious of others’ eyes. The world must be self-contained; to be mad is to deviate!”

“—Baaah! Baaaah! Babababah!”

“Ah, how comical! How utterly comical! Why are you pretending to be mad?! To those truly deviated, such a superficial act is quickly exposed, seen, and utterly hilarious!”

Unwanted words, things I didn’t want to know, hammered at my eardrums and flowed in. It’s painful. It feels disgusting. Something is swelling in my chest. Something murky and dark is screaming to get out. I can’t let it out. If it were to get out, if that were to happen,

“Pity, I pity you! You, who are miserable, ugly, base, small, and sinful, ah, I shall pity you! While being so loved, what is there to reject?! Do you wish to neither drown in the given love, nor reciprocate the favoritism, nor refuse it, but rather to wither away in stagnation?”

The gray man shook his head and threw my face away. My head slammed against the wall behind me, sparks flew, and a sharp cry of pain escaped me. But the man paid me no mind, instead twisting another finger into the wound of the finger he had just bitten off, still inducing bleeding,

“Ah, ah, ah, you are… ‘Slothful’!”

Snap, something in my head felt like it had shattered. I didn’t hear anything. Nothing registered. It was all a madman’s babble. Not a single word hit the mark, not a single truth was reached. I understand nothing, comprehend nothing. That’s how it should be. That’s how it must have been. That’s how it has to be.

If not, then I—

“Ah, that’s enough.”

Just as the murky darkness swelled in my chest, on the verge of exploding, the man suddenly lost his intensity and muttered softly. Instantly, the skin-prickling sense of danger that had been present, the light of madness that had been bearing down on me, receded, and the tension unknowingly drained from my entire body.

“It wouldn’t do to corner you too much, you see. Perhaps it’s good to take your time and think it over carefully? If you sincerely face the favoritism, the answer should naturally emerge.”

“Ah…ugh…”

What in the world is this man talking about? From beginning to end, not a single word from his mouth reaches my comprehension. Despite not reaching me, the man behaves as if he holds all control over me, as if he understands me in this unseen darkness, like a gentle adult leading a child, or a demon luring a lost traveler across a suspension bridge.

I mustn’t understand. I mustn’t try to understand. Especially, I cannot think like that now. I mustn’t. Because if I were to understand it, there would be no turning back.

“Ah, I wish… that you are diligent, not slothful.”

Chapter 38:
Return to Reality

1

Hours had passed since Subaru was tied to the wall, his one-sided conversation with Petelgeuse cut off, and then abandoned.

Lying on the cold floor, Subaru's body was losing warmth, and he couldn't move as he wished. His consciousness was hazy because he was feverish, having lost both strength and body heat. Subaru repeatedly exhaled ragged, painful breaths, drooling from the corner of his mouth. Yet, there was no one there to care for him in such a state, no one even acknowledging his presence.

"Move all remaining fingers on the left hand. Clear the road with only the right hand. If it becomes unmanageable, we must consider moving up the schedule and blocking the path."

In stark contrast to Subaru, who lay weakened at the edge of the cave's chamber, Petelgeuse, standing in the center and clapping his hands, was full of boundless energy, issuing instructions in a high-pitched voice. Despite his appearance, which could only be described as a skeleton covered in human skin, his voice, eyes, and movements all brimmed with vitality.

He repeatedly uttered the word "diligence" himself, behaving in a manner truly befitting it, clearly doing so consciously. It was comical that such a person referred to himself as "Sloth", but there was no one there to laugh at it.

One after another, shadowy figures in black robes appeared before Petelgeuse, who sat in the center of the cave. Each of them brought silent whispers to Petelgeuse, and after receiving his instructions, they melted back into the darkness like shadows. Only Petelgeuse remained still; though he couldn't distinguish between the constantly arriving figures, if they were all different people, there were easily more than twenty of them.

The group of black-robed figures, appearing as if growing out of shadows—their image stimulated Subaru's mind, connecting to some memory.

"—Ah, that's right, you were here. How is it, have you decided to speak?!"

Once all the black shadows were gone and they were alone again, Petelgeuse moved. He strode

Impertinently towards Subaru, looking down at his fever-reddened face.

"Is it painful? Is it difficult? Are you sad? Are you angry? If you were a comrade, I wouldn't hesitate to be sympathetic, do you wish for that?"

"…"

"Ah, how aloof!"

Subaru responded to the madman who leaned in close by silently turning his face away. Seeing this, Petelgeuse clapped his knee delightedly, leaning back and tilting his head.

"But, you've started showing reactions that are quite like it, yes. Just one more push, just a little more wavering, and I think I'll understand you."

"…"

"What would it take? What should I bring? To make your heart tremble and to reward your love, what should I do!"

Petelgeuse got carried away, leaving Subaru behind as he screamed with an enraptured expression. Just as he was about to delve into his own world again, wallowing in ecstasy and spouting delusions as before, he was suddenly interrupted.

"Oh my?"

In front of Petelgeuse, who had turned around, black shadows rose one after another from the ground. These black-robed figures, looking as if they sprouted from the shadows, numbered over ten. They knelt there, looking up at Petelgeuse in silence. Petelgeuse, with his hips, neck, and eyes still tilted, asked,

“ What is it?”

“…”

“What, the left-hand encirclement? Alone? Isn’t that splendid! Despite being outnumbered, despite being wounded, still desperately clinging on… On the contrary, how incompetent and slothful my own fingers are! Could it be that they escaped?”

“…”

“Not escaping? Not seeking help outside, but burrowing inward? Wounded all over! Towards us, whose numbers are uncertain! Ah, that is, that is, that is, that is, that is, that is, that is—what deep love and diligence!!”

Clapping his hands, his face and eyes shining, Petelgeuse turned back to Subaru with a bouncing gesture. He then crouched down to meet Subaru’s gaze, smiling like a child.

“You should be pleased! That you are so strongly desired! The diligent one is risking their life! Ah, my brain, my brain, my brain is trembling!”

Spitting excitedly and splattering Subaru’s face, Petelgeuse stood up and paced frantically among the kneeling shadows.

“Is the girl coming? Ah, so that’s why you returned. That’s good! Very good! By all means, by all means, by all means, by all means, I must greet her. I must personally go out to meet her!”

“…”

“Yes! So it shall be! Mobilize all fingers of the left hand and escort her to the entrance! If she collapses along the way, that’s fine too; if she reaches without collapsing, I shall greet her. Ah, ah, ahhhhhhh, isn’t that splendid!!”

Petelgeuse's joy burst forth. His words, their meaning, didn't register. Yet, Subaru writhed, and with a feverish expression, opened his mouth. Only groans escaped his lips, guided by an inexplicable sensation welling up from within. But,

"—!"

His mouth, as if sealed by something invisible, made no sound. It was different from the sensation of his throat being choked by fear or other emotions. It was a clearer, physical interference, as if his mouth were being forcefully held shut. Subaru's eyes widened at the suffocating feeling, like an invisible hand pressed over his mouth. Petelgeuse, looking up at Subaru, cackled,

"Well, no need to rush… There's plenty of time."

Petelgeuse's dry cackle echoed through the cave. At that sound, that unpleasant ringing in his ears, Subaru's mouth remained silent even after the suffocating sensation faded. He could only repeat ragged breaths, neither smiling idly nor shedding tears, waiting patiently for time to pass.

The change came in less than an hour.

The black-robed figures remained kneeling in silence. Petelgeuse silently weaved among them, his footsteps and Subaru's ragged breaths the only sounds disturbing the air in the chamber.

First, the black shadow kneeling closest to the passage leading into the chamber raised its head.

Following that person's movement, one fanatic after another raised their heads. Their gazes were uniformly directed towards the cave entrance, and Petelgeuse, noticing their movements, also looked that way—a joyous smile, as if his mouth would tear, spread across his face.

"It seems she's here."

His joyous murmur was drowned out by a resounding boom.

The sound of immense mass being pulverized with bomb-like force violently shook the cold air of the cave. The cascading sound traveled through the hard ground, reaching even Subaru as he lay fallen. Everyone in the chamber felt that the entrance had been violently knocked open.

A shadow swayed and rose, gripping a crucifix it had pulled from its robe. The cave felt cramped for more than a dozen people to move around in. While this chamber was somewhat spacious, it was still only about the size of two school classrooms. It wasn't large enough for flying, running, or doing much else. And that, surprisingly, was an advantageous condition for the outnumbered intruder.

After all, her prey was—

"—Found you."

A roaring iron flail swept aside the attacking black shadows in a single blow, smashing them against the wall and turning them into red stains, visible even from a distance. That flail, which easily claimed three lives with its first strike, was a deadly weapon that would utterly obliterate anything it directly hit—there was no option but to evade, but even that was difficult in the narrow cave.

The iron flail, after falling to the ground, shattered the rock surface. Its blood and flesh-smeared spikes dragged with a heavy sound. The girl stepping forward had her blue hair dyed a murky black, yet her eyes, still shining, gazed into the chamber and found the collapsed boy. Her lips trembled with tenderness as she took a small, gasping breath.

"Thank goodness, Subaru—"

Calling Subaru's name, the girl, Rem, relaxed her shoulders in relief.

Her appearance was gruesome, clearly showing that she had just survived something horrific. There wasn't a single spot on her body untouched by blood. Her blue hair was dyed a murky black, and her burnt apron dress had not a single white patch left. Her torn, ripped skirt revealed numerous lacerations on both legs, and most notably, her left arm was missing from the elbow down. Blood dripped from her fractured forehead, obscuring her left eye. A faint smile on her lips, Rem was covered in the scent of blood and death, having pushed her utterly battered body to this point.

“Ah—how splendid!”

Faced with her gruesome state, Petelgeuse applauded. He had forgotten that his comrades were being slaughtered before his eyes; instead, he used it as further fuel for his excitement, stepping joyfully and pleasurably in place.

“A girl! A single girl! So wounded, yet still she advances! For what, for this boy! You, who do so much to rescue the boy cherished by the Witch, are also blessed with love and live for love!”

“Your platitudes are enough, Witch Cultist…”

Standing between Subaru and Rem, Petelgeuse exulted, frothing at the mouth. Rem stared coldly at his deranged antics.

“You are nothing but fools who commit atrocities in the Mathers territory without the permission of Lord Roswaal, the lord of this domain. In the absence of my master, Rem will deliver judgment.”

“In such a tattered, tattered, tattered, tattered, tattered state? Stop talking as if you can do what you clearly cannot. Anyway, you only came to take this boy back. Stop with the pretty, empty words.”

Crouching, Petelgeuse grabbed Subaru’s head, forcing him to look up. To Petelgeuse, who gleefully gripped Subaru’s hair and bobbed his head up and down despite his struggles,

“…Don’t.”

“What is it?”

“Rem said, don’t touch him!”

Rem’s body coiled with rage, leaping into the air, pushing her injured self to the limit. Chasing after her, the black shadows on the ground also surged skyward. Two shadows lunged at Rem. Black-robed figures, wielding crucifix blades that seemed to melt into darkness, pursued Rem's body as she leaped in a straight line.

"—!"

The raised blade aimed to pierce Rem's torso from below. But against the attack from below, she swung her left arm—the arm missing from the elbow down—and twisted her body, narrowly avoiding the blade as it grazed her in mid-air.

"Raaaa!"

She swung her right arm, and the iron flail connected to it pulverized the face of one of the black-robed figures. At the same time, her clenched fist struck the head of the other, caving in its skull and knocking it down. With the fall of the two corpses, Rem's body landed in the center of the chamber. This was the heart of the gathered fanatics, and everyone thought she had made a misjudgment.

Indeed, the fanatics readied their blades and rushed towards the girl, who was kneeling from her landing. The number of blades thrusting towards her was more than her fingers could count, and she could not avoid fatal impact if hit. But,

"—El Huma!!"

Responding to Rem's bloodcurdling scream, the corpse that had fallen beside her bounced. No, the copious blood that had gushed from the corpse had changed its form due to mana interference.

Spears of fresh blood, thrusting upwards from the ground, impaled the carelessly approaching black shadows. The frozen blood spears were brittle, breaking off at the base and losing their shape as soon as they pierced, but—

"—Ah!"

They bought Rem enough time to blow away the heads of the fanatics who had stopped. Blood, brain matter, and fragments of skull scattered, and steam rose into the cold air of the cave. Each time Rem swung her arm, corpses were created, building a pile.

There were about fifteen black-robed figures in the chamber. Most of them had already lost their lives to Rem's attacks, and the remaining few seemed unable to stop her raging assault. Rem's superiority was undeniable. Injured, missing an arm, and yet, her strength overwhelmed that of the black-robed figures.

And yet, why?

"Ah, ah, ah…"

Petelgeuse, pressing his face, exhaled heated breaths as he watched his believers fall to the rampage. The growing unease stemmed from the fact that his expression conveyed not sorrow, fear, or anxiety, but pure, unadulterated excitement.

Beside Petelgeuse, Subaru watched Rem's rampage. The meaning, the reason for the scene, her fighting form, was seeping into his brain.

He didn't understand. He didn't want to understand. He wasn't trying to understand. Something was getting through to him. Watching her, bleeding, wounded, yet still fighting, a surge of emotion welled up inside him.

If he were to voice that unease, perhaps he would have to. If he did, he might lose himself. He would have to agonize over what was right and what was wrong, and why things had to be this way.

Fearing that, prioritizing his own well-being, Subaru—

"My brain, it trembles."

As he spoke, Petelgeuse stood up. Swaying the hem of his black robe, Petelgeuse calmly stepped forward. He held nothing in his hands, unlike his believers. In fact, he leisurely swung his open hands, approaching with a relaxed demeanor, utterly devoid of any fighting spirit.

His body, made of only bone and skin, seemed utterly unrelated to strength. Rem noticed his approach, and after striking down another black shadow, she leaped. She hung upside down from the ceiling, glaring at Petelgeuse walking below.

Her bent knees stored explosive power, and in the next instant, her launched body, her arm, would surely smash Petelgeuse's slender frame to pieces.

Even so, why? Why was such an ominous feeling unsettling his heart?

"—Mu."

A hoarse voice barely crawled out from the back of his throat. It was a fragmented word, carrying not an ounce of the feelings he wanted to convey. But, gasping, raising his face, pushing his emotionless eyes wide open,

"…Rem."

In a weak, whispering voice, he uttered her name for the first time in what felt like ages.

"—Ah."

Did that voice, that almost-vanished voice, reach only her?

Suspended upside down in mid-air, a faint, soft emotion settled on the girl's blood-smeared face. Her lips softened ever so slightly, her eyes fixed on Subaru, trembling with joy, —Countless crucifixes impaled her, pinning her to the ground.

2

Upon seeing blood spread from Rem's fallen body, Subaru was speechless.

Screams of agony and groans of pain echoed, interspersed with the incessant sound of sharp objects piercing flesh.

It was the sound of the cross-shaped blades repeatedly stabbing Rem's collapsing body.

Blades, detaching on their own, floated in the air, searching for unblemished skin to stab once more. There were eight such ownerless blades, repeatedly stabbing, withdrawing, and then piercing Rem's body in different places.

"The Authority of Sloth —Unseen Hand."

Petelgeuse muttered, gazing down at the profusely bleeding Rem.

He swung both hands, raised before his face, thrusting them out as if to display their emptiness.

"Reaching where one cannot reach. Accomplishing something with an unmoving body. Striving diligently in a slothful body—Ah, my brain trembles, I tell you, at my own slothfulness!"

The cross-shaped blades, simultaneously drawn, plunged into her body all at once again.

Rem's body, no longer even groaning, lay prostrate on the ground, not twitching.

Subaru stared blankly at Rem's final moments, utterly speechless.

His eyes wide, he forgot even to breathe. His consciousness began to fade before the unbearable reality of the blue-haired girl's demise, swallowed by the darkness.

Then,

"Fleeing is not permitted."

His escape was cut short by Petelgeuse, who grabbed his bangs and roughly forced his head up.

Petelgeuse leaned close to Subaru, who winced in pain and shock, his wide, bulging gray eyes darting frantically.

"Look, you must look. The girl is dead. She died for love. She fought through her wounds, resisted fear and stepped forward, and ended without accomplishing anything."

"Ugh, ah…"

"Look. Burn it into your mind. The result of your actions."

"—Huh?"

Petelgeuse forcibly pulled Subaru's face forward, preventing him from looking away from Rem, who was submerged in a pool of blood. He pressed Subaru to the ground, fixing his face with both hands, exhaling a foul breath.

"It is the result of your actions. You did nothing, you were 'slothful'. That is why the girl died

! You killed her!"

"…My front…"

"With my arm! With my fingers! With my body! You, you, you, you, you, you, you, you, you… killed her!!"

There was a tearing sound, as if something had been ripped apart.

Before Subaru's eyes, Rem's body bounced violently.

Her left arm had been torn from her shoulder. The severed arm was discarded like trash, rolling across the cold cave floor as if exposed.

"Snip, rip, tear."

"…Stop."

Petelgeuse made crude sound effects with his mouth, and each time, Rem's body was further destroyed. An ear was torn off, her right ankle twisted off, and the impaled blades vibrated, widening the wounds.

Rem was being violated.

Her dignity, before his very eyes, was being easily and joyfully desecrated.

That sight, that scene, a sight so horrifying he couldn't even think of looking away—

"—Petelgeuse!!"

It was enough to snap Subaru, who had been afraid to face reality, back to his senses.

He strained his neck, intending to bite through the throat right beside him, but the shackles prevented him from reaching. He lunged forward, the momentum causing his face to hit the ground. Petelgeuse looked down at Subaru and laughed delightedly.

"Ah, you finally called my name. I am so pleased!"

"I'll kill you, I'll kill you… I'll kill you, I'll kill you, I'll definitely kill you. I'll kill you. I'll kill you! Kill him, kill him… Die, let me kill you, die, die, dieee!"

"To hate someone in order to live! Ah, how twisted and wonderful. It seems my fingers and I have been diligent after all."

"I'll kill you, you bastard, I'll kill you. Rem, you killed her. I'll kill you, kill you, kill youuuu. Ah! I'll kill you! I'll kill you! Die, you bastard! You, ah, die!"

Subaru spat, spewing curses and roaring with resentment.

His shackled arms creaked, and the shackles biting into his legs absorbed the rising blood, gleaming dully.

He didn't care if his arms were torn off, or his legs.

If he could just break free from these shackles and kill the man before him, it would be enough. He hated him, hated him, hated him beyond measure. This man deserved to die. He shouldn't be allowed to live.

This man absolutely, at this very moment, had to die.

"This place has become quite soiled, so perhaps it's time to bid farewell."

Petelgeuse clapped his knees, abruptly ceasing his maniacal laughter and sighing.

Ignoring Subaru, who was shaking violently with rage, he beckoned his surviving followers to gather.

“We will abandon this place. It’s faster than cleaning up. The trial is scheduled for the day after tomorrow, but the location will be where the right index finger is currently hiding. Those of you remaining are to carry out your roles as the left hand. However, the five fingers must gather and divide the numbers equally, understood?”

“Die! Just die! Die, die, die!”

Issuing quick instructions, Petelgeuse clapped his hands. At this signal, the followers transformed into shadows, returning to the dim darkness of the cave.

Petelgeuse then slowly walked through the cave, which had been significantly reduced in the number of survivors.

Loud footsteps echoed in the cave, and Subaru hurled a blood-curdling scream at the fading sound.

“Wait, you bastard! I’ll kill you! I’ll kill you! Die right there! Die now! Die quickly! Die! Die! Dieee!”

“Oh, I almost forgot.”

Petelgeuse stopped, turning back with a casual air.

He nodded once at Subaru, who looked up at his face with hatred from below.

“Your position, I truly do not understand it. So, I think I shall judge it based on whether the Gospel is delivered or not.”

Petelgeuse raised a finger, tilted his head ninety degrees, and grinned grotesquely.

“With your hands and feet bound, only death awaits you if you are left here. However, if by chance the Gospel is delivered to you here, you will be saved."

"…"

"If you are saved, you are a comrade. If not, you are merely a passerby. How does that sound?"

Petelgeuse laughed brightly, as if to say it was a brilliant idea, and this time, truly turned his back on Subaru. Subaru continued to hurl curses at his retreating back, pouring out all his hatred in words and will, intent on killing Petelgeuse.

Petelgeuse showed no hint of these impacts in his stride as he headed for the exit.

Then, he stopped beside Rem's tragically destroyed corpse.

"Ah, yes, that is right. You, you tried very hard."

He murmured, straightened his back before Rem's corpse, and made a gesture like crossing himself.

"You died for love, and you resisted with all your might. Yet, you failed and broke, your love lost its destination, and your wish floats aimlessly in the void."

His tone, which had seemed to praise her, suddenly shifted. His words spoke of the futility of her actions, and as Petelgeuse crouched, a sneer appeared on his lips.

"Ah, you… are truly Slothful."

In the most insulting way possible, he desecrated the very existence of the girl named Rem.

"—!!"

A roar, a scream, echoed through the cave.

Rage that choked his throat, emotions too intense for words, regret deep enough to bring forth tears of blood—all these made Natsuki

Subaru let out an inhuman cry.

Hearing it, Petelgeuse laughed as if he had received the highest praise.

Heheheh, heheheh.

His steps did not falter.

It was impossible to stop his retreating back, let alone extinguish his life.

Heheheh, heheheh, the laughter continued to echo, on and on.

Heheheh, heheheh.

Heheheh, heheheh.

—Heheheh, heheheh, heheheheheheheh.

Chapter 39: Miracle

1

—Kill, kill, kill, kill, kill, kill, kill.

Only a simmering hatred, only murderous intent, swelled in the hazy darkness.

—Kill, kill, kill, kill, kill, kill, kill.

No matter how many times he whispered it, how many times he spat it out, how many times he wrung it dry, the endless spiral of hatred never ceased.

He had never hated anyone, anyone else, another human being, to this extent. Since coming to this world, he'd often experienced hating the intangible concept of fate. This merciless world had repeatedly cast Subaru into the depths of despair, confronted him with cruel realities no matter how many times he tried to climb out, and forced him to pay with his life every time he made the wrong choice— He'd hated that countless times.

However he had never, in his entire life, hated an individual to this degree.

"Petelgeuse… Romanee-Conti…!"

Every time he uttered that name, recalled that figure behind his eyelids, heard that shriek reverberate in his eardrums, and his brain registered that presence, a raging anger flared up within him.

What was that man, that madman, anyway?

His background was completely unknown. All Subaru knew was that he was a deranged lunatic, a flawed human incapable of communicating, a despicable scoundrel who thought nothing of oppressing others according to his own values, and a demon who mercilessly hurt Rem, who had sacrificed herself to save Subaru, and utterly violated her life and soul. All of it screamed that this man could not be allowed to live.

Therefore, he had to kill him. He had to kill him with his own hands; he couldn't entrust it to anyone else. Petelgeuse had to be killed by Subaru's hands.

Otherwise, how could he ever avenge Rem's death?

"Kill, kill, I will… I'll kill him…!"

Affirming his murderous intent aloud, Subaru writhed, making his handcuffs clatter. He violently swung his arms and legs, repeatedly trying to escape the restraints. The cuffs were already tightened so much they dug into his flesh. With his repeated rough movements, Subaru's body couldn't endure it, and the skin on his arms tore, the flesh underneath gouging out and bleeding.

A searing pain shot from the wound, making his brain boil. But each time the pain assaulted his nerves, he gritted his teeth, thinking of the suffering Rem endured. If his hands were to be ripped off, so be it. As long as he could escape the restraints, even if only a finger or a tooth could move, he would stop Petelgeuse's breath.

Frantically writhing, dripping blood and pain from the corner of his mouth with each movement, Subaru continued to rage, seeking an outlet for his hatred, a target for his murderous intent.

—Over four hours had already passed since Petelgeuse abandoned Subaru and left the cave.

The light sources placed throughout the cave walls —the Lagmite ore— had lost their brilliance. Now, they merely emitted a faint, weak glow, barely revealing their presence. Having lost their purpose of emitting light when struck, the cave was filled with an endless expanse of pale blue twilight. Subaru, struggling desperately to remove his hand and leg shackles, was also in darkness so deep he couldn't even clearly see his own hands. In a way, it was precisely because he was in the darkness where he couldn't clearly see the extent of the damage to his arms that he was able to engage in such self-harming actions.

“Petel… geuse…!”

Gritting his teeth, he spat out the name of the hated man, maintaining his strong resolve. In the invisible darkness, a world devoid of any presence other than his own. Heavy breathing, the pounding of his heart, the clinking of chains from his shackles, the sound of dripping blood—in such a place, where there were no external changes, loneliness rapidly weakened the human heart.

He briefly imagined what it would be like if all sound were suddenly removed.

“—Argh! Kill, kill, I’ll kill youuu!”

He quickly couldn’t bear the thought, and Subaru foamed at the mouth, letting out a furious scream of resentment.

In a world isolated from all external stimuli, being alone in that world could easily destroy, corrupt, and end the human mind. In a world where nothing would begin unless he acted, Subaru screamed to shake off the fear of being left behind, to turn away from that reality.

As long as he screamed his hatred, he could remain sane.

By clinging to murderous intent like a madman, he could avoid going mad.

To stay sane, Subaru needed hatred.

2

—After that, Subaru lost track of how many more hours passed.

“Hmph, hmph… coh, hmph… s-s-s…”

His consciousness drifted emptily between wakefulness and unconsciousness.

Fatigue, debilitation, and weariness gradually squeezed Subaru's mind and body dry. His throat, which had screamed every ounce of hatred, had long since become hoarse, and the unending resentment now produced only raspy breaths, no longer forming human words.

His body, which had continuously challenged the restraints, was now overworked beyond its limits and no longer responded to his brain's commands. His wrists were torn, the flesh ripped down to the bone. His ankles were exposed with raw, dark red flesh around the malleoli, and a convulsive pain assaulted him every time they scraped against the ground.

—Kill, kill, kill, kill, kill.

Even so, deep within the wellspring of his heart, only murderous intent continued to gush forth.

With his body and mind no longer obeying, only his heart sustained Subaru. Roughly a full day had passed since he was abandoned and exiled to this solitary world. His body and mind had reached their limit, but Subaru hadn't allowed himself to lose consciousness. If his consciousness were to snap now, he wouldn't wake up again. And if he forgot this hatred, he wouldn't be able to continue perceiving reality.

Only hatred, only murderous intent, proved Subaru's sanity. If he forgot this, Subaru would once again withdraw into his own broken world, reduced to the slothful state of madly crying or laughing.

Sloth, sloth, sloth, sloth, sloth, sloth, sloth, sloth, sloth.

The three characters echoed repeatedly in his head. Petelgeuse's grating laugh, his insane gestures, his utterly mad actions—they all linked to those three characters.

If he succumbed to weakness and sank into sloth, he would be exposing the very ugliness that man had described. He absolutely couldn't accept that.

'Sloth' Petelgeuse. Witch Cult. Sin Archbishop. Fingers. Right hand. Left hand. Invisible hand. Index finger. Ring finger. Pinky.

Diligence. Sloth. Sloth. Sloth.

The words that were listed were characteristic terms from Petelgeuse's loudly proclaimed delusions. Subaru pondered what meaning they held in his dying mind, digging up memories related to Petelgeuse to connect his fading consciousness, even if only a little. He had to recall that man's face more vividly, more clearly, more distinctly, like illuminating it with a bright light. He had to dig up his voice, his appearance, his shadow, his walk, his way of speaking, his way of thinking, his touch—specifically, like recalling a beloved person—and burn them into his soul with hatred, continuing to fuel his awakening.

His strength to remove the restraints was gone, his throat to call for help was torn, and all his remaining willpower was poured into merely postponing the inevitable loss of consciousness, which would bring no benefit. From an outsider's perspective, Subaru's mind had already reached a dimension of madness. Only he himself failed to realize that there was no meaning in maintaining consciousness, in boiling with hatred. In a world where only he existed, his inability to realize this was like an eternally unanswerable question being posed.

Would his mind wear down and his heart vanish first? Or would his body weaken, unable to keep pace with his conscious awakening?

It was simply a choice between two predetermined endpoints. In essence, that was the only meaning left in clinging to consciousness.

What gave meaning to his futile and pointless struggle was not Subaru's stubborn refusal to give up, but—

"—?"

Suddenly, in the pitch-black darkness, Subaru felt the presence of someone else and held his breath.

He strained his neck, which was cumbersome to move even slightly, and looked towards the presence he felt. But the depth of the darkness filling the cave wasn't something that could be overcome by merely staring. With no Lagmite ore nearby, and no way to dispel the darkness, Subaru could only hold his breath and make himself small at the sudden appearance of the presence.

He couldn't determine if the presence was friendly or hostile. If a benevolent third party had appeared to help Subaru, they would have called out to him, so if someone had appeared without doing so, it was too suspicious.

He stopped breathing, consciously quieted even his heartbeat, and suppressed his own presence. Yet, the presence that had emerged slowly, truly slowly, little by little, at a crawling speed, but surely crept closer to Subaru.

In complete darkness, the presence approached Subaru as if it knew exactly where he was, despite him supposedly having suppressed his own presence.

He felt a sense of crisis, impatience, and dread from that being. But immediately after, a different sensation, completely opposite to those feelings, flashed through Subaru's mind.

—Wait, where did this presence even come from?

Subaru had no training in sensing someone's presence. Therefore, the reason Subaru could now feel someone's presence in the darkness was due to the biological sounds of another being that hadn't been there before. These sounds were quite close, certainly not coming from a distant area like the entrance. More importantly, they didn't originate from there. These sounds had suddenly appeared from near the center of the cave.

Thinking that far, Subaru's lips trembled with disbelief,

"Re-Rem…?"

He called out the name of the girl who was the most likely possibility for the sound and presence.

His rationality told Subaru that it couldn't be true. The last time Subaru had seen Rem, when there were still light sources in the cave, her appearance was too gruesome to behold.

Her limbs had been torn off, her ears removed, and her body pierced countless times with blades. In that state, she couldn't receive treatment, and furthermore, she had been left for tens of hours on the cold ground, which mercilessly stole her body heat.

She couldn't possibly be alive. It was only natural that she was dead. But if so, what other possibility was there? What was the true identity of this presence approaching Subaru at a crawling speed from where Rem had fallen?

"Rem, Rem…?"

"…"

To his desperate calls, however, only silence returned. Nevertheless, perhaps the presence had gained certainty of its goal from Subaru's voice, as its crawling speed seemed to change, if only slightly. It was a very subtle change.

Slowly, slowly, there was the sound of something dragging on the cold ground. She couldn't possibly be standing and walking. If it was her, she must be desperately moving the two of her remaining limbs, crawling like a caterpillar towards him.

Subaru tried to move himself, rising to his knees, pulling at his hand and leg shackles, making the chains clatter. But the cave's restraints were sturdy, and they wouldn't suddenly loosen after being challenged for over ten hours. With frustration and helplessness filling his chest, Subaru waited, almost in tears, for the crawling presence to reach him.

And then—

"Re—"

Finally, the crawling presence reached Subaru's body. Subaru's throat, which had been about to shout with joy as he received it, froze.

The sensation was too light, too cold, and didn't feel like that of a living person.

"Re-Rem…?"

Rem's body lay face down at Subaru's feet as he knelt. Her trembling body had already lost the warmth of blood, and was as cold as ice. Dragging that body, which should have been utterly finished, Rem still clung to Subaru's form. He couldn't feel her left hand. Only her right hand climbed his leg, his waist, his chest, covering him as if embracing him from the front.

Subaru, silently accepting that embrace of a corpse, didn't understand what was happening. He thought there was no doubt that it was Rem embracing him in front of his eyes. But her body, when he touched it like this, was clearly dead, only possessing an unreality, as if moving solely on the smoldering embers of a dying life.

For a while, the embrace must have continued.

Suddenly, that chilling reunion was ended by Rem herself. The strength left her body, which had been embracing Subaru with only one arm, and she collapsed onto his knees. Subaru hurriedly reached out to support her, but his hands didn't support Rem's body. Because—

"—Ugh?!"

His outstretched hands were grabbed by Rem's body and pressed against the ground. Subaru, who was pulled down forward, was stunned by Rem's sudden movement and unexpected strength, and even more astonished by her next action.

A large amount of liquid poured down from directly above onto Subaru's arms, which were on the ground. It was viscous, cold water with the smell of rust—Subaru realized it was Rem's vomited blood only after some of it splashed into his mouth and he tasted it.

The aversion to being drenched in someone else's blood sent shivers down Subaru's spine, but the rapid succession of events instantly erased that negative feeling.

"—Ma"

The whisper barely vibrated the air, interfering with mana and taking effect.

"—Gah!"

Pain, an intense pain like a sharp blade gouging into his wrist, assaulted Subaru. The pain, strong enough to make him arch his neck, spread from his wrist to his upper arm and shoulder.

He didn't know what had happened. He'd been vomited on, sudden pain shot through him, and at this rate, both his arms would become useless—just after that chilling thought, —With a snap, the handcuffs, unable to withstand the internal pressure, burst open.

The light sound of metal shattering and fragments falling echoed on the cave floor. Subaru exhaled roughly at the sudden easing of the pain, recognizing the sensation of liberation spreading through his entire arm, and a burn-like pain covering his skin. He understood.

"Rem, you…"

Rem had used magic to freeze the blood she vomited, and that pressure had destroyed the handcuffs. Of course, Subaru's arms, which had been directly affected by the magic, were not unscathed. Yet, his wrists could rotate, and his fingers moved according to Subaru's will. If he disregarded the pain, he could probably move them as usual with sheer willpower. In other words, Rem's plan had succeeded.

As he tried to praise her, Subaru received a light body bumping into his now upright form. Light, far too light. Blood had been lost from her body, and now the very last vestiges of her consciousness were about to vanish.

"Rem… wait, Rem. Wait… me…"

Did he want to say, "Don't leave me behind"?

Did he want to ask, "Don't you hate me?"

Whichever was his true intention, Subaru despaired at his own selfishness. At his pathetic self, still trying to protect his weak self even now.

Even though Rem had literally defied death to save Subaru.

Yet, after this, the light of her life was truly about to extinguish itself.

“—Ngh.”

“Rem?”

Rem’s lips, the cold lips of a dead person, were trying to form words for the first time. The girl who had sparingly uttered even a single word, crawled on the ground with her unmoving body, and painstakingly refined magic with her hazy consciousness to achieve her goal, was trying to leave something behind at the very end. It was—

“L-Live.”

“—!”

“Lo-ve… you…”

She died.

That moment, Rem died.

In Subaru's arms, her light body became heavy. The body, still light even when heavy, a body completely devoid of soul, its weight pressed down on Subaru's entire being. In the end, brokenly, she had told Subaru, "Live".

—A wail of sorrow echoed, trailing through the dark cave.

3

It was several hours later that Subaru finally managed to escape the restraint of his leg shackles.

With his hands now free, Subaru reached out within the confines of his leg shackles and succeeded in grabbing one of the cross-shaped weapons that had fallen from the hands of the black-robed figures who died fighting Rem. Its broken blade was useless as a weapon, but perhaps that was for the best. If the blade had been intact, Subaru might have resorted to something as reckless as severing his own ankle.

"…It's light, isn't it?"

He rotated his ankle, where much of the flesh was scraped away and bone was visible, checking its function through the pain. Ignoring the searing pain that whitened his vision with every step, it seemed he could walk without hindrance.

Clutched in Subaru's arms as he stood was Rem's lifeless body. In his now-free arms, her body, missing two limbs, was incredibly small and light. He could completely envelop her tiny form by cradling her against his chest, and her smallness made him feel incredibly pathetic, yet deeply sorry, for having his life saved by such a frail figure.

The imperfectly bladed cross. He carefully, painstakingly, repeatedly struck its broken hilt against the joint of the leg shackle's metal clasp. It was a battle of endurance between the cross's disintegration and the shackle's destruction, and the cross barely won out. He flung the freed leg shackle against the wall, and the Lagmite ore glowed with a faint blue light from the impact, illuminating the cave.

The cold light brought the dim cave into focus. Even such a weak light was dazzling to Subaru's eyes, stinging his eyelids after tens of hours in darkness. He felt tears welling up from the back of his eyes from the pain and was oddly impressed that he still had tears left in his body. He thought he had already cried and screamed so much that his throat was hoarse and his tears had all run dry.

"Let's go, Rem."

While the impacted Lagmite ore was still glowing, Subaru began to walk towards the exit. With each step, pain shot up his legs. The ascending pain traveled to his shoulders, and the arms cradling Rem also suffered immense anguish.

There was no part of his body that didn't hurt. No part that wasn't bleeding. But the part that felt the most intense pain no longer felt anything at all.

Slowly, at a snail's pace, Subaru and Rem advanced across the cave's cold ground. The coldness of the earth directly reached the soles of his shoeless feet, but Rem's body in his arms was much, much colder. The coldness outside was nothing compared to that.

After passing through the long, narrow passage of the cave, they reached the entrance blocked by a rock. Suddenly, upon reaching it, Subaru was at a loss. The rock blocking the opening was about his height vertically and three times his width horizontally. In terms of weight, it would likely take more than ten Subarus to move it.

It was impossible to move. He wondered how he had even entered in the first place, but his memories from when he was withdrawn from reality were vague and hazy, and he couldn't find any instructions on how to move the rock in his brain.

"It was a straight path, wasn't it…"

Even if he thought there might be another exit, he didn't remember any signs of one along the way. Perhaps there was a cleverly disguised hidden passage like this rock, but if so, how much time and luck would it take to find it? Both flashes of insight and good fortune were utterly unfamiliar to Subaru.

"After all this, you've got to be kidding me… Please, tell me you're kidding…"

His strength drained, Subaru complained in a powerless voice at the mercilessness before him. As his body leaned in, he touched the rock in front of him— At that instant.

The rock, which should have had enough mass to support Subaru's body, suddenly vanished. Subaru, who was supposed to lean against the rock, stumbled, barely managed to steady himself by stepping forward, and the world was scorched crimson by the descending twilight.

"—!"

The orange sunlight provided such a vivid glow that a cry of pain involuntarily escaped him. The sunset, sinking beyond the forest and over the hills, filled the horizon, painting the world the color of flames as its final farewell after fulfilling its day's role.

Subaru, who had been in darkness for so long, crouched for a while, waiting for his eyes to adjust to the light. After some time, he stood up, blinked several times, and then looked around, confirming that the light no longer affected him.

As expected, the landscape, consisting only of clusters of trees as far as the eye could see, was completely unfamiliar. Even looking far in all four directions, there was no sign of human activity like a forest path or a road. Considering the nature of the people who had been holed up in the cave, it was only natural; it seemed to be a place of confinement completely isolated from human settlements.

"I'll walk…"

He didn't know his destination, and there was no way to determine one. Nevertheless, as if pushed forward by the light weight in his arms, Subaru began to walk through the forest. Stepping on leaves, climbing over roots, and crossing dirt, Subaru pressed on through the gradually darkening night.

He was certain he was near the Mathers territory— Near Roswaal's mansion. When his consciousness was in a hazy abyss, Rem must have been trying to reach the mansion with Subaru. He recalled being swayed in the dragon carriage, finding peace on her lap, and that's what she had been doing. There was an incident where the dragon carriage overturned, it was the work of those 'Witch Cultists', they abducted Subaru, Rem burned out her life to save Subaru, and now Subaru was like this.

What started as an attempt to organize the situation turned into a gathering of hatred from the fragments of memory, and Subaru's insides were scorched by a bottomless flame.

Thinking of Rem, his heart ached as if being squeezed by gratitude and regret. Remembering Petelgeuse, his body creaked as if about to burst with hatred and resentment.

Anger, sorrow, hatred, and affection supported and propelled Subaru forward.

His path was undefined, and there was nothing to guide him. Still, Subaru's feet didn't stop, and his consciousness continued to resist being lost.

—Perhaps, it was a miracle that befell him.

With no signposts, nothing to rely on, only refusing to stop and continuing to walk, he found what he sought, the place he wanted to reach. A miracle is when a mysterious phenomenon beyond human power occurs. If so, then Subaru's arrival at his destination, having traversed the shortest distance without anyone's help, was undoubtedly a miracle.

Since coming to this world, for the first time, the world had granted Subaru a miracle. If there was a god who governed fate, they had smiled upon Subaru for the first time.

That smile, that miracle—

"—Ha."

—Only graced him that one time.

4

The exact same hell he'd witnessed once before had once again ravaged the village.

Burnt-down homes, blood-stained villagers. Corpses, robbed of life after futile resistance, were haphazardly piled in the center of the village, forming a mountain of the dead.

Slit by blades, pierced through, incinerated and crushed by magic—there was no hope of survivors. The only difference from before was the even more severe disfigurement of the villagers' bodies, and…

"Petra. Mild. Luca. Meina. Cain, Dane…"

…The gruesome bodies of children were also incorporated into that vile effigy.

Clutching Rem, Subaru's knees gave out. He collapsed, clutching the cold body in his arms ever so tightly, and choked back a sob.

What had he been doing? Why, knowing this would happen, had he overlooked it?

Until he emerged from the forest path and saw black smoke rising from the direction of the village, Subaru had completely forgotten this scene, this heart-shattering vision of hell. No, he had averted his eyes. He'd pretended to be heartbroken by Rem's death, using his endless hatred for Petelgeuse as an excuse. Subaru had once again chosen self-preservation, trying to escape what had happened.

The result was the scene before him. The children were dead here because Rem, who should have protected them last time, couldn't reach the village. Instead of Subaru surviving, the children had been subjected to death at the end of their suffering.

This despicable reality gnawed at Subaru's heart. Now he understood. He understood everything.

It was Petelgeuse.

He had killed the villagers, killed the children, and killed Rem. Not once, but twice, he had committed unforgivable acts.

His course of action was decided. He knew what he had to do. Petelgeuse had to be killed. Killed, killed, utterly annihilated, every last cell burned away, his very existence erased. Unless he did that, he couldn't atone for their deaths.

His thoughts were dyed a single color: hatred. His vision turned crimson, and he felt most of the blood he lacked rush to his head, overflowing from his nose and trickling down. Roughly wiping away the blood dripping from his nostrils, he readjusted his hold on Rem, careful not to defile her, and stood up. His knees trembled, his ankles rattled; it was a miracle he could even stand, let alone walk.

"Kill him, kill him, kill him, kill him, I'll kill him…"

If he could walk, if he could move forward, he'd tear out Petelgeuse's throat.

Dragging his consciousness, solidified by murderous intent, Subaru headed towards the mansion. He had witnessed the hell of the village. Next, the mansion. What awaited him there? Just before he died, just before he would restart, his memories were frayed and unclear. He thought his heart had shattered upon reaching the mansion and seeing something definitive. He desperately tried to recall what it was, burning through his neural pathways to remember.

He had found Rem dead.

That experience, this time, he had already endured. Rem was dead, and the shock her death and devotion brought Subaru was immeasurable.

"Kuh."

Naturally, a laugh escaped him. Truly, truly, nothing had changed, had it?

Only the order was wrong. Nothing that had happened had changed at all. Had he ever spent a restart so pointlessly? In every previous scenario, Subaru should have gained something through death. But what value did he, now mentally broken, unable to salvage anything, and reunited with hell, possess?

The murderous intent began to lose its target. Only the name Petelgeuse supported Subaru. That should be enough. He was the one he wanted to kill. If he killed him, then he'd kill him, just kill him. After killing him— He wished he would die too.

Noise started to mix into his thoughts, and Subaru's consciousness flickered repeatedly. Standing once again on the border between sanity and madness, Subaru looked ahead with bloodshot eyes. No matter what, heading to the mansion was paramount now, choosing, as always, to postpone the immediate situation.

Then—

"—!!"

The moment he reached the top of the hill, Subaru saw Roswaal's mansion collapse.

5

The roof caved in, and the terrace crumbled. Windowpanes shattered simultaneously, scattering glittering fragments, and the cracked white walls were torn apart as if ripped asunder.

Subaru, who had just reached the front gate, gazed up in a daze at the overwhelming destruction.

As if a demolition crew had used bombs, the mansion lost its outline in an instant. The familiar building lost its shape, scattering its remains across the meticulously maintained garden, losing all traces of ever having been a mansion.

He searched his memories, seeking out any experience of encountering such a sight. However there were no corresponding memories. Or perhaps the shock was too great, and he didn't remember the moment of his death.

"Wh-What…?"

Confusion formed on his lips, and in his mind, he saw the gaunt man's sneer. If the village massacre was that man's doing, then he must have turned the spearhead of his heinous acts towards the mansion as well. This might have been the means that led to the mansion's collapse. Even so,

"What on earth could do this…?"

Subaru cradled his head, bewildered by the incomprehensible sight, and his eyes wavered as he exhaled a white breath. When he sought the sensation in his arms more strongly out of helplessness, an even greater coldness ran through his palms, pouring sadness into his chest. And then, belatedly, Subaru noticed.

—His own ragged breaths were visible, clouding white.

Before he knew it, a piercing pain encompassed his entire body. His exhaled breath turned white, transforming into ice droplets the moment it dispersed into the air. The inhaled oxygen was frigid, freezing his lungs and tormenting Subaru from within.

He didn't know what was happening.

His entire body's warmth was stolen, making it difficult even to stand, and he collapsed. He squatted down, then fell forward onto the ground, lying on his side while holding Rem's body, and remained motionless.

This wasn't a matter of lacking blood or being out of stamina.

Subaru knew this sensation: his will not reaching his fingertips, his consciousness almost separating from his body. It was a feeling of desolate emptiness and powerlessness he had experienced many times before, yet never grew accustomed to.

As the end drew near, Subaru tried to resist it even slightly. Within his unmoving body, he sent commands from his neural pathways throughout, seeking a place that would obey his will. But only the pupils in his eye sockets, which barely moved, listened, merely looking up at the ruined mansion.

"—Ah."

Then, in his now utterly fixed gaze, Subaru saw it.

—It was a beast, standing atop the ruins of the collapsed mansion.

A beast with gray fur flowing over its entire body and glittering golden eyes. With its four limbs planted and its long, long tail swaying, it was majestic and overly mystical. Above all, the beast possessed a colossal body, so massive it could be mistaken for the mansion itself.

Seeing its form from a distance, Subaru realized the cause of the mansion's collapse. That beast had suddenly appeared from inside the mansion. If such a gigantic body emerged from within, the mansion naturally couldn't withstand the pressure.

Shaking its body and surveying its surroundings was a giant, cat-like beast with gray fur. It exhaled sharp fangs from its mouth and a breath like a white blizzard, transforming the world into a pure white hell that froze all living things.

What was that, he thought, as his eyes finally clouded white, and Subaru realized his throat had somehow closed up. The coldness he had felt so intensely vanished, and he even felt warmth. A temptation to surrender everything to that warmth flickered, and Subaru forgot everything: the hatred that burned his body, the sorrow that tore at his soul, everything.

Forgetting, forgetting, his consciousness drifted beyond oblivion, beyond the freezing warmth.

《Sleep— Along with my daughter.》

Just before falling asleep, he thought he heard someone's voice. Natsuki Subaru melted and sank into the pleasure of everything, everything becoming inconsequential.

Melting, melting, melting— He vanished.

Chapter 40:
The Other Side of Murderous Intent

1

—By the time I realized, my consciousness was in a deep, deep darkness.

In the vast, spreading gloom, my consciousness sought change, its gaze wandering.

The endless jet-black seemed to stretch to the world's end, or perhaps the world offered the suffocating sensation of a miniature garden, extending only as far as I could reach.

Where was this place? Why was I here?

Such questions surfaced, but even that felt strange.

I didn't even know who I was, the one thinking these things.

Only my consciousness drifted emptily, while the vessel of flesh that supported it received no will.

I was standing. My feet were on the ground. Yet, what I perceived as my feet blended with the darkness that consumed my vision, making my very footing literally uncertain.

—Suddenly, a change occurred in the world dominated by darkness.

Shadows began to warp and distort, and the space before me started to crack.

After a mere instant of anomaly, a single human figure emerged from that spot.

I thought it was the shadow of a woman. The moment I recognized her, how could I name the inexpressible emotion that swelled within my chest?

Driven by emotions that explosively expanded, I wanted to rush to that shadow. But my legs still wouldn't obey my will, and there was nothing I could do for the distant figure.

Even if I wanted to call out, I didn't know what to say, nor how to form words.

Even if I wanted to shed tears of frustration, I didn't know how to express emotions.

I don't understand, I don't understand, I don't understand anything.

However as if understanding my thoughts, the shadow slowly extended both arms, closing the unshrinking distance from its side.

Those two hands slowly, surely, approached until they were within embracing distance—

"—I love you."

A sense of euphoria transmitted from the touching fingertips, and joy enveloped my entire body—

2

When his consciousness traveled back in time and settled into his body, Subaru stumbled spectacularly.

"Whoa?! What, what's wrong, bro?!"

Kadomon, from behind the counter, looked down at Subaru, who had suddenly face-planted on the street, raising and lowering his hands in a flustered manner.

Choking from the impact of the fall, Subaru, who'd gotten some meaningless scrapes, grimaced in pain.

"Nah… just, slipped a little."

"Slipped? More like your leg went missing for a second, didn't it? Are you sure you're okay standing and walking? If you lose anything else besides your common sense, I'm not dealing with you anymore.”

“You worry too much… What do you mean, ‘anything else besides common sense’? You make it sound like I’m some kind of uncivilized ruffian.”

“Exactly. Oh, considering you’re freeloading off some aristocrat, I guess you’re even more difficult to handle.”

Subaru clicked his tongue in dissatisfaction at Kadomon’s harsh words.

Then, he suddenly felt a tug on his sleeve, followed by a warm sensation spreading through his body. He turned his head towards the warmth, and there was Rem.

“—Are you alright, Subaru?”

She said, placing her palm on Subaru’s scraped skin where he had fallen.

The water mana transmitted from her touch interfered with Subaru’s scrapes, enhancing their healing power and providing hemostasis and recovery.

As he felt the pain recede, what simultaneously flooded Subaru’s chest was:

“Rem…”

“…? Yes, it’s Rem.”

Subaru called her name in a weak, hoarse voice. Rem tilted her head in confusion before saying,

“What’s wrong? You look like you’ve seen a ghost. You don’t have to worry, Rem is right here. Your Rem, Subaru.”

Unusually for her, she smiled with a hint of a joke in her tone.

Subaru’s current haggard appearance must have seemed that painful to her. And her words, “like you’ve seen a ghost,” were utterly unfunny.

Truly, completely, not funny at all.

“Rem, I…”

“It’s difficult, isn’t it? Rem thinks you look much more like yourself when you’re smiling than when you’re frowning. So Rem thought Rem would try to make you smile.”

Rem furrowed her brow slightly, looking troubled. And while she did so, Subaru’s scrapes completely healed. Seeing this, Rem nodded once, saying, “It’s done,” and started to withdraw her fingers.

“…”

“Subaru?”

Subaru grabbed her fingers from above, refusing to let the warmth escape.

Rem looked up at him with a surprised expression at his forceful action. But when she saw the intense emotion clearly etched on Subaru’s face,

“What’s truly wrong? Rem is happy when you… well, when you do this, but it surprises Rem when it’s so sudden.”

“Thin. Small… Warm, aren’t you?”

“Rem is a little self-conscious about being small, so Rem would prefer not to hear that. But it’s okay if you say it, Subaru. Of course I’m warm. —Because Rem is alive.”

At that one phrase, Subaru’s head snapped up, and he looked at Rem.

Their gazes locked directly, and Rem’s eyes held compassion as she said,

“Were you anxious? Rem is right here. You saved Rem with your life, Subaru. So, it's alright."

—No. That wasn't it.

Subaru had let Rem die. Killed her. Twice, mercilessly and cruelly.

The first time, perhaps fundamentally, might have been unrelated to Subaru. However the second time was different. The second time, without any room for excuse, Rem died for Subaru.

To protect Subaru, to save Subaru, for Subaru, she used up her life, and then, from that depleted life, she squeezed out every last bit and died for Subaru.

The Rem before him didn't know that.

She didn't know how much pain and humiliation she had endured, and how brutally she had died in the end.

Only Subaru knew.

He knew that if the same situation arose again, Rem would not hesitate to protect Subaru in exactly the same way, and would suffer the same humiliation and lose her life.

"…"

Before he knew it, Subaru was gripping Rem's small hand, as if trying to hide something overflowing from within, and had bowed his head so she couldn't see his face.

At Subaru's reaction, Rem's fingertips trembled with worry, wondering if she had said something to trouble him. However, it was only for an instant. Perhaps she thought such an attitude would scare Subaru even more, and so she said,

"It's alright. It's alright. It's alright."

Gently, as if soothing a child, she patted Subaru's back with her free hand.

Caressing him, cherishing him, until Subaru could lift his head.

Always gently, always lovingly.

3

“I hate to bother you when you’re busy, but you can’t be canoodling here, it’s bad for business.”

That’s what Kadomon said as he watched the scene unfold outside his shop, shooing them away.

Normally, Subaru would have retorted, “It doesn’t matter if we’re here or not, your business isn’t exactly thriving anyway!” and probably angered him, but at this moment, Subaru lacked the mental composure for that.

He simply followed Rem, who was pulling his hand, and hastily left the spot.

The shopkeeper’s decency was evident in how he didn’t immediately send them away, and at least didn’t cause a scene until Subaru calmed down. Unfortunately, Subaru didn’t have the luxury of noticing that either.

Only one emotion now dominated Subaru’s heart.

—Kill, kill, kill, kill, kill, kill, kill, kill, kill.

It was nothing but overwhelming hatred, a hatred that wouldn’t vanish even after dying and rewinding time.

Petelgeuse Romanee-Conti.

That was the name of Subaru’s fated enemy now. The worst murderer, who had committed an unforgivable sin and massacred Rem and the villagers.

Killing that man was Subaru’s mission now.

"I'll definitely snuff out his life… with my own hands."

He'd twist that hideous face with his own hands. A dark joy bloomed in Subaru's chest as he thought this, and a distorted, unfamiliar smile appeared on his lips.

He'd stab him, tear him, crush him, twist him apart, make him beg for his life, and then kill him.

Just imagining it made an uncontrollable urge to laugh well up from deep in his throat.

"…Subaru, can Rem talk to you for a moment?"

Just then, Rem, walking half a step behind, called out to Subaru, who was steeped in this gloomy pleasure.

Subaru stopped, turning to Rem and asking, "What's up?" She gazed intently at Subaru's face, making a small sniff with her well-formed nose.

"No… it might just be Rem's imagination. Rem just felt a… an unpleasant scent, from you, Subaru, getting stronger."

"An unpleasant scent, huh?"

At her observation, he rubbed his nose against his arm and sniffed, but couldn't distinguish anything.

Given Rem's words, the strong scent emanating from Subaru must be the "Witch's" scent. Thinking back, several of Petelgeuse's remarks seemed to hint at something similar. It was a thought he'd forgotten after a brief consideration before, but,

"Could Return by Death really be connected to the Witch…?"

Every time he tried to confess his Return by Death, the Witch's presence around Subaru grew stronger.

In the Witchbeast Forest, he had even used it to his advantage, but due to subsequent events, he had neglected to pursue it further.

Perhaps an unconscious aversion to reaching that conclusion was also part of the strong power the word “Witch” held.

Before diving into thoughts he’d never dared to entertain, Subaru smiled at Rem, who was watching him anxiously as he remained silent. Then, he said,

“Don’t make that face, Rem. It’ll ruin your cute expression, and things will look bleak.”

“Sorry. Rem worries a lot, so Rem can’t help but…”

“Relax. No matter what, I’m not going to change, and I won’t be defeated by that scent or whatever it is. In fact, I’ll use it to my advantage, whatever it takes.”

Subaru didn’t have many cards in his hand.

In this world, Subaru didn’t possess the kind of cards even ordinary people had. So, any unique trait that could serve as a different kind of card, no matter what it was, had to be considered a positive and added to his hand.

What was so bad about the Witch’s scent? In the Witchbeast Forest, he had successfully outwitted its malice and used it conveniently, hadn’t he? He’d just have to keep doing that with various tricks in the future.

Rem remained silent for a moment at Subaru’s smile, her gaze wandering as if deliberating what attitude to adopt. To encourage her indecisiveness, Subaru scratched his head, then extended his hand.

“Come on, let’s go. If you’re worried I might disappear, just hold onto me.”

“Eh?”

“I definitely can’t win in a test of strength, so that feels safer, right?”

At his words, which implicitly contained a hint of shyness, Rem looked between Subaru's face and hand.

"Right."

Smiling, she took his hand and stood not half a step behind, beside Subaru.

So, the two walked side by side. Rem, looking down slightly and gazing intently at their clasped hands, kept her mouth tightly shut, matching Subaru's pace without a word.

Leading such a devoted girl, as they moved from the lower district of the royal capital towards the aristocratic quarter, Subaru savored the warmth of her palm— All while his murderous intent continued to seethe.

Their hands were joined, but their hearts faced opposite directions.

Natsuki Subaru's heart was, endlessly, dark, stagnant, and drawn deeper and deeper into the abyss.

4

This particular loop was Subaru’s third.

The first loop was on the day he was summoned, regarding the stolen insignia.

The second started with the witchbeast commotion at Roswaal’s mansion.

Now, this was the third, a loop involving the Witch Cult, whose full scope remained unclear.

In this third loop, Subaru should have already died twice.

In previous loops, upon returning from death, he would typically organize the situation and use it as fuel to somehow devise a strategy.

“It’s pathetic, but…”

This time, there was a flaw: the memories of both the first and second loops were unclear.

He vaguely remembered the first iteration.

He and Rem rode in a dragon carriage towards the mansion. Subaru was left behind halfway and headed for the mansion with Otto. Then he parted ways with Otto and reached the village— After that, his memory was clouded by a significant haze. The fragmented information he could recall was Rem’s death, Ram’s death. And on top of that, only the point that he died somewhere inside the mansion.

The second world was even worse.

He had no memory whatsoever of returning, and his memories only began to clear up around the time of his confrontation with Petelgeuse, specifically before and after Rem’s murder.

Given Subaru's broken mental state leading up to that point, it might be unavoidable, but only fragmentary pieces, even finer than mere fragments, remained of his memory until then. The only thing he could piece together from those memory fragments was—

"Petelgeuse Romanee-Conti…!"

The name of the hateful madman, and the sole source of Subaru's motivation now.

Understanding the pathetic situation he was in, Subaru had to delve deeper into his thoughts.

Namely, he had to select crucial information from the scattered memories of the first and second loops and break through the loop this third time— He had to kill Petelgeuse. To do so, he had no choice but to work his brain until it burned out.

First, he had to consider the official time limit.

The attack on Roswaal's mansion and the nearby village by Witch Cultists would likely occur around half a day after Subaru arrived in the village.

There shouldn't have been any significant change in the date between the first and second iterations. Considering that Subaru left Crusch's mansion in the first iteration three days after the incident at Kadomon's shop, and then spent about two days returning to the Mathers territory,

"The time limit is five days, no, four and a half days…?"

He could only grind his teeth at how little time there was.

Despite the vastly different scale of travel, the time allotted was almost the same as in the previous mansion incident. Within that limited time, he had to annihilate the Witch Cultists— or at least, definitely take down Petelgeuse.

Once the time limit was confirmed, the next step was to confirm the necessary conditions for breaking the loop.

Avoiding the attack on the mansion and village, annihilating the Witch Cult, and ensuring Petelgeuse's death. These were the problems Subaru had to solve this time.

If purely pursued, any of these would ultimately lead to the last one —Petelgeuse's murder— which would naturally fulfill the other conditions.

In other words, the condition fate had presented to Subaru this time was,

"To brutally kill Petelgeuse."

Killing him, the root of all evil, that wicked murderer, would save everything.

It was a terribly simple and clear rule this time. All that remained was to find the answer necessary to achieve that simple condition.

The Witch Cultists led by Petelgeuse— Their fighting strength was at least not something he could contend with alone. Even Rem, in her Oni form, was eventually killed despite her overwhelming individual power. It was unclear how much Petelgeuse's "Unseen Hand" ability was involved in that, but in the first place, he couldn't possibly push such a burden onto her alone.

To counter a group, the strength of another group was definitely needed.

The Mathers territory's power against such numerical violence was quite low. In fact, he had never seen Roswaal, the lord, leading private soldiers. Normally, a lord would have some fighting force at their disposal, but in Roswaal's case, perhaps because his own area-of-effect destructive power was too high, his reserves of such forces were unknown.

At least, there was no sign of this unknown group resisting the past two attacks. This option could be dismissed entirely.

No, on second thought,

"Where was Roswaal, anyway, during those attacks…?"

Subaru hadn't seen him in either the first or second loop.

In the second loop, he was present at the scene of the mansion's collapse, and the fate of the three people and one beast, excluding Rem and the villagers, was unknown. But at the very least, Roswaal had overlooked the attack on his own village and showed no signs of having annihilated the Witch Cultists.

The possibilities were:

"Either Roswaal was immediately assassinated, or ambushed and incapacitated. Or, he was absent during a crucial moment when he absolutely needed to be there…?"

If it was the former, he could only sigh at the Witch Cultists' thoroughness; if the latter, at the terrible timing. Indeed, Roswaal had been absent from the mansion during the previous incident and had a track record of not being present at critical moments. The possibility couldn't be ruled out.

As he recalled these things, Subaru also remembered the end of the previous loop. It was,

"That incomprehensible giant creature that destroyed the mansion."

It was a quadrupedal beast with an unbelievably massive body, large enough to be mistaken for the mansion itself.

Its sight, freezing the world with the cold air it spewed, was breathtaking, and though he couldn't say for sure, Subaru likely died from freezing in that cold.

If that was one of the Witch Cult's trump cards or something, then,

"Even more so, the fighting power is too insufficient."

Even just engaging the Witch Cult in battle, Rem alone was noticeably lacking as a force. If a final boss was lurking behind them, it was out of the question.

Therefore, Subaru's urgent task, above all else, was fighting power. And specifically, fighting power capable of contending with the Witch Cult and a super-large boss character.

Subaru had an idea about where to find that fighting power.

It was—

5

By the time Subaru and Rem made it back to Crusch's mansion, it was already evening, the sun starting to dip, painting the sky in deeper shades of crimson.

"Welcome back."

It was Wilhelm who greeted them at the gate.

After a slight bow from a distance, he narrowed his eyes, observing the two walking closely together.

"Hmm. Subaru-dono, a wandering eye is perhaps unavoidable for a young man, but personally, I don't much care for it."

"What are you talking about, Wilhelm-san? Rem's just holding my hand so I don't get lost. Right?"

"Yes, of course. Rem worries greatly if she doesn't keep her eyes and hands on you so you don't get lost. Rem doesn't think we can let our guard down even inside the mansion."

"Well, I think I'll be fine with that…"

As Subaru responded to Wilhelm's teasing tone, Rem tightened her grip on his hand with a strange stubbornness. With a wry smile, Subaru turned his attention back to Wilhelm.

"Is someone else here to see Crusch-san again?"

His question was prompted by the sight of a dragon carriage parked beside Wilhelm.

The vehicle, noticeably adorned with lavish decorations, was pulled by a noble black ground dragon with a sleek, almost lustrous, hide —not just fine fur.

It was unclear if ground dragons had bloodlines like horses, but this one certainly possessed a distinction that set it apart from any he'd seen before.

The coachman, impeccably dressed in formal attire, offered a silent bow and showed no inclination to utter a single unnecessary word.

Gauging the meaning of Subaru's question and gaze, Wilhelm nodded.

"Yes, that's right. Since the declaration of the Royal Selection, there's been a constant stream of people requesting an audience with Lady Crusch. Though, there are also those whom Lady Crusch herself invites."

"So, they're the kind of people who want to butter up someone who might be the future queen, huh? Well, I guess they've got their own struggles with all that."

When Subaru succinctly and bluntly stated the fact, Wilhelm offered a wry smile. Then, he suddenly looked into Subaru's eyes, his expression hardening.

Subaru tilted his head, wondering what was wrong with him.

"Subaru-dono. Has there been some change in your state of mind while you were out?"

"Huh? What's with the sudden question? Do I look different?"

With a sharp intake of breath, he shrugged his shoulders playfully and spun around. Rem, still holding his hand, was spun along with him, but Wilhelm closed his eyes at the sight.

"Darkness nests within your eyes. The real thing, not a counterfeit."

Subaru stopped dead in his tracks, the foolish smile vanishing from his face.

Beneath that ambiguous smile, a "real" smile emerged.

“Don’t be silly, Wilhelm-san. It’s like you’re saying something weird happened to me.”

“I wouldn’t call it a small change. To harbor such a dim light requires a reason that is anything but ordinary. —I know this firsthand.”

Wilhelm responded in a low voice, a faint smile gracing his lips as well.

Subaru sensed that there was no bright promise in it, only a pure, sharpened emotion directed at “something,” and a sense of understanding settled in his chest.

Wilhelm, too, was someone seething with murderous intent towards something unforgivable. That’s why, just as Subaru understood him, he likely understood Subaru.

“Are you going to keep your distance from me?”

From Wilhelm’s perspective, Subaru’s current precariousness might make him hesitate to allow him close to his lady. But Subaru was half-convinced that wouldn’t be the case.

Indeed,

“No. It would be best for Subaru-dono to do as he wishes. Compared to you just a moment ago, who seemed unwilling to truly see anything, I find you much more preferable now.”

Wilhelm shook his head, answering Subaru’s question.

Naturally, the same kind of smile as Wilhelm’s appeared on Subaru’s lips. The two, though not understanding the deepest parts of each other’s hearts, were acquainted on the surface.

So, the two exchanged somewhat dark smiles, but then,

“Subaru. You’re making a bad face.”

“Hehehe… Ow ow ow ow! Rem, hey, you’re gonna rip it off!”

Suddenly, his ear was pulled, interrupting their illicit conversation. Rem narrowed her eyes at the protesting Subaru.

“Please, don’t make Rem anxious.”

“Whoa, whoa, for Rem to make a demand, that’s super rare, but it’s pretty vague. Don’t worry, Rem. I’ll make everything work out, somehow.”

Now that he knew what he had to do, Subaru had no cause for anxiety.

The simplicity of having a necessary task and knowing how to accomplish it felt comfortable right now.

How liberating it was to simply have to kill the person he needed to kill.

Subaru smiled and spoke kind words.

Yet, in response, Rem’s expression became even more emotionless, and the grip on his hand tightened, as if she were afraid of something.

Then, she seemed about to say something, hesitating, but,

“It seems our guest is departing.”

Wilhelm murmured, looking towards the mansion. Through the gate —from the entrance to Crusch’s residence— a figure could be seen walking towards them.

It was a tall person with long, dull blonde hair. Dressed in a well-tailored formal suit and adorned with ornaments, at first glance, he put the image of a nouveau riche in Subaru’s mind. He was probably around thirty years old. The initial impression was that of a profligate noble with a penchant for spending.

“Mr. Nouveau Riche,” as Subaru mentally dubbed him, unaware of the impression he was making, approached the gate and noticed the three gathered there.

"Hmph. What an unusual gathering."

He touched his chin beard, which he seemed to be cultivating for style, and commented on them in that manner. Subaru frowned at the incomprehensibility of being seemingly known, but the man politely bowed.

"My apologies. My name is Russell Fellow. It's a pleasure to make your acquaintance. —Mr. Natsuki Subaru."

"…Right. Thanks. By the way, can I ask how you know my name? I know it's a strange thing to say, but I'm just a small-time civilian whose defining characteristic is being unremarkable, so it's embarrassing for my name to be known."

"A little connection, you see. During the Royal Selection conference, the person who claimed to be Lady Emilia's knight became quite famous. Though, not many would know that the same person is currently recuperating at Lady Crusch's mansion."

To Subaru's growing caution, Russell responded with a light tone and a smile free of malice. However, the content of his words already invited further wariness, clearly conveying the unpleasant character of someone who seemed to be doing this on purpose.

"Russell-dono. Did your discussion with Lady Crusch go well?"

However, Wilhelm interjected from the side, snatching away Subaru's attempt at a wary challenge. Russell shifted his gaze from Subaru to the old man, shrugging his shoulders, and replied, "No," shaking his head.

"Lady Crusch is a formidable person. Indeed, the gaze she directs towards us is sharp, and her will is unyielding. Considering everything that has happened, it will not be easy."

"Is that so? That's unfortunate. If you do not yield, it will be exceedingly difficult to get the others to agree."

"With your ducal status and Sir Wilhelm by your side, the starting conditions for the Royal Selection would be too favorable. …You are calling yourself Wilhelm Trias now, I presume?"

Calling him by name, the two continued a conversation that was incomprehensible to Subaru.

Wilhelm nodded at Russell's words, lowering his deeply wrinkled face.

"It would be too presumptuous for me to use my wife's family name now."

"You are also a formidable person. To us who cannot live that way, it is dazzling. Nevertheless, we will support you all."

Uttering superficial words to the old man, whose eyes were downcast, Russell stepped into the dragon carriage—it must have been his. Giving instructions to the silent coachman, he said,

"If Lady Crusch's aim this time succeeds, it will be a joyful matter for us as well. It will also be a long-cherished wish for Sir Wilhelm. I look forward to it."

The carriage door closed, and as the coachman tightened the reins, the vehicle began to move. Like the coachman, the ground dragon, which honored silence, began to run without a single whinny. Watching the carriage depart from the gate, Subaru approached Wilhelm's side.

"Wilhelm-san. That person just now was…"

"Russell Fellow. The head accountant who manages the Royal Capital's Merchant Guild. His title is merely the head of a single merchant family, but he is a shrewd individual involved in the overt and covert movements of wealth in the capital. Subaru-dono, it would be best for you to assume he knows more about you than just your name."

"Ugh. My heart doesn't exactly flutter knowing some old guy like that knows me, instead of a girl."

"Hmm, I concur."

Wilhelm responded solemnly to the jest, then straightened his posture and turned to Subaru. "Now then," he began.

“Today’s visitors will likely end with Russell-dono. We should go inside, but… Subaru-dono, is there something on your mind?”

At Wilhelm’s question, Subaru scratched his head and grimaced.

It was a bit irritating how understanding he was, as if he could read his thoughts. Still, if it meant things moved faster, there was nothing bad about it.

Thinking this, Subaru straightened his back before Wilhelm, then re-composed his face into a serious expression.

“Sorry, but I’m your last visitor today. I want to talk to Crusch-san. The topic is something along the lines of asking for her help.”

Bonus Short Stories

Anastasia’s Moving Picture Scroll

On that day, in a small, reserved corner of the Royal Capital, a small celebration was taking place.

???: “Come on, you guys! Instead of actin’ up, if ya don’t finish cleanin’ up quickly, I won’t be able to make that daisukiyaki pancake!”

The one clapping and commanding the group was a short girl. She wore a long white coat, made out of animal fur, and had wavy purple hair. Her neck was adorned with a white fox scarf and, combined with her own lovely appearance, the girl gave an impression of purity to all who saw her.

The woman’s name was Anastasia Hoshin. A young and beautiful merchant, running a large commercial company called the Hoshin Trading Company, hailing from the Kararagi City-State.

And in front of her stood an unoccupied building, totally empty on the inside—her new base of operations, established in the Kingdom of Lugunica.

???: “Come on! We gotta hurry so that the boss can make her special pancake! Let’s go!”

???: “W-Wait, onee-chan! That box has fragile objects in it, if onee-chan carries it this roug… Oh! Oh!!”

Little silhouettes ran back and forth near Anastasia, who witnessed their work with her hands on her hips. At that moment, one of the children tripped and fell, but managed to throw the box she was holding into the air.

???: “Oy! You’re hopeless, Mimi! You hafta realize how small ya are, how short yer arms are, how careless ya are, and how cute yer face is! Oh! Nevermind the face! Just be aware of the rest!”

Mimi: “Ah, captain! You’re the bestest! You’re carryin’ mine too even tho you're already carryin' a lot!"

The beast of a man was able to catch the girl and the box she held before they fell. The girl was carried up as well, laughing hysterically, pulling at the demi-human's dark brown hair styled like a mane.

The girl laughs innocently, and the beastman forgives her with a toothy smile. Anastasia couldn't help but loosen her cheeks at the sight of the girl's younger brother in a panic in front of the two.

???: "I see this is being quite the lively relocation."

The one who made that comment was a very spiffy-looking young man with a tense expression on his face, who had walked up next to the girl. He appeared to be approximately in his mid-teens. and had his lilac hair dressed in a ponytail. His face could be said to be androgynous and he had a slender build; if it weren't for his transitioning voice, he may have been easily confused for a girl.

Anastasia: "Right? Not only those two, but everyone here is cheerful just as ya see. I think the only exceptions are the other two vice-captains, and the old Oji-chan workin' in the administration. Please try to endure it."

???: "Yes, that lines up with what I was told. But is it possible to keep a normal life among this ruckus?"

Anastasia: "Well, in Kararagi, you can't get by speakin' in hushed tones. That's why everyone speaks loudly, gestures wildly, tells their stories melodramatically, and lies shamelessly. Joshua-kun, remember that."

Joshua: "So you're telling me that lying is done as naturally as breathing… I'll keep that in mind."

Without changing his facial expression, Joshua Juukulius accepted that advice, a gesture that Anastasia appreciated.

It felt good to meet people who knew how to actively incorporate external elements to better themselves, whatever the influence. His ambition was also suitable for his young age, and family background.

Now all that was left was for him to taste frustration and hardship, and be greedy enough to stand back up again, and succeed in life.

???: “Joshua-san. May I help you with that?”

Joshua: “Thank you. Let me see, you’re Vice-Captain Tivey, right? Well then, I request you bring that there.”

Correction. Her appraisal of that young man was even higher now. She appreciated the fact that he was able to correctly guess which one of the three triplets had come to him, which was important to her, who could match their names with their appearance instantly.

Anastasia: “It is rare to find someone who is able to tell apart the triplets in so lil’ time…”

Anastasia tilted her head, wondering if it was truly that difficult to differentiate them. It was true that they were similar, but each of them had their unique charm. It was a mystery.

Tivey wears a monocle and was the smartest among the three, Hetaro always had a worried face, revealing his sensitive side, and Mimi was simple-minded and the very embodiment of cute innocence. Those were the triplet Vice-Captains of the Iron Fang, the mercenary army of the Hoshin Trading Company. And the one who was in charge of all troops, the Captain of all those soldiers, was the beastman from before.

???: “What is it, boss-lady?! What’s that creepy smile, huh?! Are ya hungover or somethin’?! We can’t deal wit’ ya right now, we’re busy!”

Anastasia: “That’s a terrible accusation, Ricardo. Hurry up and get your work done. Otherwise, Ricardo’s food will end up in Mimi’s stomach.”

Mimi: “Ooooooh! Mimi’s gonna have a full belly!”

Ricardo: “Why not?! I’m working harder than everyone else, too!”

Ricardo opened his enormous mouth, talked loudly, made exaggerated gestures and laments himself loudly. His mouth was so big and full of fangs, he could eat Anastasia in two bites. His muscular body was covered with brown body hair, and his furry tail was swinging in excitement from one side to another.

Such features, as well as his canine-looking face, were irrefutable proof that he was a dog demi-human.

Mimi, who was riding on Ricardo's shoulders, is also a kitten demi-human, with orange body hair, and wiggling cat ears. Anastasia's Iron Fang was a mercenary group, composed solely of beastmen.

In fact, almost everyone helping with the relocation were beastmen, as the only humans present were Anastasia, Joshua, and another man.

???: "…It's being quite the cheerful relocation, isn't it, Anastasia-sama?"

The beautiful voice, that seems as if it were blessed by the wind, belongs to the young man standing right next to Anastasia.

Purple hair that is slightly darker in color than Anastasia's own, which had a light color. The young man's eyes, who adjusted his bangs are yellow, and his face so enchanting many women would be put in a daze if he smiled.

As opposed to Joshua's thin body, his was well-toned, and far from looking frail. The best way to describe it would be beautiful and strong.

Anastasia liked excellence, above all. Besides excellence, she also enjoyed pretty things. For that reason, that man who was a perfect fusion of excellency and beauty, was extremely desirable for her.

If she weren't resolute in her ambition, and didn't possess greed that far surpassed her carnal desires, she might have had her heart snatched away by that man. The Kingdom of Lugunica's Impeccable Knight, Julius Juukulius, stood a class apart just like that.

Anastasia laughed at Julius, who had changed to comfortable clothes after coming back from work.

Anastasia: “You brothers said exactly the same thing.”

Julius: “That’s extremely embarrassing. To follow my own younger brother’s footsteps…”

Anastasia: “Nah, I don’t think so. You brothers get on pretty well. I actually got a lil’ jealous.”

Taking a step back, she narrowed her eyes with both Julius and Joshua in her field of view. Joshua, realizing he was being looked at by Anastasia, turned his head and asked,

Joshua: “Does Anastasia-sama not have any siblings?”

Anastasia: “Hmm? Well, I’m not sure.”

In response, she tilted her head and closed one eye. Reacting, Julius reckoned his brother “Joshua”,

Julius: “I do not like such inquisitiveness. That is not a very nice thing to do, especially to ladies. Pay heed to that.”

Anastasia: “Ah, nonono, if you scold ‘im like that, I’ll lose my temper. It’s just that I didn’t understand and answered in a weird way.”

Waving, Anastasia smiled at Joshua, who had retracted himself, and touched the fox scarf wrapped around her neck, deep in thought for some time.

Anastasia: “Tivey?”

Tivey: “Yes, ma’am. Joshua-san, you can leave the organization of these materials to me, so you three can have an important talk together.”

Anastasia: “You understood it all from one word, I’m mesmerized by how cute and competent you are.”

It was not by chance that Tivey was known as the most astute and gentlemanly of the Iron Fang. Without him, such a large group, composed of people who lacked in perfectionism, would not work together as well.

Even with Anastasia's compliment, the little kitten demi-human kept the same facial expression and started to take care of Joshua's lot of tasks. The young man had a troubled face initially, but his brother put his hand on Joshua's shoulder.

Julius: "Do you wish to go somewhere else, Anastasia-sama? It'll be hard to offer guarantees that other people will not eavesdrop…"

Anastasia: "It's alright, it's no secret. Besides, if I don't keep an eye on this bunch, they'll start slackin' off. Let's stay at this place."

Turning to Joshua, she continued.

Anastasia: "In fairness, about your question from before, it's not like I was tryin' to dodge the question, ya know. I've no memories of my family, so I honestly can't answer ya."

Joshua: "…Are you saying you cannot remember your past?"

Anastasia: "No. As long as I've been self-aware, I was already alone, livin' in the most miserable place in Kararagi. 'Twas a miracle I didn't become a slave. And not only do I not know my own parents, but I even had to give myself a name."

Joshua must have had a good upbringing. He couldn't have imagined that. As she had said, both her name and her family name were self-given. When she was living in a hole in the ground, she dreamed to one day crawl out of it, and so her name was a pun on the word "hole"

It was comical to think that her ambition and pride had been so strong, even as a dreamer with nothing to her name.

Joshua: "So your surname, Hoshin, was also something you decided to give yourself?"

Anastasia: "Well, I don't think there's anyone else with that surname. Especially in Kararagi, no one'd be as bold as to do that.

After all, the most famous legend among us merchants is Hoshin of the Wastes. It's quite the ridiculous claim."

In fact, Anastasia's sanity was questioned many times at the time the Hoshin Trading Company was founded. She couldn't stifle a short laugh, thinking of the conversation she had at the time with Ricardo.

Anastasia: "If you're askin' if I'm sane or not, I'm pretty sure I lost it quite some time ago to be honest…"

The current Captain of the Iron Fang had once upon a time spent a lot of time worrying about it, but he was actually the first person to support this crazy gamble to move to Lugunica. Apparently, greed was contagious.

Joshua: "I understand… Now, the apparent reason why Anastasia-sama trusts demi-humans, and has an army such as the Iron Fang under her command, has become clear to me."

Anastasia: "That so. You are able to tell all that just from what I spoke?"

Joshua: "Yes. It is understandable from the story of your origin and name, allied to what little I was able to see from your personality. It's exactly because of you having such peculiar ideas, that you have no hesitation in appointing Demi-Humans in high positions, of all things."

Anastasia widened her eyes with Joshua's direct statement, who was looking at her as if analyzing her. Julius however, was clearly surprised at his younger brother's rant.

That shock turned to anger, and Anastasia acted before Joshua was reprimanded.

Anastasia: "I see… Joshua-kun, ya really are protective of your older brother, aren'tcha?"

Julius: "Anastasia-sama?"

Anastasia: "Joshua-kun's troubled. Me, a foreigner, is stickin' her nose into such an important topic for the Kingdom of Lugunica, with the backing of the Juukulius House… Which, in turn, is represented by yourself, Julius. Your brother is playin' the villain so he can know if I'm truly worthy of your trust."

Joshua said nothing in reply, getting paler. Anastasia could even see his eyes trembling slightly. That was enough for Anastasia.

Anastasia: "I'm sorry, but you're wrong. All I believe in, is that race has nothin' to do with people's abilities. My staff, other than bein' real helpful, they are all so very adorable. Why would I not give them the treatment they deserve?"

Joshua: "…In Lugunica, discrimination towards demi-humans has yet to be totally eradicated."

Anastasia: "I know, and I think that's the kinda stuff that normally happens in a country with such a long history. I can imagine people still have a lotta grudges from the time of the demi-human War… But lemme tell ya, I think that's just damn silly."

Anastasia shrugged at Joshua's defense.

Anastasia: "Race or blood, neither say absolutely nothin' about a person's worth. The only things that matter, are one's essence and willpower. When I sit upon that throne, I will follow that philosophy to a T, alright?"

Joshua: "…So Anastasia-sama is truly vying for the throne?"

Anastasia: "Oh, so that's what ya were worried 'bout?"

How seriously are you making a claim for the throne of another country? From Joshua's point of view, he was right to question the dedication of a person in that position. That was natural. Her way of thinking was very out of the ordinary in the Kingdom of Lugunica, so she would be at a clear disadvantage.

However, Anastasia was willing to bet her own soul.

Anastasia: "Alright then, how about a promise? I'll compete for the throne with all I have, and I swear I won't cut corners when it comes to the Royal Selection at any moment. I don't need to say that I'm not a strange actor from Kararagi that wishes to benefit Kararagi in anyway, right? I've never been this serious in my life, ya know."

Joshua: "If you make such careless promises, you might come to regret it, one day."

Anastasia: "No, I won't."

If Joshua was not yet convinced, Anastasia made it a point to drive it home, penetrating him with her gaze.

Anastasia: "I'll keep my promises, no matter what they are. «Posthumously too Hoshin keeps his promises, is Kararagi's national belief, and that too is my sort of determination. From the moment I decided to use his name as my own, I also decided I'd never trample on his legacy."

Joshua: "…"

Anastasia: "That's why we keep our promises. No matter what."

That is the true meaning of having borrowed the name of Hoshin, the founding hero of Kararagi. Joshua gulped, and beside him, Julius kneeled, emotion visible on his face. Seeing him, after a few seconds, the younger brother followed his lead.

Julius: "Anastasia-sama, please, forgive my naïve brother's rudeness. However, I must confess I truly admire your words. Now, I was able to ascertain that your arrival to Lugunica was a blessing."

Anastasia: "I'm happy wit' your compliment, but all I did was state the obvious, ya know? Well, if it was enough for you to know how serious I can be at times, that's alright… Ah, now I'm startin' to feel embarrassed 'bout it, I'm going all red."

The girl was shyly smiling as she turned one way and the other with her face held in her hands. Then both brothers stood up, and Joshua looked at Anastasia in silence.

Joshua: "…"

The boy had no idea of what he should say. Maybe, the world Anastasia had lived in could not be understood by applying the common sense of the Kingdom of Lugunica. But if that's how things were, then…

Anastasia: "Joshua, work yourself to the bone, and get a lil' bit hungry until the evening."

Joshua: "Eh…?"

Anastasia: "And then, when that's all over, I'll thank ya with my wonderful and special daisukiyaki. Mimi and Ricardo love it, and I'm sure you're gonna like it so much you'll fall off your chair."

With Anastasia's words, punctuated by her beautiful smile, Joshua's first reaction was to stay and ponder on those words for a few seconds, until he ran to Tivey to help him with organizing files, his determination visibly flaring up.

Julius: "I am very sorry, Anastasia-sama. My brother still has a narrow-minded view of the world, and that led him to confront you."

Visibly proud of herself, Anastasia pushed out her chest with her hands on her hips.

Anastasia: "Then, today'll be the day in which he'll start crackin' out of his stubborn shell. Your race or hierarchy doesn't matter when eatin' delicious food. Once he understands that, he'll learn to treat these children as equals."

With a bitter smile at Julius's noticeable emotion, Anastasia stroked the fox scarf wrapped around her neck as if out of habit. The fox scarf swung quietly, as if it had been tickled by her fingers.

END

The Saga of the Great Duchess Crusch Begins: The Chapter of Vows

"…!"

The tip of the wooden sword split the air as it was swung, and the boy grit his teeth.

Sweat beaded on his forehead, and his fingertips felt slightly numb. His body was heavy with fatigue, and while breathing heavily with his shoulders bobbing up and down, he stuck the wooden sword into the ground and looked up to the sky.

The panting, flaxen-haired boy was the owner of a slender-framed body with pale skin.

Yellow eyes, and hair that reached his back. His slender figure and soft features were so delicately groomed that other people were often mistaken about his gender.

Despite being in his early teens, one could already glimpse how fair the boy would become in the future. Perhaps he was even terribly ashamed of his appearance, that would have so much envy directed towards it.

The figure of a man that he promised to become, and himself as he was now—how great a mismatch there was between them.

"Gh…"

Right after he was assaulted by self-loathing, the boy took his wooden sword again as though trying to wipe away the unpleasant thoughts. He tried to force himself to return to swinging it, but the strength of his grip hadn't yet fully returned.

The wooden sword slid away from his fingers, and spun through the air with the force of the swing. As it headed through the air spinning end over end, and he stood and watched its course while deriding himself…

“You’re here again, are you? Your effort is commendable, Felix.”

Having come down to the back yard, she spoke in a familiar voice while catching the spinning sword.

After being momentarily taken with amazement at her unerring movement, the boy—Felix—hurriedly knelt where he was. Then, raising his head, he spoke with a trembling voice to the one approaching him.

“Cr…Crusch-sama! My humble apologies for this terrible rudeness. For my carelessness to have…”

“It’s no great matter. Don’t shrink so. As well, you were here first, and I came in afterwards. For me to have come within reach of your sword without having first spoken to you was a failing on my part.”

The generous response was delivered in the still-high voice of a young girl.

That was because the one standing in front of the kneeling Felix was a girl who was the same age as he was.

Duchess Crusch Karsten—a girl with beautiful, long, green hair that was nearly black, a gallant gaze and a countenance filled with aspiration. She was also both Felix’s master, and his benefactor.

Crusch’s narrowed line of sight was directed down towards the top of Felix’s head. Atop his flaxen hair was his terribly unmistakable characteristic—he had animal ears.

This, indeed, was the very cause of the situation that Crusch had saved Felix from, and the greatest turning point that had led to him serving the one he would follow till the end.

Ears that he had once thought of as loathsome were now, in front of his lady, something he was faintly proud of. From the way that he couldn’t quite control the swaying of his long tail, prouder than he himself could realize.

Though Crusch was consciously keeping her expression firm, at the sight of Felix’s flushed cheeks and swaying tail, her stern expression suddenly softened into a kind one.

“Felix, I, too, feel like exercising a little. Do you mind if I continue to borrow your sword?”

“Y-Yes, of course! Would it be alright if I watched by your side… no, from off to the side?”

“There’s no need to choose such a humble position. If you’d like to watch, watch from wherever you like. I don’t think that I’m such an intolerant master that I would be bothered by my retainer watching me.”

As Felix’s face brightened in delight, Crusch finally broke into an unmistakable smile. Then, as Felix made way for her, she stood perfectly straight.

“…sh.”

The course of the wooden sword strike unleashed by her beautiful standing figure was entirely the same Felix’s earlier swing. Despite that, its speed, sharpness, weight, brilliance and skill were clearly different. It was such a vivid slash that one might think the air itself hadn’t realized that it had been cut through.

Obviously, this was an illusion largely caused by Felix looking at it in the best possible light, but it was a fact that there was a vast difference between her sword skills and his. An isolating chasm dividing their sword talents that there was no way to bridge.

“…Your expression changes so easily, Felix. Just when I thought you looked pleased a moment ago, now you look quite crestfallen.”

“Ah…”

Having finished the first movement of the exercise, Crusch glanced to the side at Felix as he watched her, and spoke her thoughts to him that way. On hearing his master’s words, Felix lowered his eyes, ashamed of himself.

“It will soon be half a year since you came to our household, won’t it. …Is that it? That’s right.”

Looking at Felix as he held his tongue, Crusch seemed to have properly read what was going on in his heart.

Felix was very aware, and ashamed, that he hadn't made any progress at all, in the days since he'd been welcomed as Crusch's retainer.

Every day, without fail, he'd swing his wooden sword, exerting himself to become worthy to be Crusch's knight.

However, his body couldn't keep up with his will to become stronger. Due to his long confinement at his original home, his body had passed through the most important growth phase without knowing any development.

He had long since realized that the increasing stress on his body was as meaningless as piling sand on a sandcastle that was being destroyed by the wind.

"Once more, you are looking downwards."

"Once they become aware that the road to knighthood has been cut off, anyone would feel glum."

"Yes, that's true. That was thoughtless of me. Even I would be unsettled if I was unable to trust in my own sword skill. I should have been more careful of that."

Crusch's words of consideration dug painfully into Felix's heart.

The guilt of receiving an apology from the master he respected. Further, that his heart wasn't calmed in the least by her words. He felt that he was a terribly wretched being, and wished that he could disappear.

Despite having been saved, he was unable to return anything of value to the one who saved him. With that, it would only be natural for even his oath to be thought of as words of convenience, quickly forgotten once the moment was past.

Not wanting to be thought of that way, he'd continued to throw himself into the sword despite knowing it wouldn't lead to anything.

“Felix.”

Raising his head at the call, he suddenly realized that Crusch had moved to the side of the courtyard. A small flower garden was there, and under a gardener’s care, flowers of many colors blossomed.

Crusch crouched down in front of one of them, and casually grasped it by the stem—a flower that produced a beautiful bloom, but also guarded it with sharp thorns.

“Crusch-sama?!”

As Crusch winced at the slight pain, Felix ran to her side and took her hand. If one looked closely, a bead of blood had formed at the tip of a white finger, and was running down her finger toward the palm of her hand.

Hastily focusing his awareness, Felix awoke the mana within himself. Placing that faint sensation on his own fingertip, faint blue-white light flowed out to envelop Crusch’s injury.

In only a few seconds the wound had closed, and there wasn’t a trace of it left after the blood was wiped away. Once he had verified that, Felix let out a sigh of relief.

“Felix. Even after this, will you still continue to cloud your eyes with the belief that you have no value?”

“Crusch-sama…you don’t mean…?”

Opening and closing the hand that the injury had disappeared from, Crusch nodded to the bewildered Felix.

“Someone who protects others with the strength of a sword—who decided this is what it means to be a knight? Power is not what a knight holds dear. What a knight values is will. He cherishes the will to protect others. If a knight’s power can be used to protect the injured, then there is nothing strange about a knight’s power being used to heal the injured.”

"Crusch-sama… is that… what you want me to be?"

"I'm simply speaking of what I think is the way a knight should be. To speak plainly, I don't even think it's necessary for you, my retainer, to be a knight at all. If, despite that, you still feel concerned about knighthood… You can simply be a knight that does not rely on the sword. As well,"

As Felix stood speechless, Crusch closed her eyes and continued.

"When I was on the verge of death, it was none other than you who saved me, Felix. Back then, even if the Master Swordsman had been there, I could not have been saved. At that time, the only one who could save me there was you. Well then, in my view, you have more than earned the right to call yourself a knight."

One couldn't help but note that her opinion was excessively favorable towards Felix.

It's true that Felix had saved Crusch when she was at the brink of death, but it was also he who had placed her in that state in the first place. Crusch's words were putting a good face on a deed whose good was balanced out by its bad.

"If you can't help but be fascinated by the sword, I will not stop you. There's nothing so inelegant as dampening the enthusiasm of a young boy, after all."

No matter what path Felix chose, Crusch would surely approve of it.

It was that overwhelming trust from his master that melted Felix's stubborn heart. No matter how long he spent at it, he would never begin to approach Crusch's skill with the sword.

It was enough for him to at last accept the need to give up, that he'd long since been aware of.

"I won't give up on becoming a knight. But, I'm sure I'll turn out a bit different from the usual sort of knight. Will you forgive me for taking you at your word?"

"If it casts no shadow on your soul, then I'm happy with it."

With those brief, Crusch-style words of encouragement, Felix was at last able to give a relaxed smile.

Seeing Felix's smile, Crusch smiled faintly as well.

"You really do have a nice smile. Perhaps it would injure your pride to say it, but you have a smile that gently eases the hearts of those around you."

"I love your smile, Crusch-sama. It makes me feel from the bottom of my heart that I want to follow you."

"My father often calls it 'A face that's not cute at all', though."

She tried to pass the words off as a joke, but a flicker of pain was visible in her amber eyes. Noticing that, Felix was, for a moment, at a loss for words. But only for a moment.

"Is there something about the duke's words that bothers you, Crusch-sama?"

"…Did it show so clearly on my face that you could tell right away?"

"No. I think I was only able to tell because I'm always looking at you."

"Honest as always."

Speaking with a smile in her tone of voice, Crusch let out a small sigh.

"If I was going to be born without any girlish charm, it would have been better to be born a boy. No doubt my father thinks of me that way."

"That can't be…!"

"No, it's fine. It doesn't wound my heart. I think it's exactly right as well. Surely you are not unaware of how the gossips speak of me?"

Duke Carsten's daughter was a sword-crazed wild woman, was their opinion of her that he had heard. Those who knew nothing of her disposition touched on the topic however they pleased, without knowing the truth.

“It’s mysterious. While on one hand I am rebuked for being a woman who wields a sword, on the other I am strictly told to master things as a man would, in order to succeed the duke. The people around me; do they want me to be a man or a woman?”

There was nothing resembling sarcasm in Crusch’s voice. What she held was purely that doubt, exactly as she’d spoken it.

And no matter what the people around her might say, Crusch herself had already decided on an answer.

“I was speaking grandly to you about how a knight should be, but there is only one path that I am able to choose to be. Succeeding the duke, and becoming the next duke. That path has no use for sword skill or being a woman.”

“…Then eventually, you will have to lay down the sword?”

“It’s unlikely that I would be given the chance to bloom. I do have one faint wish. Even though I may not be able to reach the level of a great fencer or Master Swordsman, or that Sword Demon, I would at least like to reach my own limits… would be that wish.”

As Crusch described her lofty ideal with an ephemeral smile, Felix’s breath caught in his throat.

A feeling of remorse rose up and filled him. Crusch Karsten wasn’t the sort of person who should have to give up on anything. All the more wrong for her to have to take actions that would push aside her dearest wish.

“Even… even if you succeed the duke, there must be a way for you to continue to wield the sword.”

“Felix?”

“If it’s you, Crusch-sama, I’m sure it’s possible for you to find a way to move forward while keeping everything in balance. Taking over for the duke, and taking your sword skill to it’s ultimate limit; there’s no need to give up anything.”

As Crusch stood wide-eyed, Felix pled desperately.

He didn’t want to see what she looked like when she was giving up on something. Crusch had everything that he had wanted so much he could taste it. There was no way he could endure watching her throw it away.

“If you are lacking in something, then I’ll make up for it. I know I’m weak, and I there’s only so much I can do. But still! I will!”

“I’m very glad you would say that. However, even though you speak of helping… Perhaps you could be a butler to the duke, but I’m not sure how you could be involved with the other two…”

“Well then…!”

Crusch’s eyes must never become clouded. She was someone who should always be looking upward and forward as she walked.

He was the only one who needed to stand still in the darkness, waiting for a tomorrow that never came.

“Well then, I’ll take over being a girl for you, Crusch-sama!”

“…”

“As you’ve seen, I can’t help with the sword. But, if it’s being like a girl, I can help!”

As Crusch stared at him in amazement, Felix grasped the significance of what he’d just said without thinking.

Thinking that there’s no turning back now, Felix looked straight at Crusch as he ran with it.

“…Do you understand what you’re saying?”

“I do! …No, I don’t really know what I’ll need to do, but I understand! I’ll be a girl for Crusch-sama!”

Breathlessly, Felix cried out without giving Crusch a chance to raise an objection.

"I… I'll take care of being a girl, so I'll give my boyhood to you! Please; I know it might not be much, but please accept it!"

"You… ah, haha."

Seeing Felix wide-eyed with excitement, Crusch was suddenly unable to keep her face stern, and she began to laugh.

Felix was momentarily worried about his master's reaction, but Crusch immediately shook her head.

"It certainly wouldn't do to not accept something offered by my retainer. As a result…"

While saying that, Crusch undid the ribbon holding her hair, and gently pulled it free.

Escaping the constraints of the white ribbon, her beautiful green hair spread rapidly in the breeze. Unconcerned with that, Crusch took the undone ribbon and placed it in Felix's flaxen hair as he stood stiffly.

Like a large flower in bloom, the ribbon adorned the boy named Felix.

"Mhmm. It looks good on you… or perhaps that's not a compliment?"

"…It is. Crusch-sama's concern is better than any sort of recognition."

With a deliriously happy look on his face, Felix honestly revealed his true feelings.

It was a strange feeling. The hands that were too weak to hold a sword, the legs that couldn't support him the way he wanted, the delicate frame that quickly ran out of energy; until just a moment ago, he'd thought of them as a loathsome curse.

Now that, thanks to them, he was able to respond to his master's small request, he could think of them as a better gift than any other.

"If it becomes unpleasant for you, return it to me at any time. I will return what you gave me as well, without fail."

"That will never happen. So please, let me always serve at your side."

"I see."

Felix responded without hesitation to Crusch's considerate words.

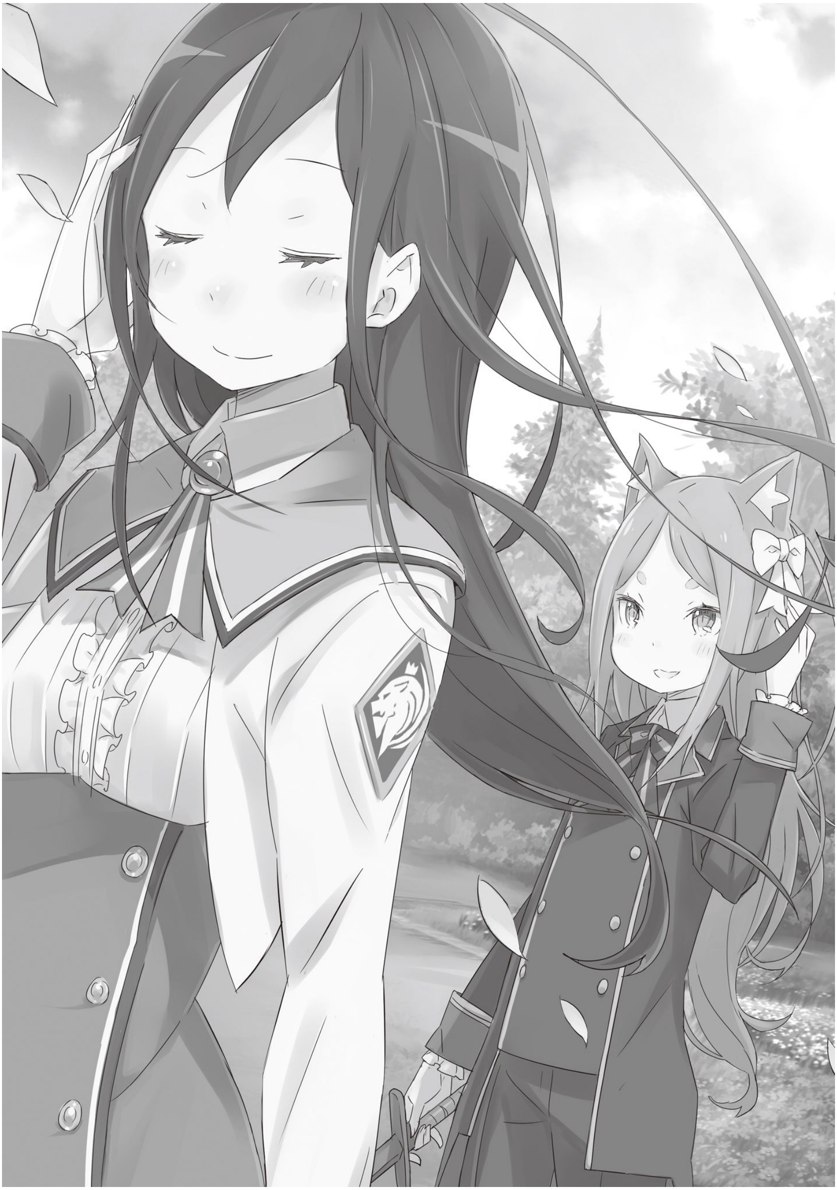
Seeing Crusch smiling and looking satisfied as she turned away, Felix felt for a brief moment that he had been able to do something helpful for the sake of this precious girl.

Then, while looking at her beautiful hair fluttering in the wind, he said

"With that, please allow me to give you a replacement ribbon."

while touching the ribbon decorating his own hair.

END



Rem’s Maiden Heart is Super Complex

—Sometimes, Rem seriously doubted that his mind was trying.

For example, when Rem saw him sleeping on the floor during a break.

Rem: “Subaru-kun, if you sleep in such a place, you’ll catch a cold.”

In the terrace dyed in warm sunlight, so as to not wake up the dozing Subaru, Rem whispered to him in a Really thin voice.

That she didn’t wake him up, though it appeared as if she were about to, was because Rem possessed a great sense of morality.

Rem: “Geez, Subaru-kun really is no good.”

Saying so in a happy tone, Rem decided to stay right beside Subaru as he basked in the sun. When it came down to it, preparation was key. From there, Rem’s bustling was barely perceptible to the eye, so fast and diligent was her work.

She set the nearby chair right next to Subaru, and placed a lap blanket on the napping Subaru so he wouldn’t catch a cold. Then, she layed out snacks and tea on the table in case he would crave some upon waking up. To make sure that her older sister Ram wouldn’t encroach, she appointed her to a job in the basement.

To Emilia, she made sure to instruct her to take a break in her own room, by offering snacks and tea. She then collected and submitted all the documents to Roswaal in order to make sure that he would be shutting himself in his office. As a precaution for Beatrice making an appearance, she closed every door around. And, last but not least, Rem seated herself next to Natsuki Subaru.

Even at that time, Rem hadn’t let her self-restricting rule of “To Never Leave Subaru-Kun’s Shadow” slip from her mind. Even if it were the scent of Subaru’s vomit, she would stand in it as much as she could.

But still, Rem, without holding back any of her passion, had requested to stay by Subaru's side until he had reached his limit. More specifically, Rem has been continually looking at Subaru, so much so that she could pierce a hole through him with her mere gaze.

Rem: "Ha~ah…Subaru-kun is cute…"

Rem who, in public, never showed a mushy expression, enjoyed Subaru's sleeping face.

Usually, his sharp eyes were unnecessarily intimidating, his mouth moved to the point of giving the impression that he may die if he didn't stop yapping, and his shoulders were bent unless he was conscious of putting up the correct posture for his spine—but as soon as he displayed his fragile sleeping form, those worries disappear from Rem's mind.

Subaru: "…R…em?"

When she took notice, Rem's face was extremely close to Subaru's face, to the point that her breaths could be felt on Subaru's eyes. Her heart about to explode, Rem masked those feelings behind a smile.

Rem: "Subaru-kun, if you sleep in such a place, you'll catch a cold."

Subaru: "Hm, Ah…ah, did I fall asleep? My bad my bad, I'll be careful…Yaaawn"

Watching Subaru's yawn, so large that he couldn't hide it with his hand, Rem reaffirmed the warm feeling on her chest,

Rem: "Geez, Subaru-kun truly is a helpless person."

END

Comic Alive Collection 1: Translation Pending

Short Story Collection 1

A Heroic Tale Starting From Zero

1

Subaru: “A bard is coming to the village?”

He’s told an astounding word, and Natsuki Subaru repeats it again with an astonished look.

Subaru turns around with a dust cloth in his hand, and just like always, he had his butler outfit style that wasn’t very suiting of him. His cleaning of the window was awkward because of his injures still remaining from the other day.

The incident where the witchbeasts surrounded Margrave Roswaal’s mansion and the Earlham Village, the closest place near it—they abated the uproar before it was possible for victims to be had, and he received a literal injury of honor.

The confusion of the incident cleared up. The mansion and the village were already back to their usual appearance. Most of Subaru’s healing ended, and at the moment, he was working with all his might on chores in the mansion while rehabilitating.

Emilia: “Yes, a bard! I heard Ram talking about it, who came back from the village. Have you come across a bard?”

What responded to Subaru’s question was a voice that sounded like a refreshing, silver-bell melody.

The long, silver hair of the owner of that voice sways. She had such a beautiful face that even artists wouldn’t be able to bring themselves to draw it.

However, her deep blue eyes were filled with so much curiosity that she looked entranced, and if you looked at her cheeks that reddened from her uncontrollable excitement, those strong emotions would overwrite the prettiness of her appearance.

Subaru would also still show childish fascination every now and then.

Subaru: “E.M.T (Emilia-tan is seriously an angel.)”

Emilia: “Eh? What did you say just now?”

The name of this girl who tilted her head in slight doubt at that nonsense was Emilia.

She was a benefactor, and a person that was also beloved to Subaru. Subaru laughs at her innocent behavior and says

Subaru: “Well, I’ve never personally seen one myself…but Emilia-tan, seems like you’re looking forward to it.”

Emilia: “I don’t just seem like it, I am looking forward to it. Bards are people who tell stories through things like singing and dancing, right? Surely you should know various things about them…hey, Subaru can you…”

Emilia has hope in her eyes, and she looks at Subaru as she put her hands together.

She calls his name with a sweet voice, and looked up with a spoiled gesture. As if there would be a man out there who wouldn’t give in to a girl as beautiful as Emilia making a request like that. Or at least, Subaru immediately gave in.

Subaru: “Yes mam. After you clean up and ask for Sensei’s permission, that is.”

Emilia: “Yeah. Sorry for having you accompany me because of my selfish request.”

Subaru: “It’s okay. He’s not expecting much with my chores while I’m in rehabilitation, so the date has priority.”

Emilia: “Oh, I see. We’ll be going out with the two of us, so it’ll be a date again, huh.”

Subaru looks at Emilia's smile, who didn't seem to notice the sinfulness of it, and held the dust cloth with the returned bucket and headed towards the mansion. In the window, he saw a view of the faraway village of Earlham.

Subaru: "Bard, eh…"

When he said the word again, he felt like it gave off a more feelings of a fantasy than he had imagined.

He looked calm in front of Emilia, but there's no way his heart wasn't excited.

A singing voice would roll up the people and the world cheerfully and melodiously, and it would start to spin a tale.

Just from imagining it, it also excited Subaru's heart without him knowing it, as he walked alone in the corridor with a cheerful mood.

2

???: "Well then, I will now sing. Please listen. —The dolphin betrayed by the sunset."

It was a melody that was depressing with its melancholy and it seemed sad, but it flowed through the village's plaza like the rain of a day during rain season.

What stood on the rough stage made up of only lumber in the middle of the plaza was a form of what seemed to be an instrument between the guitar and the ukulele. It was a person playing a wooden stringed instrument.

The musical instrument with a geometrical pattern seemed to be bouncing temperament, but perhaps exhibiting gloominess to this sort of extent was something that depended on the singer's technique. That was how impressive this gloomy atmosphere that wrapped up the village was to the villagers.

They are moved by the very depressing melody and the lyrics of the piece, and the villagers that acted as the audience had emotionless, dead eyes. Considering the appearance of these old ladies that were breaking down and crying from what felt like the end of the world, perhaps there was a possibility that they've never seen something this cruel, even with the unease with the witchbeast incident.

???: "If it's this sad, then I'd rather die. I won't die. They won't let me die…"

The dolphin betrayed by her friend and fiancé was being protected by the setting sun in the midst of the song on top of the bridge where an important promise was exchanged before. This seemed to be the climax of the story, and it was choosing whether or not to drown itself.

The singer played her musical instrument. It didn't even matter if she was singing enough for it to be called a song; she supported it with her gestures. The story was full of realism, and a world was developed. Tears that couldn't be handled appeared within the eyes of the audience that saw a trickle of tears go along those cheeks, and they too started to sob.

???: "It spits bubbles, and sinks into the silent sea. Oh, Dolphin. Oh, oh, Dolphin…"

It seemed that the dolphin boldly sunk into the riverbed. The breeze and the flowers that could do nothing but watch her sorrow simply grieve over her miserable death, and the act came to an end—.

Subaru: "As if this could be a tune chosen for performance recitals, my god!!"

Emilia: "Oohyai!"

Subaru finally couldn't take it anymore, and gave a retort when there were still lingering sounds.

The poet who sung the bad ending jumps up and down, surprising the audience, and the story world that had wrapped up the plaza crumbles. The villagers who were captured in the song's world come to their senses, and they look at each other.

???: “Ah, eh…” ???: “Wow, look at that. I cried a lot.” ???: “ Aw man, the tears come quickly when you get old…” ???: “Dolphin, you are another version of myself!” ???: “The poet girl is cuuuute.”

Then, they all exchange their impressions unanimously while having tears in their eyes. And when they told their first impressions for a while, one of them looked back at Subaru, who snuck to the row furthest to the back in attempts to run away, and said

???: “—You are ruining the mood, Subaru-sama!!”

And he got shouted at, which startled him so much that it made him jump.

3

Liliana: “Allow me to introduce myself. I am the bard of the flow. I’m called Liliana.”

The person who said that was this cute girl who bowed quickly and still had traces of childishness in her.

She had eyes full of cheerfulness and curiosity, and yellow hair that seemed to reflect an aggressive personality. She had pigtails, and under her light cloak, she had dancer-like clothing that was decorated with ornaments that used nuts and animal bones. She was short, but her hands and legs were long, and her exposed skin had a healthy brown color. She was a girl that really did give off a feeling of a vagrant traveler.

Subaru: “Well then, thank youuu for your politeness. My name is Natsuki Subaru. I am a tumultuous, luxurious and gorgeous legman. At the mansion you see at the other side of the road, I am an all-round star as a servant.”

Emilia: “Tumultuwhat…? Ah, never mind. Hello. Nice to meet you.”

Subaru was being unkind with how he was greeting himself at his own pace, even when it was their first time meeting each other.

Liliana pushes her doubtful look under a forced smile, being frantic as she tried to avoid hurting Subaru and Emilia’s moods, who explained that they were people related to feudal lord.

However, Liliana’s precautions were smashed up at once by Emilia’s next actions.

Emilia: “That song was reeeaally good. I might burst into tears any minute, so…”

Being overcome with emotions, Emilia takes Liliana’s hand at once and expresses herself. Liliana becomes surprised for a moment by Emilia, as she was agitated. She quickly becomes aware of how she had been praised and then smiles.

Liliana: “Nooo! I am glad that you offered your kind attention too! I am still inexperienced, but just from you saying that…huh?!”

Liliana responded to Emilia with a smile, as Emilia acted amiably, but as soon as Liliana looked at her, she immediately became dumbfounded. Liliana had her mouth open in astonishment, and she stiffened up.

Subaru and Emilia widened their eyes at that reaction, but Liliana still had a surprised look on her face. While having that look, she says

Liliana: “A□are you a goddess…?”

Emilia: “—Eh?”

Liliana: “I-I mean, I’ve never seen such a lovely person before! Woww, woww! This is what happens when you take care of yer hair and skin?! We really the same type of humans?!”

Liliana jumped up and down at that spot, being moved by Emilia’s beauty.

Emilia became speechless from her exaggerating reaction, but Subaru was in complete agreement with Liliana’s opinion. Emilia was a little too indifferent to her uncommon appearance. That was cute.

Then, when Liliana suddenly stopped jumping, she raised her instrument and bowed.

Liliana: "I just came up with a good idea. Please listen. —Ohh, Goddess."

Liliana draws in a small amount of breath, and she picks up the rhythm while being at a halt. She starts to play a melodious tune while smoothly plucking the strings of her instrument.

Liliana: "So profound to the point of being entrancing, light like a gem, eyes with bluish purple glintstone in them. The flowy, silver hair of the moon's tears. Delicate looks that cause divine protection to swoop down onto the fingertips of doll makers. Unbeknowing of how her skin, similar to white snow that falls and piles up, tramples on others. Slightly long ears that…ears that…ears thatttt?"

""…"

Liliana suddenly pauses her beautiful voice, who had been fluently expressing her feelings into a poem. Subaru saw the three changes of emotions in her golden eyes: "from doubt, to realization, and then surprise.

She looks towards Emilia's ears, and adds on words to the song she sang herself.

Liliana: "The ear length of her silver hair…no way, the witch of envy!"

Subaru: "Alright, stop! It was a nice song, but I have suspicions that it has been caught by copyright! The verdict will be brought up later after a strict inspection, and so we must humbly cut off relations with you and…"

Emilia: "—Subaru"

Subaru stops Liliana from speaking at once, and covers up to prevent careless words from coming out. However, the person who criticized Subaru's actions was none other than Emilia herself.

Emilia gets joint locked by Liliana, and Emilia pouts at Subaru, who held Liliana's shoulders.

Emilia: "I'm happy about Subaru worrying for me, but it's not okay to be rude to girls. Tsk tsk"

Subaru: "Haven't heard "tsk tsk" nowadays…or rather, even disregarding that, Emilia-tan…"

Emilia: "It's fine. Even if you try to cover it up after she's noticed, it won't solve anything."

Emilia gave an explanation without blame, and she did act dignified, but Subaru couldn't act like that. Her not saying anything and exposing herself to blame made him feel sick.

—Emilia was born between a human and a elf. In other words, she was a half-elf.

There were various kinds of demi-humans mixed in this world, but discrimination against demi-human clans—it seemed there was an ingrained opinion of half elves, and Emilia experienced days of hardship alone.

That being said, there was no just cause for Subaru to continue restraining Liliana, seeing how Emilia had forgiven her. He reluctantly let go of the girl's body who was held by her wrists, elbows, shoulders, and arms.

Liliana: "Pant My chest! My chestt! Don't attack things necessary for my work! What're ya doing to a young girl's body, Maid-san?!"

Subaru: "I want to be a man that uses up the power he has and protects the things important to him. Also, I'm sorry to say this, but even with my experience, it's hasty to count you as the bottom for girls with soft fair skin, young lady."

It was a different world with a very high percentage of beautiful girls, but Lilliana had the worst ladiness (according to Subaru's inspection). Starting from the bottom, perhaps the first would be Beatrice, second would be Felt, and Liliana would be the winner for third place.

Liliana: “Alright! On top of holding a girl by her joints, you’ve also hurt a girl’s feelings! But but!”

Liliana stood out in front of Emilia with her mouse-like agileness while feeling indignant towards Subaru’s assessment of her. The short girl Liliana looks at Emilia, and her expression stiffens slightly. However,

Liliana: “Not only are you noble in your beauty, but you’re noble at heart. That moved me.”

Emilia: “Eh? Ah, yeah. Really?”

Liliana: “Yess! I am sorry for my careless behavior earlier with my bad manners. If the maid hadn’t restrained me, then I would have been eradicated by family and followers for my impoliteness!”

Subaru: “You’re the type to ruin yourself energetically, aren’t you!”

Subaru was surprised by her energetic, all out confession, but Liliana started to strum her instrument cheerfully.

Liliana: “I may look explosively abundant with sensitivity, but when there’s something in front of me that causes me to have an idea, I stop being patient! Thus, I will anxiously combine Emilia-sama’s beauty, graciousness, and her various reasons for not being able to publicly talk about her race!”

Subaru: “You sure are fresh, considering how I’ve never come across someone like you before.”

Liliana showed her necessary liveliness. Her noisiness wasn’t strange, nor was it pleasant.

This was because of her honest personality and her voice. Her beautiful voice that smoothly crept into people was natural. You could certainly say that being a bard was her calling.

Subaru: “Or maybe her calling is forcing old people to buy things like filled futons and water purifiers.”

Liliana: “What is this? I feel like those words just now gave off a cruel sort of feeling.”

Liliana overreacted to Subaru, who showed his admiration, although she did clearly ignore that.

To the side of Subaru, him being dumbfounded along with his wariness having faded away, Emilia also smiled at the wild girl.

Emilia: “However, although I am happy that you praised me, I don’t really think I am a beauty.”

Liliana: “Ah! Ahhh! As a woman, I just had unforgiving feelings pop up inside of me! I’ve got it. Please listen. —Oh Goddess…”

Subaru: “Shut up! But, I do think that recognition of Emilia-tan needs to be corrected!”

Subaru and Liliana both give their denial, and Emilia tilted her head slightly with a look that made it seem as if she had said something unbelievable, appearing to be troubled.

4

—Now that he thought about it, he did feel tormented by anxiety and tension in the morning when he was first called out to the dining hall.

That’s what Subaru thought of at the Roswaal residence’s parlor as he tilted a cup of black tea.

Emilia: “What’s wrong Subaru? You’re making a reeeally weird look.”

Then, once he thought about it, Emilia called out to Subaru, her sitting to his side, as he had a bitter look because of the exceptionally dark flavor.

Subaru: “I thought a little bit about the past. I was just thinking about how I curled up too during my initial times at the mansion.”

Emilia: “That’s how it was? Didn’t you grin boldly back then just like you do now?”

Subaru: “When you put it like that, my suspiciousness increases, and that hurts!”

Subaru becomes astonished from the evaluation that had quite the difference between its subjectivity and objectivity.

Emilia looks at Subaru, him kneading his cheeks into a dissatisfied look, and she put her finger on her lips.

Emilia: “Yeah, I was kidding. I tried teasing you a little since it looked like you were in deep thought.”

Subaru: “Seriously? Well then you are E.M.A(Emilia-tan seriously is a wicked woman)!”

Emilia: “Yeah yeah. Also, you don’t have to be that tense too you know, Liliana.”

Emilia ignored Subaru’s nonsense, and she called out to Liliana, who cowered at the front. Liliana curled up with a pale face as she looked up saying “Oki”, as if the liveliness she had at the village was gone.

Subaru: “What is this what is this? You’re being awfully nervous. What happened to your cheerfulness from earlier?”

Liliana: “Even if ya’ll say that, I’m nervous. A□an ol country girl like me suddenly being invited to the feudal lord’s mansion…also, for it to be the Margrave’s mansion…I□if I do something careless…”

Subaru: “Your family and your followers will burn not just your roots, but even the fields around it. Like dogs, that is.”

Subaru gives a gesture of chopping his neck at Liliana, who became nervous and started speaking with an accent.

Liliana sees that gesture, her face becomes ghastly pale, and Emilia got angry as she hit his knee.

Emilia: “Godd, Subaru!”

Subaru: “I’m sorry I’m sorry. I did not think it would have an instant effect on her.”

Subaru apologizes with a wry smile at Emilia, who pouted with her cheeks. That being said, Subaru did feel gratified with Liliana’s behavior of acting quiet and meek, as he was manipulated at the village.

Subaru and the others returned to Roswaal’s mansion from the Earlham Village, and were currently having a friendly chat at the parlor—which meant that they were spending time together with a bit of a heavy atmosphere.

They had spare time from the mansion’s master to meet Lilliana, who was a visitor. In other words, this is why these three were on the couch facing each other.

Subaru: “Even so, did you see Ram’s displeased face as she acted as an intermediary? It seemed as if her eyes were scorning us as burdens that brought in unnecessary trouble.”

Liliana: “Eek! I’m not invited after all. The…n, I need to run now…”

Emilia: “No come on it’s fine. Subaru wasn’t threatening you either. Don’t you feel sorry for Liliana?”

Subaru: “I wasn’t trying to scare her, I just told her the objective reality. It is true that I don’t like the idea of Ram increasing Roschi’s work, after all.”

Ram was a maid of the mansion, and she adored Roswaal. She was a girl who had an improperly prideful attitude towards being a waiter, so she let out a blunt sigh when she was requested to convey a message to Roswaal for the Liliana issue.

She was now talking with the master, while certainly feeling annoyed.

Subaru: “As of now, I don’t know what type of infamy Roswaal is hearing about. She might even be telling him that a giant bard over two meters high with a hoarse voice is asking for an audience.”

Even Roswaal, someone who was well known for strange things to some extent, wouldn't see a suspicious person that might not be worth meeting. Thus, Liliana was pitiful with how she lost hope, but—

Rem: "You don't have to worry that much. Nee-sama will be fair. Nee-sama won't include arbitrary feelings when confirming Roswaal's intentions, after all."

The person who negated Subaru's worries was this blue haired girl carrying a tray that gave off steam.

It was a beautiful girl wearing the very charming remodeled maid outfit that revealed her shoulders and back—it was Rem.

The girl who entered the room adds tea cakes with a graceful gesture, and she goes around pouring second servings of tea into the empty cups. Subaru sees Rem holding the teapot, and he held out his cup.

Subaru: "Putting the sweets aside, I thought that serving tea was only Ram's job."

Rem: "Nee-sama is always busy, after all. …Also, I always want to prepare Subaru-kun's tea. I put in a lot of things into the tea, such as my feelings, and other things as well."

Subaru: "Can't you just include the tea leaves and hot water? Please, I am begging you!"

When Subaru's cheeks twitched as he said extreme words, Rem said "Too bad", pouting with her lips.

Rem's has always been like this towards Subaru ever since the resolvement of the witchbeast incident. He was honestly happy with that expression of her deep affection, but Subaru was also a bit confused, as a part of male instincts.

The people around him and he himself did not know that this was a young man's sad nature of not knowing about how this was a romantic period.

Subaru: "Anyways, I've used tea and sweets as excuses to invite you to join in. The contract has expired.”

Rem: “My…to use the delicious tea, sweets, and the cute maid as excuses…I’m blushing.”

Subaru: “It’s the truth, but you smoothly added on one more thing, didn’t you?”

Subaru gives a quiet retort at Rem, who put her hands on her blushed cheeks. She accepts that, and Rem says this softly with a whisper while having an embarrassed smile

Rem: “Even so…I heard that it was just a bard, but why the mansion?”

Subaru: “Ahhh, Emilia-tan was extremely interested…there’s that, but the matter is a little more complicated. Somehow that girl broke through Emilia-tan’s recognition inhibition.”

Rem squints slightly in response to Subaru’s details that he said in a whisper. The recognition inhibition was a technical effect weaved into Emilia’s robe that she wore so that people wouldn’t notice her lineage, as she was a half elf. As long as the person didn’t have the power to break through that effect, or if they didn’t have Emilia’s approval, then the person could not recognize Emilia as Emilia.

Rem: “Breaking through that effect…it’s Roswaal-sama’s knitted technique, so it’s hard to imagine that being broken.”

Subaru: “Right? Which is why I couldn’t leave it as is and brought her along.”

And then he used Ram’s tea and Rem’s tea cakes as pretext to bring her to the mansion. Liliana also quickly fell over with that pretext, even though she had been hesitant at first. He was really worried about her future.

Anyways, Subaru thought about how he couldn’t leave it as is, and brought her back to the mansion.

Rem: “I understand. In other words, force her to shut up before she reveals anything, right?”

Subaru: “You don’t understand, and when you say that, it sounds like something serious!”

Rem: “Aw, come on, Subaru-kun. Of course I don’t go that far.”

Rem stuck out her tongue with a cute smile saying “Just kidding”, but it wasn’t convincing because of various reasons.

Though, those various reasons were only left at the back of his mind.

Subaru: “Even then, the effect of Rem’s tea cakes was outstanding.”

Now that he looked at it, even Liliana, someone who had been nervous earlier, went into a trance upon tasting the fragrant baked sweets. Rem’s ready wit for making pastry stood out, although she was already versatile with housework.

Subaru: “Let’s see, I’ll have one more…yeah, it’s super delicious after all. Rem’s pastries are superb.”

Rem: “Thank you! I put in my body and soul for Subaru’s sake…I put in everything I had to the point of me being fine with never making sweets again…those are the kind of feelings I made them with.”

Subaru: “You put in such determination as if it was like you were burning your soul, just for a casual moment like this?!”

While confirming the flavor of Rem putting in everything she had, Subaru pulls back slightly upon thinking about how pastries were risking their lives too.

And on the other hand, it seemed like Liliana also was able to relax. She leaned on the couch as she stroked her stomach.

Liliana: “Zzz…zzz…”

Subaru: “I still don’t happen to have a heart big enough to overlook you dozing!”

Liliana: “Huh! I’m not sleeping! I am not sleeping! It was me planning to arrest assassins where I'd pretend to look like I was sleeping, and they'd get lured out after observing me."

Emilia: "…! That's not good, someone is trying to get you…?"

Liliana: "See look! My naive angel has been fooled!"

Emilia, someone who didn't know how to doubt people, had been successfully tricked by Liliana, who talked fast.

Perhaps Liliana was a girl that could only have extremely strong reactions or extremely weak reactions, as she wiped the drool that hung around her mouth.

Rem: "By the way Ma'am I have heard that you are a bard."

Surprisingly enough, Rem was the one who said that and broadened the topic.

The instrument that leaned against the sofa—in response to Rem, who gazed at the lyulyre, Liliana hastefully carried the instrument and raised her trembling voice nervously.

Liliana Yes, yes! I am sorry for being a reckless dream chaser that challenges the world with my lyulyre!"

Subaru: "You really are someone that just goes with the flow!"

Liliana was acting so abasing of herself that it was more refreshing to see, but Rem clapped her hands without caring about it. She had the same type of radiance in her blue eyes that Emilia had when she first heard her sing.

Rem: "Well then, Ma'am, do you know a lot of famous stories?"

Liliana: "—! Yeah, yes! Leave it up to me!"

Liliana's eyes shine at Rem's question, and she plays the lyulyre.

Liliana: "I'm also a girl who lived independently for no less than 10 years like this by making a career out of playing the lyulyre. I have confidence in my songs that bring tears to people's eyes, exciting a bunch of people, swallowing them up into a swirl of madness.”

Subaru: “Hey wait! Living independently for 10 years? Just how old are you again?!”

Liliana: “I’ll be turning 20 this year, but is there something wrong with that?”

Subaru: “You’re 20 with that appearance and that calmness?!”

She had childish looks, and an immature chest, butt, and hips. He felt sorry for the exposing of her thin body, but he felt even more sorry now that he knew about her real age.

Subaru: “This isn’t a time for a legal loli to be saying this and that… I saw something even more horrible…”

Liliana: “Yeah, be quiet. A person you like has a request. Also…”

Liliana pushes aside Subaru, him being busy with being moved while feeling pity, and stares back at Rem’s look of expectation. She picks up her lyulyre, and took a pose of having one leg on the sofa.

Liliana: “Alright, I will take any request. What shall I do? One of the masterpieces…for example, speaking of immortal, famous poems, the “Sword Demon Love Poem” sounds good!”

Subaru: “Hey, that sounds like a disturbing title.”

Liliana: “What are you saying?! The “Sword Demon Love Poem” is a famous poem that is passed down through singing not just in Lugunica, but other various countries too! It’s a story that makes a lot of girls fret as they want to feel the same romance as the awkward but honest military man, and then they cave in.”

Subaru: “I□is that so…”

Liliana: “Yes, absolutely! The very last part in particular is one that I cannot sing without tears. The people that see the scene become fascinated by everything where the sword demon crosses swords with his lover and the weapons unfold!”

Subaru: “Isn’t that lovers crossing swords with each other?!”

It was a summary, but he could only think of it to be brutal.

There was literature back in his original world where people would “kill each other from love”, but that was out of his scope to follow up.

As for Subaru, it was a title that simply gave only that sort of impression, but

Rem: “What are you saying, Subaru-kun? The “Sword Demon Love Poem” is a famous poem that represents Lugunica. I’ve also heard of it over and over.”

Subaru: “Seriously?! Is that true?! Emilia-tan, do you cave in to it too?”

Emilia: “Eh? Sorry, I don’t really know much about it. I might not be able to meet your expectations.”

Subaru: “No, your response is fine! Emilia-tan’s response is just what I expected!”

Or rather, the unexpected trend of Rem’s tastes was becoming so clear that he was surprised.

Liliana puts the three’s noisiness aside, and while seeming to be looking up a song book in her head, she says

Liliana: “As for other ones, there’s “The Blue Lightning of Vollachia” and “The Figure of the Sword Hill’s Hero”. Also also, can’t forget the classic example of success, one that represents the founding of Kararagi’s might, “Hoshin of the Wilderness”.”

Subaru: “There’s a lot of them. Nevertheless, don’t a lot of the songs involve lineage of great men? Or did you gather only those type of songs according to your tastes?”

Liliana: “I do have my own tastes, but as you’d expect, the general public likes the ones about heroic tales and lives of great men. They are brilliant stories that cause people to have aspirations. I take it a step further from there, as I want to pass them down through songs."

Liliana's cheeks blush as if in embarrassment, and she reveals one end of the purpose of her journey to Subaru and the others.

Subaru shook his head, indicating that he had no intentions to make fun of her attitude.

Subaru: "That's awesome. Deciding on what you want to do at that age…or wait, you said you were 20, eh."

Liliana: "You're talking in a prickly way, but do you have a problem or something with me being 20? If you get too persistent, then you can go to court, and I'll go too."

Subaru: "Where would a court be in this world…"

Was it a place that held things similar to trials? Subaru didn't know, being someone who was poorly informed on this world.

Rem: "So Ma'am, is spreading those songs the goal of your journey?"

Liliana: "Nooo, that's not the only goal. Of course, I do think spreading the songs is a mission of mine as well, but I have a more rooted goal myself. That is…"

Liliana answered Rem's question with a face that indicated the renewal of her mood. However, she was interrupted before she could take the opportunity to answer. That was because—

Ram: "—Sorry for interrupting in the middle of your chat."

They hear the sound of a knock, and a lone maid that pushed the door open on the other side bowed her head politely.

Her appearance made Rem and her look like two peas in a pod, and the girl who squinted with the light red eyes under her pink hair—Ram lifted her face, and said

Ram: "Thanks for your patience. Master Roswaal-sama will be seeing the guest."

That's how she expressed her message with a manner of welcoming the "honored guest."

5

Roswaal: "I am the owner of this mansion, the Lugunica kingdom Margrave, Roswaal L Mathers."

Liliana: "…"

He sits down at the chair up front. Liliana stiffened up without saying anything in front of the person who introduced himself.

He sympathizes with her behavior, viewing it to be understandable with his side glance.

He's been introduced to people like the Margrave, along with nobles of high positions, without having mentally prepared for it. Out of all people it could've been, to make matters worse, this was a person who was so intimidating with the sense of lifelessness he had and—

Subaru: "I didn't think we'd meet a pervert painted in white clown make-up."

Ram: "Barusu. I will not forgive disrespecting Roswaal-sama. I'll twist and cut your thing off."

Subaru: "You've also made the same offensive of noticing Ros-chi's current look, and what exactly are you going to cut off?"

Ram: "Hm, I wonder what…"

The person staring at Subaru to her side was this girl who completely lost her previous politeness, Ram.

Roswaal holds back Ram from her side, and he calmly crosses his legs on the leather couch.

His blessed appearance and title were mixed with those strange habits and costume into very small pieces, throwing them down the drain.

People thought highly of him as a feudal lord even in an appearance like this, so they'd suffer in the gap between the reputation he had in the territory and the real thing they'd witness.

Roswaal: "Juuuust as expected, seeing this new person's surprised face is the greeeatest joy. I like Subaru-kun's kind of reaction too, but this sort of reaction really is the best. Riiiight, Subaru-kun?"

Subaru: "Can you not imply that I'm an accomplice in toying with people's hearts while enjoying it? I only have a little bit of those types of poor characteristics."

If he had to say something about it, he did feel an indescribable pleasant feeling whenever he got on other people's nerves.

From an outsider's point of view, Roswaal was much the same as Subaru. Considering how each of them thought they were better than one another, they both really were making themselves hopeless. Anyhow

Liliana: "I am extremely humbled and delighted that you've granted me an audience. I□I am the bard, Liliana. I am honored to meet you, Margrave-sama."

Roswaal: "Hmmm, splendid, splendid. If you're going to speak in this situation while shaking that much, then there's reason in meeeting with you. I am famous for being tolerant, soooo relax."

He was blowing his own horn, but Roswaal's words were not lies. If Roswaal was someone that held the temper of a villainous noble of a work, then people like Subaru would be dismissed the first day.

Emilia: "I heard that a bard was coming, and then I met Liliana. This girl says that she's looking for tons of rare stories, so I was thinking that maybe Roswaal would be able to help."

Roswaal: "I seeee. If Emilia-sama has that much expectation in me, then I have no choice but to show what I have up my sleeeeve."

Roswaal gives a faint smile, creaks the back of the chair, and crosses his arms. Closing his eyes to go into deep thought, after a few seconds, he looks at Liliana with one eye—with his yellow eye.

Liliana gets put in the spotlight with that questionable look as she sits next to Emilia, and she starts to shake.

Roswaal: "You don't have to be frightened like thaaaat. I am on your side. Seeing that Emilia-sama has decided to be on your side, I'm also putting in efforts to do the same."

Liliana: "Y□yes. Th□thth…thank you."

Roswaal: "However, Bard. Bard, right. Geeeez, this is wonderful timing."

Roswaal deepens his smile at Liliana as she cowered in fear.

For some reason or another, Subaru had a bad feeling while seeing his scarlet lips turn into a smile. This was because he could see nothing but Roswaal planning something from that smile of his.

Roswaal: "You said your name was Liliana, riiight? This is Emilia-sama's request. I care about satisfying your wish. This is when I'd like to hear a little mooore details."

Liliana: "W□when you say details, what should I talk about…"

Roswaal: "Let's see. —How about the goal of your journey? Frankly tell us about the goal itself."

In response to Roswaal's tone lowering slightly, Liliana's facial expression changed, who had been stiffening up until now. And then Liliana connected that change with an expression she'd never shown before.

Liliana closes her eyes just once, and when she opened them once more, she looked straight at Roswaal.

Liliana: "—I am on a journey to seek newer "legends" in this world."

In front of the leading domestic powerful person's look, he saw Liliana's unwavering determination in her eyes.

The words that she said—the sound of those words "newer legends" made Subaru's heart tremble.

Subaru was a man. There's no way the power those words held wouldn't cause his chest to fire up.

Emilia: "Newer legends…"

Liliana: "Yes, that's right. I am looking for those, and I'm on a journey to sing them."

Liliana had devilishness in her voice.

It was devilishness that sent feelings directly into the hearts that listened to it. Then the person who had whispered quietly, Emilia, nodded her head as if it touched her inside. She picks up the instrument that was to her side and makes a sound with it.

Liliana: "We…bards are beings who live and turn stories into songs. The songs permeate into the audience's hearts, and they etch into the soul that hears about the certain past…about the history. The song that passes down for a long time, so long, has power. This means that the poet who made the song still has his/her remnants remaining in the world, even after death."

Liliana continues to speak in a bright voice. Nobody could interrupt her.

Liliana: “We can’t leave something tangible behind. Our instincts won’t even let us settle down while not making things, not knowing letters. We wander the world with these feet, sing songs at the places we arrive at, and if we’re able to pass the song into someone’s heart, we search for another place and begin walking again. And if at some point we arrive at empty wilderness, our instrument decays as a pillow—that’s the type of people we are.”

There was power in her voice, words, eyes, and gestures. It was just like when she sung.

Liliana: “Since we are beings that can only leave things in people’s hearts, not being able to leave something of form, we want to create something that will continue to remain in everyone’s hearts. We want proof that we certainly lived, a proof that has our souls carved into history. That is the only honor we wish for, if we were to want something out of this.”

There wasn’t music, but the words of the girl who told her will were comparable to it, and they etched within Subaru.

Liliana had such an established view of life that it was touching. Hearing that speech, Subaru could not let out a word, and it was the same with everyone else in the room.

They probably judged that she was being obstinate and excessively self-righteous too. However, doing that would mean denying the way of life bards had, which was the same as hers.

Subaru still lacked a certain “something” in order to do that.

Therefore, Subaru was not qualified to evaluate Liliana’s determination.

Roswaal: “I seeee. …So that’s why you want new legeeends.”

The voice that responded to Liliana’s determination in this period of silence was Roswaal’s.

The man who had the most experience with coming across determination out of all these people nods at her readiness.

Liliana also straightened her back to show admiration for Roswaal’s nod.

Liliana: “Vivid legends—history that continues to remain in everyone’s hearts strongly for a long time. Passing down existing songs already is a prideful way of life as a bard. However…if I could, I would like to be the first singer that sings a song that remains in everyone’s hearts. I want to sing and pass down the newest, freshest history in this world with my throat…with my tongue. —That is my wish.”

Roswaal: “…Ah”

“That is why I want the newest “legends”“, Liliana said.

The first page of history that nobody sings about and knows about yet, but is still etched into the world.

That’s why this girl wished to accomplish singing, despite knowing that what awaited her would be her last moment of decaying in the wilderness, as she continued along the journey.

Roswaal: “That enthusiasm is spleeendid. However, what kind of legends are you looking for? Chasing things without form is the same as grabbing onto the clouds, after aaall. You might even miss the things you desire, unless you have a definite form inside yourself.”

Liliana: “…If possible, I want a heroic tale.”

Roswaal: “A heroic tale…”

Roswaal asked a question. Liliana answered. Emilia admired it.

The meaning of those three’s reaction and the power of the sound of the words “heroic tale” also fascinated Subaru.

Heroic tale—those definitely were words that excited people and had the power to cause anyone to have wild enthusiasm.

Even in his original world, many of the names left in history were heroes that rendered famous, distinguished services in war. Heroic tales were things that had the power to captivate anyone's heart in any world during any time period.

Emilia: "Then Liliana wants to know new stories of heroes?"

Liliana: "…Well it's not that simple coming up with new heroes in this current age. There may have been a place for development of a hero several hundred years earlier when witches were rampant and the world was full of threats…a new hero in this world with peace, even if it's only apparent peace, would be very…"

There was no room for a hero to be born precisely because it was a peaceful age.

An age without a hero was also an age when a hero wouldn't be necessary. It seemed that Liliana also understood that, but she stifled her emotions in response to that helpless matter. However

Liliana: "—interesting."

It was a slight murmur, but it reached everyone's eardrums.

But, Subaru had confusion on his expression since he could not understand the meaning of that murmur. Being looked at everyone, Roswaal opens his differently colored eyes widely and laughed.

Roswaal: "A bard has come here like this, seeking a not yet known heroic tale. How should I describe this flow events that is like fate, other than saying it's amusing? Wait wait I caaan't, this is amusing!"

Emilia: "Wait, Roswaal. What are you saying? Everyone…is bothered, including Liliana…along with myself. Don't just have understanding by yourself, give a proper explanation."

When Emilia drew closer to Roswaal, him looking like he was enjoying himself, he looked at that beautiful face and says

Roswaal: “Easy to do, Emilia-sama. I will fulfill Miss Liliana’s wiiiish.”

Emilia: “Eh?! Then does Roswaal have an idea of a new heroic tale?”

Roswaal: “Of course I do. —Also, it’s related to Emilia-sama toooo.”

Emilia: “I’m related to it…?”

Roswaal gives a profound smile at Emilia, who had a look of being completely clueless. Subaru suddenly understood Roswaal’s intent, as he looked at that expression, being across from Emilia.

—If his prediction was correct, then that sure was a new “legend”.

Liliana: “You know a new hero? If so, then please let me hear about it…!”

Roswaal: “Ah, I wiiiiiilll noooot.”

Liliana: “Moohin!”

Roswaal mercilessly knocks down Liliana, who was in high spirits after hearing that the goal of her journey would come true. Emilia takes place of Liliana, her letting out a shriek like a squashed frog, and she glares at Roswaal.

Emilia: “Roswaalll”

Roswaal: “Don’t make such a frightening look. It ruins your beautiful face. Aaalso, nothing about this is me being maliciooous. Do I seem like that kind of a bad guy to you?”

Emilia: “I’m doubting if it’d actually be weird for you and Subaru to do things like that.”

Subaru: “That’s an impassioned harmful rumor!”

In response to Subaru, him getting hit by a stray bullet, Emilia says “Ah, is it not like that?” as a follow up in a panic. In front of that follow up, Liliana looks up at Roswaal once again, still being crushed, and says

Liliana: “Th-then…what can I do…to have you tell me about it?”

Roswaal: “This new “legend”…it’s not something we can rashly talk about eitheeer. Thuuus, we must make sure that you are a person we can truuust.”

Liliana: “Wh-what do I have to do? Y-you can’t have my hands, but if it’s just my toes, then I can offer them as an oath!”

Subaru: “Calm down. Also, take more care of your own body, young woman.”

Subaru calms down Liliana, who started to talk about which muscles would be acceptable and unacceptable to give, and he sighed.

It sure was difficult to make a differentiation between the title flow bard and someone who had no fixed address and no occupation. It was comparable to the suspiciousness of Subaru’s lineage, as he was someone who was summoned into a different world and didn’t have a family register.

Anyhow, Roswaal had a sound argument. If Roswaal’s plan was exactly what Subaru was thinking of, then they couldn’t rashly get Liliana involved.

Liliana drops her shoulders. It was too ironic how being a flow bard was forbidding the reason to act as a flow bard.

Roswaal: “So, thaaaat is why we first need time for ascertainment. Let’s see what we could do. How about we allow you to stay at the mansion for a few daaays. If we’re able to see you as a trustable person during that time, then I’ll reveal what I know about heroic tales.”

Liliana: “—!”

Perhaps this was her reaching the light at the end of the tunnel.

Surely that would be how you’d describe Liliana’s current mental state. That is what Subaru thought while looking at Liliana, who had hope within her eyes despite being pushed into the tunnel by Roswaal.

Liliana: “O□okay! I’m also a woman! If you’ll compromise that much, what kind of bard would I be if I wasn’t on board with it! Come at me with what you got! Come at me!”

Seeing this girl being this easily manipulated in the palm of his hand by a carrot and stick made him vaguely think about if she had talent as a dancer.

6

Liliana: “…Oops. Did I perhaps just get manipulated? Is it just my imagination?”

Subaru: “It’s more something you brought upon yourself, rather than your imagination.”

Subaru points out Liliana’s simple mindedness while they walked the distance to get to the Earlham Village together. When he did, she makes a look indicative of being very hurt and says

Liliana: “H□how cruel of you to say that. This isn’t the behavior you should have towards a dejected girl that has just noticed that she got fooled and manipulated…don’t you think? Don’t you think so?!”

Rem: “Wrong, ma’am. Subaru-kun is always lovely.”

Liliana: “I have no way to express my anger towards that blind reply.”

The person who turned down Liliana, her half crying, was Rem, who was accompanying the two of them. While looking at Liliana as she shook and fought alone, Subaru let out a sigh, as if thinking that it would be boring for a while.

Liliana successfully got caught in Roswaal’s tricks, and it was decided that she’d be observed in the mansion.

They were now on their way towards the Earlham Village to get the luggage she left behind. Subaru and Rem appeared to be her helpers, but they actually had the role of supervising Liliana to make sure she wouldn't escape.

In actuality, Subaru was warned by Roswaal to not let Liliana out of his sight, and Rem was this unreliable person's backup. Neither Subaru nor Liliana was trusted.

That being said, in truth, it was actually just Subaru reading too much into it, and Rem respecting her intentions.

Subaru: "But, Ros-chi is boorish…we don't know what he's aiming for either, after all."

Liliana: "But can Mr. Maid imagine what the Master's idea is?"

Subaru: "Roughly. However, I won't speak about it for the same reasons Ros-chi has. He and I have the same opinion, although it irritates me."

Liliana: "Mugyuuffu"

Even though Subaru spoke out, it was a failure, and Liliana let out scream that sounded similar to one of a peculiar animal. There were points where he should've felt sympathy for this girl's circumstances, who had her journey's goal in front of her and still couldn't see the full picture very well.

Subaru: "In reality, etching your name into history isn't a simple task. If we look into history from now for things like heroes and all that, we can't learn about them intuitively."

Liliana: "I agree. It's very difficult. I couldn't be any happier if I found a hero whose name hasn't even shown up in the world yet and put their traces into a song…although it would be a different matter if we had a method to look into the future."

Subaru: "A…a□a□a…as if a method like that exists, stupid!"

Liliana: "Why are you overreacting that much?"

In some sense, it would be correct to call "Return by Death" something that was similar to being able to foresee the future.

The conversation becomes blurry because of his own peculiarity, and Liliana turned towards Subaru with a doubtful look, him being disturbed. However, Rem interrupts Subaru and Liliana’s moment. Rem claps her hands with a smile and says

Rem: “Ma’am, I have good news for you. The truth is that I know a new legend.”

Liliana: “Ehh?! R□really…?!”

Liliana comes across unexpected good news, and her look becomes weird as she had both surprise and joy. Considering how Rem had been friendly until now, there was credibility in her line of saying that she had an idea.

However, on the other hand, the person who stayed silent and didn’t overlook it was Subaru. If Rem’s idea was Roswaal’s secret details, then it was still too early to tell Liliana about it.

Subaru’s worries were put aside, and Rem pointed to the side with a face full of confidence.

Rem: “It’s Subaru-kun.”

Liliana/Subaru: “—Ehh?”

Rem: “It’s the newest legend. And it’s a hero whose name will rise up, Subaru-kun.”

Subaru and Liliana’s dumbfounded voices overlap, and Rem supports Subaru to pile onto that.

Subaru forgets to ask “Eh, a joke?” as a response to the excessively confident recommendation.

Rem: “It’s Subaru-kun.”

It was hard to say if Rem was being serious or if she was trying to deceive them, as she presses for an answer. But at the very least, it seemed like a conclusion appeared inside of Liliana. She compares Subaru and Rem's face and says

Liliana: "I've got it. Please listen. —A new legend: "Skillful Playboy"

Subaru: "Shut up!"

Subaru scolds Liliana, her not even acting like she believed in him, and he lets out a deep sigh.

The feudal lord's attendant male servant that sensed the disaster that would happen in the village before anything happened, the person who risked his life to stop the witchbeasts from causing damage, the person that protected the citizens' safety and trust—who would believe in that guy? Such blasphemy.

Rem: "I was serious…too bad you won't believe me."

Rem feels discouraged, hanging her head, and she really did look disappointed, so Subaru started to feel sorry.

Subaru was confident that he wasn't great enough as a man to be rewarded with that much pure trust.

The "Return by Death" ability was Subaru's unique last bit of hope in this different world—however even when he had that power, there were many times when Subaru couldn't save the swirl of tragedies at the village and the mansion.

If it was someone else, that person would do a better job. That type of evaluation of himself was rooted within him.

Subaru: "No matter how I die, the pain is the same. …Even if I could save & reload more easily, Heaven wouldn't punish me."

It was an ability with many restrictions that had "death" as an absolute trigger for activation.

He couldn't welcome it with both hands either because it wasn't something he wished for.

He actually wanted to complain about the existence of this paranormal power he had been given, more than he wanted to show his thanks for it.

That was when the mood suddenly changed.

Rem: "—Subaru-kun"

Rem calls out to Subaru with a low, cautious voice, and after she reached out, the course of the situation was interrupted.

The sound of the seriousness in Rem's voice caused Subaru to immediately come back to reality after he had been in deep thought. And then, he clearly saw why Rem stopped him.

Subaru: "…Who are these people."

Before Subaru's eyes, who whispered, there were figures of four people that blocked the road to the village.

They were clearly suspicious people—they were completely covered in white clothing. Their faces, the length of their hands and legs, and their builds were concealed, completely burying their lineage in white.

They had white hoods, white masks, and white costumes. They were entirely white, from head to toe.

Subaru: "To think I'd see the day when I'd come across perverts other than Roswaal like this…"

Subaru tells a joke and scans his surroundings.

The eccentric clothing catches his eyes. He couldn't commence an independent surprise attack for now. If that was the case, then it was unlikely that the mere itinerant entertainer would do so either, considering how she stayed silent and stood in his way.

Subaru: "If you don't know the road, trace your footsteps. The globally common term for ground with no maintained grass is "road". By the way, the feudal lord's mansion is behind me, and a small village is at the front, but…"

"…"

Subaru: "Ah, I guess you guys aren't lost children that want to hear about the road after all."

Subaru acts provocative. The edge of their knives flicker at the end of the white clothed people's sleeves.

They put their specialized weapons for specific times into their hands and the white clothed people sliding towards him cause Subaru to gulp.

The four people swing up their knives towards Subaru and the others without even a warning and—

Rem: "I don't know who you people are, but I judge that you all have hostile intentions."

The faces of the white clothed people that were at the front receive a violent punch from Rem's fist, pushing them upward.

Her rough fist hitting their bodies makes a sound, and the men sent flying into the opposite direction land on the ground with their heads, tumbling down. Their limbs are made limp, and they saw that the masks on their upwards facing heads were becoming red.

Subaru sees that ridiculously gruesome state and says "Wow, that looks painful", honestly letting out his impression that he had.

???: "—Eh."

After he took a look, the white clothed people that were silent until now let out their voices in dumbfoundment. They look at their comrades that were sent flying, and they quickly started to feel the human kindness in the figure that stood upright.

Although, that would have no effect at all on the event that would happen from this point on.

Rem: "I lost my weapon the other day at the forest, so until I get a replacement, I'll fight you empty-handed. Got a problem with that?"

"Lost property in the forest" was a cute way of saying it, but the thing she lost was her morning star, which was a brutal thing that had thorns on it. Rem's white slender hands that liked to use those as her specialized weapon were also beautiful but dangerous weapons that sent those men flying just a moment ago.

Rem put up her hands, and the white clothed people immediately conspire with each other in response to the girl who showed those dangerous weapons.

???: "Retreat!"

The men slip away to retreat just like when they were nearing them, and they carried their unconscious comrades, quickly withdrawing from the area. Rem kept an eye on the men that came into the side forest and tried to run, but once she saw that not a trace of them was left, she lost the strength in her shoulders.

Rem: "I was a little anxious. I'm not sure if I'll be able to protect Subaru-kun empty-handedly when we come across people like that, after all."

Subaru: "You say that you were anxious, but that was a serious, good straight right."

Rem: "Subaru-kun, you're making me blush with how you're praising me that much."

Subaru nods at Rem, who put her hands on her blushed cheeks, and he looks at the forest that the white clothed people ran from, although they didn't look like mere thieves.

Subaru: "What do you think that was about? Maybe it was disturbance related to Emilia or something."

Rem: "That's a possibility, but Roswaal-sama is also someone that doesn't have many enemies. If he restrains himself that much, then I don't think he'd get frequent enemies, but it's a possibility."

Subaru: "Seriously? I'm a little worried about my workplace's safety. —Also"

While getting cold feet from Rem's response, Subaru finally glares at the side. He saw a girl that kept her silence until now, and she had just stealthily turned her back.

Subaru grabs her shoulder from the back, and while putting on the friendliest smile he was capable of he says

Subaru: "Whaaatcha doin, trying to run off? Hmm, Liliana-chaaan?"

Liliana: "Eek! Sorry. I apologize. I'm sorry, so please don't make that angry look."

Subaru: "I don't look angry! It's a smile of a smile that's trying to loosen its tension. Take a good look!"

Liliana: "Eek!!"

Liliana continued to be frighted by Subaru's full throttle smile. That reaction astonishes Subaru, but Rem takes over Liliana for him as she patted her back like she was comforting a puppy.

Rem: "Don't worry, Subaru-kun isn't scary. It's just that his eyes are a little more lovely than others'."

Liliana: "Th□that's a personal opinion, but I'm fine. I've calmed down, yes."

Subaru: "I have some subtle feelings about that…but whatever. Anyways, why did you try to run? I think this would be unlikely, but are you perhaps…"

"An accomplice of those white clothed people, and a comrade that's trying to disturb Emilia's royal selection"—was she someone that got close to Subaru and the others with that goal? The moment he tried to ask that, Liliana prostrated herself.

Liliana: "I'm sowwy! But but, I am not a bad person! It's just that those people have always been trying to get me. I tried and tried not to think "Man, I want to do something about this. Oh yeah, how about I get the mansion people to help me"."

Subaru listens to Liliana explain herself, as she prostrated herself, and it made him goggle in astonishment, and seeing that franticness made him erase the possibility of her being a threatful spy.

Subaru: “You’re telling me that when you said assassins were trying to get you while you were dozing off at the mansion, that actually was true?!”

Subaru could do nothing but be troubled and groan in response to feeling another problem popping up.

7

Subaru: “And so yeah, Liliana got chased by some unfamiliar people.”

Subaru finishes his report, and he sinks deep into the couch.

They returned, and were at the Roswaal residence office. Four people, including Subaru, were in the room. Subaru points at Rem, who was sitting next to him, and he said

Subaru: “Frankly, Rem being there saved us. I hate to admit it, but if it was just me and Liliana, then we would’ve gotten killed.”

Rem: “Yes. Thankfully I was there, too. Though, I would’ve been more useful if I had my iron flail.”

Subaru: “If you did, then they would’ve become forest fertilizer. … Yeah, I thought it was graceful and cute.”

Subaru’s heart calmed down, having evaded a massacre. The men that got knocked out by Rem, who was smiling, surely didn’t expect to almost get beaten to death by a cute maid. Anyone would understand those feelings.

Ram: “So, is the bard you were talking about in the guest room?”

Subaru: “Yeah, with Emilia-tan, that is. She is there under the pretext of guaranteeing her safety, but it’d be problematic if we pressured her awkwardly and made her run away. That’s why Emilia-tan’s suited for the job, since she knows nothing.”

Ram: “I see. It seems you understand why Roswaal-sama wants to keep that poet here.”

Ram gives an acknowledging gesture with her chin, and she pierced Subaru with a cold look. Subaru responds to that look by shrugging his shoulders.

Subaru: “He wants to make Liliana have a position of something like a news spreader for Emilia-tan’s royal election, right? Liliana wants to create a new heroic song with her own hands. She seems perfect for a success story of a country’s new king.”

Ram: “That was some quick understanding for someone like Barusu. My suspicion of you having a hollow pumpkin from the neck up has been cleared.”

Subaru: “Have you been trying to talk about a jack-o’lantern or something?”

Setting Ram’s usual assessments aside, Roswaal’s intentions were probably something like that.

This was a world where things like TV and newspapers to communicate information to the general public were non-existent. The influence of a bard going to various places conveying things such as history and events through song was something definitely far beyond the capabilities of Subaru’s imagination.

—In regards to the royal selection too, Liliana would be a big help to Emilia with her songs.

Roswaal: “Subaru’s also quick on the uptaaaake. My plan is exactly what you saaaaid. Although, I plan to keep an accurate balance between the merits and demeriiiiits.”

Subaru: “Merits and demerits, eh.”

Subaru felt suspicious with Roswaal giving a pleased answer while chuckling.

Seeing Subaru’s reaction, Rem takes Roswaal’s spot, and while facing down she says

Rem: “I hate to point this out, but Emilia-sama is a half-elf, after all. You cannot deny the possibility of a normal poet using that as a reason to decline the proposal. For that point, Liliana-sama seems to be friendly with Emilia-sama, so I figure she might accept the proposal, depending on the conditions.”

Subaru: “So a plan in which we force the responsibility for trouble that can’t be resolved alone onto someone else and make it feel like an undeniable proposal, too. …Did I just make a really evil look?”

Ram: “It was your usual evil person face.”

Rem: “It was as lovely as usual.”

Subaru curls his lips at the evilness of Roswaal’s personality while receiving the sisters contrasting assessments.

On top of his crafty speaking that got Liliana to stay at the mansion, he really was a smooth talker with his cunningness.

When he glared at him to criticize him slightly, he waved his hand with a full smile, and Subaru sighed.

Subaru: “Anyhow, I guess our current aim is to solve the problem while paying attention to Liliana’s surroundings. It really sucks how we let our attackers get away. If we caught even one of them…”

Ram: “If only you broke 5-60 of their bones, made them throw up as much as possible, and killed them.”

Subaru: “They wouldn’t even be able to spit out blood anymore if they got harmed that much. Take it easy on them.”

The fact that he couldn’t affirm it as a joke showed just how terrifying Ram’s loyalty was.

Subaru: “I am careful myself, but if I do get attacked, I’d only be able to cry for help in a super high-pitched voice. Though, I wouldn’t expect people to try it in a mansion with a feudal lord on the watch.”

Rem: “If I hear Subaru-kun’s voice, I’ll come running over right away. Even if I’m cleaning, even if I’m cooking, even if I’m taking a bath, please always call me.”

Ram: “Filthy.”

Subaru: “Quit looking at me with scornful eyes before I’m able to say anything!”

Rem shaked her invisible tail as a puppy maid, while Ram looked at Subaru with completely scornful eyes as a kitty cat maid. After the usual interaction, they sought to conclude the conversation.

Roswaal: “Anywaaays, as for me, I just want to keep the status quuoo. How about we find a solution after asking Liliana a little more about the situatioooon?”

Subaru: “Okay, then let’s talk to her with that in mind. Honestly, right now she probably feels more dead than alive, after all.”

Ram: “She caused a problem that’s bothering Roswaal-sama. She should suffer a little.”

Subaru: “Even if it’s towards the guest, that is too rude, Nee-sama.”

Subaru smiles wryly at Ram’s abusive language, and he puts his hand on the door to leave the room. Then

Roswaal: “As long as you’re with us, your safety is guaranteed. Maaake sure you communicate that point propeeeerly.”

Subaru was shocked by the deep statement that came from Roswaal’s voice that hit his back.

8

Liliana: “…S□so, I don’t gotta worry about y’all slaying me with a sword for now?”

Subaru: “Uh, where do you come from?”

Liliana listens to the conclusion of the discussion, and she collapses in the chair dead tired, having stiffened up with her whole body from her nervousness. He decided to honestly excuse her slovenly appearance for now.

Because she must’ve went through suffocation while waiting, after all.

Subaru: “If you’ve learned from this experience, then don’t think of trying something like involving a feudal lord with your own motives. This is actually something that could get you slain with a sword, you know.”

Liliana: “Agh! I□I’ll reflect upon my actions. I’ll be finer than wind, clearer than water!”

Subaru: “That’s a duplicate of my acting style. So from now on, you’re not allowed to use it.”

Liliana currently did not have the composure to respond to Subaru’s cold retort with a witty joke.

Liliana basically got people related to the feudal lord involved in her situation and exposed them to danger. Her idea was surely foolish, and she was certainly naive, too.

As you’d expect, seeing Liliana down was a good way for Subaru to relieve his grudge. However, the one who saw Subaru and Liliana and puffed her cheeks angrily was Emilia.

Emilia: “Subaru. Liliana seems to reaaaally be reflecting on herself, so don’t go any further.”

Subaru: “You can’t be like that, Emilia-tan. If we don’t warn her firmly this way, she’ll never start to have self-awareness. She has to be taught just how much trouble you can cause to everyone around by staying silent and keeping a secret…Emilia-tan, what’s up with that look?”

Emilia: “No, it’s nothing. I was just thinking about how terrible it is to not have self-awareness.”

Subaru gets stared at by Emilia, and for some reason it makes him feel uncomfortable.

Subaru understands the turn of events, and he changes the target of the conversation back from Emilia to Liliana.

Subaru: “So, I’m gonna ask you to speak in detail…but uh, when in the world did the white clothed people start going after you?”

Liliana: “I don’t really know. I became clearly aware of them going after me in these past few days…nothing special happened until that point.”

Subaru: “Nothing like an accident that would give a hint?”

Liliana: “No. At best, there were things like my own feather pen going missing, my clothes going missing after I took a bath, used tableware disappearing from the inn…”

Subaru: “That sounds like damage from stalkers!”

When Subaru raised his voice because of the devious tricks, Emilia and Liliana both tilted their heads.

It seemed like these girls couldn’t grasp the concept of a “Stalker”.

Emilia was perfect. Liliana was a beautiful girl if she didn’t open her mouth, so he wanted them to be careful, taking that into consideration.

That said, when Subaru remembered the attackers’ situation, he shook his head.

Subaru: “Your belongings going missing probably isn’t related to those pursuers. You just have passionate, curious fans. Have they ever chased you around with a knife?”

Liliana: “Hmmm. The way you speak is a slightly confusin’…but anyways, today was the first time someone flicked a shiny object at me. If it wasn’t, I woulda had a little more of a serious look on my face.”

Subaru: “Doesn’t really look like you have a serious look today either…but I guess this means their approaches have suddenly changed.”

Subaru goes into deep thought with Liliana's evidence, and he searches for the cause of the white clothed people's change in their actions. However, there was one thing that came to mind when he thought of changes that happened most recently to Liliana.

Subaru: "Did they panic…because you met with this mansion's feudal lord?"

If Liliana's contact with Roswaal was what motivated the people who chased her, then it would fit the puzzle. But on the other hand, it meant that there was a reason to be worried with Liliana getting involved with people of power.

Subaru: "You really don't have any idea, huh. You seriously feel like a pretty dangerous troublemaker. If there's something you know and you don't barf out all of it around here, we won't be able to protect you."

Liliana: "Such ridiculous remarks you're making by saying stuff like barf in front of a girl! I swear on the souls of my ancestors and this lyulyre that I'm not hiding anything! Actually I can't swear it on my lyulyre yet. Please wait."

Subaru: "Don't just lose confidence right off the bat!"

Subaru sighs at Liliana after yelling as she held onto her business tool tightly.

But, Liliana was also seriously looking for a clue, so while groaning she said

Liliana: "I'm not even remotely trying to hide anything, but I got nothin. Although, this discomfort kinda feels like small bones getting stuck on all my teeth."

Subaru: "Take out the bones properly before you eat fish."

Subaru responds coldly at Liliana, her lacking seriousness even though she had a serious face, and he turned to Emilia, wanting to have a serious conversation.

Subaru: "So, Emilia-tan, did you have any realizations while we were talking about being dirtied with small bones? We made you listen to an unproductive conversation, right?”

Emilia: “Not at all. Based off of what Liliana said, things felt off about two weeks ago…it seems to have started before she came to the Irlam village when she left town Warwar. So if we assume there’s a reason for that…”

Subaru: “That’s where it is, eh. I’m almost certain something that happened there was the cause. Some sort of impressive matter, or whether she did something there or not, oi.”

Liliana: “Why are you assuming that I did something, even after I let you guys treat me disgracefully?”

Subaru ignored Liliana while she had a whiny look on her face. Liliana grabs onto her pigtails while pouting, and she shook her head back and forth.

Liliana: “Even if you say that, it was the same as always. That town is a little cold to outsiders, so feeling unwelcome would be…aah! Aah! The song! Don’t sigh after the song ended…! Don’t look at me like that…!”

Subaru: “I do feel bad for your heart breaking because of bad memories, but come on, say things that can give us hints.”

Emilia: “Besides, why’d you even stay at a rude place, even if it was just for a little? I do have experience myself, but I don’t think it felt good for either of us.”

Subaru: “I caught a glimpse of Emilia-tan’s painful past.”

Emilia’s innocent experience telling pierced Liliana while she held onto her head shaking.

However, it was natural to point it out. Being a bard meant that you’d go where the wind blew, that you’d do things on a whim. There shouldn’t have been any reason for a rootless girl to stay in a place that made her feel uncomfortable.

Liliana: “Ah, you see, those people certainly were cold, and they did completely irritate me, but fortunately, the richest grandpa liked me!”

Subaru: “Oh, a rich grandpa, eh.”

Liliana: “Nooo! Jeez, I meant that he adored me like a granddaughter. He even bought me a new lyulyre! That’s why it’s new,”

She holds out the lyulyre to show it off, and Subaru accepts it without thought. Liliana was euphoric, but to Subaru it only sounded like her fooling a lonely old man and making him support her.

Liliana: “I ate delicious food, slept in a comfy bed, and he even bought new things like a lyulyre and clothes…it was like a dream hehehe.”

Subaru: “You should do something about that vulgarity you have whenever you aren’t singing.”

Liliana had an intoxicated look with drool that looked like it was going to drop. However, after she ignored Subaru’s point, she suddenly made a gloomy expression.

Liliana: “But, unfortunately that time didn’t last for long, either. One day the grandpa kicked me out of the mansion, not knowing what I did wrong. And that was the end of my riotous pleasures.”

Subaru: “Did you make careless mistakes while sleeping like breaking vases and snatching food?”

Liliana: “H-How rude! The last time I made a careless mistake was five years ago!”

She said 5 years ago, but that was when she was 16. Although, it would be tiresome to dig into that, too.

Liliana made a baffled look, appearing to really have no idea why she was kicked out.

Just from hearing “Rich Grandpa”, there was a word he was suspicious of, but he was far from the core of the reason as to why she got kicked out. He also thought about the possibility of Liliana’s pursuers having misunderstandings about there being something going on between her and the old man.

Subaru: “Either way, I guess the hints are the Warwar town and that grandpa. I’ll tell this to Roswaal just in case…but can this even be investigated?”

Liliana: “But but, the grandpa helped with the things around me, and he also taught me the “Song That Must Not be Sung No Matter What”, so I really have no idea.”

Subaru: “Is that so…then I guess he can’t be a clue. I’m stumped.”

Emilia: “No, hold on a second.”

Subaru was just about to let go of something that seriously could not be ignored, and he stops the conversation in panic. However, the two girls were tilting their heads. It seemed like they weren’t even kidding.

That’s why airheads are scary. Emilia-tan is seriously an angel.

Emilia: “Um, what is the “Song That Must Not be Sung No Matter What”?”

Liliana: “…? It’s a song the grandpa taught me, and it’s about the secret that made a fortune in a lifetime. Honestly, it’s not for me, whether it be because of the music or the lyrics.”

Emilia: “Jeez. You can’t talk like that about a song someone taught you. Can you play it once?”

Liliana: “Yes, with great pleasure! If you don’t mind, I’d like to show everything in my repertoire!”

Liliana takes her lyulyre from Subaru, and she was in a good mood strumming it.

It also made Emilia’s eyes light up. Her heart was pounding like a drum because of the request.

Subaru closed his eyes with the two of them in front of him. After that, he took a deep breath and said

Subaru: “—That song is completely at fault!!”

Then, he put an end to the two airheads’ conversation with no retort in sight to come from them.

9

Subaru: “But you know…”

Liliana: “Fai? Fwht’s up?”

Subaru: “Don’t talk with your mouth full. Ladies are vulgar. “

Liliana: “Haha. It seems like Mr. Maid finally noticed my sexiness as a woman.”

Liliana appeared to be prideful for some reason, and the way she interpreted Subaru’s remark was unknown. At the very least, her appearance of having her cheeks inflated with candy like a squirrel did not have a bit of an adult woman’s sexiness.

Liliana stuffed a ridiculous amount of Rem’s homemade sweets in her mouth, and it was now afternoon snack time. Subaru let out a sigh while enjoying the tea and sweets during the beautiful afternoon.

Subaru: “It’s already been 3 days since you came here…”

Liliana: “It has. That was quite quick. What about it?”

Subaru: “It’s hasn’t been at the level of continuous attacks, but seriously what have you done?!”

Subaru yells, looking back on the three days, and Liliana made her wide eyes even wider in surprise.

The three days Liliana stayed at the mansion—the gang's attacks on her were done frequently, be it in the morning, at noon, or at night, and she was attacked more than 30 times already. How good was the guess of them most likely hesitating if she was sheltered in the mansion?

Subaru: "At the moment, Rem shoots all of them down, but them escaping is the only thing unusual. Not a single one of them has been caught. Just who are we dealing with?"

Liliana: "Oh come on now. If I knew that, then I wouldn't be having trouble. Please don't make me say that at this point."

Subaru: "Just how carefree have you become in merely three days?!"

It was as if Liliana got very carried away in these past 3 days, laughing like it was none of her business.

She only cowered in fear for a few hours in the first day. Now she was walking so confidently as if the mansion was her own place. Or maybe Subaru was the one taking them lightly.

Subaru: "Though there is luck in leisure…at this rate, I don't think Ram wants to wait, either."

Liliana: "I apologize for the inconvenience…if you aren't gonna eat those sweets, can I have them?"

Subaru: "Your gratitude really is just for show and lip service!"

Liliana stuffed herself with Subaru's share of sweets, appearing to have taken Subaru's angry voice as permission, and she was delighted. That behavior made Subaru feel bad for Ram, who was acting for Liliana's sake.

As of now, Ram was doing an investigation all the way up to the Warwar village Liliana stayed at before. She did this because it seemed that the town's rich man was related to Liliana getting chased.

Although it was Roswaal's order, he could not forget the truly displeased look Ram had on her face before she left the mansion. You could say that the future of Ram letting out her anger on Subaru after she came back was guaranteed.

Liliana: “But you’re very popular with everyone besides Ram.”

ぱく
ぱく
ぱく

Liliana: “Songs are simply stubborn things that soak deep into hearts, indiscriminate of countries, words, and races. Well, bards succeed in life because of their true abilities. Sincere feelings move people. Hehe.”

Subaru: “I’m not convinced…”

Subaru felt some sort of sense of defeat in the beautiful girl (21 year old) that had a vulgar smile. It was splendid how her secrets to success were things such as her looks and true ability, but she was far from convincing.

For a girl to be charming, Subaru felt like she had to have beauty in the heart.

Subaru: “For that, Emilia-tan truly is fitting for my first star.”

Emilia: “Did you call me just now?”

Subaru: “Eek!”

Right after murmuring his feelings out loud, Emilia showed up in the room, and his heart jumped.

Seeing Subaru reflexively straighten himself, Emilia pointed above the room’s door. There was this world’s ma-time-crystal sparkling, which you could tell the time with based off the change in color.

Emilia: “See, it’s about that time of the day again, you know? I came here because I couldn’t wait.”

Subaru: “That’s a line I’d like to hear in my room when everyone’s asleep at night. …Rem said that she was going to clean up the tableware and stuff, too.”

Emilia: “Haha. Rem’s also looking forward to it, after all. I’m interested in the continuation from yesterday, myself.”

Emilia had her cheeks sweetly blush a little because of her expectations. He felt jealous because that captivating face and her eyes weren't looking at him. Subaru unconsciously glared at Liliana.

Liliana: "I've got it. Please listen. —Another person's love, the taste of honey."

Subaru: "Shut up!"

Liliana takes a lick of the pastry cream on her finger, carrying the lyulyre on her shoulder, and Subaru roared at her. He was simply a poor loser, so Liliana's triumphant look made him feel complete frustration.

Rem: "Ah, was it just about to start?"

Emilia: "No it's okay. Subaru was just teasing Liliana like always,"

Subaru: "Inside your head, I was the one doing the teasing, Emilia-tan?!"

Emilia speaks to Rem, who came in late, and she was making space for her on the sofa. When Rem sat next to Emilia with a "Excuse me", there was one seat left. Then

Beatrice: "—I'm coming in, I suppose."

The door to the room opened had opened three times. However, this scene had a different effect than all the others.

On the other side of the door, a scenery was now drawing a faint library in their vision, something that should've usually been connected to the mansion's corridor. A spacious room and cramped, rows of bookshelves. There was a childish girl walking towards them from there.

It was a girl that had cream-like colored hair put into magnificent drills. She made her doll like pretty face into a sour look, and she entered the room while the edges of her flashy dress shook.

She looks around the room, and she gave a little snort while having a composed expression.

Beatrice: "Well, you waited quite long for me. That's the only thing I'll admire you for, I suppose."

Liliana: "Oh please. There's no way I'd start without Beatrice-sama. Neglecting my obligations would be disgraceful of me as a woman."

Beatrice: "Yeah. Nice prudence. It seems like there are others who should follow your example, I suppose."

In response to Liliana's welcome, the girl—Beatrice looked down on Subaru.

She did, but Subaru's eye level wasn't like that, and as long as he was used to her impudent behavior, she was nothing but lovely.

Subaru: "Even so, I still can't believe Beako even leaves the forbidden library to listen to Liliana's songs."

Beatrice: "Occasionally experiencing a world that isn't reading books isn't that bad, I suppose. That girl's singing voice has its own value. A singing voice alone has more value than you, I suppose."

Subaru: "I seriously might get worried about my own worth, so can you quit it with those type of expressions?"

Beatrice ignores Subaru, him worrying about his own rating, and she sat down on the remaining seat.

With this, the Roswaal residence's Liliana fans were all gathered together. With Emilia and Rem, and even Beatrice, the ones who liked Liliana's songs were the whole mansion, and it surprised her.

Liliana: "Wow, well then, thanks for gathering like this today again. The singer that will color everyone's time through songs and stories is I, Liliana."

Liliana gives a speech in the middle of the room while being looked at by her audience of four.

The way she said the standard phrases had dignity. It seemed that her behavior as a bard was the only thing she took seriously. He didn't criticize her for having bits of sweets stuck on her mouth.

Liliana: “Well then, from here, what I will sing is a famous modern day poem, “The Sword Demon Love Song”, act II. Starting from when the sword demon who knew nothing but the sword meets a beautiful girl in the flowers.”

The girls’ applaud moderately at Liliana, her bowing, while Subaru applauded at her loudly.

Subaru was aware of the fact that he was here, secretly looking forward to hearing the continuation of the song from yesterday. All in all, Subaru, and again Emilia and the others, all felt the same way.

Sadly, Subaru was also wowed by this little singer’s singing voice.

Liliana: “I will sing. Please listen. —The Sword Demon Love Song.”

Liliana plucks the strings of her lyulyre, and her thin voice gets into the song, and she began to sing the prologue.

That moment, the room’s atmosphere melted into the the song’s space made by the girl, and the feeling of the world changed completely.

Liliana: “…”

The world changes form with Liliana’s gestures, and even for the scenery, the way the song surrounded it was just amazing.

Subaru tried his absolute best to hold back his oohing and aahing while he continued to have goosebumps.

He couldn’t do something like destroy this beautiful world because of his own lack of insensitivity.

The story starts from when the swordsman, who devoted himself so much to the sword that he was called the sword demon, won his first fight after becoming strong at the royal capital and finally met a lone woman. The love song changes color from there. The sword demon ran through the battlefield as he swung cold steel while keeping his unconscious love to himself. Act 2 ends when the sword demon exchanged words with the girl, feeling something equivalent of swinging the sword.

Liliana: “—Thank you for kind attention.”

The tune of the lyulyre that shook the atmosphere ends. Liliana bends her back, leaving something that would stay in their minds.

Seeing that, Subaru naturally straightens his back, and he clapped. As for those next to him, Emilia and Rem were also applauding the same way. Beatrice was the only one not clapping, but her mouth that formed a faint smile was proof of her satisfaction with Liliana’s song.

Emilia: “As lovely as I thought…the story will definitely begin from here.”

Rem: “The sword demon love song is a song I know from beginning to end, and yet it felt like it was my first time listening to it. I can only admire Liliana’s song. It was wonderful.”

Beatrice: “It was okay, I suppose. I might as well come again to listen to the continuation.”

Subaru: “What a dishonest loli…”

Beatrice was viewing from above for some reason while Emilia and Rem were expressing their true thoughts. While putting in a retort for Beatrice, Subaru also intentionally avoided the opportunity to say his thoughts out loud.

Liliana: “So, what did you think of it, Mr. Maid?”

However, the bard that made her nostrils flare while having an evil smile would not permit Subaru’s weak self-esteem. Subaru bites his lips, and he sighed, immediately giving up.

Subaru: “…Yeah, damn it. It hurts to say it, but it was amazing. I’m honestly concerned with you as a person and as a girl whenever you aren’t singing, but when you do sing, it’s the one time you are perfect. I was thinking of suggesting that you always sing, for the world’s sake, the people’s sake, and your own sake.”

Liliana: “What is this?! That should’ve been praise, and yet I don’t feel satisfied! How strange!”

He felt annoyed honestly praising her, so it turned into a complement with unintentional tints of abusive language. That made Beatrice snicker, and it caused Emilia to have a warm look.

Rem: “The sword demon love song is a total of five acts. I of course love the ending 5th act, but I can’t miss out on listening to tomorrow’s 3rd act, too. I’ll finish my work and run over, no matter what.

Subaru: “Rem, you really love this. As of now, I’m not so absorbed in Liliana’s song that it overwhelms me, but if I listen to it until the end, then my thoughts might change.”

Rem: “Yes, they sure will. The sword demon’s way of life is the ideal way for many men and women, even today. Subaru-kun, please come and see me someday just like in the sword demon love song.”

Subaru: “If the spoilers I heard were true, then wouldn’t that mean Rem and I would kill each other in the end?”

While replying, Subaru loosens his lips upon seeing Rem having her cheeks blush slightly because of her excitement.

It was rare for Rem to show her emotions this much. It was the same case with Beatrice going to listen, but Liliana’s singing voice really did have power. He was honestly a little jealous of that.

Subaru even tried so hard to become friendly with Rem as much as anyone else was that he literally died.

Subaru: “She simply did that. That was not fun.”

Liliana: “What is up with you, Mr. Maid? Even if you make such a whiny look, it’s neither cute nor pleasant at all. You need to look at yourself objectively more.”

Subaru: “You’re not very convincing with how you usually act. Or are you trying to make the difference big to make the amazingness you have when singing stand out? I guess you're a schemer aiming for a gap in moe."

Liliana: "I don't understand what you're saying, but that's exactly right munch munch"

Subaru: "Don't eat in the middle of speaking!"

The unexpected guessing ended in an unexpected way.

The song ended, and Liliana reached for baked sweets once again, having put her lyulyre against the wall. The majestic and splendid angel became a fallen angel the instant she was polluted by the world called sweetness.

Mixing in Liliana like that and transitioning into the tea party while chatting was the daily life for the past 3 days.

—However, today she didn't seem to behave herself.

Rem: "Excuse me."

Suddenly, Rem said that, stood up, and headed towards the window.

Rem opens the window without a sound like that, and she gazes outside of it as she squinted her eyes. She checked on the mansion's main entrance, and she picked out something from her pocket with her right hand.

Subaru: "Rem, what is that?"

Rem: "A little iron sphere. Since I don't have something I'm used to using at hand."

Rem rolls an iron sphere about the size of a golf ball in her palm, and she threw it outside at a high speed, having a shy expression as if she was embarrassed. After one second, there were thick, rough screams.

Rem: "—It hit."

Subaru gives Rem a wry smile as she looked outside and gave him a thumbs up.

When he looked outside while being next to Rem, he saw the white clothed people carrying their unconscious comrades.

Subaru: “They don’t learn do they…Rem has bashed it into their heads so many times for them to learn.”

Rem: “When I bash them, maybe the things they learn get poured out.”

Subaru shuddered at Rem, her not denying the bashing, and he sighed after watching the group that fled. This pattern of the group getting repelled by Rem like this repeated for three days.

Rem: “It was the people with white clothes this time.”

Subaru: “Yep…wait, what’s up with that bothering remark. This time it was people with white clothes?”

Rem: “About the groups that are clearly after Liliana-sama, the white clothed people and the crudely dressed people have mixed attacks. Most likely, I think the white clothed people employed thugs, as they didn’t have enough help.”

Subaru: “Seriously? Are you sure there are two groups? What’s the possibility of them being unrelated?”

Rem: “With this timing, it’s hard for me to think that the two reckless forces have separate goals.”

Subaru also nods in approval at Rem’s point. As one would expect, considering this timing, it would be too unlucky if the white clothed people coming for Liliana were a separate suicidal group attacking them.

But even so, he really was disturbed with the attack pattern.

Subaru: “Can’t we just go all out one time and catch them properly?”

Rem: “I did think about that, but they were really good at escaping. I think I can catch them if I chase them seriously…but I’m worried about going too far from the mansion.”

Subaru: “Even if they get past Ram, there’s still 2-3 boss characters in this mansion.”

Thinking of fighting strength, Rem was in the middle of the pack for real ability in the Roswaal residence.

There was Emilia, who was dependent on Puck, and Roswaal and Beatrice with their solo fighting power. When looked at from outside, this was a mansion that had such an excessive amount of fighting power gathered that it would be foolish to attack them.

Emilia: “But, leaving them on the loose too long would make me worried, too. It would be reeeaally problematic if they became impatient and started acting reckless.”

Subaru: “What I really want to do is solve this quickly. These are hot-headed guys that just come at us at random so I don’t think it’ll be a problem…but at worst, if they stop caring about how they go about it, they might even attack those around them.”

If say the damage reached the Irlam village, the matter would be at the worst outcome. Although, there was the worst case scenario of Roswaal burning the attackers to nothing without sympathy after they attacked his people.

Subaru: “It would be nice if Ram found a clue ASAP so that doesn’t happen.”

Emilia: “Ram is smart, so she’d definitely figure out something right away. We haven’t came up with anything even after listening to that song…”

The “Song” that Emilia spoke of was the “Song That Absolutely Must Not be Sung” that was recognized as the cause of people going after Liliana.

Subaru also listened to it many times to confirm it, and the “Song That Must Not be Sung No Matter What” condition already made no sense to him. However, even Subaru didn't feel like it was a song that had any special meaning.

It being closely related to a secret of a wealthy man making a fortune in a lifetime was also fake considering how it was a plain, pastoral song that was about a home town. Ram was acting now to confirm that.

Beatrice: "You're stuck in a trivial pickle, I suppose. Cutting up those bothersome and boorish people completely would make you feel better.."

Subaru: "People were even finally searching for a peaceful solution, read the atmosphere."

Tilting her cup of black tea to drink, Beatrice cruelly finishes saying that with an unemotional voice.

It was ultimately a last option to end it, but ending it by destroying the hostile people would leave a bad aftertaste. Subaru learned that lesson with the conclusion of the witchbeast uproar.

Not to mention, the people they were dealing with this time were not witchbeasts, but human like he was, so it would the lesson applied here even more.

Subaru: "As long as we have solid defense, we can impair them. … Plus, if we attack aggressively ourselves, they all might proceed at once."

Liliana: "We don't have enough help or information to do that. It's all over already. There's also the option to hang onto our heads and wait for the storm to pass by. Let's do that."

Subaru: "You, why are you so careless about this? Everyone's doing their best for your sake, you know?"

She was probably more relaxed in the time she was put under than she was in all her other days until now. Seeing Liliana relaxing, he guessed that he wouldn't need to have fears about his relationship with her after solving the issue.

But, there was still no hope for a process to arrive at the solution.

Subaru: “Going on the offensive ourselves, eh…”

He mutters the words he said again, and Subaru went into deep thought as he closed one eye. When he did, seeing Subaru’s face from the side, Emilia gently knit her nicely shaped eyebrows.

Emilia: “Oh, Subaru, by any chance are you doing some sort of evil plan again?”

Subaru: “Not nice of you to say again. …Though it sure is an evil plan.”

Subaru makes an evil smile in response to Emilia’s point, and he looks back at the four people inside the mansion. While having the attention of all of the girls, Subaru raised one finger and made a proposal.

Subaru: “I have a plan I want to try out. Can you guys help me?”

10

???: “—Still, what a stupid thing you’ve done. But it does make our job easier!”

Subaru stopped his cheeks from twitching as the man spit dirty saliva and laughed.

They were in a dim cabin, and the windows were sealed so that they couldn’t see outside. Light only came from the Ragmart light crystal, and it was still only enough to faintly see their surroundings.

A gang he was now familiar with that acted as rough as they looked. That’s how Subaru assessed them.

???: “If you continued staying at the mansion, nothing would’ve happened because of that monstrous maid, but now you’ve sealed your fate by showing up. You got a bit carried away, don’t you think?”

The gang, who were “just like thugs” with a crude aura, altogether consisted only of 8 people, counting the ones that were in and out of the cabin. These people were at the top of the list of men who treated Subaru cruelly with vulgar looks on their faces.

???: “Oh? So cuuuuute. You’re shaking, aren’t youuuu. Go calm her down, Mr. Handsome.”

Next to Subaru, who was acting frustrated, there was a girl faced down shaking her head. Once the man saw that and spoke to him with a mocking voice, Subaru took her hand to protect her from the laughing men.

Subaru: “It’ll be alright, calm down. You don’t have to worry, it’ll all work itself out…”

???: “How brave. As if this is something that’ll work itself out. We were always careful to avoid being found by that maid. Well, as long as we have the woman, you aren’t needed. After we beat the hell out of you, we’ll let you go.”

Seeing Subaru cheer her up, the man cracks his knuckles loudly to show off. When Subaru took a breath, he realized that she held his hand back tightly.

It was a native dress that only covered her body minimally. She looked lonely with her exposed white shoulders, so Subaru hugged her gently to hide her from the men.

She holds her breath, and the men whistle. Then it happened immediately after.

???: “—Are you serious about getting her back?!”

The door opens roughly along with that voice. The sunlight lights up the room in darkness, and once Subaru squinted reflexively, he saw a person’s shadow out of breath standing while being backlit.

When the shadow came into focus after several flashes of light, Subaru noticed that it was a young man. He was well dressed, and he caressed his hair randomly.

The boy looks around the room, notices Subaru and the others, and widens his eyes. And then,

???: “Oh, Liliana! I finally—wait, who’s that guy?”

???: “He’s someone from the mansion where she hid, and they were caught…Master?”

The eyes of the boy looking at Subaru sharpen, and his face suddenly flushes. Once he saw the thugs acting carefully to not hurt the young man’s mood, he figured that he was their boss—the mastermind.

Subaru makes that judgement, and the young man breathes near him heavily with his nose.

???: “You bastaaard! W□Who said you could touch her like that?!”

Subaru: “Oaah?!”

The enraged boy kicked Subaru into the wall with all his might.

Subaru’s head spins as he got hit with sudden violence, and the thugs around him take his place as they shout.

???: “M□Master, what are you doing?!”

???: “T□T□This guy was getting all intimate with my Liliana!”

The boy, shaking off the men who were holding him back, kneels before Liliana, who he forcefully pulled away from Subaru. He holds his hand out to Liliana, still facing down, and he says,

???: “Ahh, Liliana. We finally meet. It is your servant of love, Kiritaka. When I heard that you were brought to that infamous mansion of the “Demi-human lover”, heart-breaking fear overflowed like spring water. Ah, ah, Liliana…”

The boy named Kiritaka continues speaking to her, acting like he was getting drunk off his own words. Subaru could only frown since he knew his colleague had such a bad reputation that he couldn’t really say that it was a false accusation. While patting her shoulder, he looks back at the thugs and says,

Kiritaka: “Do you all not have any thoughts on working for ‘him’?”

???: “He’s a boss that’s generous with his money. He can have that thin bodied girl, while we take it easy for a while. ‘He’ would probably overlook us doing that for a bit.”

Based off the thugs’ grumbling, it seemed they also knew that ‘him’ meant the boss. Subaru finds out about how they are tight on money and anticipates that he was going to be wrong about all of the fuss around Liliana.

He’d thought that they were surely going for Liliana because of the “Song”, but it looked like she herself was the one Kiritaka, the mastermind, had the hots for.

Expressing love sure may be like paranoia, but the boy couldn’t see what else there was to it.

Kiritaka: “What’s wrong, Liliana?! Why won’t you look at me with your lovely eyes?”

Kiritaka, who had been appealing for love with nothing but passion, knits his brows in response to the girl that continued to keep silent.

Kiritaka: “Why won’t you speak…they must have done something awful when they took you!”

???: “Please let it go, Master! We did as you said. Not to be rude, but there’s no way anybody would think of doing something to a girl with a body this thin…”

Beatrice: “—Annoying squirts won’t shut up, I suppose.”

When Kiritaka and the others started quarrelling, a girl’s low voice interrupts them.

Kiritaka, hearing that with his face lifted, has his facial expression dyed with surprise. He was the only one who noticed it at this time. —That the voice of the girl in his face was different from the one he sought.

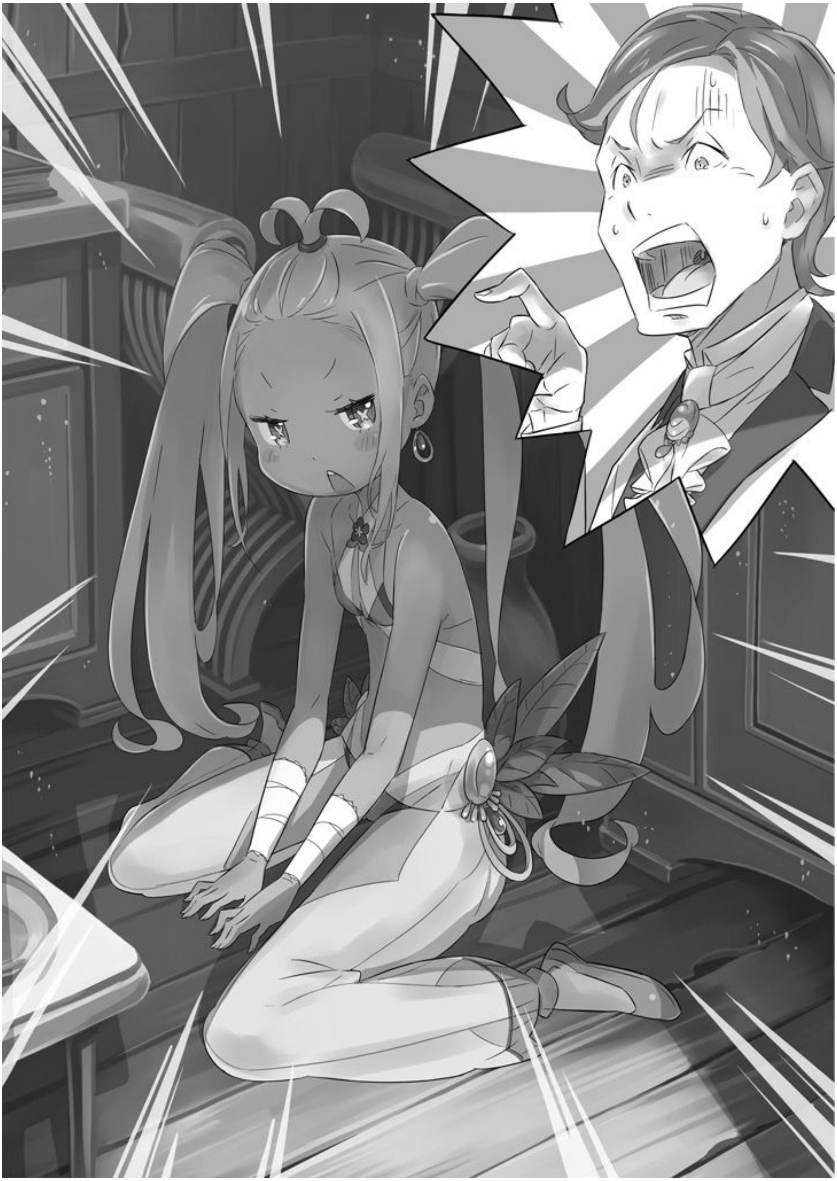
Kiritaka: “W□Who a□are you?! You’re not my Liliana?!”

Beatrice: “I don’t have the faintest memory of being named by you people.”

Subaru puts aside his retort inside of him that was ‘Didn’t they do that halfway through?’, and the girl stands up as her pigtails shook. But unlike Liliana’s hair, it was braided into quite elaborate drills.

Beatrice: “Inside and outside, a total of 9 people. —An amount I can count on my fingers, I suppose.”

The next moment, inside and outside of the hut, there was the sound of men screaming roughly in a violently blowing storm.



11

Attacking the gang going after Liliana was a simple plan Subaru proposed.

Subaru: “A decoy plan where we try getting caught, since we couldn’t find out where they go after chasing them away, and get taken to the mastermind. Good thing they weren’t an energetic gang.”

Beatrice: “You made me go this far. Of course it was going to go well.”

Beatrice lets out a sigh. She was using the towel Subaru gave her to wipe off her hands and feet.

She wipes off the paint that changed her skin color, and her brown appearance was slowly returning to its usual light skin. Subaru folds his arms while looking at Beatrice, who was wiping her whole body diligently.

Subaru: “Still, the more you return to your usual appearance, the more I feel like something’s weird about that getup.”

Beatrice: “…And whose proposal was it again to make me look like this?”

Subaru: “I mean, yeah it was my proposal, but…I didn’t think you’d look this pitiful.”

When Subaru shrugged his shoulders as if to lament Beatrice, blue veins showed on her forehead.

Beatrice’s current appearance was a disguise to trick the attackers—in other words, exposing dancer fashion that Liliana would usually wear. There wasn’t a significant difference between Liliana’s constitutional feminineness and Beatrice’s constitutional feminineness, so why did he feel more pity for Beatrice?

It was probably because he knew how she usually looked and that she was someone he was friends with.

Beatrice: “If Bubby didn’t ask me and if it wasn’t for that girl’s sake, then I wouldn’t have done this, I suppose.”

Subaru: “Well, by using that as an excuse and expecting it to go well, you surprise yourself with how bad your personality is. …Still, all in all, you really are simple.”

Beatrice: “I feel like you just made a ridiculously irritating assessment of me.”

Subaru: “I complimented you. It’s the latest trend of signs of moe. Not sure if it’ll stick 10 years later, though.”

Subaru ignores Beatrice’s look as she scowled, and he views the disastrous scene in the cabin. On the floor all over the place, there were the beat up thugs that invoked Beatrice’s wrath. Subaru finds that Kiritaka, the mastermind, was now trapped under the large men, and so he put his hands together and prayed.

There was a condition for the decoy strategy, which was that Liliana couldn’t be exposed to danger. Making Rem be her guard, someone the men were being careful of, was a no. Putting Emilia under the bus would be outrageous, so Subaru and Beatrice had to be the perpetrators.

Therefore, Puck asked and convinced Beatrice, who was hesitant, and she was made out to be Liliana, getting taken away from the girls as they screeched, and the decoy strategy was put into action.

Although, Subaru, the one who directed the plan, didn’t expect it to go this well.

Subaru: “It’s scary how fitting you are with my own plans. But since we’ve met the mastermind, Ram’s efforts were in vain. Now there’s even more of a chance that Ram spews venom when she comes back. This is too depressing.”

Beatrice: “If you have time to complain, you should tie these guys up so they don’t get away, I suppose. The younger sister will be here before long, and we’ll have to take these guys back.”

Subaru: “That’s when they’ll have a scary discussion with Roswaal. He’s in this with us, though he had it coming.”

It was the conclusion of the expression of love that went too far. This basically meant that stalkers were scary no matter what age and no matter what world it was. Kiritaka, who foamed at the mouth and fainted, was the only one who knew what was so great about Liliana besides when she was singing.

Subaru: “Anyhow, that was a disappointing conclusion. If the white clothed guys knew that we captured the boss, they would have surrendered and abandoned ship. With this, I think the case is closed.”

Subaru still felt something was missing, but for the time being he just dropped his shoulders in relief. Then, what he picked up with his hand as he reached out was a lyulyre given to them generously that was inside a case. It was an option they brought along after Beatrice disguised herself as Liliana.

Subaru: “It’s undamaged, right? Who knows what Liliana would demand if it broke.”

Subaru, with a simple posture, takes out the Lute carefully and plays it with his fingers. He confirms that it can make a light sound, and Beatrice was surprised when Subaru started to play a random tune.

Beatrice: “You can play…that instrument?”

Subaru: “The ropes of it aren’t really that different from an acoustic guitar. I borrowed it from Liliana every now and then in these past 3 days, and I can usually play it if it’s a 70’s folk song.”

Back at his original world, he would borrow his father’s guitar and spend his free time playing and singing folk songs. It was useless practice since no one was there to listen, but his creativity was finally flourishing now that he crossed over worlds.

Subaru: “Copyright won’t catch up, so I guess now is the time I should start a renovation in this world’s music.”

Beatrice: “As far as I know, this is the first time I’ve seen a human improve only skills that are useless as you are. What’s the point of being good at only those things?”

Subaru: “The fact that there is no point makes me burn with passion. That’s what being romantic is.”

Listening to Subaru’s nonsense, Beatrice made a completely astonished look and sighed. Then, without any particular meaning behind it, she starts to listen carefully with her eyes closed.

With a curious, calm look on her face.

Subaru: “Sheesh. —Guess I have no choice.”

It would be awkward to stop playing in front of Beatrice when she was already ready to listen.

While Subaru used that as an excuse, the two of them had a peaceful concert alone until Rem came running into the cabin with a worried look.

12

Emilia: “So our attackers and the song have nothing to do with each other?”

Emilia, hearing about the circumstances from Subaru, murmurs that with her eyes wide open.

The decoy plan safely ended as a success, and as for the attackers and the mastermind brought into the mansion, they should now be having a nice little chat with Roswaal and Rem.

Subaru went to Emilia and Liliana while he waited for them to get something out of the interrogation, and he was now done with telling the details to the two people who were in suspense this whole time the strategy was carried out.

The two finished listening to the story at the mansion’s courtyard, and they both were relieved now that a peaceful solution was in sight.

Emilia: “Really, thank goodness. Subaru, you aren’t hurt anywhere, right? And is Beatrice safe?”

Subaru: “They roughed me up a bit so I want to cry, but I’ll act tough since I’m in front of Emilia-tan. Beatrice also turned back to normal, changed clothes right away, and shut herself in a room.”

Emilia: “I see. …Beatrice was so cute too. It’s kind of a shame.”

Subaru smiles wryly at Emilia, who became despondent.

As for Beatrice, she must’ve suffered from having to be a dress-up doll. When she came back, she immediately changed clothes, threw the clothes at Subaru, and quickly disappeared into the forbidden archives.

Liliana: “Is that so? …I really wanted to thank Beatrice-sama, that’s too bad.”

Then, Liliana, who had been silent up to this point, let that out quietly.

As one would expect, it seemed like Liliana also had a lot of thoughts on being presented with the settlement of an uproar focused on her, since she was the victim of a pretty insidious stalker.

Subaru: “About that mastermind Kiritaka, do you know him? From what I’ve seen, he seems to have quite the crush on you, but maybe it’s his bad eyesight.”

Liliana: “Ignoring that last part, uh, I do know him. It was before I came here, and before I came to Warwar. There was a commercial town I passed by, and I think there was a heir of a famous merchant family.”

Subaru: “I thought it was going to be like the rich man who got fed up with you, but it’s exactly like it. …Did you not know that you were being followed…or well, I can’t believe you weren’t aware of it.”

Liliana: “He liked the songs a lot, and treated me with stuff like delicious food…but I wanted to leave it at that and say goodbye.”

Subaru: “So you’re saying that everywhere you end up, you always cajole someone?”

Perhaps Liliana’s looks were in high demand in this world, like with the rich man at Warwar. It was a view that conflicted with Subaru’s, as someone who thought Emilia looked the best.

Being stared at rudely by Subaru, Liliana holds onto her thin body with her arms.

Liliana: “W□Why are you looking at me with dirty eyes all of a sudden? Have you finally fell for my charm, knowing that everyone else is so interested in me? Did I steal your heart?”

Subaru: “There, there. I’m really glad that it looks like you are back to your normal self. You are not being stalked because of your own clumsiness, so don’t have shame. Here, I’ll give you your lyulyre back.”

Liliana: “Hmph. That doesn’t satisfy me at all! But I’ll take back my lyulyre.”

He pushes the lyulyre against Liliana, and she accepts it with a dissatisfied look.

Still, if she was fine then she was fine, even if it was just on the surface. The more he could get out of her, the better.

Subaru: “What is it, Emilia-tan? Why are you looking at me with those kind, cute eyes?”

Emilia: “No, it’s nothing. I was just thinking about how Subaru is as dishonest as Beatrice.”

Subaru tilts his head in confusion at Emilia, who gave a slight chuckle.

Liliana: “But with this matter, now I owe a lot to everyone. So I can’t just start talking about a story of a new hero with the lord. I have so much regret. There’s no more hope.”

Liliana viewed the situation objectively; in this situation she put herself in, on one hand, the immediate problem had been resolved, and she was depressed with a shocked look on her face. From her point of view, she was someone who caused trouble repeatedly at the mansion.

Even Liliana, someone who shined with shamelessness, didn't want act any more bold than this.

However, if Liliana knew Roswaal's true motive, she truly was worrying over nothing. Rather, since Liliana the bard had a debt to get involved with the royal election, you could even say that this strife actually lead to a beneficial result.

Subaru: "Well, Roswaal will tell you about that part of the story. He might even give you a backhanded compliment for indebting yourself."

Liliana: "…? What do you mean by that?"

Subaru: "You'll find out soon enough."

Emilia and Liliana both tilt their heads in response to Subaru's speaking. Emilia couldn't wrap her head around the situation behind the scenes, though it would've been nice if at least Liliana could, and it was cute how she was trying to help out of purely good will.

Then, Subaru gets up from the lawn as he went "All right", and he looks up at the mansion. It had been nearly one hour since the start of the interrogation—this should be about the time when they got some sort of information out of them regarding the situation.

Subaru: "It wouldn't be right to make the stalker's victim and the assailants confront each other, but I do want to see what Roswaal has to say about this. I'm gonna go check it out for a bit."

Liliana: "Oh, then before you do that, I'd like to leave my instrument and a change of clothes in my room."

With a serious look, Liliana, who heard that he was going to where the mastermind was, requests him to prepare her things. It's true that it wouldn’t be suiting to have the clothes Beatrice wore and the lyulyre in the confrontation room.

Subaru: “Then let’s leave behind the luggage first. Emilia-tan, you can go to the office.”

Emilia: “Yeah, got it. We need to discipline the evil people properly, after all.”

Emilia, who was gentle and cute, clasps her slender hand as she was in a huff.

While feeling pleasant, Subaru heads towards the direction opposite of Emilia with Liliana. Emilia was heading to the office from the courtyard, while they were heading to the east wing where the guest room was at the front.

And so—

13

Emilia, who had been going up the mansion from the courtyard using the main wing stairs, suddenly raises her face because of a sudden presence. She sees Rem land on the landing of the stairs that headed up to the third floor, swirling her skirt.

Emilia, seeing the short edge of her skirt swaying gently, blinks with surprise.

Emilia: “Rem, it’s dangerous to run like that through the corridor.”

Rem: “—. Emilia-sama, sorry. But it’s an emergency.”

Emilia: “An emergency?”

Rem, someone who was usually calm, showed a rare sight of being in a panic, so Emilia raised an eyebrow. Then, Rem trots up to Emilia, and she looks around the bottom of the stairs.

Rem: “Weren’t you with Subaru-kun and Liliana-sama?”

Emilia: “Um, they went to go leave the luggage in the room. …Did you find out something?”

Rem: “Roswaal-sama got them to spill most of the beans. Things like the ringleader is the heir of the company Muse, the person named Kiritaka Muse, and that he is after Liliana-sama because of an extreme crush.”

Emilia: “Yeah. Subaru did tell me that much…”

As for Liliana, she herself had no idea how much of an infatuation he had, and it was strange to her. But Rem shook her head in response to Emilia’s reply.

Rem: “Sorry, but that’s not the point. About Kiritaka, he hired thugs and paid them to bring Liliana-sama to him. Though, his efforts came to nothing because of Subaru-kun’s decoy strategy…”

Emilia: “There’s more to it?”

Rem: “According to Kiritaka, he kept insisting that he had no memory of hiring the white clothed group and that he had nothing to do with them.”

The moment Emilia heard that, she understands why Rem was in such a hurry and jumps down the stairs. With Rem next to her, Emilia ran as fast as she could to the east wing, where Subaru and Liliana went—to Liliana’s room.

Emilia: “—They aren’t…here.”

Emilia doesn’t find the people she sought in the room left open, and her voice trembles because of her own blunder.

14

On top of the rattling cart being pulled, there was Subaru wrapped in a bamboo mat, glaring at the sky.

Liliana and him were going back inside the mansion, and just when they realized they were hit, they were in this situation. He was laying down facing up, and he only saw the blue sky.

It was the worst situation. He was tied with rope from the top of the cloth that covered him tightly, and he couldn't move at all.

Once he made a guess based off this situation of pain being left slightly on his head and being wrapped in a bamboo bat,

???: "Oh, looks like this lad woke up too. Sorry for treating you roughly."

The voice Subaru heard came from someone that noticed he woke up.

When he moved his head to see where the voice came from, he saw a white clothed person sitting. Subaru confirms the bad taste of having pure white from top to bottom, and he was pretty much right about the situation.

He thought they'd caught their boss, but the white clothed people kept acting—so, they were unrelated.

Subaru: "Which means that the Liliana fan and the song are separate matters! This is too complicated!"

Liliana: "I've got it. Please listen. —Liliana: "The Name of a Guilty Flower."

Subaru: "Shut up! This is not the time to be saying that!!"

Subaru roars upon hearing the voice of the girl wrapped in a bamboo mat just like he was.

He wasn't in a place where he could see Liliana, but at the very least, it seemed she had enough composure to say her usual slightly stupid comments. While feeling relief inside thanks to that, Subaru looks at the white clothed man.

Subaru: "Anyways, would it be safe to say that we'll be able to talk without you hitting me and kicking me?"

???: "…Yeah, that'll make it easier for us too. I should've said this earlier, but our top priority is to transport you peacefully."

Subaru: “You really should have. You’re not very convincing.”

When Subaru made that reply, the man said “You got that right” with a soft chuckle. Then, the man takes off the hood of his white clothing, exposing his unshaven face to the air. It was a middle-aged man in his 40s.

???: “We are the mercenary “Scales of the White Dragon”.”

The man, face exposed as he named his organization, was looking to negotiate. While feeling the shaking of the cart platform, Subaru also felt like there was something off about his attitude, which was relatively rational considering how he roughly kidnapped him.

Subaru: “Hey, I think I’m going to feel sick. Can’t you sit me up before we talk?”

???: “If I do that, you’ll then want to lean against something, so it’ll be too much to deal with. I got carried away and tied you up too tight, practically like a pole, so it’d be a pain to make you stand too. Sorry, but you’re gonna have to lie down.”

Subaru: “I’m going to vomit once I hit my limit. All I have is mayonnaise inside of me. Feel the horror of my white vomit.”

He only ate the minimum amount of food this morning because of the decoy plan—he had only slurped mayonnaise he reproduced in the different world, so if he did throw up, that would be the only thing to come out of him.

Then, when the man gave up and threw his hands up upon hearing Subaru’s reply, a different voice came into the conversation.

Liliana: “Is this not a dragon carriage, but a brave ox Farrow carriage? Feels like you’re using a pretty outdated animal. It’s antique now.”

???: “I don’t care if you’re trying to shock me, being sarcastic, or trying to praise me with that, but nothing good will come out of doing any of that, so shut your mouth for a bit.”

Subaru tilts his head as much as he could, and at the corner of his eye he sees someone’s feet caught. It looked like Liliana was laying down facing the opposite direction of Subaru, and she was moving her tiptoes repeatedly.

Subaru: “I wouldn’t really put it as one disaster happening after another. Maybe more like experiencing two disasters and still not figuring out what’s going on.”

Liliana: “The success of the careless decoy strategy completely backfired! I wonder what Mr. Maid has to say about this as the one who proposed it.”

Subaru: “If I can just smack you for acting like you’re not a part of this, I won’t even care what happens anymore.”

Somehow Subaru was keeping calm thanks to Liliana managing to act the way she usually would.

They were actually completely in the palms of the white clothed people’s hands.

Just like Liliana said, they went to an insecure place after the decoy strategy’s success, and they were attacked. The situation had the two groups cooperate, even though they hadn’t even planned to do so, and the groups led them around by their noses.

Subaru: “Now’s about the time when the ones in the mansion should’ve probably noticed that we aren’t there…”

The fact that he had only a few people dedicated to pursuing meant that it was going to be difficult for them to get immediate help.

Even out of the little personnel he had, Ram was out of the mansion to investigate. There was no way Emilia and Roswaal would act directly, and whether Beatrice would help or not was unknown.

Which would mean that the only one who could surely do something was Rem.

Liliana: “And she has to guard the others too, so I’m guessing we can’t count on it?”

Subaru: "…Yeah, that's right."

Those words hit Liliana where it hurt, as if she had predicted Subaru's thoughts.

If he didn't have much options with his forces and the situation, then how would he guarantee their safety—

Subaru: "We won't rely on anyone else, and it'll depend on our own negotiation."

As ready to talk as to act, he carves the path to release them, one that wouldn't incur the anger of the person they were dealing with.

Fortunately, the person had intentions of talking with them. Subaru had no choice but to come up with a solution they both would agree with, and struggle so that they could be released safely.

Liliana: "Do your best, Mr. Maid."

Subaru: "There's a higher chance it'll work if you don't say anything. I'm not going to repeat it again, so just keep that in mind."

???: "Are you two just about done talking?"

The man who had been waiting for Subaru and Liliana to stop talking gets in Subaru's eyes again, perhaps thinking that this would be a good time to do so. The man sinks down onto the cargo platform and sat cross legged.

???: "So I'll introduce us again…we are the mercenary "Scales of the White Dragon"."

Subaru: "Sorry, but I just left my hometown so I don't really know much about the rumors here. That woman probably doesn't know about it either, seeing as she's a bard that goes wherever life takes her, a rootless wanderer. Plus, she's a bit dumb anyways."

Liliana: "Hey, Mr. Maid?! Why're ya callin' people stupid?"

The conversation was going to stop moving forward, so Subaru ignores Liliana's complaint. The man with an unshaved face also treats Liliana the same way, ignoring her voice as he felt his chin.

???: "Even if you aren't familiar with it, I can't do anything about that. Even in Lugunica only one area knows this name, and it's already been almost 10 years. We can't push ourselves as much as we did back then, too."

Subaru: "Back then…did you guys reform or something? If you're going to be naughty, you should consider how old you are."

???: "We neither broke up nor retired. Though, there was a reduction in activity. This is because there's a final job we have to settle. We won't throw in the towel until it's taken care of."

The unshaven man says that with a low voice, determination in his eyes.

A strict aura, and a hint of a tragic man. Subaru guesses that he had some uncommon circumstances, and he sighed while lying down.

Subaru: "What is that last major task needed for you guys to throw in the towel?"

???: "Our mercenary group's safekeeper took every single bit of what we owned and betrayed us. We're going to get back what he stole. We won't stop until then."

Subaru: "…? What does that have to do with Liliana?"

Liliana couldn't possibly be the betrayer, considering their ages.

???: "You see, that damn backstabber built a mansion at our town. That's where he went on a spending spree and lived the good life. …We found his tracks. We were going to get our money back immediately and make him pay. But, that bastard!"

Subaru: "…"

???: "The bastard noticed that we found out where he was, hid the money in a cave, of all places, and sealed it from the top with a "Metia". The key to remove that seal is the "Song"."

Subaru: “The song…! So that’s how it’s related.”

As Subaru heard the unshaved man’s angry voice, “Song” ran through his mind like thunder.

The old man that welcomed Liliana and taught her “the song that shouldn’t be sung”—that person was the safekeeper that betrayed the “Scales of the White Dragon”. The song wasn’t hiding how the old man built a fortune. The song itself was the “key to the seal for the treasure the old man hid”.

The old man forced Liliana to make the key, who happened to pass by, and he drove her out of town to keep her away from the seal. The “Scales of the White Dragon” noticed that Liliana knew about the song, and so they tried to capture her. Kiritaka was just an idiot. Just noise that complicated the situation.

Liliana: “So the one who betrayed you was Warwar’s rich man. Do you want revenge?”

???: “It’s too late to bear a grudge against that guy who betrayed us, so we don’t care about that. What we want back is the treasure…all we want is a significant amount of money. We have to get it back.”

The man facing down had a serious look as he lowered the tone of his voice.

For some reason, they needed a large amount of money. They also didn’t have time to waste.

Subaru: “Do you know where the cave with the money is?”

???: “I do. So all we need is the song to remove the seal. In other words…”

Subaru: “You’d be extremely happy to have Liliana remove that seal with the song.”

The problem was solved, and Subaru and her were released safely.

Subaru looked very cheerful since he found a common ground and a way for them to be released safely. He calls out to Liliana, who shook her tiptoes, to get her approval.

Subaru: “Hey, Liliana. You were listening, right? As long as you sing that “Song That Shouldn’t Be Sung No Matter What” in the cave, the problem is settled. So…”

Liliana: “—Fuse”

Subaru/???: “What?”

The foolish voices of Subaru and the unshaved man overlap.

It was because Liliana’s answer was so unexpected that it made them speak in unison unintentionally.

Liliana stretches her tiptoes firmly. It was almost looked like she was saying that she wouldn’t change her mind—.

Liliana: “I don’t sing to open the seal to caves, nothing like that.”

“…”

Liliana: “Songs are…songs aren’t replacements for stuff that will eventually disappear, like treasure and gold. I refuse! Songs, stories…bards, don’t you dare look down on them!”

15

Subaru adjusted his seating position on the cold, hard ground, trying to ease his aches.

He rubbed his thighs together, sat inside this chilly cave, wondering what the time was. Dusk had been setting in before they’d entered the cave, so it was likely nighttime outside by now.

The howl of the wind would echo through the cave from time to time, brushing against his eardrums, like the wails of many evil spirits.

He could see why this place was feared as an underworld disconnected from the world of men, at least if it were not for the faint glow of moss on the walls and the presence of people hovering nearby.

Subaru: “With the howl of the wind, this place gets shivering cold, even in broad daylight. Even the locals refuse to go near it with all the talk about how no good can come from it. Guess that makes it the perfect place to hide treasure.”

The unshaven man, who was standing by a wall, gave him a fierce grin, as if reinforcing Subaru’s conviction.

His looks and manner of speaking were rather rough, but despite that, he was pretty rational and willing to talk things out with them. He still had his mask off, which he’d removed during their journey, and was interacting with them with his face uncovered.

Subaru: “Though, I think I’ve heard somewhere that a kidnapper showing their face to their hostages is a bad omen.”

Unshaven Man: “It’s your bad for getting involved, bro. It’s gonna be annoyin’ if you’re gonna kick up a fuss about it now. If you’re gonna hold a grudge, then hold it against yourself for being with the lil’ lady back there.”

Subaru: “No way, it’s pretty obvious that I’d hold a grudge against you people. Don’t try and shift the blame!”

Unshaven Man: “I guess that’s how it is.”

The unshaven man gave his belly a pleasant slap and smiled at his hostage, who just wouldn’t shut up.

How could he even smile in a situation like this? Subaru thought to himself.

???: “Quit being so fucking stubborn! You’d better not piss us off too much!”

A furious voice came echoing from deeper inside the cave, drowning out the howl of the wind and bringing all kinds of threats, intimidation and coercion with it. The rage it carried was the real deal. It was obvious to anyone listening that their fury could explode at any moment, bringing violence with it. Yet despite that…

Liliana: “Absooolutely not, I refuse! I don’t sing my songs in any other way than the way they’re meant to be enjoyed! You can’t treat bards like this!”

Matters had been complicated by the frantic anger she was showing in response to him.

The girl’s shrill voice rejected the demands the man had set, and instead kept insisting on the importance of her own professionalism.

Unshaven Man: “Doesn’t look like they’re makin’ any headway.”

The unshaven man briskly scratched his short hair. Subaru completely agreed with what he’d muttered.

They’d both reached conclusions they couldn’t back down from, so it seemed unlikely that they’d give into a compromise.

Several hours had passed since Liliana had tearfully cussed them out. Their heated argument hadn’t stopped, even when they’d arrived at the cave.

The White Dragon Scales were a small group that numbered around ten people in total, which included the unshaven man that was keeping an eye on Subaru. Apparently he was the representative of the group. It was thanks to him taking the sensible approach that they’d, so far, managed to avoid a situation where the others would use violence against Liliana and Subaru.

Nevertheless, there were still several among them who’d suggested making use of the extremists. Even now, a young man with short brown hair and a ghastly voice was engaged in a shouting match with Liliana, spittle flying from their mouths. The youth had a bandage wrapped around his nose; the way he’d acquired this injury served as one of the reasons for his stubbornness.

Unshaven Man: “That’s what he got from bein’ hit by the blue-haired girl when we first began to probe your mansion. His nose got smashed up good, so his resentment towards that is part of the reason why he’s so pissed.”

Subaru could only agree with a "Uh-huh" to what he'd said. There were three more of them that had strong shades of anger filling their voices. They'd all been victims too, who had fallen prey to Rem's small iron sphere.

Subaru: "But Liliana's stubborn as well… like stubborn as heck. Is professionalism really something so important that you'd trade your life for?"

Liliana wasn't going to change her mind, even with each of the men threatening her in tandem.

Though you'd think she was just a frivolous, air-headed woman, she did also have this side to her where she'd stubbornly stick to her beliefs like this. Troublesome and difficult to deal with; she was the very paragon of that.

Unshaven Man: "…It's a big deal for her. There's always something out there that makes you willin' to trade your life for."

None other than the man in white garb voiced his agreement with Liliana's intent, having caught ear of Subaru's muttering.

Subaru turned doubtfully towards him. As soon as he did, the unshaven man fixed his gaze at the back of the cave with an uncomfortable look on his face.

Unshaven Man: "Anyone can eat, breathe 'n sleep if they just wanna stay alive. But, ya know, there's always gonna be stuff you can't compromise on when yer tryin' to do other things in life."

Subaru: "You sure are acting all relaxed. Shouldn't you be in a hurry?"

Unshaven Man: "The other guys are I guess. But for me… I don't really have a reason why I should be in a hurry anymore. And yet, I'm still goin' along with this because I'd like to believe I wasn't just eatin', breathin' 'n sleepin'."

Subaru: "…"

The unshaven man looked down, took the liquor bottle that he had with him, and downed it in one go. He crudely wiped away some drops that had spilled from the side of his lips, and turned his somewhat vacant eyes towards the darkness.

Subaru didn't know the details behind this, nor was he planning on asking. The man wasn't going to tell him that much either. Even so, spending time like this was only going to add to their pains.

Subaru: "Hey, sir. beardy. I'm sorry, but it'd be really sweet if you could loosen this rope a bit, so it's easier to move about."

Unshaven Man: "Heyhey, I ain't gonna use violence 'cuz I'd like to resolve things peacefully, but I can't let you be free like that. It'd spell trouble if you were to be found showin' signs of escape, or whatever."

Subaru: "I know, I know. I'm not going to run away. You can still leave both of my hands tied up. Just let me walk to the back on my own two feet. I've got a bunch of things I'd like to say to Liliana."

The unshaven man pondered Subaru's request for a while, before heaving out a sigh.

Unshaven Man: "It's not like we're gettin' anywhere at this rate… Fine. We've been persuading her, but there's probably a better chance of her bein' swayed by one of her own. Go persuade her properly. For both of our sakes."

The unshaven man untied the rope from Subaru's legs.

Subaru stretched his legs out, which had grown completely stiff in these hours, and after he'd gotten the blood flowing properly in them, he stood up.

Subaru: "You come as well. There's no point in you staying here drinking liquor."

With a jerk of his chin, Subaru headed towards the back of the cave with his arms still tied behind his back. A cold breeze swept across his fringe as he walked forward, and for a few moments, his eyes squeezed shut due to the light of the Lagmite ore.

Then, he tentatively opened his eyes and took in the situation.

Subaru: "…So this is the door that's sealed by the song. What a troublesome Meteor."

There was a black wall in front of him, blocking the way to the deepest part of the cave.

The wall was practically crammed between the rocky passage, with patterns grooved into its surface and a blue crystal in its middle. Though the material it was made of resembled iron at first glance, its stygian appearance gave it an uncannily creepy and oppressive look.

Unshaven Man: "This contraption sets specific conditions 'n won't move unless they're fulfilled. It doesn't have to always be a song, but this door's fine-tuned to use the lil' lady's song as its key."

Subaru: "It's fine-tuned to Liliana's song?"

Unshaven Man: "It won't open if someone else sings the same song. They made the Meteor lis'en to the song back at the mansion, and sealed the cave up like that. That's why only the lil' lady's song is capable of opening it."

Subaru once again stepped towards the Meteor after hearing the unshaven man's explanation. Liliana was standing in front of the black wall, refusing to listen to anything she was told. Along with her were the men clad in white, who were painstakingly trying to get her to sing.

???: "We're just one goddamn step away, don't screw about! Just sing a wee bit and everything will be over!"

Liliana: "I refuse. How could anyone look down on singing so much, to even go as far as saying "sing a wee bit". Though my inspiration is flashing! Listen if you please: "—Your hearts, unlike the clothing you wear, are pitch black."

Subaru: "Shut the hell up! You really never change, quit provoking them!"

Subaru snapped at Liliana as she kept provoking them, her face averted away.

The men reacted in surprise at this third party intrusion. Liliana too looked up at him, keeping only one of her eyes open.

Liliana: “Whoa, what’s up Mr. Maid? Have things perhaps gotten to the point where they’re going to beat you up to make me listen to what they have to say? Just to let you know, I’m not going to give in, even if they beat you to a pulp.”

Subaru: “Quit it, this isn’t going to cut it. Besides, if these people get into the mood to play hard, it’s going to be you, the woman, who’s going to have a rougher time. You know that, right? Right?”

Liliana: “Wh-What are you imagining? S-Stop… That’s shameful…”

Liliana’s face turned beet-red, denoting her shame at how the conversation she’d been thrown into had developed. Subaru let out a sigh seeing her thoughtless demeanor and then looked over at the men.

Subaru: “I’m all too familiar with the troubles you’re going through, she doesn’t listen to anything, right? I hate to say this, but I doubt this girl’s gonna change her mind, even if you ruffle her up.”

The men looked at each other awkwardly after Subaru had spoken, his words laced with sighs.

Subaru: “So, you’re definitely not going to sing, yeah? They’re so eagerly awaiting your song, yet you still won’t sing it.”

Liliana: “Mr. Maid.”

Liliana looked straight at him with a serious look on her face.

Liliana: “I’d sing if my song was actually needed. But what these fine gentlemen are looking for isn’t my song. They’re looking for the results my song will bring them. I will never sing for something like that. Even if they cut my throat and tear out my tongue.”

Subaru: “So in the worst case, you wouldn’t budge, even if your life was on the line…?”

Liliana: “Correct, even if my life was on the line. Creases would appear in one’s pride, once you abandon it to save your own skin. Then it would fold quite easily, over and over again. Eventually, the countless creases would make it so your pride wouldn’t be visible to anyone else. I would definitely hate looking at a prideless me in the mirror.”

Liliana chewed her lower lip after she declared that.

Her expression showed resolve towards the possibility that her comments had bought the displeasure of the men, as well as preparedness to be hurt by them.

An unwavering sense of professionalism. Rather, that was already quintessentially Liliana’s way of life.

Subaru let out a sigh at her stubborn attitude, having lost count of the times he’d done so already.

Subaru: “My life is going to be in danger as well if you’re not going to sing. Are you not going to bother, even when it comes to that?”

Liliana: “…hk”

Though she’d kept her gaze steeled, she had let out a small noise, still not showing agreement to what he’d said.

Something wavered in her eyes for a moment, causing Subaru to smile broadly, as if he were saying “Oh well there’s no helping it.”

If she’d been the sort of girl who unreservedly put other’s lives beneath her pride, Subaru would have gladly been able to give up on her.

…However, since she’d hesitated and considered putting a crease in her pride for a moment, there was really no helping it.

Subaru: “It’s as you’ve heard. She’s not going to sing. So I’m not gonna make her do it either.”

Unshaven Man: “Hey, what are you…”

The unshaven man expressed his surprise at what Subaru had said, almost like he was saying, “That’s not what you told me.” He could sense far more dangerous signs developing among the men nearby as well.

Liliana: “Mr. Maid, why are you…?”

Subaru: “If you don’t wanna sing, then you don’t have to. It’s just how I feel about it as well.”

Subaru shielded Liliana from the men’s gazes. Her voice trembled as she looked at him from behind. Hearing how her voice sounded, Subaru realized that he was on the right track and faced towards the front.

Subaru: “Her songs aren’t tools. You’d all understand if you were to actually hear them.”

One of the Men: “You’d better stop screwing around…”

Subaru: “If she doesn’t wanna sing, then I definitely don’t wanna make her! As much as it frustrates me, her singing is really damn good! Just about anyone would be able to see that if they were to listen. I don’t wanna do anything that’d make her pointlessly waste her talent, so I ain’t gonna let her!”

Subaru shielded Liliana as he broke into that tirade, standing in front of the men whose eyes had grown cold.

The unshaven man looked around in panic, but all the other men clad in white seemed ready to cross the line at last, thanks to Subaru’s insistence. One by one, the men stepped forward towards them, the air ripe with tension.

Liliana: “Mr. Maid…”

Liliana called out to Subaru, her voice quivering due to the ferocious looks on the men’s faces.

There was something apologetic about her voice…

One of the Men: “Fucking bastards, I’m gonna get even with this fucker and then force that little girl to sing…”

Subaru: “How about we do this instead!”

One of the Men: “Huuh?”

The white garbed man who’d leaned towards him, looking ready for a fight, was caught off guard by Subaru’s shout and toppled over.

Subaru brought his own face near to his, as he lifted his own up, and said.

Subaru: “…Let’s just ignore the Meteor’s seal while still taking all the treasure.”

16

All it took was a simple change to how they approached it.

The treasure was hidden in a cave located inside a rocky mountain, not an iron-walled fortress or a pyramid made from huge slabs of stone. The only thing blocking their way was this magical door.

Subaru: “Thus, we can just dig a tunnel and go around it. The bedrock is pretty loose, so it should collapse if you dig your pickaxes into it.”

Unshaven Man: “Who would be dumb enough to meticulously hide their treasure in such a brittle cave..?”

The unshaven man muttered that beside Subaru, looking rather shocked, as the latter supervised the excavation with his arms folded.

With sweat pooling down his forehead and his face smudged with dust, the unshaven man looked up ahead of him and said,

Unshaven Man: “Even so, I wonder why I couldn’t get my head around something so simple.”

Subaru: “When you’re so dead set on looking at things in one way, you lose sight of all the options you have at hand. You see, I live my life to find faults in others, that's our main difference."

Unshaven Man: "That doesn't really sound flattering."

He forced a smile on his face as he heard Subaru's un-boastlike boast, before then straightening his back up and returning to his work. The men clad in white were taking turns digging the tunnel with some tools they'd brought along.

They were extremely motivated considering that the treasure they sought was almost within their grasp. The tunnel that would bypass the Meteor would probably be completed in no time.

Subaru: "In that case, I can safely stand down from my post. Guess I'll just be a bystander for now."

Liliana: "…Um, Mr. Maid."

Liliana timidly called over to Subaru as he sat on a rock in afterthought mode.

Both of them had already been freed from their restraints, so if they felt like leaving this place, they could. However, they were sticking around because it'd be a shame to leave without seeing the treasure.

That, and they couldn't really say that their efforts were going to let them off the hook, even if they'd been released without harm.

Subaru: "What's up? It's not like you to be so timid. Why don't you take a seat? Though be careful, the rocks are sharp around here."

Liliana: "Alright… Well then, excuse me, but… Hyaaa?! OW! OWOWOW! It's sharp! It's really sharp! Th-The end nearly went up my bum! It nearly went up my bum…gh."

Subaru: "Didn't I just warn you?! It's really not my fault you know?!"

Subaru frantically defended himself as Liliana rolled about in agony, holding her buttocks. After a little while passed, she sat on a rock that wasn't sharp, with tears in her eyes, and glared at him.

Liliana: “That really hurts. You’re responsible for this, so you’d better give me tons of money!”

Subaru: “How am I even responsible. Besides, you can’t get anything genuine from something you’ll run out of one day, wouldn’t you think?”

Liliana: “You need money to live in the moment. You can’t fill your belly only with dreams.”

Subaru: “Where the hell did you throw that noble image of yours you were showing before? Shouldn’t you go and pick it back up?”

Liliana stunned Subaru with her rapid-fire snobbish remarks before casting her eyes down.

Liliana: “Mr. Maid, um, about before… Why did you stick up for me?”

Subaru: “‘Cuz I’m a guy, and you’re a gal, I guess? Though, I could imagine myself using you as a shield back there, shrinking down behind you and crying out in fear; but, I didn’t want to do that.”

Liliana: “Th-That’s not what I meant. Though, yeah, you did step out in front of me too… But what I meant was, why did you forgive me for not singing for them?”

She said that in a small voice that he could barely make out, seemingly a manifestation of her unease.

Subaru groaned out a “Mhm” in response, and continued,

Subaru: “It’s no biggie, it’s just like I said when I shouted at them. I didn’t let you sing because you didn’t look like you wanted to. It’s not like I didn’t have a backup plan.”

Liliana: “…”

Subaru: “If I didn’t have a backup plan, I would have probably made you sing. I ain’t strong enough to back you up no matter the circumstance, and we ain’t close enough for that either. There was a way to handle both matters, so I took them. That’s all.”

While giving her this rather blunt response, he looked over at the men who were busy swinging their pickaxes. Liliana followed his gaze before then muttering the word “Both” to herself.

Subaru: “Those guys are pretty pushy, and they’re low-lives of course… But they do give off a pretty desperate vibe. They have some kind of goal in mind, so I guess they need that money. They don’t look like they’re acting in self-interest to me.”

It had been the case for both the way the unshaven man spoke, and the youths who’d been seething in frustration.

Something was gnawing at their hearts, something which they needed the treasure to vanquish.

The shrill clang of their pickaxes crashed against the rocks as Subaru waited anxiously for the tunnel to be complete. He didn’t take notice of Liliana gazing at his face in profile, with various mixed emotions swirling across her eyes.

All that was left for him was to wait for the men to let out their cheers of joy.

???: “On closer inspection, I do envy how laid back you are, Barusu.”

Hearing a rather familiar voice saying his nickname, Subaru jumped in fright before turning around.

At the end of his gaze, by the cave entrance, was the figure of a girl in maid’s dress holding a lagmite ore lamp in one hand—Ram.

She looked at Subaru and Liliana, whose eyes were wide open in shock, and gave them a sigh accompanied by a shrug of her shoulders.

Ram: “You’ve totally screwed up, Barusu. I had to go out of my way to come here after Rem desperately told me about this. I even had to put Roswaal-sama’s orders on hold for the time being.”

Subaru: “I’m really sorry about all of this… But why were you even in the vicinity?”

Ram: “I was busy investigating the rich man who’d looked after the singer. I got an urgent message from Rem while I was working on it, meaning I had to round off the investigation. Though, as I’d been expecting, these people in the white outfits are the White Dragon Scales.”

Ram stepped over to where Subaru and Liliana were. She gazed at the men’s back who were busy at work, before letting out a snort.

Ram: “The rich man in question died from an illness a few days ago. It seemed to me like he’d earned a lot of people’s grudges during his life, so his mansion and assets ended up being seized afterwards. That’s where his involvement with the White Dragon Scales comes from. This cave is more or less a hiding place which he came to a bunch before his death.”

Subaru: “And the treasure he hid away, that probably wouldn’t have been taken from him before his death, is about to be recovered now by the very companions who’d double-crossed him ages ago.”

Subaru pieced together the information Ram had given him, gaining a pretty good idea of what was going on.

Having heard that, Ram also seemed to come to the same conclusion. She looked towards the men at work, and said,

Ram: “They probably have some mitigating circumstances, but the actions of the White Dragon Scales are in direct defiance of our lord Roswaal-sama. They all need to be severely punished.”

Subaru: “Well, wait a sec. That’s natural of course, but before that, listen to what I have to say…”

Ram: “Besides, it’s not just the safety of you two that I have to confirm.”

Ram passed down her merciless verdict as Subaru sought for a temporary reprieve. However, she jabbed her finger at Subaru’s face as he tried to stop her.

Ram: “There are two assets that haven’t been recovered from the dead man’s mansion. The first one of those is a Meteor, which he went out of his way to procure for a large amount of money. It’s apparently some kind of door or wall.”

Subaru: “That one’s over there. No one’s paying any attention to it, since we couldn’t get it open.”

Ram: “Well, alright then. The other thing is—Something that the dead man also procured during his lifetime, but this one will be far more troublesome if we don’t find it.”

Subaru: “Troublesome?”

Ram gave a curt nod in reply to his words. There was a small silence before she answered him.

And just as she did…

???: “—ヲ!”

A roar shook the cave, causing the men who were working up ahead to scream.

Dust filled the air as the sound of part of the wall crumbling rang out; the terrain in front of them changed.

Subaru gulped, body stiffening at the abrupt change in the situation.

He could see a stocky arm in his vision covered in thick black hair, whittling away at the rock face.

Ram: “I did say the other one was troublesome.”

Next to him, still looking apathetic as ever, Ram spoke those words with a trace of exasperation.

Ram: “A Witchbeast which the dead man procured from the black market, known as the Sturdy Ape Lauda, was unaccounted for you see.”

The Lauda’s roar sounded like the noise an eighteen-wheeler’s exhaust would make. At least, that’s what Subaru thought.

The Witchbeast's appearance was quite close to that of an ape, as the name Sturdy Ape implied. Nevertheless, it was large enough to completely fill the path in the cave, with its arms being about as thick as Subaru's torso.

The difference in strength between them was such that his arms and legs would probably end up dislocated if the Lauda were even to pick him up gently.

Unshaven Man: "FALL BACK, FALL BACK, FAAAALL BACK!!"

The unshaven man took the situation in and ordered an immediate retreat. The Lauda let out a roar as it tried to chase after the men in white, who were fleeing for their lives with nary a glance behind them. However, the Lauda's giant body was stuck in the passageway, rendering it unable to move as it desired.

Subaru: "Though, this is gonna get real bad if it makes it out to somewhere wide enough where it won't get stuck."

Ram: "We can say the old geezer's a treasurer that keeps guard over his assets, even in death. I just can't believe that a treasurer who betrayed his companions would go as far as using a Meteor and a Witchbeast to try and protect his assets… What an utter good for nothing."

Subaru: "This isn't the time to talk about it! We need to get the hell out of here!"

Ram spat those words with a bored look on her face. Subaru grabbed her by the arm, as they both stood before the fleeing men, preparing to flee with her. But, before he could scamper away, he realized something.

Subaru: "…?! Where did Liliana go?!"

She'd been right beside him until a moment ago, and now she was nowhere to be seen.

Maybe she'd ran out of the cave ahead of everyone else? He probably wouldn't have bothered to stop in his tracks if he thought she was cold-hearted enough to act like that.

Subaru: “That dumbass! Why did she go there of all places!”

Subaru scanned the inside of the cave and found Liliana, placing his hands over his head in exasperation.

As the roars resounded throughout the cave, Liliana was scampering towards the passageway where the Lauda was still thrashing about —Rushing over to where the men in white had left their cart.

Deafening roars, and chunks of rock flying about everywhere. In the midst of this fatal flurry, Liliana stuck her head into the cart in frantic search for something.

Subaru: “Ram! Follow me!”

The moment he realized what was happening, Subaru threw away his hesitation, broke into a sprint and raced towards the cart Liliana was in.

Right before his eyes, the Lauda was twisting its massive body, looking like it was going to wrench itself free from the passageway at any moment.

What was Liliana even preoccupied with at a moment like this…?

Subaru: “Liliana you fucking dumbass! Do you have a death wish? We need to get the hell out of here…”

Liliana: “My lyulyre’s gone. Without it, I’m…”

Subaru: “The brand new one, yeah? I’ll talk to Roswaal after we’re rescued, for now, we need to prioritise getting away from here!”

Liliana: “It’s not the lyulyre itself, it’s the case! I got that case from my Mother!”

Subaru resisted the urge to click his tongue at her after hearing her grief-stricken wail.

He ran his eyes across the cart; however, neither he, with eyes wide as plates, nor Liliana, who was turning the place upside-down, could find the familiar lyulyre’s case. Despite her lyulyre having definitely been brought into the cart after they'd been captured.

Unshaven Man: "What are you two doing there!"

The unshaven man caught sight of them as he fled. Subaru turned around to look at him; seeing the impatient look on his face, he pointed at Liliana,

Subaru: "Where's her instrument gone?! You put it in its case and brought it along, right?!"

Unshaven Man: "Her instrument…? Oh, Ohhh! If you're talking about that, then…"

The unshaven man's face went pale as he looked around, while the Lauda thrashed about close by. His gaze was pointed at the Meteor rather than the tunnel. Subaru instantly understood what he meant.

The lyulyre had been brought to where the Meteor stood, in preparation for Liliana eventually giving in and singing. That's why it was still there.

Subaru: "This is really bad, for fuck's sake! Liliana, get away from here! I'll go grab your lyulyre!"

Liliana: "Wha! W-Wait, Mr. Maid! It's mine, so I'll…"

Subaru: "Listen up, you goddamned idiot! I'm going to get it! Meanwhile, you're going to get away from here! Also, my name is Natsuki Subaru!"

Being called stuff like Mr. Maid all the time was really getting on his nerves.

Subaru picked Liliana up against her will and tossed her over to the unshaven man, who'd come rushing towards them. Subaru pointed to the outside as the man panickedly took her, before running towards the back of the cave.

The Lauda had now pulled half of its body free, wedged right by the passageway he was heading to. It wildly swung its arm out towards him.

Subaru: “Why do I always have to keep drawing the short straw…!”

He regretted his stubbornness, he rued how he’d put up a front. After all, the girl he actually wanted to show off to wasn’t even here. And yet, here he was again risking his life.

The Lauda’s stocky fingers scraped off the rock face as it tried to dig them into Subaru. He just barely managed to avoid them, sliding right in front of the Meteor while dodging fist-sized chunks of rock.

Subaru: “…There it is!”

The lyulyre was right in front of his eyes.

The Meteor was still standing in the crumbling cave, without even a blemish on it. The lyulyre, which was now right beneath him, had also escaped from harm. He felt relieved that he hadn’t ended up wasting his effort.

He picked the case up and turned around without wasting a moment, ready to escape.

Lauda: “—ʒ!”

Subaru’s knees quickly gave way, causing him to stumble down to the floor. And that just barely saved his life.

The Lauda swiped its arm out, grazing the air above him, before then smashing into the Meteor behind. The force of the impact was reflected back at it, giving rise to the Lauda’s screams of agony as they echoed throughout the cave.

The roars crashing against his eardrums kicked him back to alertness. He got his trembling knees in check and darted headfirst down between the Lauda’s legs, grazing its wiry hair, yet escaping from the dead end he was in.

Subaru: “Buah?!”

Its long tail hit the side of his face the very moment he’d thought he’d managed to avoid its massive body.

He flew over, groaning in pain as his body crashed against the rocky ground. The case he was holding in his arms was still safe. I'm such an idiot, he thought to himself.

Subaru: "This sort of thing really isn't worth trading your life for…"

What really depressed him was how he was being so desperate to protect someone else's memories.

Stifling a curse, he spat out the blood that had pooled in his mouth. The blow had split the inside of his lip quite badly. Though the pain he felt was sharp, it did make his awareness keener.

Ram: "EL FULA!"

The Lauda's tail had been about to strike him again from the front, however, a blade of wind severed it at its root.

With darkish blood flying about everywhere, Subaru broke into a sprint, affording himself only a sidelong glance at the tail that was thrashing about like a snake. That magic just now must have been backup from Ram. He could see that both the unshaven man and Liliana had reached the exit of the cave as well.

So long as he made it there, the clear conditions for this place would be met, or so he hoped.

Subaru: "You're really getting on my nerves!"

Even with its tail cut off, the enraged Lauda stood in front of Subaru, blocking his way.

The Witchbeast had smashed up the narrow passageway, finally setting itself free. Now it stood ready for battle, swinging its arms and legs about. Its massive body, when standing upright, was about three meters tall, to the point that its head scraped against the cave ceiling.

Even with Ram backing him up with magic, how much could someone like him really last?

While keeping a firm hold on the lyulyre case, Subaru contemplated on whether he should use his trump-card magic.

He could send the Witchbeast's senses haywire with Shamak and gamble on Ram coming to pick him up while unconscious. The odds were really against him, but there was at least more hope in it than letting this devolve to a fist fight, where his chances of winning would be zero.

Subaru turned to look at Ram over by the cave exit so he could tell her about his plan. She met his gaze dead-on before swinging her arm, her "blue hair" swaying about.

Subaru: "…Huh?"

Her spiked flail, carried by its centrifugal force, smashed into the side of the Witchbeast's face while turning at breakneck speeds. The Lauda's attention had been fixed on Subaru, so it was completely defenseless against the powerful blow that angled in from behind.

That single blow caused half of its head to burst open; tons of blood was pouring out from all of its face organs. It looked back feebly and let out a small whimper, as if it were asking what killed me?

???: "…My apologies."

A silver bell-like voice came in response to the Witchbeast's last throes, leaving behind an ethereal echo.

A blue-white glow filled the cave. Subaru could see a silver-haired girl, with both of her arms held up. And hovering above the palm of her hand was a tiny little cat, wagging his long tail…

???: "Sleep tight, Mr. Monkey. —Have a nice, quiet journey."

The cat gave its farewells in a neutral tone of voice. And straight after that, the blue-white glow became a myriad icicles, revolving in mid-air. They shot out from everywhere and rushed towards the stock-still Lauda.

The missiles of ice pierced the Lauda's entire body. It looked up at the ceiling and opened its mouth wide, trying to let out its final, dying throe; and like that, surrounded by the crackling sound of air, its body turned into a sculpture of ice.

“…”

For a few seconds, the cold air inside the cave was ruled completely by silence.

Without really comprehending what had happened in front of him, Subaru looked up at the frozen remains of the Witchbeast.

The Lauda had met its end encased within the ice, and thanks to that, his own life had been spared.

???: “Subaru!”

Stunned, and wondering what had just happened, Subaru looked up as he heard his name being called.

He turned over to where the voice was coming from. Waving her hand at him was a familiar, good-looking girl: “Emilia. She lowered her brows in relief, a gentle smile appearing on her face as she placed her free hand on her chest.

???: “Subaru-kun! Are you okay? Are you hurt? I’ll get you patched up immediately!”

Then, hurtling down through the treacherous terrain of the cave came Rem, her short skirt billowing. He could see her familiar arme de guerre hanging down from her hand, and finally, he understood everything.

It looked like Emilia and Rem had come to his rescue at the perfect time.

Subaru: “How opportunistic again…”

This time around however, their opportunism had saved him.

Subaru dragged his aching body along, making his own way over to the onrushing Rem.

…It was just as he did that, that cracks began to form down at his feet, along the walls, and up on the ceiling.

They grew wider as the rocky wall began to crumble down. Seeing this, Subaru pointed at the exit as he felt the hairs on his body stand on end,

Subaru: “Get out of here quickly, all of you!”

Several seconds later, the cave with the treasure in it collapsed completely.

17

???: “We were super worried after Subaru and Liliana went missing, but that man boasted he knew where Liliana had been taken to.”

With a wry smile on her face, Emilia pointed over at the young man who was spinning around on the spot.

Liliana’s stalker, Kiritaka, should have been tied up. Yet here he was getting onto his knees and handing Liliana a bouquet of flowers that he'd pulled out from somewhere.

Kiritaka: "I, Kiritaka, am a slave to this love. I would come rushing for you, love of mine, whether it be o'er hell and high water, or caves full of Witchbeasts—Oh, but above all else, I'm glad you're safe!"

Liliana: "But, you didn't even come inside the cave, no?"

Kiritaka: "Gnnh! Th-That's because that lady tied me up outside…"

Kiritaka dejectedly spluttered his excuses as Liliana looked at him in disdain.

They had never expected that his presence would have ended up playing a part in resolving this commotion.

Rem: "It seems like the hair bobble he gave Liliana-sama was a Meteor that came as a set of two. Apparently, so long as each of them holds one, it has the ability to tell you where the other is, no matter how far apart they are."

Subaru: "So you mean like a homing device. I guess that's like the very epitome of a stalker nature."

The people who'd been rescued, however, found that clingy love affair to be quite gross.

Emilia and the others had quickly begun searching for Subaru and Liliana, immediately after they'd been kidnapped. But it was with Kiritaka's assistance, and Ram's presence as she conducted her own investigation, that they'd found a break in the deadlock.

Kiritaka's Meteor, along with Ram, who'd anticipated the situation, were able to work hand in hand. The two of them had found the others in their awful predicament just as they'd arrived at the cave.

Rem: "Roswaal-sama has stated that he's willing to let him off the hook this time. Though, he's made it clear that he's not to rope up others in his wooing from now on. It wouldn't be advisable for him to force his feelings onto other people."

Subaru: “Well, as much as it pains me to say, he did save our life, though I ain’t gonna thank him for it.”

Rem had been healing Subaru’s body, and now, she nestled closer to him. Still, since she was so close to him, and ever so soft, he couldn’t really concentrate on his treatment.

Emilia: “But the problem we have now is regarding those people, right?”

Standing next to Subaru, who had an awkward smile on his face thanks to Rem trying to cuddle with him, Emilia turned to look at the collapsed cave. There she could see the figures of the utterly crestfallen men garbed in white.

The cave was completely filled with rock and earth, making it impossible for them to take the treasure to the outside. Although the collapse had been caused by the Lauda, the results would have probably been the same if they’d turned off the Meteor.

Rather, without Subaru and the others, the White Dragon Scales wouldn’t have been able to defeat the Witchbeast. They would have likely been wiped out in the worst case scenario. They should at least be glad that they came away with their lives.

Subaru: “But that’s just how things are… It’s hard for them to admit they’re satisfied with only coming away with their lives.”

The unshaven man had stammered out the reasons why the White Dragon Scales coveted the treasure to Subaru and the others.

An endemic disease had broken out several years ago where they’d been born, with the contamination in the soil being pinned as the cause behind it. They needed a lot of money to mend the soil.

The endemic disease was a strange kind, in which the bodies of people afflicted by it would gradually turn into something like stone, until finally, completely turning into actual stone—It was a diabolical endemic that occurred in lands defiled by a certain Witchbeast.

Emilia: “The aftereffects of the Blacksnake spreading its pestilence.”

Subaru felt a similar gut-wrenching feeling as to Emilia's frustrated mutter.

There was no way to fix endemic diseases originating from Witchbeasts except for cleansing the contaminated soil. To do that, they needed a ton of colorless magic ore, as well as the funds for them.

But those funds had been snatched away from them, due to that one man's betrayal, and so their final hope lay crushed beneath those rocks.

The men's families were back in their homeland. That was why the youth was so frustrated, and the glazed look in the eyes of the unshaven man too, was still pointed towards the family he'd lost.

But it was already too late. All hope was lost, and with it, so would be their homela—

Kiritaka: "So, how about this, I'll employ everyone from the White Dragon Scales. As for the contaminated soil in their homeland, the Muse Company shall take care of all the funds and materials required."

Subaru: "Whaaa…?!"

Raising his voice in disbelief, Subaru was flabbergasted to hear this unlikely suggestion coming from the most unlikely person here.

Likewise, Emilia, Rem and all of the members of the White Dragon Scales opened their mouths in shock.

Then, after making that surprising suggestion, Kiritaka spun round on the spot and looked up at the heavens above,

Kiritaka: "Luckily, the main product of my family-run Muse Company is magic ore. The colorless kind is fairly expensive, but it isn't difficult to get them in bulk. That, and merchants are always in need of swords to protect their wealth. I reckon this will be full of benefits for both parties."

Subaru: "D-Do you… Do you plan on taking all the credit for yourself?!”

Kiritaka: “It’s in a man’s true spirit to live up to the pleas of the woman he loves. But not only that, there’s so much to sympathize in their plight. It’s how do they say it, “One good turn deserves another.”“

His adage was similar to one that went like: “the good you do for others, is good you do yourself.

Speaking like helping people was only natural for him, Kiritaka now looked like a messiah. When they’d first met him, he’d only looked like a huge dumbass blinded by love. Actually, no, once a fool, always a fool.

Even so, there was something as well that bothered him about what Kiritaka had said.

Subaru: “Did you really ask him that, Lilliana.”

Liliana: “…I did. After all, I was the one who turned them down and wouldn’t listen to the situation they were in.”

Liliana cast her eyes down and said that in a quiet voice as she clutched her lyulyre case.

She had flat out refused the men’s frantic, threatening demands both back in the cart and in the cave.

Though, if she was blaming herself for that, then Subaru was equally guilty too. Besides, the Witchbeast would have still been something they couldn’t avoid, even if Liliana had sung to switch the Meteor off. The same applied for the cave-in as well.

Liliana: “Mister Ma-… I’ve just realized that as a bard I’ve always thought that I was meant to travel the world alone, and live alone while singing through it, before dying alone. But it really isn’t like that. People hear my songs where I go, and feel something from them. That effect isn’t something that just blinks out and dies… The world is telling me that it’s not going to leave me behind.”

Subaru: “Are you regretting not dropping your pride for a bit?”

Liliana: “I’m regretting not realizing the importance of things other than pride.”

Liliana looked up at Subaru’s question. There was a beam on her face.

She showed him her lyulyre, poised between her arms as she stroked its case.

Liliana: “Thank you so much for grabbing my lyulyre.”

Subaru: “Yeah, you owe me one.”

Liliana: “For sure. If there’s anything I can do to thank you, then…”

Subaru gave it some thought and said “Right” as Liliana looked up at him.

She had to pay the price for him protecting her cherished item with his life. The demand he made needed to have the same weight to it.

And thus, Subaru had decided what he wanted.

Subaru: “Sing for me, Liliana.”

Liliana: “Huh…?”

Subaru: “I’m knackered, yet we’re all alive despite thinking we were gonna die, so most of our problems are solved, practically. Meaning we need to roll the credits for the grand finale. And those typically come with a song.”

Liliana: “My inspiration is flashing! Listen if you please: “—The day you hit your head, was the last normal day of your life.”

Subaru: “Shut up!”

She’d implicitly pointed out that what he’d proposed was strange, though, Subaru was already fully aware of it.

The price he was demanding for risking his life was for her to sing.

It seemed absurd, and it probably, definitely was. Yet, that was okay with him.

Liliana: “Then I shall sing. —A sky transcending dawn.”

She strummed at the strings of her lyulyre as the morning sun peering over the mountains welcomed a new day.

A series of high notes. What she was playing was a soul-stirring melody. The prelude blended in with the chilly morning air, drawing the audience’s gazes towards the singer, as they plunged into the start of the fantasia. Then…

Liliana: “♪ ♫ ♬”

Her voice rang out all the way to the far-away sky.

A raucous, new morning came, pushing the night away as her voice and melody went out to greet it. The birds sang back in response to her song, and even the blowing wind joined the ensemble.

The next thing Subaru knew, tears were trickling down his eyes, unable to contain the emotion welling inside him.

The same was the case for Emilia, Rem and the squirming Kiritaka.

The members of the White Dragon Scales, who’d previously dismissed her song as merely a means to pry open the Meteor, were also moved to tears by the sound of it.

Serves them right. Subaru was sure they would have understood what he meant.

Liliana: “♪ ♫ ♬”

Her song was ideal for an end to this absurd story, so full of coincidence to the point of absurdity.

As for whether the warm tears trickling down his cheeks, and his quivering heart, were a just recompense for staking his life.

…There was no need for him to ask something like that to anyone.

Subaru: “Are you really going to go to where Kiritaka’s from with those guys?”

Liliana: “Yeah, I am. It’s not like the debts the White Dragon Scales owe have nothing to do with me… At the very least, I’d like to stay with them until I have a clear idea when their debts are going to be done being paid.”

It was two days after the series of commotions had ended, Liliana had finished her packing and now said that in a cheerful tone.

Despite their many attempts at dissuading her, she had never caved to their firm persuasions.

Liliana had been the one to suggest Kiritaka to hire the White Dragon Scales, so she insisted she had an obligation to see them through. No one could change her stubborn mind.

Subaru: “Well, I guess that Kiritaka guy is gonna be over the moon, and it should mean you won’t be getting exposed to danger anymore… Though I don’t know what this’ll mean for your innocence. You’d better get Sir. Beardy to protect you.”

Liliana: “I shall do. You have to be prepared for anything when you’re standing by a starving beast. And besides, it seems like everyone in the White Dragon Scales has become captivated by my song.”

As Liliana, who was clapping her hands in high spirits, had said, the men in white clothing had become whipped by her singing.

It was pretty clear that the recital she’d given them outside the cave had really touched their hearts. She’d also been incredibly influential on getting them the funding required to save their homeland. To them, she was practically a goddess of salvation. Since then, they’d been treating her with the utmost respect.

Emilia: “That’s reaaally too bad. You can come back anytime, alright?”

Liliana: “Yeah, gotcha. I appreciate everything you’ve done for me, Emilia-sama, and everyone else too. When we see each other again, I’ll definitely have a new song prepared. I’m also gonna be looking forward to all the new sweets and stuff. Teeheehee…”

Subaru: “Can’t you keep acting like a heroine for at least ten more minutes?”

Subaru butted into the conversation in awe as Liliana drooled with a vulgar smile plastered on her face.

Several of those who were loath to part with Liliana had gathered here, in front of the mansion. Emilia and Rem especially loved her songs, so they were feeling quite downcast at the prospects of having to say goodbye to her. Even Beatrice had come out of the mansion to give her a short sending off, much to their surprise.

Liliana had only stayed for a few days, but those few days had been fantastic, albeit clamorous.

It had gotten to the point where it looked like they’d really miss her, when they realized they wouldn’t be hearing her singing tomorrow.

Subaru: “Anyways, it seems like Roswaal’s aims were a lil’ off the mark. Since we can’t keep Liliana around, it’ll mean that Operation: “Emilia-tan’s Propaganda Ambassador goes back to the drawing board.”

Although Roswaal’s forecasts being off once in a while was definitely something to gloat about, it was also a little unfortunate that he wouldn’t be able to hear a eulogy about Emilia from Liliana. No, maybe not just a little.

As Subaru wallowed in regret, Liliana waved her hand over to him and said: “Y-You got a mo’?”

Subaru: “What’s up? Beako wanted to tell you one last thing, but she couldn’t get the words out. She’s getting fidgety, so maybe you ought to help her out.”

Liliana: “I will of course, but I’ve got something quick to tell you first.”

Setting the fidgeting Beatrice aside for a bit, Liliana stood on her tippy toes and brought her lips close to Subaru’s ear.

Liliana: “Actually, I heard this straight from the esteemed Margrave himself. Emilia-sama is going to be challenging the grand stage that is the Royal Selection in the future, or something like that. That’s why I was taken in, right?”

Subaru: “O-Oh… So you knew all along…? Well, yeah, you’re right. Are you insinuating something?”

Liliana gave her flat chest a pat, faced with the shrewd preparations Roswaal had set.

Liliana: “Nonono! It would be my privilege to accept of course. The beauty and nobility of Emilia-sama’s character goes without saying. And above all, how can I not sing when gazing at the figure that is the esteemed Great Spirit!”

Subaru: “That Cat Spirit is what makes it for you? Isn’t he just a plain ol’ cat who likes to take naps and stuff?”

He didn’t really get the subtleties for why he was her deciding factor, but the most important thing was that Liliana was going to accept her duty.

He looked forward to the day where he’d be able to hear her play a new heroic tale, sometime in the future.

Subaru: “So, until that time comes, I guess this is goodbye for a while.”

Liliana: “Indeed. Please, look forward to it! I’m going to sing you the best song ever!”

Liliana patted her lyulyre case and pledged to undertake that, with a look of confidence etched on her face.

It was a thing of splendor that she could be so forthright towards her goals.

Liliana: “Also…”

Just as he’d thought their conversation would end neatly there, Liliana looked at him with a flush in her cheeks.

He could feel her excitement coming from the earnest look in her upturned eyes.

Then, after a brief hesitation, she spoke up.

Liliana: “Please let me sing your heroic tale sometime. —Natsuki Subaru-sama.”

Subaru: “…”

Liliana: “Please forgive me for laughing it off when I first heard it. Rem-san was right. You will become a hero someday.”

Liliana flashed a grin at Subaru, whose breath had caught for the time being. Then she turned her back to him in embarrassment, and jogged away. Subaru gazed at her back as she began to exchange her goodbyes with Beatrice, before finally letting his breath out again.

Emilia: “What’s the matter Subaru? Your face is growing suuuuper red.”

Emilia suddenly came over next to him and said that with a glance to his face.

Subaru felt his own cheeks in a panic. His face was still quite flushed, causing him to shake his head in irritation.

Subaru: “Ghaaa!”

Emilia: “Hehe, you’re so peculiar.”

Emilia brought her hand to her lips and let out a small chuckle as Subaru raised his voice unable to control himself.

They were standing side by side, grinning at each other—These two would be, one day, sung about by the Songstress Liliana.

—At this time today though, they were still just Natsuki Subaru and Emilia.

END

The Head Maid's Restless Day Off

1

—It wasn't as if Subaru had any special reason for having these realizations.

Subaru: "Weird. The cart that was here up until now is gone…"

Rem: "About that, I put it away while Subaru-kun was gone."

Subaru: "Oh, okay. Thanks, Rem."

Subaru: "Weird. I thought I had tools out for tending the lawn, but…"

Rem: "About that, I had some spare time, so I took care of it."

Subaru: "Is that so? Thanks as always, Rem."

Subaru: "Weird. I thought I'd give a hand to help set up the tableware because it's just about that time to eat, but…"

Rem: "About that, don't worry about it. Subaru-kun could go take a seat."

Subaru: "Really now. Looks like I won't be making my appearance on the stage. As expected of Rem."

Subaru: "Weird. Come to think of it, the writing practice homework that Ram told me to finish is…"

Rem: "About that, I copied Subaru's handwriting and took care of it."

Subaru: "…I-Is that so? Doesn't that look hmmm, a bit different? Like, I'm thankful, but…"

2

Subaru: "Rem, I think you should at least have one day to rest completely.”

Everyone gathered at scattered times as Subaru made this suggestion.

They heard this suggestion, and then the five people and the one small cat were astonished. However, the person who was the most surprised of all was the aforementioned blue-haired girl—Rem.

Rem, who had been setting up the table right beside Subaru, who sat in his seat, tilted her head in a lovely manner.

Rem: “A day off for for me? Um…did I perhaps do something careless? Which is why Subaru-kun suggested a…”

Subaru: “No, that’s not it. That’s not it at all. In fact, I’ve never had any complaints at all about your work in the first place, but I also want to point out about how that’s problematic as well.”

Rem: “—?”

Even after hearing Subaru’s explanation, Rem only responded with a face expressive of a question mark. She wasn’t aware at all about how she overworked herself, but on the other hand, her employer and the sinfulness of her surroundings proved it.

Rem somehow becomes pitiful, so Subaru head patted this girl who stood next to her. Lately whenever Subaru did this, Rem would be happy and would unconditionally make an expression that looked unreasonably gentle as she received her head pats.

Roswaal: “In other words, you mean that? Subaru-kun wants to act as the employer for me and wants to determine the maid employment conditions. That’s what you mean.”

The person who clearly understood the situation was this person beside the scene of Subaru petting Rem—the head of the mansion, Roswaal. He had the same type of clown make-up applied to his white face this morning, and broke into a smile with his purple painted lips.

Subaru: “Welll, that’s not really exact. I can’t really say that I object, but that's close to what I meant."

Ram: "How rude, Barusu. What a rude thing to say to Roswaal. It's 100 years too early for a maid to object the master, and it's 400 years too early for Barusu."

Subaru: "I don't need that kind of special treatment, but do you not have something in mind as well?"

Ram, someone who has always been cold towards Subaru, cut into the conversation, perhaps because she was displeased with Subaru giving his opinion to Roswaal like that. Subaru frowns at Ram, Roswaal's top advocate, and Subaru: "Rem is working a bit too hard…or rather, Rem is the only one who has to deal with the mansion's maintenance so much. No matter how you look at it, it's too much on her."

Ram: "That's not true."

Subaru let out a sigh in response to Ram nonchalantly shaking her head.

Subaru: "…Then who made this breakfast?"

Ram: "Rem."

Subaru: "Who woke up, immediately did the mansion's simple cleaning, and immediately let fresh air in?"

Ram: "Rem."

Subaru: "Who woke up, helped you change your clothes, and brushed your teeth?"

Ram: "Rem."

Subaru: "You've continued this conversation the whole time with a composed face, haven't you?!! Are you a king?!."

Ram: "I'm not that great."

Subaru: “I’m not praising you here!!”

The prideful Ram had an arrogant look, which made Subaru feel tired and facepalm. Then a person who hadn’t been in the conversation up until now, sitting to Subaru’s left side, raised her hand.

Emilia: “Hey, may I add in something?”

It was a beautiful girl with soft, silver hair—the girl who said these words with a voice that sounded like a bell. She looked left and right with her blueish purple eyes that looked like as if they had gems in it. This was the person who looked at Subaru—Emilia.

While looking at Subaru, who had his head turned, and Rem, who was thoroughly enjoying her head being pat, she said

Emilia: “I understand that Rem is working reaaally hard, but Subaru and the others are working too, aren’t they? And yet you’re saying that you only want to give Rem a day off?”

Subaru: “Emilia-tan. I’m happy for your consideration, but this is about the amount of work she has to do and its intensity. If you look at it that way, Rem works too hard when compared to people like me or Ram.”

Ram: “You’re upsetting me, Barusu. Whether or you are useless or not, being the half man you are, I’m handling my job easily without fail. Don’t group me with yourself in this matter.”

Subaru: “You’re being given the same workload as this half man, so I don’t wanna hear that come from you! Moreover, what do you do when I’m not there? Did you do the work I was supposed to do now?”

Ram: “That’s a silly question, Barusu. —Rem did it.”

Subaru: “You may not be aware of this, but not a single good thing has been said as of right now.”

Seeing that it would be a waste of time to continue talking to Ram and that he should have direct talks, Subaru turned towards

Roswaal. While giggling from wondering about what was so fun about the situation, Roswaal urged the story to move onto the next part with a gesture of holding out his arm.

Subaru: “If we look back a bit, there are other instances of Rem being treated improperly. For example, the demon beasts incident, which was when we prevented the damage without Roswaal.”

The topic Subaru brought up was about the trifling incident that happened just the other day.

Wolgarms, which are demon beasts that live in the forest, had attacked the Roswaal mansion and the latest Earlham Village. It was an uproar in which victims could be had in an instant, but this incident miraculously ended with only several casualties.

On the other hand of the incident, Subaru truly did have a lot of bitter experiences, but he didn’t bring that up.

Roswaal: “Though, you guys should’ve had arrangements to reward your efforts. In Subaru-kun’s case, I think it might be hard to see your actual feelings with just the details of the request you made.”

Subaru: “That’s, um…well, I am grateful for that.”

Subaru gave a side glance to Emilia repeatedly and responded to Roswaal while stammering out his words. Emilia tilted her head in response to Subaru’s look, but she didn’t know about the details about Subaru’s reward.

It would be troubling for Subaru if she knew about how he requested for few various necessary arrangements to be made when he was on the promised date with Emilia. She couldn’t know about this precisely so that it’d seem like he prepared the flower garden and the garland himself.

Subaru: “Let’s stop talking about things regarding my reward. However, if I received a reward for that incident, then that means Rem and Ram should get one too, don’t you think?”

Roswaal: “Are you saying that those two should be treated the same as yourself, a person who should be labeled as a guest, at that time?

If that's so, then I think it's an unreasonable request."

Subaru: "Even if I was something other than a guest, there's no reason in not permitting it, don't you think? Also showing generosity here would make the times in which they show compassion skyrocket, making their their loyalty MAX level! Wouldn't it turn out like that, Master?"

Roswaal smiles at the insistent Subaru, and says "Loyalty, huh." as he looks at Ram.

Subaru looks at Ram, who bowed as if she felt Roswaal's look. He remembers the truth that there was a maid already with a MAX level of loyalty next to him, and then he realized that he failed to choose the right words for persuasion.

Subaru: "You block me from moving forward to no end, Ram."

Ram: "Even if Rem's loyalty and my loyalty towards Roswaal were to sway, it's pointless, Barusu. Before that, you can tie up that statement in the doubt you had when you aimed to cause internal friction."

Subaru: "That was when we survived that fight together too. You sure are harsh!"

They should have cooperated well together to some extent at that time. However, without exception, it failed to have an effect on her compassion. In response to Ram, who exhibited a refreshed, opposing behavior, Subaru becomes unsure of what to say next. However,

Roswaal: "But, well, it's not like we should totally disregard Subaru-kun's opinion on the situation."

Ram: "Roswaal-sama…"

Roswaal: "Don't make a gloomy face like that, Ram. I'm not letting go of my viewpoint. It's just that there's a reason to Subaru-kun's point as well. I was close to oversighting that incident, so if I don't bestow a single reward for you guys who defended against the demon beasts before anything happened, I would be called a poor noble.”

Ram: “Roswaal-sama, I would like you to hand over your favorite pen.”

Subaru: “Man, you don’t change your attitude very easily at all!”

In response to Ram frankly indicating what she wanted from him, Roswaal handed over the pen that he had on his chest. Ram accepted the pen respectfully, and softly put it to her chest as she took a step back.

Anyways, this was equivalent of repelling the biggest obstacle. Roswaal was understanding, so Ram’s withdrawal was simple to fix. The next thing to take care of was the main point—the decision would be up to Rem.

Rem: “Subaru-kun?”

Rem, who was being patted on the head endlessly throughout the conversation, blinked with her eyes.

Subaru: “So, well, we’ve obtained the right to be rewarded. It’s an employee victory for us. Alright, you can ask for anything. Ros-chi will take care of all the assets and the authority needed for it!”

Roswaal: “It would be a bit problematic if you set your expectations too high, though.”

Rem was in front of Subaru, and she smiled at him with her blushed face with the kind expression she had in her light blue eyes. He saw the clown let out a wry smile on the side, but anyways, he became aware of it and then decided to ignore it.

Rem: “Thank you, Subaru-kun. But I am happy just by spending time with you and Nee-sama in the mansion. So I don’t need anything more.”

Subaru: “But that would take away the meaning of this whole conversation we’ve been having!”

Or rather, that would mean, in terms of the flow of events, it would be a single person's victory—Ram's victory, who received the feather pen.

Rem kindly being unselfish was a virtue, but for her to not ask for luxuries when she should have—that would wrong; it would be wrong for others to let her do this, and it would be wrong for him to not think of it as something lonesome.

Emilia: "Well, can't we just try what Subaru said in the beginning?"

The person who clapped her hands together and made a suggestion when the conversation started to stagnate was Emilia.

Emilia: "I've been doing some reflecting as I listen to the conversation you guys have been having. Although it is her job, I've always been relying heavily on Rem too. Since I believe this, it would be natural for Subaru and Ram to think the same as people who work together, huh."

In response to Emilia, who sought for agreement to her opinion, Subaru made a bright gesture to indicate his agreement.

Emilia: "So, I also agree with giving Rem a reward. However, Rem said she doesn't need one…so I don't think it'd be right to do so."

Subaru: "So, what do you suggest then?"

Emilia: "In the scene of giving rewards, not being able to give anything would bring pain to Roswaal as well, I think. Rem is a good girl, so I don't mean to restrict her from being rewarded, but properly rewarding her work is also an important role…oh, it's written in the book."

Just when he thought that she said something splendid, it seemed that she only talked about second-hand knowledge. Emilia, who stook her tongue out and gave a bashful smile, said "Thus" to Rem, who had a slightly surprised face, and continued speaking.

Emilia: "I want you to be less undemanding. We want to do something for you because you always work hard, although it might be difficult."

Rem: “Emilia-sama…”

Rem had an amazed look in her eyes as if she was seeing the light. Subaru wasn’t really having much of a change in his heart through reasoning, so Emilia’s persuasion moved him deeply as well.

Ram: “So what does following Barusu’s initial suggestion outline exactly?”

Ram, who was completely calm with the feather pen kept in her breast pocket, threw her question towards Emilia. She accepts the question, raises her finger, and then

Emilia: “That’s easy to explain. Even if we think like this and make requests, Rem would surely say that she is busy and doesn’t have time to think calmly due to her being occupied by her work; all the more reason to give her at least one day to rest. I also think it’d be nice if she could think about her reward too.”

Subaru: “Ahhh, I see.”

Subaru gave honest praise to Emilia’s idea, seeing as she had thought more about it than he expected. It seemed that Ram and Roswaal had the same opinion, as they both had no indication of disagreement with their nodding.

The only question left would be Rem’s take on the proposal.

Rem: “…Emilia-sama. I am truly thankful for your concern. I also only feel shame about myself for not being helpful with some parts of the matter. However, giving me a reward and time to rest is too considerate. I only caused trouble during that incident, and if I’m not at the mansion…”

The apologetic Rem, who had her eyes cast down, started to line up her cautionary objections. Simply put, she had no hesitance in her voice, and you could catch a glimpse of her toughness of persisting in her opinion. Thus,

Subaru: “Rem”

Rem: “Yes. Umm—Subaru-kun, I…”

Subaru: “Let’s take a day off.”

Rem: “Yes. If Subaru-kun says so.”

—It turned out like this.

3

They were still at the breakfast place, so the preparations for her day off were settled on this day.

Subaru proposed that they spent a whole day off to rest from tomorrow, but as expected, Rem was only firmly refusing it.

Subaru: “And with that, I would like to make a decision about Rem’s portion of work for this one day. Rem is going to rest, but that doesn’t necessarily mean that no deficiencies will appear or that she’ll actually be able to let herself rest. We all have personal experiences with just how hard Rem works and we truly feel it, so this should be a very significant program in which we will commence from now on to honestly have her feel our gratitude.”

Subaru forced Rem to go to her room, separating their locations, and he explained the intents of the project that came out before. The person who took his explanation in and raised her hand was Emilia.

Emilia: “Hey, Subaru, can I say something?”

Subaru: “Go ahead, Emilia-tan. Your modest attitude of raising your hand when you share your opinion is nice. What is it?”

Emilia: “I reeaally am in agreement with Rem’s day off and with what you said…but it might be problematic if you don’t talk the others as well to get their agreement.”

Emilia puts a finger on her lips and glances towards the side.

The people gathered there were all Roswaal’s mansion’s residents, excluding Rem. In other words, there were people other than the employee Subaru and Ram. Master Roswaal was also gathered there.

The person who had a particularly dissatisfied looking face was

Subaru: "…How long have you been pouting? You haven't been joining in on the conversation, so this isn't just a matter of you not having a cooperative personality. "

Beatrice: "…Why are you doing this while assuming something like that my cooperation is a given from the beginning in the first place? That's the actual really perplexing matter."

The person who said this and glared at Subaru was this petite girl who sat on her chair with her arms crossed. It was this girl who wore a dress and had creamy colored hair, which was in an ojou-sama type of drills hairstyle—this girl was Beatrice.

While it is true that Beatrice did appear at the dinner table when it was time to eat, she would basically persist in abstaining from getting involved with anything in the mansion. Subaru knew that she would have an uncooperative attitude this time too, so he aimed to compel her to hear him out and confronted her. He expected Beatrice to make a face indicative of not being compelled to get involved even after listening, but Subaru: "Rem habitually and thoroughly takes care of you too, you know. Who do you think washes your underwear and washes the wet futon when you wet the bed?"

Beatrice: "Why are you saying such sudden things yourself?! Such a lady like myself, when could I—when could I have possibly wet myself?! You need to keep your reckless babbling in check, I suppose!"

Subaru: "It's pretty suspicious of you to deny it so frantically like that. So you really…"

Beatrice: "Don't make a face that looks like you've come close to the truth! I'm telling you I didn't do it, so I didn't do it, I suppose!"

He was just teasing her, but he unintentionally got carried away with the entertainment, seeing how she responded to it. His enjoyment from messing with Beatrice ended quickly, and then he looked at another person's discontent face.

Ram: "Barusu, if you have an excuse for yourself, then say it quickly."

It was the face of the person with such a freezing expression that her hostility was being asserted just from her eyes—something that could be done by none other than Ram. There was no other source for her displeasure for this girl who felt like she absolutely had to cooperate with this experiment in every way possible.

Subaru: "I don't have an excuse to give. It is what I see and it is what I called it, as in it is necessary for all of the mansion's members to unite and make up for the deficiencies created from making Rem rest."

Ram: "Even so, dragging even Roswaal-sama into your tomfoolery is going too far, considering how he is busier than Rem as well, being driven away everyday with his hard work"

Subaru: "And so, this is what your personal assistant has to say."

Subaru went past Ram and called out to Roswaal, who was rocking in his chair.

Roswaal: "Let's see. As for myself as someone who holds responsibility, being occupied with trivial matters isn't really something that should be praised. Just like Ram said, even though things may appear this way, I have a pretty busy position."

Subaru: "I see I see."

Roswaal: "Yep. I thought that it'd never be hard to keep a sense of the maids' circumstances for their labor as a master—and by circumstances I mean making sure that they had an appropriate workload and received appropriate salaries."

Ram: "Roswaal-sama, that's…"

Roswaal was relatively eager as a person who could view different perspectives, as opposed to Ram who was obstinate. Surely in his case, he had a great sense to at least genuinely join in on jolly events.

Subaru: “Hey, respect the will of the actual person in question. Didn’t you say that it’d be 100 years too early for a maid to object the master?”

Ram: “Lowly people like Barusu shouldn’t get carried away with finding people’s faults.”

He was reluctant to admit it, but Ram, the person who took his opinion, had an uncommon type of acuteness in judgement. He had a bitter smile in response to her piercing look and nodded at her as if he was thinking, “So you did listen to my general opinion”.

Subaru: “Okay well, let’s talk about everyone’s share of housework then. First let’s do the general division of the meals, laundry, cleaning…”

Beatrice: “Did you not hear what I had to say?! You didn’t hear me say I wouldn’t do this, I suppose.”

Subaru: “Goddamn you are being a pain in the ass. Emilia-tan, please help.”

Emilia: “Umm, “I will not allow this to be put on the family crest!” was the saying, right?”

Beatrice continued to resist in vain, causing Subaru to have an amazed look on her face. He left it up to Emilia to persuade Beatrice. Emilia heard his request, said the set phrase Subaru taught her, and held out her hand.

A gray furball was on top of Emilia’s palm. When the rolled up furball understood that it was his turn to make his appearance, he expanded his body, shook his pink nose, and looked at Beatrice.

It was Emilia’s contracted spirit, having the same use as Beatrice as a type of weapon used for a battle—this was Puck, the cat spirit.

Puck: “Betty”

Beatrice: “Oo…Bubby. You are cute today as well…”

Puck: “Thank youuu. So Betty…I understand what you are trying to say, but I understand what Subaru is saying as well. Besides, I feel like it is our duty as spirits to occasionally show tolerance for the children’s sake.”

Beatrice’s blue eyes twitched in response to Puck’s calm manner of speaking.

As one would expect, Beatrice’s pride would probably not allow herself to submit to Puck’s standards and change her current opinion

Beatrice Bu-Bubby’s point is expected, I suppose. B-But, I…”

Puck: “Betty. Please.”

Beatrice: “If Bubby says so, then I guess it can’t be helped!”

Subaru: “You sure are simple.”

The problem with Beatrice was solved with extreme ease, and so with this the dissenting opinions were resolved.

The next things to talk about were the allotment of the work and dividing people into groups.

Emilia: “How should we divide people up?”

Subaru: “The general work can be handled just like how I said before. If we include Puck, we have 6 people for it, so if we split up in pairs, I think it would work out well. As for the actual dividing…”

Intense looks quickly came about from the two who had dissenting opinions before. He understood what they generally wanted to say, so he nodded.

Subaru: “How about Ram and Ros-chi, Beako and Puck, and me and Emilia-tan?”

Emilia: “Umm, I’m fine with it…but are Puck and Beatrice fine with it too?”

Puck: “Fufufu, Lia is a worry-wart. I am fine with it. I’ll make the best use of this small body’s advantages and pick up coins that fell under the drawers too.”

Subaru: “The opportunities for the application of your advantages are way too narrowed down.”

He didn’t understand why Puck was brimming with confidence, but there was no point estranging him seeing as how he had determination. It was better than having him take care of dinner and mixing all of the cooking with cat fur.

Subaru: “Beako, would you prefer to do the cleaning or the laundry? You choose.”

Beatrice: “Out of those two, I can make use of my magic with the laundry, I suppose.”

Subaru: “OK. Use this as a chance to wash all the soiled underwear you have hidden in your room.”

Beatrice: “You really don’t get it. I am TELLING you I do not do THAT!”

He soothed the enraged Beatrice, and it was decided that Puck and Beatrice would handle the laundry.

The next question was who would be in charge of preparing the meals and who would be in charge of the cleaning, but

Ram: “Roswaal-sama and I will take care of the meals.”

Subaru: “I’m fine with that, but why meals?”

Ram: “Because it wouldn’t be necessary for Roswaal-sama to go through the trouble of going somewhere if it was kitchen work, and there would be no worry about causing trouble through major clumsiness. Worst case scenario, Barusu could even eat vegetable scraps that are left out, right?”

Subaru: “I was born on a year of the rabbit, but I am not a vegetarian.”

Subaru's point was washed away from Ram's scornful laughter.

That being said, the person in the mansion without Rem who had the most balanced abilities for housework was Ram. The meals would particularly show its results clearly in its taste. It was not wrong to choose Ram as the person to be in charge of the meals. At the very least, she also had her killer steamed potatoes up her sleeve. Roswaal's cooking was also a concern, but he didn't have any tragedies with his meals.

Subaru: "Therefore, Emilia-tan and I will inevitably be appointed to the cleaning. I feel that it will be a painful and difficult battle, but will you believe in me and keep up?"

Emilia: "Yes, I understand. I'll work reaaally hard so that I don't hold Subaru back."

Subaru: "Dang this girl's courage is cute."

Emilia took a triumphant pose with her face burned with ambition. Subaru gives a satisfactory nod at his partner's reliable attitude and ends the division of roles peacefully.

Subaru: "Alright. Then let's all get to our own share of work. First of all, Puck and Beako, I'll show you the place with the gathered clothes that need to be washed, so follow me. And…"

Before each of them went into their works with their decided roles, Subaru looked back at the entrance of the dining hall.

He saw a blue haired girl peeping through the gap of the slightly opened door looking towards him.

Subaru: "And about the decision that she would spend her time idly, although she might not be calm."

Rem: "Yes, I understand that…but umm, I am worried."

Subaru: "That troublesome workaholic part of yourself is showing, Rem. Today is "Rem Day". As someone who is a a pro at spending time slothfully, I recommend doing nothing and sleeping on your bed."

Emilia: “Eh? Why? It would be a waste to spend her time that way, wouldn’t it?”

Subaru: “Being wasteful of time is a day off!”

Subaru responded to Emilia’s butting in while feeling something pierce his chest. Nevertheless, on the other side of the door, Rem had a face that was fairly indicative of not deciding to withdraw back into her room.

Subaru: “Wearing a maid outfit even when it’s been decided that you’d rest is not right in the first place. If you decide to be lazy, the you should first start with your appearance. Quickly change your clothes into something slothful and dive into the bed!”

Rem: “But all I have besides my maid outfit is my nightgown…”

Subaru: “Ah! Come to think of it, you said that before! As if that’s any better! No matter how you look at it, isn’t that too cruel for a girl of your age?”

He certainly never saw Rem or Ram wear anything besides maid clothes. It seemed like the nightgown was neglected, but that would be something you’d only standardly wear when you spend time in your own room.

Subaru: “It’s not alright like this. Eventually, it won’t be okay not being able to choose clothes at your own discretion. Welll, since nothing can be done about it today, wear a maid outfit that would allow you to spend your time rather comfortably. “

Rem: “Understood. I will change into maid clothes used for a day off.”

Subaru: “Something like that exists?!”

It looked like she had maid outfits gathered around, satisfying their purposes. It seemed that it was a line up of outfits that were used for battle, work, and trips, though there was no reason to put a limit on maid outfits in the first place.

Anyhow, once he dispersed with Rem, who was doing things with painful reluctance, “Rem Day” finally began.

Subaru: “Okay! Well then, everyone attend their given work with their entire spirit! After all, there’d be no point in doing this if we make Rem believe that the mansion can’t function because of her resting!”

Everyone: “Yeah!”

In response to Subaru’s yell intending to incur enthusiasm, Emilia pushed her first up accordingly.

Each of the individuals around succeeded Emilia with their voices, and then the rather anxious single day began.

4

—And there she was, spending her day off with unprecedented nervousness.

Rem: “Is it really fine for me to not help…? …Nee-sama, Subaru-kun.”

Rem, who had returned to her own room, changed into her resting maid clothes just like Subaru instructed and walked around and around in her room anxiously. She simply could not stay still.

To Rem, doing work was an action that was equivalent of ascertaining her raison d’etre. Of course, this didn’t mean that Rem’s fatigue was unbearable, but it was also true that she couldn’t feel at rest on this day off that took place so suddenly.

Rem: “Let’s take a look after all.”

Rem looked like she was calm and being strong with patience, but the truth was that it was unexpectedly too much for her to handle.

She felt anxiety tensing up within her chest, which was a chest bigger than her sister’s, immediately left her room, and started to move around the mansion while taking quick looks around to make sure no one was there.

Rem: “If I’m not mistaken, then Nee-sama and Roswaal-sama were put in charge of the meals…they should be in the kitchen.”

First, she went to peep on the person who was her other half, the person who she could put the most trust in in regards to work—Ram. She had a tendency to be a bit slothful, although she was better than Rem when it came to thoroughness of her work and her sense of responsibility. Or at least, that’s what Rem assessed; she trusted Ram’s own choice to take charge of the cooking.

She trusted her choice, it was just that she was about two times more worried than she usually was. Rem perceived the sweet aroma coming from a certain innermost passage of the kitchen with her sense of smell and got closer to slip into the entrance.

Ram: “Roswaal-sama. I am sorry for having it come to something like this today. I will make sure to reprimand Barusu after this. …Yess, firmly.”

Once Rem peeked inside, she heard Ram’s frightening voice and she stopped moving.

Ram tried her best to not show her emotions to other people, but Rem, someone who accompanied her since birth, could guess what her older sister was feeling from her calm voice.

As a result of the sensor for her older sister that was cultivated through experience over many years, Rem could perceive when Ram was enraged. Even so, she was angry with a type of intensity that she had seldom witnessed in the recent years.

When she took a glance inside, she saw Ram peeling off vegetable skins with fierce vigor. In Ram’s hand, a person who was skillful at using bladed objects, it looked as if all the vegetable’s skin were starting to peel off like magic.

Roswaal: “You don’t have to overreact to that extent. It’s important for you guys to put aside your feelings for work, seeing as how Subaru-kun hasn’t coaxed people with any of his.”

The person watching over Ram comfortably while resting against the kitchen wall was Roswaal.

While looking at Ram's back, who was working, Roswaal swung around his raised finger. Then the pan that was set on the work table for the fire demon crystal shook, the arising aroma from the steam filled the kitchen, and it flowed towards the corridor as well.

The labor was divided with Ram cutting up the ingredients and Roswaal watching over the pan. Ram's responsibility was a bit bigger than Roswaal's, but if you considered their positions, it would allow them to compromise befittingly. Judging from how Ram looked, she was probably full of feelings of wanting to act as an agent for everything and would have Roswaal sit.

Ram: "Roswaal-sama is too easy on Barusu. If that causes a misunderstanding, he'd be a bum. Even today…"

Roswaal: "Then do you think giving Rem a day off was a mistake?"

Ram: "That's…well, I felt like it'd be fine to let Rem do things the way she wants."

Roswaal: "She certainly has been becoming more enthusiastic than before lately. However, being in high spirits and being made tense are two different things. I believe that this current trend is better than how it was before."

Ram kept her mouth shut in response to Roswaal's words, and Rem held her breath as she listened attentively to the conversation. She was listening to them talk about herself, so Rem became very embarrassed.

She didn't even peep on them with this intention, so it was as if she was similar to a thief.

Ram: "…Let's go now."

Ram and Roswaal's cooperation was steady, since they've known each other for a long time. There was nothing like worry about them breaking off relations with each other either. Just when they were about to leave, Rem took her back off of the entrance. However, Roswaal: “Well, let’s leave it at that I guess.”

She heard Ram’s reply and gently held onto her chest. After that, she peeked into the kitchen to give a last glance. Then, her eyes met Roswaal, who was inside the kitchen.

“…”

However, Roswaal just gave a wink towards Rem, overlooking how their eyes met, without saying anything. She took in the consideration from head of the household, and went away from the kitchen as she headed back to the corridor while once again silencing her footsteps. Roswaal may have noticed that Rem was there from the start.

If that was the case, perhaps he brought up the topic to Ram in order to let Rem know about his opinion.

Rem: “Thank you, Roswaal-sama.”

Rem left behind words of gratitude for Roswaal’s nonchalant consideration and headed towards her next stop.

The next individuals she’d check on were Puck and Beatrice, who should be taking care of the laundry.

In some way, these two were the most unexpected in the current division of groups.

Rem: “Normally you’d think that they should be working at the watering place, but…”

The clothes that needed to be washed were collected in the morning and packed towards the large public bath. Whether they were wet or not wasn’t a problem; it was a place that used a great amount of water, and it was customary for individuals in the mansion to use the watering place of the bath-house to do the laundry.

If they followed that custom, then those two should be doing the laundry there.

Rem: “Now that I think about it, I wonder if they’ll know the differences of the specific cloths.”

She suddenly became aware of an uncertain factor and started to feel uneasy.

Maid outfits and Roswaal's clothing did not have things small accessories like handkerchiefs. As for Emilia's clothes and the women's underwear, these were articles of clothing that could not be jumbled together for laundry.

The color change and the amount of damage done to the material would be extremely unpleasant if they were jumbled together.

Rem: "Even when the laundry has at least always been taken care of by either me or Nee-sama…!"

She repents for having forgotten about that. Rem hurries up and runs toward the west wing's large public path. She hears the sound of water and people talking, which confirmed that those two were there. Next she would pick up the clothes that needed to be washed before they did it recklessly and—

Puck: "Are you sure about this, Betty? If you wash girls' underwear so recklessly its appearance will mess up. It's going to become unusable soon, so wash it with care—that's standard. You're kinda washing the underwear and the shirts one at a time, but if you don't take your time with it for these important things…"

Beatrice: "Hmmm. You're well-informed as expected, Bubby, I suppose. I'll take note of what you said."

Rem was in the dressing room and covering her breath. In front of her eyes, she saw Beatrice putting her hands into the hot water drawn into the bucket washing underclothes. Puck was floating around that scene. He shook his tail and was gazing at the small personal bathtub.

Rem sensed the slight changes of mana and confirmed what Puck was doing as she stood on her tiptoes. It came into her eyes and she held her breath. She saw the clothes being covered with hot water and bubbles, turning round and round in the bathtub. He was most likely making use of his wind and water magic, sometimes dealing with a large amount of clothes at once by spinning them counterclockwise.

Beatrice as well, if you looked at the situation at hand, she wasn't directly putting her hands into the bucket. The water was moving in front of her held out hands and it looked as if it had gained form. She was washing the underwear in a way that made it seem like she was using her own hands.

This was the squandering of magic that gave an overwhelming feeling of life—magic that could be used precisely because they were both paranormal existences.

What they were doing was extremely advanced, yet they were using their magic superbly for the very plebeian laundry duty. She became even more surprised, but Puck was strangely well informed on the life of humans—that was his bag full of wisdom.

Puck: "If you wash the detergent together with it like that, you'll be washing it out too much with the cooling water. If you don't wash it properly, the white material will turn yellow. Having the material in a place with good ventilation and drying it in the shade while avoiding exposing it to the sun would be considerate for the underwear when drying."

Or rather, he was so informed on the life of humans that it was a bit unpleasant.

He may have learned it for Emilia's sake, but where he learned it from was truly a mystery.

Rem: "It seems like I don't have to worry."

The ignorance part of the factor that she was the most worried about was cleared without a sense of danger. Rem disregarded the incomprehensible parts and was felt relieved from her worries, seeing as how this area was fine as well.

Beatrice: "Nevertheless, doing the laundry is troublesome. All those humans dirty various things just by living. Dealing with that is troublesome for them, I suppose."

Puck: "We refresh ourselves after going in and out a bit after all. Or wait, were Betty's circumstances a little different?"

Beatrice: "…Just a little. In regards to dirtying, it's the same as Bubby, I suppose."

Beatrice dropped her tone slightly and then looked into the bucket. Then

Beatrice: "It's troublesome even when using magic, yet doing things like washing clothing one by one feels like an abnormal thing to do. I am already fed up with this just after doing it for a short while."

Puck: "But the people who do it everyday are Subaru and those girls. We don't need to do the laundry, but we do understand the importance of food and cleaning. They get tired from having to take care of all of that everyday, I can understand giving a day off every now and then."

Beatrice: "We-Well it's not like I didn't think a bit about that too."

The genuity of Beatrice's feelings were more perceivable than the genuity of Puck's feelings, which you couldn't see. They were more perceivable because Rem, who already came out of the dressing room, also remembered about how the little girl had a blushed face.

Rem: "Thanks you two for your concern."

She left the dressing room, headed towards the bath, and then bowed. After that, she went towards the place of the last pair for today's share of work. It was the pair that Rem was the most worried about. She was worried about if they'd be able to deal with the butting in and interfering. They were the most worrisome pair. Subaru and Emilia should've been starting the cleaning of the west wing for today.

Emilia: "Cleaning gives that feeling of covering my face with a cloth after all."

Subaru: "That's a phrase you don't hear nowadays…"

Rem was heading towards the third floor of the west wing when she heard their voices and then quietly held her breath. When she put her back against the wall and peeped through the corridor, she saw Subaru holding cleaning tools in his hand and Emilia wiping the windows.

Emilia had her hair put together in the back, wearing an apron and wearing a white cloth on her head. Rem thought it was lovely how Subaru was stealing side glances at Emilia.

Emilia: “Nevertheless, this place isn’t really that dirty either. It looks like it gets cleaned reaaally well.”

Subaru: “Well that’s because the three buildings get cleaned by turns in the daily special rotations. Moreover, the west wing isn’t used that much in comparison to others. Places like this floor’s dance hall are completely unused.”

Emilia breathed on the window and then wiped it, which made squeaking noises. At the side, Subaru was using the stepladder. He checked the windows and above the door and then shrugged his shoulders with a face indicative of losing his will to continue.

Subaru: “Ahhh, I give up. It’s clean here too! I never thought I’d live to see a day where I’d feel displeased about something being clean!”

Emilia: “You really said it. However, that alone shows how Rem does her work with utmost effort. I might’ve not noticed that at all until I looked around like this.”

Emilia smiles at Subaru, who was at his wits’ end, briefly looks over the passageway and let out a sigh.

Emilia: “Something like this cannot be taken lightly. I wanted to do something for Rem’s sake, yet this was also a learning experience for me. Subaru, thank you.”

Subaru: “Eh? Ah, yeah, right. Just what I aimed for. Using a regular day to teach Emilia-tan about having someone support you and allowing Rem to rest too is like killing two birds with one stone, huh?”

Emilia: “Sorry. I don’t really understand what you are trying to say.”

Rem could also relate with not understanding Subaru when he became embarrassed and would start talking fast. Subaru dropped his shoulders and was dejected in a way that made it seem like he had the same impression of Emilia that Emilia had of him.

Emilia: “However, when I clean the mansion like this, it reminds of the thing that happened a little while back.”

Subaru: “What happened a little while back?”

Emilia: “I also tried to work like Rem just for a little bit, though it caused various misunderstandings…fufu, it’s a nice memory to me now.”

Subaru: “Oo, I see. There’s no way you wore something like a maid outfit. There’s no way, righttt.”

Emilia: “Nope, I wore one, although it was short, unlike Rem and the others’ maid outfits.”

Subaru: “Seriously?! Why was I not there?!”

Emilia: “Eh? You weren’t there obviously because you and I still hadn’t met at that time.”

In response to the bitter Subaru, him biting his lips, Emilia was tilting her head with a look of astonishment on her face.

Emilia was a sinful person for being someone who didn’t notice anything even when Subaru was that easy to understand. On one hand Rem felt sorry for Subaru, and on the other hand she also felt relieved from their lack of progress.

Subaru: “Huh? Come to think of it, today I…one, two, three…”

And when she was coming to accept herself, Subaru suddenly started counting the number of times he raised his voice. He counted on his fingers, muttered a small “That’s not okay”, and gazed outside the window. Then

Emilia: “Subaru, what’s wrong?”

Subaru: “I forgot that I have some important work to do. Ahh, this is a matter of neglecting a duty, huh."

Emilia: "Some important work to do…is it something that needs things like time and other people's help?"

Subaru: "Nope, I'll be fine alone. However, it's a type of work that cannot be neglected."

Subaru scratched his cheek and had a face indicative of him regretting his inadequate foresight. Emilia put her fingers on her lips and went into deep thought, scrutinizing Subaru's response as she let out a nod.

Emilia: "Alright. If that's the case, then Subaru can go take care of his work. Surely I'll be fine with this building's cleaning, even if I'm by myself, after all. It's almost done too, so."

Subaru: "…Emilia-tan. Will you be fine without me? You won't feel lonely?"

Emilia: "That really won't make me feel lonely at all, so don't worry."

Subaru: "Why are you denying it with emphasis?"

They had their usual interactions and then Subaru left Emilia's side, seemingly with traces of regret. Emilia waved goodbye with her small hand and then raised her voice to get psyched as she said "OK!" then

Emilia: "Alright, I also told Subaru some ensuring words, so I have to do my best. I gotta show him a site of doing things as if it was a piece of cake, despite doing it by myself. It'll make him laugh later."

Even though Emilia knew about how there was nothing that would make Subaru laugh at her, she took the bucket and house-cloth and went into a difference place of the mansion without minding it. If she was in this mood, then she'd probably have no trouble with her cleaning either. If there was something to worry about, then that would be…

Rem: “I wonder where Subaru-kun went…”

Subaru parted with Emilia and went off to god knows where by himself. The meals, laundry, and cleaning work were all being taken care of when it came to important work that could not be neglected.

Rem: “—Oh.”

While Rem was pondering about where he could be, she remembered about how Subaru was looking outside the window and arrived at the answer.

5

Rem: “Is it okay for me to be with you, Subaru-kun?”

Subaru was standing at the place where he came out of the mansion’s main gate and looked at Rem with his eyes wide open.

Rem’s words caused him to make an embarrassed look with his face and scratched his head.

Subaru: “I guess Rem really did predict it after all…”

Rem: “No, I also forget about it until just a little while ago. I most likely remembered it at about the same time Subaru-kun did.”

Rem let out a small smile and shook her head at Subaru, who appeared to have reflected on the matter.

In reality, Rem possibly wouldn’t have noticed if Subaru never remembered about it. That showed just about how much she had fixated on her thoughts about her sudden day off.

Rem: “As of today, it’s been 3 days since the last check…today it’s necessary to check if the mountain’s barrier is properly established, so. And the chaos of the demon beasts’ incident has finally settled down, so.”

The work that Subaru remembered and Rem had forgotten—it was the confirmation of the barrier.

The reason for yesterday's uproar with the demon beasts was because of them neglecting to control the barrier used for isolating the demon beasts that lived on the mountain. Thus, they stuck another new barrio onto the mountain and were checking on it in fixed intervals until it established. Today was the appointed day for that confirmation, and Rem caught Subaru when he decided to head towards the mountain.

Subaru: "I can go to the designated spot of the crystal stone to check things like the brightness and if it's shining by myself, you know? I'm hiking that much by myself, and yet you're still worried?"

Rem: "I'm always worried about Subaru-kun, but that's not all of it. I want to walk with Subaru-kun. Is that not okay?"

Rem's proposal caused Subaru to look away and pat the tip of his nose with his finger. When Subaru brought his attention to the straightforward Rem looking at him, he let out a sigh as if he was beaten down by her persistence.

Subaru: "You're hiking even on a day to rest. Rem sure is surprisingly fond of the outdoors."

Rem: "You said that I could always rely on you whenever I'm with Subaru-kun, after all. That's what you told me."

Subaru: "That sure puts me on the spot. It's fine, let's go together. No road is long with good company."

Rem: "—Yes."

In continuance with Subaru starting to walk, Rem walks while being half a step back.

This distance and speed were the most comfortable for Rem. They weren't side-by-side, but she wasn't lagging behind either. However, Subaru would occasionally look back to take a glance at her.

It was as if he was checking if Rem was keeping up properly.

Ever since she took notice of that gesture, this position was Subaru's special seat to Rem. This time of being here with him was when she could feel the kindness of the black haired boys' look in his eyes and his warm concern the most.

Subaru: "Hey, Rem. This day was decided by force, but was it a bother?"

Rem: "A bother?"

Subaru: "You looked like you were waiting in front of the gate, but I was just kinda thinking that it didn't look like you were very calm. Never mind, can't do anything about it now. It's just a matter of taking care of things earlier."

Subaru awkwardly trying to guess Rem's emotions caused her to look like she was about to burst into laughter. Just like Subaru said, it was too late to worry about it now, so there was no point in breaking the ice with such anxiety. However, she started to feel a slight inclination to be unkind.

Rem: "That's right. To speak the truth, I was arranging my thoughts when I was doing various work, and then things I wanted to do came into mind, which meant that I was prevented from doing them because of daily work."

Subaru: "I apologize…for being ignorant."

Rem: "I also have various work arranged. I've avoided it today, so that might cause me to be hindered by tomorrow's arrangements and the arrangements after that day as well. It's also true that I've been bothered because of that."

Subaru: "I'm foolish…Y□your little kindness has been a great…"

Rem gave a side glance at Subaru, who was holding onto his chest and staggering. She stuck her little tongue out with real intent of doing so.

He surprised her, so this was enough revenge for her. Moreover, although she was surprised, she didn't feel so bad about getting today's day off.

Rem: "However, I am happy that Subaru-kun worried about me. I was able to find out about what Emilia-sama and Roswaal-sama normally thought about me. I want to express my gratitude for that."

Incidentally, she was able to find out about Puck's mysterious brain and Beatrice's way of using fortitude magic as well. Rem also wanted to try copying that way of washing by turning the clothes round and round in the hot water.

Rem's response caused Subaru to stop walking. He had his mouth wide open, and after that, he curled his lips upon realizing the fact that he had been teased by her.

Subaru: "It seems like you'd be intimate with me enough to pull a joke on me, and that makes me happy. Good grief."

Rem: "Sorry. However, you truly did surprise me with something sudden. Besides, if the mansion can function like it did today without myself, then that makes me feel lonesome."

Subaru: "No. Even if you say that, things like housework especially cannot be done when the potential of war in the mansion becomes concentrated like it did today. Moreover, when I woke up and thought about the amount of work Rem had finished until breakfast, I actually had doubts about if the mansion would function well throughout the day with this potential of war."

Rem: "No matter how you look at it, that's over exaggerating things."

Subaru: "Can you really say that as someone who does the work of about 5 people all by herself? You can properly acknowledge yourself more, you know. I won't complain if you make a smug face just a few times every now and then."

Rem could only be happy about Subaru saying that and giving her his acknowledgement.

If she could get Subaru to say things to that extent, it'd also make it worth it for her to put in efforts in her work.

In the mansion, today she also got a lot of words from Emilia and Roswaal that made her happy.

She had nothing but gratitude for Subaru, who was the first person to say something, and she started to feel nothing but feelings of wanting to repay him for his kindness.

Rem: “Subaru-kun.”

Subaru: “Hmm? What’s up? Feel like making a smug face now?”

Rem: “Thank you.”

Subaru: “Why did you just thank me?! Was I not building up for my gratitude for all these times?!”

Subaru gets confused as if he had taken in an unexpected reply as Rem puts her hand on her mouth and smiles.

—She did all this to show that this boy was precious, precisely because he was not aware of it himself.

6

The next morning, Rem woke up earlier than usual, took more care of her personal appearance than usual, finished the routine tasks feeling brighter than usual, and visited Ram at the usual time.

Rem: “…Halfway there.”

She slipped her into the towel blanket, and lifted the body of her habitually complainful sister. She sat behind Ram, whose head was shaking unsteadily, and fixed her hair pink hair with a comb.

Rem: “Nee-sama, here’s the steam towel.”

She handed over the towel steamed with hot water to the yawning Ram. The absent-minded Ram wiped her face hard with it, slowly awakening her consciousness. While she did this, Rem brought out the change of clothes, and she quickly helped Ram take off her nightclothes, changing her clothes into her uniform instead. She was now accustomed to this worker technique.

Ram: “…Rem, you’re in a very good mood this morning.”

Ram was completely awake. Rem was humming while dressing her up, which made Ram loosen her pale lips and mutter those words.

Rem: “Am I…? I guess so. I was able to have a very valuable day off yesterday. It also caused trouble for Nee-sama…”

Ram: "…Did you rest thoroughly?"

Ram enquired her about her day with brief words.

In response, Rem thinks about yesterday. She remembered the dinner with Ram and Roswaal's collaborated meal. She remembered when the clothes were drying when Beatrice slept in the sun, along with Puck who was sent flying by a sudden gust of wind. She remembered Emilia, who broke a vase in the middle of cleaning and then wandered around while looking like she was about to cry. And then she remembered walking with Subaru on the mountain road, along with the words they exchanged.

—Every one of those memories gave Rem an obvious answer to present.

Rem: "Yes, Nee-sama. I had the world's happiest day off yesterday."

Ram: "—I see. That's good then."

In response to Rem answering with a smile, Ram closed her eyes and then nodded with a satisfied look. It was a facial expression that even Rem couldn't see readily; it was Ram's facial expression of feeling at peace from the bottom of her heart.

She quietly turns her eyes towards the window, looking outside with that calm face. Then

Ram: "Barusu makes some useful suggestions too, huh."

Rem: "Yess. Subaru-kun is amazing. You think so too, right Nee-sama?"

Ram: "An expectation like that has made me reconsider my words."

Rem's dishonest sister's reply made her give a childish pout. A gesture like this was something that Rem only showed in front of Ram, although now it was specially increased with another person.

Ram was finished changing into her clothes. She took a pose in front of the mirror and Rem gave an applause. And from there, when they were leaving the passage with just the two of them, Subaru came along at the exact same time while yawning and walking in the corridor.

They took notice of Subaru and then he stifled his yawning with a smile as he raised his hand.

Subaru: “Good morning you two…Why is Nee-sama glaring at me in the morning?”

Ram: “You don’t know? A woman makes a face like this when she finds a dark grey corpse in the morning.”

Subaru: “I don’t want to think of that as the answer to my question!”

It seemed that the conversation they had in the room was being prolonged. Ram was cold to Subaru from the beginning of this morning. Moreover, while holding a wry smile, Rem made a decision to at least have herself treat Subaru nicely.

Rem: “Subaru-kun, please don’t worry about it. Nee-sama is just a little frank.”

Subaru: “That doesn’t act as a follow up with how I was treated as a dark gray corpse.”

It failed for some reason.

There would occasionally be times when Rem’s attempts to show concern didn’t go well. When this happened, she would tilt her head.

Anyhow, Subaru sighed deeply, put aside the shock from just now, and looked at Rem.

Subaru: “By the way Rem, recapping on yesterday, did you enjoy your rest on your sudden day off?”

Rem: “Thanks to Subaru-kun, yes of course I did.”

Ram: “Tsche.”

Subaru: “Nee-sama, you clicked your tongue right now, didn’t you?”

Subaru glared at Ram’s face from the side as she turned away. Rem was satisfied from having found even greater joy while Ram was feeling jealous about their intimacy.

Subaru: “Well Rem being able to smile while looking like she’s enjoying herself is what matters the most.”

Rem, who had loosened her cheeks, spontaneously takes notice of Subaru, and Subaru also let out a smile while scratching his cheek, looking as if he was embarrassed.

Subaru: “So Rem, you only had yesterday as a day to think about it, but did you think about your reward? There’s no way you’re going to tell me something like you had tons of things to do even while resting from everything on your day off, right?”

Rem: “I won’t say that. But as for my reward, I’ve already received it.”

Subaru: “Eh, seriously? I didn’t hear about this. Ros-chi, that bastard. That’s cold of him.”

Puzzling over the matter, Subaru pouted his lips at the head of the household who wasn’t there. However, it was a simple misunderstanding. It was a terrible false accusation towards Roswaal.

Because after all, Rem’s reward was none other than Subaru’s suggestion itself—something that was enough to accept for her.

—Everyone in the mansion showed concern for Rem and worked together, with no compensation, in order to come up with a solution for the one day off. Everyone made her feel her own worth. There’s no way that there was any reward greater than her coming to understand that reality. Thus,

Rem: “—I’ll do my best with my work today too.”

Rem said that, showing a smile to the two people she cared about—a smile that was more charming than usual.

END

The Day I Gave up on Being a Following Star

1

In this world, nations are arranged in a single continuous continent, making up the four countries called the Great Nations.

With their territory in the east, west, south, and north, and while there are various other smaller countries, they are treated as nothing more than vassal states under the protection of one of the Great Nations.

The relative power of the four Great Nations is held in a delicate balance, and except for the newly-emerged nation of Kararagi, this stalemate has not changed significantly in nearly a thousand years.

In the Holy Kingdom of Gusteko in the north, severe cold combines with steep mountains, and for both men and beasts, it is a nation that requires harsh strength. Snow falls throughout the year, and all but a few of its products are made to endure the cold. In exchange, cattle breeding, the veins of magic ore that sleep in the steep mountains, mining and handling magic ore preserve the nation's strength.

As well, the peak of the sacred mountain Pardochia is taught to be one of the dwellings of the Four Great Spirits, reigned over by the Holy Beast Odglass who holds enormous power.

At the founding of the Holy Kingdom Gusteko, Odglass gave the name "Holy King" and exchanged a contract with a spirit arts user who followed her, and since then has always been involved in choosing the "Holy King" who is the head of the nation.

The "Holy King" who leads the Holy Kingdom of Gusteko is determined, regardless of bloodline or origin, by being chosen by the Holy Beast Odglass from one elected out of the citizens to lead the next generation.

The city-state of Kararagi in the west is, compared to the other three Great Nations, a newly-emerged nation with a short history.

Until roughly four hundred years ago, the western portion of the continent looked like a powder keg of several small nations angrily eyeing each other. There was little difference in national power between any of the small nations, and, each fearing being ganged up on by the others, an unproductive era of being wary of each other continued for a long time.

The one who put a stop to that situation was a common merchant who called himself Hoshin.

Hoshin, of uncertain identity and origin, rose in the world simply through his words and business talent and imagination, and in the end, he beat down the small countries that had antagonized each other with military force, using the magic called economic might. Not belonging to any nation, his devilish tactics nevertheless meant that there were people at the center of every nation with connections to Hoshin.

As a result, many small countries bowed before Hoshin, their position as nations was altered to being cities, and the city-state of Kararagi was born with Hoshin being the representative for all cities.

Since then, Hoshin's name became a word referring to rising to prominence, and even after Hoshin's death, many talented people have gathered to walk in the footsteps he left. As well, the city-state of Kararagi was formed into a strong country that the other three Great Nations could not easily meddle with.

The southern Empire of Vollachia holds the oldest history, and with the long-held reasoning of "Wealthy country, strong army", the nation has continued being led by it's emperor.

Reigning from the pinnacle, the emperor holds absolute authority, and the government of the empire is all managed by the emperor.

That arrangement hasn't changed since the founding of the country, and the reason that the empire hasn't collapsed due to a foolish ruler is the sublime law concerning the change of rulership.

The custom is that while he holds the throne, the emperor produces children in all parts of the country, and those children contend for the position of next emperor. To a candidate for the position of emperor, failure means death, and passing through this gruesome process which concentrates the world's hatred and ugliness, a single person is chosen as the next emperor.

An attitude of respect towards this national character has filtered down to the citizens as well, and the imperial doctrine of accepting the supremacy of the powerful and a powerful emperor, is widely thought of as the natural state of affairs.

There is some interaction with other countries, but being blessed with fertile lands and a stable climate, the country is basically able to sustain itself from within, and contact with the outside is not looked on favorably. Instead, they continually embrace the ambition to expand their territory, and their ancient conflict with Lugunica has continued without ceasing.

Hence, in the southwest part of the Dragon Kingdom of Lugunica, the Barrielle domain was continually exposed to a sense of peril.

2

"If you can believe it, I've heard that his Lordship has taken a new wife."

To the inhabitants of the Barielle domain, it was nothing more than a sarcastic topic exchanged during a break from working in the fields.

In regards to Baron Leip Barielle who managed their domain, the opinion of the local citizens wasn't that good. Actually, it would be better to say they held a poor opinion of him.

Taxes and local laws that were lacking in consideration for the citizens. Not only was it far from being an approach that would produce friendship, it was difficult to expect people to feel goodwill towards an authority figure who seldom even showed his face.

With that much of a gap formed between the minds of the lord and the citizens, it wasn't impossible for that to become the seed of a rebellion. In truth, several had been attempted in the last ten years.

However, for a lord that didn't pay sufficient attention to the good intentions of his citizens, he never failed to be wary of their bad intentions. As a result, the attempts were crushed along with cruel demonstrations, and relations worsened by the day.

Because of that, while the lord's announcement would normally be celebrated, to the citizens, it was no concern of theirs. With the baron already advanced in years, taking a second wife at his age didn't arouse their interest.

Doubtless this second wife or whatever would simply make off with most of the fruits of their labor, and prove to be a demon who would leave them only enough supplies to survive on.

The end of lord Liep's lifespan, and the fall of the heirless house of Barielle.

These were the only hopes of the local citizens as they lived day to day, and their first evaluation of her.

Their first evaluation before seeing the red woman known as Priscilla Barielle.

"Huh. What a dreary place, and such lifeless expressions."

That was the first thing she said, while looking over the best field in the village and it's owner.

A voice filled with contempt, and words spoken by one looking down from far above. Many who looked up felt anger that was difficult to endure, but were left speechless the moment they saw her.

Standing there was a red woman.

Her orange hair looked like a reflection of the rays of the sun and was gathered with a barrette, and her more-than-voluptuous body was wrapped in a crimson dress that exposed it generously. Her lightly-colored lips broke into a scarlet smile, and her eyes blazed red as they gazed back at those looking at her.

Even the fan she had chosen to cool herself with was red, so from top to bottom, she was a crimson woman.

From that sort of visual attack, it was clear at a glance that she was someone of high standing, but despite that, everyone still forgot to react.

In addition to the rest, to an extent sufficient to erase the impression given by her outlandish clothing, the red woman was beautiful.

Everyone there, man or woman, couldn't help but tremble at the beauty before their eyes.

"Why are you staring at me with those pathetic eyes? Is that not disrespectful, you lowly imbeciles?"

However, that feeling, too, was completely overridden by the woman's ongoing derisive comments. They had been slow to recognize her contempt, and though the people all held anger in their eyes, they hid it inside and lowered their heads.

The red woman's words were humiliating insults. But, simply by looking at her they could tell that her station in life was completely different from theirs. In other words, there was nothing to be gained by trying to oppose her. Just as they normally did, in the face of unfairness or discontent, they hung down their heads; waiting for the storm to pass was the best plan.

"Oh, I see. Long years of resignation have entirely stolen away your backbone, and turned you all timid, then. That means the old man must be quite a noble, then. I see he is quite good at being oppressive."

"Y… you seem to be a noble. What brings you to this village today…?"

As she looked over the downcast faces of the locals with an expression of comprehension, she was resolutely addressed by the field's owner.

As the owner of the best field and land in the village, even if it wasn't much of a contest, he was the village representative. No one else here was suited to asking the business of a noble.

"Do not be in such a hurry, commoner. It is expected that you would be surprised when a beauty like myself visits suddenly, but I do what I want however I want, and I will not let anyone rush me. You should be grateful for your unexpected good fortune. Just carry on glancing at my fair form from the corner of your eyes, and forget the passage of time."

Bringing her face close to the owner's, the red woman spoke seductively to him close enough that he could feel her breath. At that, the owner backed away, visibly flustered. He could hardly be blamed for that.

Between the owner and the red woman, the difference in age was like a parent and child, but the intense charm she was unleashing was enough to make him forget the difference in years and make a man think of a woman. To call it bewitching would be appropriate.

"Hmm, hmm… Oh, I see."

After unsettling the owner, the woman looked over the nearby fields as though she owned them.

While that was going on, the locals had their hands full stealing glances at her from the corner of their eyes, just as she'd said. They had no motivation to resume working in the fields and be complained at further, but no one even thought to do so.

To do something different than everyone else, and draw the attention of the red woman, was something they all feared.

"Hmm, yes. First here and here, then I suppose those two over there will do. There is little difference between any of them, so you should see it as your good fortune that they caught my fancy."

After briefly looking over the nearby fields, the woman nodded with a satisfied expression.

Looking sharply at the owner, she grinned to see him trembling. In spite of that smile being something that made one think of malice, it was too beautiful to look away from.

“You there, commoner. You own the largest field in the village, do you not?”

“Um, yes. That’s correct.”

“I can tell from looking at your field. It’s terrible, but the land is extensive, at least. Like an old, rotten tree, you hold ambitions unsuited to the limits of your form, much like a certain lord I might mention.”

The inhabitants there slowly realized that those words, filled with contempt and mockery, were directed at none other than Leip, and their faces went pale at the disrespect.

To the domain’s inhabitants, the lord was one who looked down on them from above. To them who had become completely accepting of that idea, the thought that the red woman held an even higher position than their lord never entered their minds. In truth, that would have been overthinking it.

“Well, your field will do. It is a perfectly good stepping stone to use as a basis for comparison. The owner of the good fortune of having my influence bestowed on him will be someone else. The owner of those four meager fields across the road.”

The woman was pointing at fields that, compared to the land of the large field owner, were withered wastelands. Just like the fields, their owners also looked weakly, and their entire household seemed to be getting by day to day supported by the kindness of the other villagers.

As that villager came forward and gave his names, the red woman’s eyes were colored with a bitterly cruel emotion.

It was largely with feelings of disdain, hatred, and complete viciousness that she looked down on him.

“Well, whatever. When you give water to parched grass, anyone can see the change.”

As the inhabitants stiffened as though shot, the woman looked away in boredom. Then she pointed to the parched field, and quietly said something to the man.

The voice whispered into his ear reached only him, and those around them didn't know what kind of unreasonable demand she was making of him. They simply felt pity for him as he nodded his head like a doll.

And when she finished whispering, the woman folded her arms with a satisfied expression. Her abundant breasts shook greatly over her folded arms, and the women looked askance at the men as they couldn't help groaning.

"I forgot to say, I am Priscilla Barielle. The new baroness of all the Barielle lands around here. Let those who are not here know as well. That I am generously forgiving rudeness like that of today, will only happen on this day when ignorance and blindness can be forgiven."

And the woman departed, leaving words that caused the villagers despair as they returned to themselves.

Afterwards, the locals realized that the person calling herself Priscilla Barielle was the new second wife that Baron Leip Barielle had taken. They didn't understand why she would have come to see the domain without any escort, but her insolent arrogance brought Leip's tyranny to mind.

As well, the fact that she was a young woman led them to despair, as it crushed their hope of Leip's age leading to his removal from his position.

It meant that they would suffer under the same cruel rulership as Leip, long into the future.

All of them held that sort of unease and fear about Priscilla's visit, and then they forgot that one month later.

…Because, in the field of the man Priscilla had selected, an impossibly abundant harvest appeared.

3

“Not sure what to say; honestly, that was unexpected. To see them get so attached to you, princess.”

The voice was carefree, but a little muffled and thus hard to hear.

The voice being overlapped with the rasping sound of metals brushing against each other, and it being muffled, were from the same cause—the head of the voice’s owner was completely covered by a pitch-black steel helmet, and he had a habit of playing with it’s joints as he spoke.

He was a person with a terribly unusual outfit; you might even call it outlandish.

His head was covered with a black steel helmet, just as was mentioned earlier, but he was protected by it’s strong defense only from his neck upwards. His well-toned body was covered in rough clothing like that of a bandit, and his feet were, oddly enough, wearing boots woven from leather. A shabby cloth hung from his shoulders and covered his neck, and a rough, wide-bladed sword peeked out from behind his back, hanging horizontally.

In every sense it was a collection of weird features, but there was one spot that stood out more than all the rest.

…The helmeted man’s left arm was missing below the shoulder.

The man, who had a particular loss to go along with his outlandish outfit, projected an abnormal presence simply standing there. Even more so standing next to the red woman—Priscilla Barielle.

“And what do you mean by unexpected? Behold my beauty, which exceeds human understanding. Like baby birds long to be fed, It’s entirely natural that the commoners should worship me, Al.”

“It was just something I’d imagined on my own, but still. Here I always thought you were the type who wouldn’t do anything to put more fish in the pond, princess.”

“Then there would be no reason for me to welcome you. Do you not agree?”

“Now that you say it, that’s true. I guess I was mixed up.”

Accepting Priscilla’s words without complaint, the helmeted man—Al—scratched the top of his helmet with his thick right arm. He looked around at his surroundings as though curious, but his expression and mood could not be seen.

For her part, Priscilla had no reaction to her attendant’s attitude. As she continued pressing forward at a steady pace, the people around her spoke up as they noticed her.

“Ah, it’s Priscilla-sama!” “It’s the dear concubine princess!” “Long live the Sun Princess!”

As one of them noticed her, many others reacted to their raised voice and came rushing out of their houses. The villagers, all with cheerful faces, unanimously honored and praised Priscilla.

“Mhmm. Very good. You should exert yourselves unfailingly, commoners. As long as you continue to bow before my glory and follow me, I would not be so cruel as to deprive you of my compassion. Be sure not to neglect that in the future.”

Priscilla’s words weren’t said to anyone in particular, so much as to everyone there who cheering for her.

It certainly wasn’t a loud voice, but her voice had the power to penetrate and reach everywhere. At the arrogance of those powerful words, Al couldn’t help but cringe, but, not only did the villagers not take it poorly, they readily accepted her prideful speech.

“Understood!” “If it’s for Priscilla-sama!” “Long live the Sun Princess!”

Al could only shake his head at the discrepancy between his impression of his lady’s character, and the attitude of the locals.

It was only a few days ago that the helmeted man, Al, had been recognized as Priscilla's knight. Suddenly finding herself needing to choose a knight, Priscilla held a gladiatorial contest to meet that need while prioritizing her own preferences.

The approach of searching for a knight for a baroness, without regard for one's origins, led to a great number signing up, and it became a truly successful contest. There, Al was judged worthy in Priscilla's eyes, and was the man who gained the position of knight.

Their relationship was still too new, and the bonds too thin, to call them lord and attendant. During the time he'd been allowed to stay at her side, Al had been observing her carefully, but she was still a mystery to him.

Though she appeared thoughtful, she would immediately put her impulses into action. One might think that she was approachable for the locals, but then one would suddenly see an expression on her face cruel enough to freeze your blood. Even her limbs that seemed so full of femininity had a viciousness that had taken him off guard, stolen his sword, and came within a hair's breadth of sending his head flying.

As a result, even after spending several days together, his current impression was that he knew nothing about his liege.

"Look here, Al. Why are you just standing there? The commoners are terribly curious about you. Who is that very rare sort of a man standing next to a beautiful maiden like myself, they wonder."

"So why don't you explain it to them, princess?"

"Watch how you speak, Al. Even I do not know how many more times I can overlook your boorish behavior because it's amusing. You should take care not to displease me needlessly."

Just when his opinion of her had been improving a little, this happens. The good mood that had been showing on her face until a second ago had changed in the briefest of moments into the eyes of one looking at trash.

"Ah, sorry, that was my fault. Now that you mention it, what kind of attendant passes off the trouble of introductions onto their master? Sorry, sorry, forgive me chonmage.”

“Very well. I forgive you. However, I’ll have you tell me later what you mean by chonmage.”

The unexpected phrase seemed to have succeeded, allowing Al to narrowly escape the signs of Priscilla’s displeasure. Holding a hand to his chest in relief after having confirmed that, Al explained his position to the locals—regaling them with the story of how he came to serve Priscilla, full of humor and the occasional exaggeration.

4

“Priscilla-sama is a wonderful person. To me, she’s the goddess that saved me, oh yes, indeed.”

That was the response to Al’s question from the boy who had nervously brewed tea, clearly not familiar with doing so. His peculiar wording might have been an attempt to curry favor.

The location was the Barielle manor’s lounge. Casually seated on a very comfortable sofa, Al was enjoying his break time to the fullest.

“You’re really fond of the princess, so I thought you might say something like that, Schult-chan.”

Suppressing a chuckle at the boy’s response, Al lifted the offered cup of tea. Then, slightly lifting his head, he deftly brought the drink to the gap that formed under his helmet.

Never removing his helm, and never showing his real face was Al’s consistent behavior. Being one-armed on top of not removing his helmet meant that his eating habits were rather impolite. Since it was impossible to lift his helmet with one hand while eating, he necessarily ate in much the same way as he drank the tea.

“Do my manners… does my impoliteness bother you?”

Noticing the boy standing still and looking at him, Al asked that in a low voice while putting down his cup. Schult held his breath slightly at the question.

He was a thin boy. His skin was white, and his peach-colored hair was distinctive. His crimson eyes were not very assertive, and he gave such a delicate impression that some who looked at him mistook him for a girl. He was perhaps twelve or thirteen years old, but his body didn't look developed enough for that; he appeared only around ten years of age.

The boy who could easily be called a child was wearing a servant's outfit in black, and imitating a butler. Some people would likely find his appearance more pitiful than amusing. In truth, Al found it somewhat painful to look at Schult trying to stretch beyond his limits.

"I haven't got any education. Please overlook my lack of knowledge about proper manners. You get it, right?"

Folding his legs rudely on top of the chair, Al deliberately demonstrated his rough behavior. At that, Schult shook his head side to side while watching him.

"I, too, am uneducated, the same as Al-sama, oh yes, indeed. So, I don't feel that I'm sufficiently refined to complain about Al-sama's behavior."

"Honesty is a virtue, and being straightforward is the privilege of children. I think you're starting to get the look down, but what you've got inside isn't there yet. How long has it been since you came here, Schult-senpai?"

"Since I was rescued by Priscilla-sama, it's been just three months, oh yes, indeed."

Schult didn't even respond to the irony of being called senpai. Perhaps it was cruel to expect an orphan who grew up in a farming village to understand.

This boy butler Schult was an orphan that Priscilla brought back from a farm village in the domain.

When Priscilla brought the thin, starved boy back with her, saying things like "If you polish him, he'll shine," it seems that the mansion's master Leip was seriously furious, but apparently Priscilla paid him no mind.

Just like that, Schult, protected by the good fortune of having caught Priscilla's eye, was guaranteed food, clothing, and shelter, and the boy was remade into a butler.

“It's hard to say if catching the princess' eye is good luck or bad luck, though.”

“I'm very grateful to Priscilla-sama for being kind enough to rescue me, oh yes, indeed. If I'd continued to stay in the village, I'd have been dead and buried by now, after all.”

“That's a cute picture, yep. Things like that make me feel more and more like I don't know what the princess is thinking, and make me wonder just what kinda person she is.”

Her attitude seemed like one that would never be charitable, and yet she saved an orphan. On the other hand, she didn't extend her hand to everyone, and he had no idea what reason she had to take him in.

Was Priscilla actually the goddess that the locals and Schult believed her to be? Or was she a cruel witch that occasionally sent chills down Al's spine?

“Witch. A witch, indeed…”

Speaking aloud the word he'd thought of himself, he couldn't help but smile at the cliche.

The word ‘witch’ that was known as a taboo in this world. Al himself knew all too well how much of a menace was referred to by that word.

“Al-sama, you…”

“Hm?”

As Al was lost in thought, Schult unexpectedly called to him with an unsettled look in his eyes.

The gesture of holding the silver serving tray to his chest was terribly feminine and out of place.

“It’s correct that you have become Priscilla-sama’s knight, yes, indeed? You protect her. I can trust that you are her ally, can’t I?”

As Schult questioned him seeking reassurance, Al closed his eyes inside his helmet.

As a way of calming the fear in his heart, the boy was looking for powerful words from Al. However,

“When you ask like that, whether I’m her ally or I’m plotting something, of course I’m going to cheerfully reply “Yeah, leave it to me. I’m the princess’ amazing, strongest knight!”. As a question, it’s not really appropriate, ya see. Sorry, please try again.”

He could tell that Schult had been hurt by his response.

Despite that, looking at that expression didn’t cause any regret to stir in Al’s heart.

In betraying the pure look directed at him by the boy, Al didn’t hesitate for a moment. For the sake of his goal, he discards everything else. In a sense, certain sacrifices were necessary for achieving his wish.

Repeating the same mistake again and again, as he had in the past, that alone absolutely could not be allowed, after all.

“…What is this? I was wondering where you’d gotten to, and you are holding a gloomy tea party in a place like this?”

In the lounge that had fallen into silence, a beautiful voice that looked down on them from the sky intruded suddenly.

Violently opening the door without knocking, the lady of the mansion pushed inside while swinging the sleeves of her elegant dress. Folding her arms as though trying to lift her abundant chest, she closed one eye, and spoke.

“Schult. Your only role as an attache is to be there when I wish it.

Missing that opportunity in a place like this is inexcusable. Spending time with an eccentric like Al is even worse. For someone like you whose only merit is cuteness, if his messiness where to infect you as well, it would simply be too much.”

“Saying that’s his only merit; you speak way more directly than I do, princess.”

“It is a fact, and when I state it it becomes an even stronger truth. What other value does Schult have at this time? Even then, compared to the other worthless commoners, he is at least a little better. It will be necessary to take away even that merit if he continues to betray my expectations, of course.”

Looking over the pair that had been conversing in the lounge, Priscilla sniffed dismissively and derided them. Al couldn’t help but give a prideful wry smile, but Schult’s face went pale.

“I… I’ll work harder, oh yes, indeed! So… so please… don’t abandon me…”

“Do not cry and cling to me, it is unbecoming. I can adore even your crying face, but relying on that pity from the start is the height of folly. I do not need a common person as my attache. Continue to show me your value.”

After Priscilla cut off his trembling speech, Schult hurriedly wiped his eyes with his sleeve. His eyes were slightly reddened, but Priscilla nodded at him as he earnestly raised his head.

“That will do. If they lack the backbone to change the way they stand, then the likes of you are no better than corpses. Corpses can become fertilizer if they return to the earth, but if they stay atop the earth while being no different from the dead, nothing good comes of it. I will not have you wasting my air. Take every breath as though it were your last.”

“That’s a bit much… If Schult puts that much effort into breathing, he’ll die of stress, y’know?”

Gently reproving Schult as he started breathing with a determined look, Al shrugged his shoulders at Priscilla.

“Princess, you’re dealing with a kid. I think it’d be alright to have a bit more care and compassion.”

“The uncertainty of the world rains down on everyone, adult or child, man or woman. Do hunger and starvation differentiate between the great and small? Does the curse of the plague discriminate based on social standing? All who live are equals. It is not as though we are held in an cage of iron bars, and thus trying to gain peace by letting another determine how you live is simply negligence.”

“Princess?”

As Priscilla spoke those stern words, irritation bubbled to the surface of her beautiful face. Al couldn’t help but take it that the irritation was related to the latter part of what she had just said.

Before he could figure out the source of it, though, Priscilla’s expression changed.

“All that live are equal. …Of course, that does not include myself.”

“Princess…”

smile. As she grinned, Priscilla concluded by saying that with the world’s coldest smile.

It was the mantra Al had heard her repeat countless times since he began serving as her knight.

“…This world is designed to operate in the way that works best for me.”

That was the basis of Priscilla’s confidence, and the words which most defined her existence.

Words that it would be only natural to laugh at, but somehow they had a magic that couldn’t be laughed off.

“Come now, Schult. It is exactly as I just said. Everything in this world is for my convenience…If so, what would be most convenient for me, as I am thirsty?”

“Ah… yes. I’ll pour some tea right away, oh yes, indeed!”

“Imbecile. The contents of that teapot have already cooled. And if you are trying to tell me to drink Al’s leftover tea, it goes beyond rudeness into rebellion. I’ll have your head removed.”

“Please, anything but that! I’ll go brew more right away, oh yes, indeed!”

Cradling the pot in his arms, Schult fled from the lounge.

While listening to the small footsteps fade into the distance, Al smirked at Priscilla and shrugged,

“Princess, you really are mean.”

“A butler who can calmly do the job is fine, but having one who rushes about flustered like a child is amusing as well. If they were looking for a proper waiter, who would go to the trouble of picking up an orphan? I will allow Schult the honor of relieving my boredom now and then.”

“He’s got it rough, too… Just by having the princess’ attention.”

“And what is rough about it? He can speak with me, and is even able to serve me regularly. This much good fortune is an honor that the men of the world would cry tears of blood for, and want so badly they could taste it. There could not be another child as fortunate as that.”

While justifying treating Schult roughly, Priscilla was implying that she sought the same degree of gratitude from Al as well.

Al responded to that greedy look with a noncommittal “Yeah, yeah.”.

“Such a rude man. It seems that you have forgotten that you nearly lost your head at my whim. …Well, fine. So now, Al.”

"What is it, princess?"

"…How is your plotting coming along?"

At that chilly voice, Al held is breath and looked at Priscilla.

There was no mistake that she had chased off Schult, and waited until no one else was around to bring up the topic. To have a bomb dropped in the middle of a casual conversation like that was a surprise like being hit by an actual nearby blast.

If he hadn't been simulating a flow of events like that ahead of time, he'd probably have been caught off-guard.

"It's not really anything so grand as plotting. For now it's just purely getting a good look at things. So you'd noticed that I was quietly sniffing around, then?"

"My eyes and ears and all of myself are not only more beautiful than the ordinary people, they are more capable as well. Not only that, but this is my domain and my garden. If I wish to listen for the footsteps of a mouse or the wingbeats of a bug, they will reach me."

"If you go treating everything like it's yours, your husband Grandpa Leip will cry."

"If I make an old man like that cry, or wither away, it matters little. I don't care in the least."

It was a relationship where one didn't expect the couple to love each other dearly, but for it to be this harsh was regrettable. However, now was not the time to be worried about the future of the local dysfunctional couple.

"If yer upset with me crawling around, then what'll ya do? Am I gonna get beaten with a whip, then?"

There was no reason for the punishment to be that light, but being thought of as rebellious was problematic, too. In the worst case, he would have to consider the option of using his trump card against Priscilla, but…

“Upset? I’m not going to throw a tantrum over you simply wandering around the house. Really, at the point that I invited a brigand like yourself inside, this sort of trifle was expected.”

However, that wariness was show to be off the mark by Priscilla’s unexpected reply.

“…Yer… really ok with that?”

“For a man to sniff, and desperately follow my lingering scent is the natural way of things. I’m not so inconsiderate as to blame a man for following his nature and being swayed by my charm. Also…”

As Al stood bewildered, Priscilla glanced sidelong at him with enough seductiveness to leave him senseless.

“People in uncertain positions like yours can’t survive without trying to find a safe harbor. If I were to blame you for looking to the left and right to be certain of things, it would be as foolish as telling a bird not to fly.”

“…”

“A mercenary swordsman who I have known only a few days. To believe that he has already given me his loyalty with all his heart… to believe that would be the foolishness of a dreamer. It would be a tremendous show of unreason.”

As Priscilla ended her annoyed speech, Al softly let go of the wariness that had been controlling his body.

At the very least, there were no lies in what she had just said. Since she’d thought about it enough to come to that conclusion.

“…Here I was so sure you’d say ‘Comparing myself with others is disrespectful. All the lot of you need to do is look at me and have your vision stolen away by my glory.’”

“None fear turning the eyes of others away from themselves more than those with no belief in themselves. I have every confidence that I am the greatest in the world. Hence, that sort of anxiety has no hold on me.”

Pulling a folding fan from her cleavage, and opening it with a snap, she continued “Also”,

“There is no doubt that I am the most beautiful gem in the world, but that one is superior is only understood properly when there are other jewels to be compared to. In order to grasp how wonderful I am, it’s necessary to compare me to the ordinary masses. Your walking about, too, in the end is nothing other than a roundabout compliment that confirms my greatness. What do you think, is that not a masterpiece?”

“…Yeah, that’s a masterpiece.”

Despite concealing her mouth with the opened fan, Priscilla couldn’t completely conceal her smile. As she spoke of her own unbridled arrogance, Al paused a moment, and agreed.

Priscilla didn’t point out that faint hesitation. She understood that it would be meaningless to do so.

And Al was shaken, to the extent that he didn’t grasp Priscilla’s understanding.

It was a shock. One that made him feel as though he had been struck in the head.

The girl standing before his eyes, barely of age herself, looked like something other than what she had before.

What on earth did she resemble…?

“Priscilla-sama! My apologies for taking so long, oh yes, indeed! I’ve brewed more tea!”

“Too slow!!”

Before he could find the answer he was thinking deeply about, Schult opened the door and came flying into the room.

Priscilla’s angry voice greeted him, and Schult fearfully set out the tea with unsteady hands. Priscilla sat down on the empty sofa next to him, brazenly crossed her white legs and waited.

And while gazing at his terribly unguarded mistress and the red-faced boy butler, Al sank again into deep thought.

5

Al grimaced in an unseen scowl at the smell wafting through his helmet.

This was the second time he had come in to the study, and it evoked the same emotions as before.

The bad air of a room with insufficient ventilation, and the unique smell of antique books. He thought that he'd become used to the combination, but when the smell of cologne used by someone trying to hide their body odor was mingled with the incompletely-hidden smell of the master of that room, it was another story.

As a result, the study had an air that people hesitated to enter without need.

"You're late."

With his enthusiasm already whittled away by the foul smell that greeted him, Al was further disheartened by that joyless voice. He'd been reluctant to move his feet this direction from the start, and now his motivation had fallen below zero. If the one he was meeting was one that would forgive rudeness, he'd have long ago escaped through the door behind him.

However, the person before his eyes was not so lenient as to forgive such an action as humorous.

"You're late."

The repeated rebuke, entirely unchanged from earlier. The hoarse voice conveyed contempt and insult, and sought an commensurate response from the disheartened Al.

Not content simply with blaming him, it would not be satisfied without crushing his will. Such a heartless man.

"You're l…"

“I’m terribly sorry. What with the mansion being so vast, when I’m summoned suddenly, I end up checking here and there all over the place. Were you saying something just now?”

Deliberately speaking over top of the third rebuke, he was rewarded with an ‘tsk’ full of undisguised ill humor.

Somewhat more relaxed after that reaction, Al once again looked squarely at the master of the study.

He was an old man seated at an ebony desk, with the room’s bookshelves to his left and right. He’d been told his age was close to seventy, but his energetic body held the youth of someone in their fifties. His expression, and his ambition-filled eyes, lent themselves to that impression, and his unbowed back and honed build also made him look like quite an individual.

In opposition to that appearance, however, his harsh, self-centered, arrogant personality was a fatal flaw.

The old man's name was Leip Barielle. The lord of the Barielle Barony, and master of the Barielle manor who had taken the Red Woman, Priscilla, as a wife. In formal terms, as the companion of the one that Al had offered his sword to, this was someone that he should respect.

In truth, Al didn't think of him as the least bit worthy of that respect.

"It seems you are accompanying 'that woman', wandering about the domain daily."

"When you say 'that'…?"

"…tsk. 'That woman' means 'that woman'. My wife, Priscilla, of course!"

"Indeed. Oh, I just wanted to be sure. My mother taught me that when they stop calling each other by name, it's proof that the love of a couple is growing cold."

As Liep grew irate, Al gave an appropriate answer, while sticking out his tongue on the inside.

"I hear you're a gladiator, but do you have any memory of your parents?"

"Hey, it's not like all of the gladiators in Vollachia are thrown into the arena right after they're born. There's actually a lot more thrown in there that got into debt after growing up, or who were criminals. Well, the end result is that you end up getting cut apart by someone your age who fought their way up from the bottom."

"Hmmf. It seems like just the sort of scenery the savages in the empire would like. I can just imagine their poor taste."

It was a rare occurrence, but Al found himself agreeing with the prejudice that Leip spat out.

His days as a gladiator were something that, honestly, he didn't like to recall.

Fighting with his life on the line in the battles held seemingly every day, competing for glory or testing his strength didn't agree with Al's nature. Having barely escaped with his life, he was now able to spend his days like this, in relaxation.

"Well, enough about you for now. It's about Priscilla. What do you think about how 'that woman' is wandering about the domain every day, doing as she pleases?"

"She's quite an inquisitive one, is what I think. She's a little different from the image… ah, the way I thought someone connected to a lord would spend their time, yes. She does seem to get a great reception from the locals, though."

"A great reception, is it? Hmmf, they're simply curious about her. It just happened that 'that woman's whim and sudden idea brought bounty to a field. Just with that, the peasants are treating 'that woman' like the god-dragon. I understand it well enough, but there are limits to that sort of nonsense!"

As he slammed his fist into the desk, Leip was grinding his teeth in anger.

It was likely her popularity with the locals that had set off his mood. Al, who was accompanying Priscilla day after day and travelling around the domain, could imagine that much. Setting aside the matter of Priscilla, Leip's reputation in the various villages was poor; to the extent it wouldn't be an exaggeration to call it rock-bottom.

'He couldn't have been called me here to listen to him whine, could he?', thought Al in disbelief.

"Not that I'm trying to stand up for the princess, but the incident with the field might not have been a spur-of-the-moment thing. No matter which village we head to, the princess always produces the same result. Everywhere, no matter the condition of the soil. Well, I agree it's hard to believe she has that kind of discernment."

"It's foolishness to think it's discernment. What 'that woman' brings is something more repulsive. If not for that, why do you think she's rumored to be 'The Bloody Bride'?"

Al had shrugged his shoulders, but when he heard the alias that Leip mentioned, he stopped moving.

At that reaction, Leip showed the ugly smile of one who has finally gained what he sought.

"The Bloody Bride" was a derogatory name that followed Priscilla, who now went by the Barielle family name.

Priscilla was a maiden of not yet twenty years of age, but though she was now Leip's wife, it wasn't her first marriage. It was her eighth.

Also, of the seven in the past, every one of those marriages had failed. The cause was the death of her companion—in other words, Priscilla had piled up the experience of being separated from seven husbands by death.

Her companions' deaths, in war, from illness, or by accident, were not from a single cause, and while Priscilla had been suspected of involvement in all their deaths, nothing had come of those suspicions as she made her way to where she was today.

As a result, her existence was famous, amongst those who knew of her, as the "Bloody Bride" who brings ill fortune. The reason that men continued to seek for her despite this, was that Priscilla was beautiful enough to make them forget the rumors of bad luck. That, too, was ironic.

However, Al didn't think that Leip fit into that pattern.

One reason was that he was an old man who's lust had long since dried up, but more than anything was that Leip was not crazed and blinded by Priscilla's charm. That was clear from the way he avoided her, and his bearing just now.

In other words, the old man had some other goal in marrying Priscilla.

And that reason was…

“If she wasn’t a candidate for the upcoming Royal Selection, who would take in a trickster-woman like that? She thinks she can get away with anything just because she’s got a nice face. That event where she made you her knight was more of the same, wasn’t it.”

“…I must say, you’re speaking quite bluntly. Don’t you worry that I might pass this on to the princess, and sour your relations?”

Not only speaking crudely, Leip revealed his crude motives without hesitation.

The Royal Selection—the great event that was rocking the Kingdom of Lugunica. In place of the royal family that had been wiped out by illness, the dragon that would choose the new king had brought about the trial that would open the way to the future. Leip was the man entrusted with the care of the prophecy plates where the future of the kingdom was written, so he held information about the Royal Selection even before the royal family was sick.

And striking quickly, taking Priscilla (who was eligible to be a royal candidate) as his wife, he intended to grasp power over the entire country by placing her on the throne.

It was an obvious plot, and a conclusion that anyone who knew Leip could come to. But, to hear the man himself speak so openly of it. Did he not imagine the possibility that Al, in a show of loyalty, might draw his sword for Priscilla here?

Looking at Al as he sat shocked, Leip let an ugly smile twist his mouth.

“You wouldn’t do anything so foolish, I hope? Nothing befits a mercenary more than ruthlessly seeking his own benefit. You who were raised as a gladiator would never throw your life away for a cheap emotion like indignation.”

“…You understand that quite well.”

Moving the hand that had been touching his sword hilt, he feigned non-hostility.

“However, in that case, what is it you wish? Frankly sir, I think what you’re doing is impressive, but I don’t think there’s anything I can do to help with it.”

“Oh, that’s not true. Originally, someone working for me was supposed to be in your position. In truth, at that assembly of crude individuals, all of the top four except you were under my control.”

“Oh my, a fixed race.”

“And that, too, came to nothing due to that woman’s whim. I need to keep ‘that woman’ surrounded with people who see things my way. I’m sure you understand why.”

If Priscilla’s impulsiveness couldn’t be accounted for, then at the least, in order to correct her course, she needed to be surrounded with those who could be predicted. It was the natural way of things. In that case,

“What about the servant, Schult? That kid is another one that the princess collected, isn’t he?”

“I’ve already given that brat the same talk I’m giving you. Luxury that one could never have as an orphan; the promise of that bought him to my side without a second thought. In the end, ‘that woman’ can’t read people any better than that.”

“Hmmm.”

He recalled Schult speaking proudly of working for Priscilla. Having said that, he didn’t think much of it. Putting oneself first was the instinct of living things. If loyalty was a result of being treated well, then it was natural that one’s feelings would lean more towards one that treated oneself better. Al was no exception to that.

“I understand what it is you want of me, sir. With that, I’d be pleased if we could talk about how I’ll be treated and how I am to act in the future.”

“…Hehe. That’s right, that’ll do fine. Not to worry, I won’t make you regret it. Of course, the same goes for Priscilla. For the sake of my own wishes as well, that woman needs to remain healthy. ‘That woman’, the brat, and you too, all the lot of you need to do is receive happiness under my leadership, after all!”

As Al accepted his suggestion, Leip let out a good-humored, throaty laugh.

At that loud laughter, Al whispered “Sorry, princess” to the mistress he had decided to betray.

…Even at that emotional moment, the phantom of Priscilla in the back of his mind was grinning victoriously.

6

A knight calling himself Gilian Endymion visited the Barielle domain.

A handsome man, with a fearless countenance and a dignified look. His shining blond hair sparkled in the sun, and although he was slender, the gorgeousness of his well-toned body was different from Al’s rough form. His well-tailored knight uniform brought out the young man’s charm, and even an untrained eye could tell that the treasured sword hanging from his waist was not the work of an amateur.

From top to bottom, a true and superior knight—that was the impression given by the young man called Gilian.

“He’s the third son of the Endymion household. As his two older brothers as assisting his father with administering their domain, he, who has a talent for the sword, left on a journey to gather martial fame as a knight. Today, I have imposed on him to spend the time with us.”

Saying this, standing beside the handsome young man and introducing him, was Liep Barielle himself.

And obviously, the old man would not be introducing the guest to Al or Schult. Directly in front of Leip, gazing unconcernedly at Gilian, was the Baroness, Priscilla.

“I understand what you have said about the commoner, but I do not understand your intention in introducing that sort of man to me. I am sure you haven't lost your senses to the point where, as would be appropriate for one like yourself with few years remaining, you intend to give me another man."

"Don't be foolish. Who would let go of a beautiful wife like you? Think of today as being about his hope, and just a little bit of my thoughtfulness."

"To be thoughtful, that's so unlike you."

From the way Priscilla sniffed, it was clear she had no intention of believing Leip's request. Although Leip maintained his composure on the outside, one could almost see that he was biting his lip on the inside.

However, before Leip exploded, Gilian slowly came forward.

"My humble apologies for this sudden visit, and for rudely imposing on you."

It was an elegant gesture, and the kind of low, smooth voice that made women swoon. Gilian knelt before Priscilla.

"However, ever since I heard the rumors of Priscilla-sama at the Barielle domain, I have been looking forward to the day that I could meet you. Truly, I feel that you are the incarnation of beauty from above."

"Oho. You do know how to speak properly, then. My beauty is indeed not of this world. And despite that, the contradiction of having come down to this world—truly, I am a sinful woman."

As Gilian continued to string together flowery words, Priscilla, in high spirits, glanced towards Al. Standing behind her and fulfilling the duty of an attendant, he shrugged his shoulders instead of giving a wry smile.

"Very well. I will allow you to touch my skin, and offer a knight's respect. Understand well that this is happiness beyond your expectations."

"Yes. My humble gratitude."

Speaking harshly, Priscilla lightly extended her hand. Gilian took the white fingers as though handling a fragile thing, and performed a knight's greeting by kissing the back of her hand.

And if that had been the end of it, it would have been like nothing more than a scene from a fairy tale.

"And so, old man. The man you brought has passed my first inspection, but what are you looking for after this? You said something about thoughtfulness."

"It's a simple thing. Day by day, I'm busy with official work, and cannot accompany you as you travel about the domain. To have you going here and there alone has always bothered me."

"Although he's little more than a jester, Al is there, and if I brought you along you would simply be in the way. I have no intention of babysitting you. There was really no need for this."

In response to Leip choosing his words carefully, Priscilla refused to show him any mercy.

A vein stood out on Leip's forehead, long since abandoned by his hair. But, despite that, the old man managed to keep a smile on his face.

"Don't say that. It's just that today, I wanted to give you a nice-looking young man for what I make you endure day by day. He's a gentleman to the ladies as well. I'm sure you'll find him interesting."

"You may be hoping too much of me, but I'll do my best to live up to it. Priscilla-sama, if it's acceptable to you, please allow me the honor."

In place of Leip, who was nearing the limits of his self-control, Gilian himself took up the request.

Leip was one thing, but in Gilian's case, there was nothing unnatural about his sincere attitude. Thinking deeply, Priscilla tilted her head from side to side, and glanced at Al.

“Well, why not. Rather than always looking at a clunky iron helmet, it might not be bad to spend the time looking at the face of a man who is not hard on the eyes. Consideration is a virtue, indeed.”

“…Yes, do that. Sir Gilian, please take care of my wife.”

“Yes! Even if it costs my life.”

It was a slightly overdone, theatrical way to say it, but Priscilla enjoyed it all the more for that.

Gilian had brought his personal ground dragon—an outstanding, famed steed with a blue hide. The excellent ground dragon, which most likely had a pedigree, further pleased Priscilla’s eye for beauty.

Guiding his ground dragon expertly, and straddling the dragon together with Priscilla at her insistence, Gilian flashed his white teeth and gallantly rode away from the front of the mansion.

“They’ve finally left. Damn her for making me go through that song and dance. She’s a detestable woman.”

And, watching the pair leave, Leip spat that while letting his shoulders relax. Al let out a small laugh at the speed of the change, and then he looked towards the direction that Priscilla had disappeared to.

“Gilian Endymion, huh. So he’s another of your pawns, then?”

“Of course. However, the amount of effort I’ve put into that one is different than the others. Deliberately depending on the distant Endymion household, I’ve spent a long time preparing him. Compared to the fighting tournament where they don’t ask where you’re from as long as you have skill, the labor I’ve put into hiding my connection with him is quite different.”

“You always go all-out in your plotting. On that point, I honestly admire you, sir.”

“Hmf. With the way you’re involved in this, you’re no different. … Follow me. We’ll speak about the reason I introduced Gilian and ‘that woman’, and our plan for what will come.”

Pointing with his chin, Leip returned towards the mansion, swaying the sleeves of his robe.

While following him, Al suddenly stopped and turned back towards the direction where Priscilla had disappeared.

Of course, she was nowhere to be seen.

7

Discussion of intrigue was always done in the study.

If one were to guess, perhaps it was something that Leip was fixated on.

Breathing through his mouth due to the foul smell he wasn’t used to, Al idly thought about that.

“Even in my office, the walls may have ears; this study alone is safe. It’s the room that our Barielle family has prepared for holding secret discussions in for generations, after all.”

The change in his expression should have been hidden by his helmet, but Leip shrewdly picked up on Al’s thoughts and responded to them. Having come here, the old man’s mind had been sharpened.

This was in no small part due to the fact that the starting date of the Royal Selection, the stage where his wishes would play out, was fast approaching.

“Over at the capital, things are probably getting fairly serious now, I’d guess.”

“By this point, the royal castle is in an uproar. They must have long since known perfectly well that the king and his bloodline couldn’t be saved. Ignoring the problem, and continuing to put off worrying about the continued existence of the kingdom has resulted in this.

That incompetent lot; they understand nothing!"

Getting worked up as he spoke, veins began to stand out on Leip's forehead. Leip, who was nearly indignant enough to burst a blood vessel, had revealed the prophecy about this matter just a few days ago.

Talk of the death of the king had spread through the town, and the higher nobles were beginning preparations for the Royal Selection. In truth, all of their initial movements were more than a step or two behind Leip.

"Making pawns of those you used to hate; haven't you come to enjoy that?"

"I used to think that I would. Instead, looking back at how I was treated by those incompetents, I've simply become more displeased. The Council of Wise Men, indeed. Why, it's nothing more than a club for doddering old men chosen for nothing more than the standing of their house and their age. The head incompetent Miklotov, the insufferable idiot Bordeaux, I'd like nothing more than to toss them out and let witchbeasts feast on their entrails."

"My, you are angry."

Even if he'd turned the conversation that way himself, it was rather boring to listen to someone else's inner hatred.

While giving a noncommittal reply, Al looked toward Schult, who was cowering in a corner of the room. The boy didn't appear to know the reason he was here, his face was pale, and he had been keeping his head low.

"That's enough for now about the dunces in the capital. It's a waste of time. More importantly, at last it's time for the long-awaited Royal Selection. I need to talk to you about that."

"You've already made the announcement that the princess is a candidate, haven't you?"

"Obviously. Firstly, it's necessary to let them know that what was written on the dragon stone is true. To prove that a candidate can cause an emblem of Lugunica to shine, you see. Originally, I'd hoped to have Priscilla take to role of making it shine, and declaring her to be the first participant in the Royal Selection, but…"

Leip stopped speaking for a moment, with a bitter expression.

"At the place they announced the prophecy, one of the upper-class nobles made the emblem shine. My single miscalculation was that there was a candidate already there."

"Heh. That's quite a lucky guy. So who was it?"

"Duchess Karsten… Crusch Karsten. A mere woman, shamelessly carrying the position her father ceded to her. A savage madwoman with the sword, famous as well for being an eccentric followed by a bizarre retainer. What was the emblem thinking, choosing her? … Of course, the moment Priscilla has been chosen, there's no point worrying about that."

In response to a heartfelt sigh, Al couldn't help but agree and give a wry smile.

Candidates for the Royal Selection were able to make the gemstone of an emblem, handed down in the Kingdom of Lugunica, sparkle. Finding the five who fulfill that condition, and having them compete for the throne, was the content of the Royal Selection.

It was just that much about the selection criteria for those candidates was still unclear. At the moment, things they had in common, their bloodline, even their blessings didn't seem to explain it.

"By the way, sir, how'd you find out the princess is a candidate?"

"…I have no obligation to tell you about that. I may have spoken a little too much, but don't go poking your nose into things. All you need to do is follow my instructions."

"…As you say."

As Leip moved to cut off the conversation, Al meekly stood down.

When Al showed that he would quietly do as he was told, Leip let out a long breath through his nose. Then the old man clicked his tongue at Schult, in the corner of the room.

“How long do you intend to do that? I’ve gone to the trouble of making time to speak to you. If you have time to sit there cowering, show me that you intend to contribute at least a little.”

“Y, yes… My apologies…”

Leip sat behind the ebony desk in the back of the room, and Schult stood directly ahead of him. Seeing that some books taken from the shelves were piled up on the floor, Al plopped himself down on top of them.

“I don’t intend to needlessly drag out this discussion. Let’s get to the point. …It’s about Gilian; I intend to have him act as Priscilla’s knight.”

“Wait, wait, hold on a minute there. If you do that, what happens to me?”

Raising his hand at Leip’s statement, Al inquired that while calling for a pause.

“It’s because that I’m treated as the princess’ knight that I’m being allowed to stay at the mansion.”

“Don’t be concerned. I won’t be stooping to having you thrown out. I don’t let go of valuable pawns, and it would be troublesome to have you silenced, as well. It won’t be as the knight, but I’ll make up some position for you at the mansion. There’s no need to worry about it.”

“I’m not that worried about that point, but what meaning is there in going that far to replace her knight? Of course, it’s probably important that he’s one of your pawns, sir.”

“That’s a simple matter. The people love picturing a master and servant with a knightly knight as the servant. Since things have turned out such that someone who is not of the royal family will be taking the throne, the support of the citizens will not be unconditional as it has been up to this point. The simple, foolish citizens need an easy-to-understand image they can get worked up about.”

At Leip’s fervent words, Al raised his eyebrows in unusual interest.

In other words, it was a public relations strategy. Preparing an eye-catching knight and princess, he altered their ease of acceptance from the moment they were first seen. Since the candidates would be contesting between themselves in the Royal Selection, it would turn into something with an influence that could not be ignored. It might be called excessive attention to detail by some, but…

“I honestly respect your willingness to doing anything that will even slightly improve your chance to win.”

“I’m not sure I like the way you put that, but whatever. As the people’s image of a knight, there should be no complaints with Gilian. Priscilla, too, if we’re only talking about her looks, is easy to recognize as one that draws the eye to a rather disgusting extent. My advance preparations are rock solid.”

“Ah, there’s just one little problem.”

It would be raining on the parade of an old man as he was gloating, but Al held some doubts about the strategy he was so proud of. While being subjected to a displeased glare, Al fiddled with the fittings of his helm.

“Will the princess go back on her own decision, then? At an event she opened herself, I was chosen as her knight at her own direction. I’m not sure she’d change her mind on that.”

“What, is that all? Don’t worry over such little things.”

Dismissing Al’s concern with a sniff, Leip continued while tapping on the desk with his finger.

“A knight who’s easy on the eyes, and an eccentric man in a steel helmet. There’s no question about which one a woman would pick. Or are you confident that women would prefer you over Gilian?”

“Yeah, I guess not. In a flirting contest, I’d lose every time. Not just that, even in a swordfight, I might not be able to beat him.”

“Then there you have it.”

Nodding in satisfaction at Al’s pathetic answer, Leip leaned back, making the chair creak.

With that, he more or less understood the old man’s plans. Indeed, he felt it was all something he could nod and agree with. It was just that…

“Ah, umm…”

Unlike Al, who could see the rationality of it, there was Schult, who had been keeping quiet, but now timidly raised his hand.

“What. Do you intend to cast aspersions on my thoughts as well?”

“No, not at all! I, uh, well… well, about Priscilla-sama…”

While cowering beneath Leip’s harsh glare, Schult gulped and continued.

“You won’t do anything cruel to Priscilla-sama, indeed? In order to make Priscilla-sama the queen, sir… In order to do that, you’ve thought of many things, yes?”

“…Is that all. Don’t bother me with your nonsense. I’ve stated my goal countless times. Since Priscilla is necessary for it, why would I harm her?”

Leip tsk’ed at Schult’s childish worry, and spat back that reply.

“Preparing the path for that woman to arrive at the throne is my role. Indeed, even if she were to decline the Royal Selection, I would force her to participate. Think of yourselves as having the same duty.”

“Well, with the princess’ personality, there’s no way she’d turn down the Royal Selection.”

She'd never back down from a fight, and indeed, never hesitated to boast that everything in this world belonged to her. If a country would become legitimately hers, she'd do it as though there were no other choice.

Without knowing it, as he imagined Priscilla's mad dash for the throne, Al smiled.

"Is that so, indeed. Th… That's good, oh yes, indeed…"

Schult, too, held a hand to his chest in relief at Leip's reply. Even though he'd switched sides for Leip for the payment, he still hadn't forgotten his gratitude to Priscilla for taking him in. Priscilla would take the throne, and he would be rewarded. To him, it was the best possible outcome.

However, the relief the two of them felt

"She's a difficult girl to control, but once I use a curse to turn her into a puppet, she'll do as I wish. With a doll on the throne, the country has all but fallen into my hands."

was shattered by Leip's next words, as he explained the final step of his plan.

"…Huh?"

Unable to breathe, Schult let out a hoarse voice.

The old man let a vicious smile twist his face, and shrugged at Schult's reaction.

"What, could you not hear me? That girl's troublesome willfulness is in the way. I was able to overlook it before the start of the Royal Selection, but now that the importance of every single action is increasing, I can't let it be. Once her debut at the royal castle is finished, I'll take away her will and make her my puppet."

"…Is that really something you can do so easily?"

"I'm sure it's beyond imagining for the two of you. In this world, there are many demands for unimaginable dark deeds. I long ago made connections with a handy fellow who acts as an intermediary for a ‘shaman’.”

Rather than being the stuff of dreams, Leip’s plot was a realistic one. Through cursing her by a shaman, he’d take away Priscilla’s will. This, too, was likely realistically possible.

“Tha…that’s not what you said, oh no, indeed!”

Unlike Al, who was able to calmly accept the facts, Schult’s voice cracked as he spoke out.

“Sir, you’d do nothing to Priscilla-sama, that’s what you said, indeed!”

“I never said I wouldn’t do anything. I said I wouldn’t harm her. If that woman isn’t uninjured, she can’t hope to take the throne. Hence, I’ll do nothing to take away her health. What’s the problem?”

“If Priscilla-sama stops being Priscilla-sama… then what point…”

As Schult spoke in a trembling voice, Leip leveled a displeased glare at him. The cruel color that began to show in his eyes was proof that he was beginning to weigh the usefulness of the boy in front of him against his displeasure.

“Quit trying to look innocent, boy. You’ve already been drawn in by the reward, and betrayed that woman. You’re no longer in a position to be concerned about her welfare. Or is that it? Have you fallen for her charms? To be overcome by the seduction of a whore, completely shameful for a boy… Well, then.”

Leering disgustingly, Leip stood and leaned over the desk, bringing his face close to Schult’s.

“If you want to have your way with her, I’ll allow it after she’s taken the throne. I don’t know what you see in that clump of flab, but you’re drooling over her, aren’t you?”

“…”

Unsurpassed disrespect of women and humiliation of Priscilla.

Schult's face went bright red at that statement, and his delicate arms reached for Leip.

However, Leip avoided him with ease, and instead struck him in the chest with a short tube that was on top of the desk. With a cry of pain, Schult tumbled on the floor of the study.

"To raise your hand against me, the master of the mansion; this is the problem with all the ill-mannered wild dogs these days."

Leip, who had just mercilessly struck a child, looked down at Schultz as he writhed on the floor.

Leip's movement just now had a sharpness unexpected from someone nearing seventy. A long-held, unfulfilled ambition was capable of filling a body with vitality to this extent.

"Now you will burn to death. Your innards will char, and you'll blow smoke from every hole in your body. I'll accept the sight of your miserable condition as recompense for your disgrace."

Pointing the tip of the short tube in his hand at Schult, Leip put the punishment into action with the look of one crushing an insect.

The intensifying mana made the air in the study shimmer, the manifested destruction overtook the young body, the being known as Schult changed to dust in the inferno…,

"…What's the meaning of this?"

"The ball suddenly came my way, so yeah."

The moment before Schult would have been burnt to ashes, Al's sword was unleashed, aiming for the short tube. Instantly dodging the sword swinging up from below, Leip's face twisted in annoyance.

"What reason is there for you to protect that child? All you need to do is watch quietly. You understood that was the position you agreed to, did you not?!"

"If you get that angry, you really are going to bust a vein, sir. Yeah, actually, I'm not sure either why I did that, though…"

In the face of Leip's rage, Al joked as he spoke his honest thoughts.

Even he didn't understand why he'd moved to protect Schult. Thinking about it rationally, it would have been best to use what Leip was saying to his own advantage.

Despite that, Al had now protected Schult after his objection to Leip, and had turned the old man hostile.

Why, what for, he didn't know.

"Al-sama, you…"

From behind Al, who was playing the fool, Schult looked towards him as he groaned.

"Schult-chan, if it hurts, it's alright to cry, ya know? I'll keep it a secret."

"Al-sama… you like Priscilla-sama too, right…?"

"…"

Ignoring Al's teasing, Schult spoke as though he'd had to wring the words out of himself.

And the moment he heard those words, a shock passed through Al's entire body.

Letting out a long, long sigh, Al understood.

"Ah, man, I'm so dumb. …How did I miss something so simple?"

With that realization, he was able to explain all of his confusion up to now.

"You've realized your judgement was clouded? If so, move out of…"

"I get it. I finally get it. I was being stupid. I shoulda seen it right away."

Tilting his head to the side, Al shrugged while kept his one-handed grip on his sword.

“There’s no way I could happily plot together with an old geezer who can’t see how sexy and cute the princess is!”

“…You…fool!!”

Immediately after his curse, Leip pulled out one of the desk drawers with his left hand and threw it at Al. Hacking that apart with his sword as it approached, Al kicked the books at his feet towards Leip and shouted.

“Schult! Get outta the room right now! I’ll handle the rest!”

“Ahh… gh, understood, indeed!”

Grimacing in pain, Schult ran with great effort to the door, and left the room without looking back. That was a good choice. However, Leip mocked that choice.

“How completely foolish the pair of you are! Why do you think I only called the two of you to the study? All the other servants in the mansion are my supporters. There’s no question what will happen to the boy now that he’s left the room!”

“Very prudent of ya. But, ya never know, right? If I were to take you hostage…”

“Surely you don’t think you can restrain me so easily, youngling. In my younger days, I was nothing to scoff at on the battlefield. My war record is no less than that of Bordeaux himself!”

The fighting spirit emanating from Leip as he roared was proof that this wasn’t a bluff.

The short tube the old man held was a ‘meteor’. It’s effect was most likely raising the power of the user’s magic—a simple effect, but because of that, there was no countermeasure.

Comparing that to his own fighting strength, Al quickly judged that he was at a disadvantage. In other words, “The conditions are met. …No need to hesitate in playing my trump card.”

“You idiot…”

“I won’t deny that. It’s nothing personal. Your luck was bad. …Nah,”

Halting his words there, Al continued with the echo of a cynical smile in his voice.

“…Your stars were bad.”

“…!”

Right after he finished speaking, Leip threw away all pretenses and raised the short tube, unleashing his magic.

Conveyed from Leip’s palm, the mana passing through the tube gained overwhelming power. The strength of the magic emerging from the end of the ‘meteor’ had swollen to over five times it’s normal level.

That magic landed a direct hit on the torso of the iron helmet that had been speaking nonsense, bending his body backwards and exploding in the center of it. The shelves were covered with the awful stench of a human body being burned by the intense heat, and the flesh, blood, and organs that had been blown apart.

The bodiless helmet and sword clattered to the floor, and Leip looked over the terrible scene with an air of boredom.

“What sort of trump card was that? What nonsense. Honestly, all of it, nonsense.”

Cutting across the blood-soaked study, Leip began to leave the room. There was only a tiny chance, but if the boy that ran away managed to meet up with Priscilla, it would mean trouble. He needed to find him right away, and finish him.

Thinking that, he extended his hand towards the study’s door knob.

"…Your stars were bad."

"…?!"

Leip was speechless for a moment, then looked behind him.

When he did, he saw a man standing there with his back to Leip. He was a one-armed man wearing a steel helmet, and gripping a sword in his hand…

"Huh? Where'd…"

"Go~a!!"

With no interest in listening to the fool's voice, Leip cast his magic through the short tube and burned him to death once more.

The unleashed flames scorched the man, and the speechless steel helmet once again shattered.

The floor of the study was once more stained with disaster, and Leip backed away, unable to grasp the meaning of the situation.

"Wha… what was that? What just happened…"

Realizing that he was shaking, Leip took a deep breath. His forehead was covered with cold sweat. While roughly wiping it away with his sleeve, the old man looked up and tried to make sense of it.

"…Your stars were bad."

Once again, the man's voice was heard.

8

"…Your stars were bad."

He heard it. That voice struck his ears again.

"Huh? Where'd you go?"

Before his eyes, the man who had lost sight of his enemy looked left and right. Then the man turned about, and when he noticed the man seated behind him, he quickly readied his sword again. However,

“Oh, hey. You’ve run out of steam. From the way it looks… I’m the attacker now. Ah, I see. You’re pretty unlucky, too.”

Speaking as though with sympathy, the man squatted in front of the disheartened old man.

The drooling old man didn’t so much as look up at the man’s face.

“You were so energetic until just a second ago, but you’ve started looking your age all of a sudden. I don’t know how many times we’ve done this, but ya haven’t given up after a few dozen, have ya? Well, there’s no way to know, o’course.”

“…ll me.”

“Huh?”

The voice was like a whisper, and the helmeted man tilted his head.

So that the man would hear it, the old man shakily raised his head.

“Please… kill me.”

As though it might be his only salvation, the old man earnestly sought it.

At that appeal, the man’s shoulders dropped as though he had recalled something unfortunate.

“That’s too bad. Just because someone can’t grasp sexy cuteness, people can’t come to understand each other, after all.”

Standing, the helmeted man lightly shouldered his sword, aiming for the old man’s neck.

Then, the blade swung in a deadly arc, and the old man’s head sprayed blood as it flew through the air.

At last, the old man's nightmare…

"…Your stars were bad."

did not end.

9

Leip's hair was in complete disarray, and his eyes were sunken, as Al brought him out of the study.

Speaking deliriously and drooling, the old man had entirely lost his mind.

"Still, even I feel kinda bad about this, what's up with that?"

As he dragged the old man's heavy body along, Al was mildly repulsed at what he'd done.

Rendering him powerless without killing him, and while it could be said that, taking the long view, rendering him powerless truly was the best option, exactly how did this differ from Leip's own plot, in terms of cruelty?

"Well, the sense of guilt is different between a crappy old guy and a young beauty. When you look at it that way, it feels better."

While quickly imagining up something to justify himself, Al carried on towards the mansion's entry hall. With no one to depend on, Schult could only flee to the outside of the mansion, but,

"…Al-sama!"

At the entry hall, as Al approached the great staircase that connected the first and second floors, a voice called to him from below. Looking, he saw many of the mansion's servants, and Schult standing before the door. In addition, beside him was…

"It seems you have been causing quite a ruckus while I was away."

Having returned with her knight in tow, Priscilla arrogantly stated that with her hand on her hip. Looking up at Al on the upper floor, she sniffed and pouted.

“Come now, Al. How long do you intend to be looking down at me, is that not rude? Come down right now, and explain exactly what happened while I was away.”

“Ah, gotcha. I’d come down if I could.”

“Your reply seems to convey no intention to move at all.”

As Al joked around at the top of the great stairway, Priscilla winked at him and forgave his insolence. However, an infuriated man interrupted that exchange between master and follower.

“Please wait, Priscilla-sama! That helmeted man, does it not appear that he has done something to Leip-sama?”

“Hmm? Ooh. Now that I take a closer look, it is that old bag of bones that Al is dragging around. What is this, then? Did the old man there finally despair over his own idiocy, and hang himself?

Priscilla’s response to what Gilian had pointed out was indiscreet. Gilian was aghast, but Al smiled wryly at her attitude while lifting up Leip.

“Nah, he ain’t dead. Well, his body isn’t dead. But somehow his spirit just suddenly died.”

“Sudden death, is it? Well, he is that age, after all. It is something that happens to old trees.”

“You can’t mean to allow him to pass it off with that kind of explanation!”

Priscilla was trying to look like she would accept it, but Gilian protested fiercely. He stepped in front of Priscilla, drew the knight’s sword at his side, and pointed it towards Al on the upper floor.

“You are fellow with a truly suspicious appearance, but having heard that you were Priscilla-sama’s retainer, I have overlooked it until now. However, it seems now that you were a villain that should not have been overlooked. You’ve treated Leip-sama barbarously.”

“Like I said, he ain’t dead.”

“Nevertheless! I will not allow you to direct your poisoned fangs against Priscilla-sama. From now on, I will take on the role of protecting Priscilla-sama!”

The vociferous Gilian was a knight of justice, and he looked the part. On the other hand, due to his own looks and the half-dead Leip, Al looked like an outright villain.

The hall was full of servants holding their breath and observing the situation. Having said that, likely the only one that was truly concerned for Al was Schult. The other servants were all Leip’s supporters, so even if he did manage to make it past Gilian, the outlook after that was fairly grim.

The conditions for his trump card were not met, either. ‘Well now, how will this turn out’, worried Al.

“It would seem you have grasped your disadvantage. Then stand your ground as I cut you down. I don’t know what sort of vile plan you had, but I will protect Priscilla-sama’s safety from this point on. May her days be full of unchanging serenity, and the path she follows blessed!”

Gilian, all fired up, began to step forward, intending to charge at Al with his sword without further delay.

But, just before he could take that first explosive step,

“Unchanging days of serenity, is it? …How dull.”

Priscilla spoke in a terribly bored voice.

And with the “Crimson Sword” she drew from behind her, she struck down Gilian with a single swing.

“Wha…?!”

Crying out in shock at the unexpected cut, Gilian fell down on the steps with a serious wound on his back. Rolling his body face-up with her foot, Priscilla brought the point of her sword to the nose of the panting handsome man.

“Here I was wondering what kind of sweet talk you would use to sway me, but you prove to be a boring man not only along the way but when in the spotlight as well. On top of that, you will give me unchanging days of serenity, you say? Here we see the epitome of a commoner’s thinking.”

“What do…you…”

“What value does the same thing as yesterday hold? An unchanging thing is simply tiresome. Always show me something new. If you are unable to do that, then at the very least, become a corpse, rot away, become dung, and disappear from my view. Fool.”

To the man who was fond of himself, Priscilla mercilessly sent a shower of cruel words.

What the red woman in front of his eyes was saying, surely Gilian understood less than half of. And before that changed, his chance to reach understanding was forever taken away.

“Wha…”

Gilian’s body, lying fallen on the stairs, suddenly spouted flames. For the handsome man called Gilian Endymion, the burning heat of the flames spreading from his wound would allow no escape from their fiery embrace.

With his throat seared, Gilian was unable to even scream as he burned.

“Princess, maybe it’d be better to put out the fire before the mansion catches on fire?”

“Idiot. It is a flame born of my sun-sword. Obviously, it will ignite only that which I have chosen.”

Her logic was incomprehensible, but Gilian’s flames did not spread to the rug on the steps. Having confirmed that it somehow seemed to be true, Al was amazed by Priscilla’s unconventionality, despite himself.

Incidentally, sometime during that, the crimson sword she had been holding had once again disappeared from view.

“Well, it’d be pretty dumb to be surprised by the princess’ magic tricks after all this. More importantly, what are you gonna do about all this, including the burning guy?”

“No matter how many times one smells it, the odor of a burning person is displeasing. You lot, clean it up at once.”

At Priscilla’s instruction, the servants moved without hesitation, rapidly cleaning up Gilian’s entirely charred remains. Observing this, Al came to a conclusion. That was…

“Well, princess, you saw through the old guy’s plans long ago, then?”

“From the beginning, he made no secret of his intention to use me and seize power in the nation. Given that, it was trivial to imagine how he would proceed. Before one feels annoyance at the insect buzzing around one’s ear, it is only natural to take away the insect’s wings and legs.”

“You’re too much. He was out of his league.”

He couldn’t help but laugh at the thought of the old man’s long-held ambition being treated as the antics of a clown and dancing in the palm of her hand.

It goes without saying that she held the hearts of the people, and even in the mansion, there were none who were truly his allies. His sole ally that hadn’t been seized by Priscilla had now been burnt to a crisp.

When you think of it that way, perhaps he was happier losing his sanity while still holding his ambitions.

“By the way, if you had your revenge planned out in that much detail, why didn’t you say anything to us? We put on a weird little act because of that.”

“You have no talent for that sort of thing, I can tell at a glance. Schult is the same. You both get visibly flustered every time you look at me. You have no idea how hard it is not to laugh.”

“Ah, um…P, Priscilla-sama…”

As Al and Priscilla carried on their friendly chat, with Leip tossed onto the steps, Schult arrived below them. When Priscilla folded her arms to emphasize her chest, Schult faltered, uncertain where to direct his gaze.

Perhaps he intended to apologize for having once joined a side that intended to betray Priscilla. However, to do that, failing to choose the right words could lead to calling down her wrath.

If it goes poorly, I’ll have to back him up, is what Al was thinking while feeling a bit concerned, but…

“I’m glad you’re unharmed, oh yes, indeed. …I…I was worried…”

“Mhmm.”

Looking at Schult, whose face was messy with tears, Al was amazed by his own foolishness.

How much nonsensical common sense had he tried to force on the heart of a child barely ten years old, and then gauge the situation based on that?

Hadn’t he just seen a pitiful old man decide what this and that was without trying to actually see it for itself, and suffer a lonely fall without anyone to come to his aid?

“Schult, you are just so adorable. Very well, I give you permission to get my dress dirty.”

“Oop.”

Priscilla pulled the sobbing Schult into her embrace, then, with a pleased expression, wiped his face clean with her dress. Then, with the dizzy young man still sandwiched between her breasts, she turned towards Al.

“Well, isn’t that an enviable position.”

“It is an obvious thing to say, but you were wise to choose me. My compliments.”

“If it’s a choice between an old guy and a sexy-cute girl, you chose the girl. Anyone would do that. I do that, too.”

“Your forthrightness does not displease me. Well now…”

Priscilla looked down at Leip, who lay blank-eyed on the ground, and snorted softly.

“How very, hmm, pitiful it is that my husband of convenience has lost his ability to rule his domain. In this state, the future of the Barielle domain is endangered. Since it has come to this, it seems unavoidable that I take on all authority as the representative of the household. Is it not so?”

“Carrying on the will of your beloved husband, and doing your best in the unfamiliar role of steward, like a good wife. The blind actions of a beautiful girl; it’s a scenario that invites tears, ain’t it? I think I might cry.”

“How very droll of you.”

“You too, princess.”

The well-matched master and servant laughed together, and looked satisfied that, for the moment, the affairs of the house were in order.

And that left Schult, still caught wide-eyed between Priscilla’s breasts. Taking the boy’s head with both hands, Priscilla mussed up his hair, and spoke.

“Well now, whatever is the matter, Schult? You should laugh. I, your favorite person, am in a good mood. You do understand what an attendant should do in that case, yes?”

“Y..yes. I understand, oh yes, indeed!”

At Priscilla’s directive, he straightened his back, dutifully got his breathing under control, and laughed loudly.

Forcing his face to smile with his hands on his cheeks, and using a voice so loud that it was cracking.

“Hahahahaha, oh yes, indeed!”

“That will do. With that finished, you do know what I will wish for next, yes?”

For me to go brew fresh tea, oh yes, indeed!”

“Mhmm!”

Drawing a fan from her cleavage and opening it with a snap, Priscilla descended the stairs. Al followed her, and Schult walked with them, still laughing.

“I’m terribly pleased. This will do. After all…”

Listening to the voice of the laughing girl, Al realized why he had chosen her.

It was nothing, really. A simple matter. Nothing more than that he had, once again, been captured by this girl’s charms.

“…This world is designed to operate in the way that works best for me.”

END

Emilia in Wonderland

1

“And then at the end he said, ‘It’s your heart’!” exclaimed Subaru with a toothy grin and a snap of his fingers.

“Whoa, that’s amazing!” Emilia cried, laughing as she clapped her hands.

The two of them were chatting in the courtyard of Roswaal Manor in the shade of a tree, basking in the breeze and enraptured by stories from Subaru’s home world.

With great skill Subaru recounted his stories while making gestures and before she knew it Emilia was transported into a world of tales. She was honestly impressed by his ability to change his voice and act as both men and women.

“You sure know a lot of stories, don’t you? And they are all ones I haven’t heard of. I’m reaaally impressed.”

“I’m thankful for my memory and the fact that I was born on Earth. I guess impressing Emilia-tan a little was the mission assigned to me by Andersen.”

“Eaarth? Andersen?”

“It’s the name of the spaceship I lived on and the famous author of fairytales who lived there.”

Subaru winked at Emilia, who was tilting her head in confusion. She gave a vague smile and pretended to get it since it was probably something she didn’t need to understand.

Two weeks had passed since Subaru solved the witchbeast incident after moving into Roswaal Manor. His wounds from the incident had healed and he was back to working as a servant when he would sometimes make time to talk with Emilia during his breaks.

Emilia, who was exhausted from her unfamiliar studies, was grateful for Subaru's consideration. And on top of that, his stories were interesting as well, so she couldn't be blamed for asking for more and more.

"Alright then…now that the story is over, I don't really want to, but I have to get back to work. How about you, Emilia-tan?" Subaru asked Emilia as he stood up, dusting off his butt.

Emilia leaned against the tree, her silver hair swaying in the wind, and pondered for a while. "I'll stay here for a while longer," she ultimately decided.

"Alright. See you later. I might get my head chopped off if Ram finds me here."

After Subaru jokingly said that, Emilia watched as he headed back towards the mansion and yawned. "Hmmmm."

Last night, she couldn't find a good place to stop, so she'd stayed up all night reading. That was why she instantly started to feel drowsy like this while enjoying the gentle breeze by herself.

"Maybe I should have gone back with Subaru…" Emilia whispered in a faint voice while slumped over.

She closed her eyes thinking that she shouldn't do it, and then a pleasant drowsiness slowly came over her.

And like that, Emilia's consciousness…

2

"Oh my, no, no! I won't make it if I don't hurry up!"

Emilia, who was on the verge of falling asleep, was seemingly jolted awake by that sudden voice. "Huh, what?"

"I'm in trouble! It's a grave deal! I don't know why, but I need to hurry up!"

Emilia looked around and spotted the source of that voice, then widened her eyes in surprise. As she leaned against the tree, a gray cat walking on two legs—someone she was used to seeing; a kitten spirit who was her family—ran past her.

“Puck? Why have you materialized…oh, wait!”

For some reason, Puck, who was normally palm-sized, was now the size of a human infant. He could essentially change his size at his will, but he rarely did so.

Emilia hurriedly stood up at his easy-going impatient voice, thinking something might have happened. But Puck didn’t even pay attention to her, and…

“I’m going to choose the bottomless hole now!” Puck ran and went around Emilia, his footsteps making adorable sounds, to the back of the tree. And then… “Haiya!”

She heard an energetic voice and felt Puck’s presence moving away.

“Hey! Puck, why are you ignoring me? Sheesh.”

Emilia also hurriedly moved behind the tree after getting shocked by her family’s unusual behavior. But then, Puck was nowhere to be seen, and instead there was a gaping hole in the ground. She wondered if this was where Puck jumped in after shouting.

“Why is there a hole here? …Could it be that Subaru has hidden treasure here…?” She decided who the culprit was based on her bias and then hesitantly looked into the hole.

The dark hole was so deep that she couldn’t see the bottom, and when she started feeling like she was going to be sucked into it, she gasped.

“Pu-Puuuck! Can you hear me? If you can, then please answer me!” she shouted into the hole, but her voice echoed in vain.

Not knowing what to do, she turned back to call someone from the mansion for now. And then…

“—It would affect how the story proceeds, so anyway, dooown youuu goo.”

“Huh?”

The moment Emilia’s body got pulled from behind, she thought she heard yet another voice. She was startled when she felt her shoulder get pulled, but that surprise was soon replaced by the shock of her body falling.

“Wait, no! I’m going to get flattened!”

While falling into the hole headfirst, Emilia was horrified at the thought of going splat. She immediately kicked the wall and fixed her perception of up and down, then grabbed the hem of her skirt that was being pushed upwards by the wind and immediately started thinking of countermeasures—but before she could think of any, she got stopped by something soft.

“Eek—wah.”

Emilia, feeling like she had been enveloped by a bundle of paper, struggled with it, and then crawled out.

She brushed the things that clung to her clothes and hair off and realized that they were dried leaves. It seemed like the dead leaves that had accumulated at the bottom of the hole had protected her from the impact of the fall.

“Haaa… I was so surprised.”

Emilia was relieved, but it didn’t last long, and she looked around restlessly.

It looks like the inside of a hollowed-out tree, so am I inside a tree that’s hundreds of years old? But then again, I fell into a hole in the ground.

“Oh! Puck!”

As she frowned at her doubt, Emilia caught sight of a kitten that was peeking at the passageway at the far end of this space. Puck jumped on the spot when Emilia spoke.

“Oh my, I will be late if I don’t hurry up. I’m in trouble,” he said audaciously after glancing repeatedly at his wrist, which had nothing on it.

“You don’t have anything there! Stop playing weird pranks, I’m mad at you. Stop right there.”

As Emilia kicked back the dead leaves and started running, Puck started running away from her in a hurry. She was surprised at how fast he could run, and even though it wasn’t the right situation for it, she was impressed and thought he was amazing.

Puck, who was running as fast as he could, disappeared from her sight into the corridor that seemingly had no end. Even so, Emilia ran hard, somehow managing to get through the passage, and jumped into a bright room.

“Umm… What is this place? And where’s Puck?”

Emilia silently gasped for breath and was stunned by the scenery that had changed again. It was a cute room filled with brightly colored things. It had flowers she hadn’t seen before on the table, above the fireplace, and on the windowsill.

“I wonder if it’s someone’s room… What if they get angry at me if I enter without permission?”

Although Emilia was in a mysterious situation, she had realistic worries. She searched around the room for Puck and its owner. However, she couldn’t look around for long due to the room being on the smaller side, causing her to quickly slump her shoulders since she couldn’t find Puck. That wasn’t the only reason she did that, either.

“There is a door that looks like it might lead outside, but my body is too big to fit through.”

Even Emilia couldn’t hide her shock at that. She wasn’t aware that she was much bigger than others. It was true that the girls in the mansion, Rem, Ram, and Beatrice were smaller than Emilia and were cute, but…

"No, no. Even Beatrice can't walk through a door of this size. So, the person who made this must have been really careless."

Emilia, who was on the verge of feeling depressed, snapped out of it with a sudden flash of thought and looked around to see if there was anything else. The only thing she found was a key and a strange medicine bottle.

The key is probably the key to that poorly constructed door.

And the bottle containing the medicine had a label on it which said, 'To Emily, with love.'

"…Anne?"

She recalled that the only person who referred to her that way was one of Roswaal's relatives and a much younger friend of hers she had briefly become acquainted with.

I don't know why a gift from her is in this room, but there's no way Annerose would try to harm me. Emilia believed that much right away.

"I'll take this."

So, Emilia gulped down the potion without doubting it. After drinking it all, she noticed her carelessness. "What if it was a type of medicine meant to be applied on the body?" But the change that occurred immediately denied her concern.

"Oh, wah, whah."

The size of the room kept changing every passing second. The table that had only reached her waist quickly became large enough for her to look up at. The windowsill and the vase were also miles away.

"No…this is, my body has become smaller."

Emilia immediately noticed the cause of the change and widened her eyes at the world that had become large. And then she touched her body here and there and was relieved that her clothes had shrunk too.

“People would think that I’m weird if I walked around naked. But I can get through that door now.”

I knew all along that Annerose is amazing.

Emilia completely forgot about solving that little mystery and clenched her fist in triumph. Then she enthusiastically put her hand on the door.

“Ah,” she said in disappointment when she realized that the door was locked. She had left the key on the table, so she couldn’t reach it now.

“There’s no point in being disappointed. Alright, I will do my best to climb it.”

It was by Emilia’s virtue that she didn’t get discouraged, but she looked brave and reckless at the same time when she rolled up her sleeves to challenge the table leg. Suddenly, her amethyst eyes caught sight of something placed next to it. There was a white plate with a pastry placed gently on top of it. There was also a letter leaning gently against the plate’s edge, and when she lifted it up, she saw: ‘For the time you get into trouble due to my lady’s gift. Insurance.’ written on it.

Emilia could only think of one person that wrote in such a distinctive manner.

“Oh my, my? Did a clumsy person forget the key?”

As Emilia was thinking about what to do after picking up the pastry, she looked up when she heard a voice coming from above. The one looking down at her from the table was Puck, wagging his long tail with a key in his hand.

Puck looked down at her with his big, round eyes and a smile that looked strangely human-like. “That’s no good at all. It’s basic to save your progress before making a big decision, you know. Life isn’t that sweet. Like that pastry!”

“Sorry. I don’t understand what you are saying. Plus, I don’t think you said anything witty,” Emilia responded to Puck, who had a smug look on his face.

But she felt like she was having a conversation with someone else she knew and tilted her head.

Puck is acting like Subaru today.

“Leaving that aside, stop playing around and give me the key. And if we don’t get back to the mansion soon, then everyone will get worried.”

“You should worry about yourself rather than worrying about those around you. When you gaze into the abyss, the abyss also gazes into you, you know…”

“—There.”

“Meoww.”

Emilia didn’t like Puck’s attitude, as he seemed full of himself, so she ordered her lesser spirits and blew him away with a blast of wind. Swept up by the magic wind, Puck collided with the window and dropped the key, which Emilia caught by sliding across the floor. She then unlocked the door right away.

“Alright, Puck. Stop messing around, we’re going back. Hurry up and get into your crystal… Puck?”

Emilia looked back while talking to him as if she was scolding a child, but her face turned gloomy when she realized that Puck wasn’t by the window anymore. It seemed like he had gone into hiding again.

“Geez. You are causing me a lot of trouble today.”

Emilia angrily opened the door and stepped to the other side. She was welcomed by a meadow and a large forest that could be seen beyond that. Though surprised by the scenery that she had never seen before, she started walking towards the forest, nonetheless. But…

“No matter how much I walk, I can’t get any closer to the forest…”

The forest was right in front of her eyes, but no matter how hard she walked, the distance between her and the forest didn’t seem to get any shorter. Now that her body had shrunk, she couldn’t walk as far as before. “I’m getting hungry too…oh, wait.”

Emilia, who looked worried, remembered that she had wrapped up the pastry and brought it with her. The thing she took out stimulated her appetite with its sweet aroma and instantly made her its prisoner.

“I’ll be having this, Mister Clind.”

She thanked the writer of the letter, a man who also served as Annerose’s butler. The pastry was fluffy, as if it was freshly baked, and she couldn’t help but squirm at the taste that danced across her tongue. She reluctantly ate it all in one bite.

“Hmm? Huh?”

When Emilia looked around after enjoying the sweetness, she noticed that the scenery had changed—she realized that her body had gotten bigger and returned to its former size. She finally understood what ‘For the time you get into trouble due to my lady’s gift. Insurance’ meant.

That convinced her that Clind truly thought of everything.

“Just as I thought, Mister Clind is really amazing…and the forest is right around the corner thanks to it!”

The forest was within her reach as soon as she got bigger. The forest was still big even after she had grown bigger, but she was feeling far less intimidated than before.

Emilia clenched her fist triumphantly and looked at the forest.

“Alright, my adventure starts from here.”

She said a line that could’ve been the last line of dialogue in an anime, then ran towards the forest.

3

—Obviously, her adventure didn’t end there.

It didn’t end, but her feet had stopped. It happened when she was walking in the dimly lit forest with the help of the light provided by the lesser spirits.

“Stop right there. Don’t want someone like you to move ahead, I suppose.”

Once again, a voice came from above and Emilia looked around, searching for the source. Then she spotted a figure lying on a branch and involuntarily covered her mouth with her hand.

The figure on the branch glaring at Emilia with sleepy eyes was Beatrice. The girl shook her fancy dress and vertical rolls, then puffed out smoke using the pipe in her mouth and sneered. “Quite the undisciplined girl you are, to come to Betty’s place with dirty feet. What would your parents say, I suppose.”

“Beatrice, why are you…”

“Hmph. It’s too late for you now even if you’ve noticed who you are up against and who you’ve been rude to. Well, if you are willing to repent then Betty may forgive you…”

“You shouldn’t be smoking a pipe, you are still little! You shouldn’t be doing that until you’re an adult! Subaru said that it stops people from growing!”

Emilia hit Beatrice with her rational opinion after witnessing the young girl smoke. Shocked by her words, Beatrice dropped the pipe from her mouth and then glared angrily at her. “Wh-What an insult, I suppose! You must be out of your mind to be treating Betty like a child! Betty is a respectable lady! A pipe is a lady’s and a grown-up’s privilege!”

“It’s kind of childish to be obsessed with being like an adult…”

“Grrrr! I suppose!”

Beatrice, whose face had turned completely red and was stomping on the branch, was having a temper tantrum.

But as a sensible adult, Emilia couldn’t overlook Beatrice’s misconduct. In addition to that, Emilia was in a position where she was going to ascend to the country’s throne.

I will never back off.

“—Oh, you two. That’s enough. Or else you’ll scare the flowers of the forest.”

A mysterious person suddenly intervened as they were about to continue their argument. It was a black-haired man who had put his hand in front of Emilia and was looking up at Beatrice on the branch.

And though it was obvious, Emilia recognized him from behind.

“Subaru?”

“No, that’s not right, lady. I’m not Subaru, I’m Cheshirebaru!”

Cheshirebaru turned back and gave a thumbs up while flashing his teeth. No matter how you looked at him, he was Subaru. But if you looked carefully, then you'd notice he had cat ears. He also had ears where they were normally supposed to be, so it looked like he had four ears. It was kind of creepy.

"Argh…someone Betty doesn't like has appeared, I suppose."

"If that's what you think, then back off from here, Beako. This Cheshirebaru appears in unexpected places and at unexpected moments. I can stare at your life from good morning to good morning, you know?"

"Being watched all day is too uncomfortable! Argh, don't think that you've won, I supposeee!"

"I supposeeee, I supposeee" Her sharp parting remarks echoed as she dexterously flew above the branches and disappeared.

After seeing that, Cheshirebaru looked back at Emilia and said, "Once again, I've bullied a worthless loli. I want to know what defeat feels like."

"I wasn't done scolding Beatrice yet. And those ears, you are all teasing me, aren't you? I'm going to get angry."

"An angry face is cute too…ow, ow, you'll rip them off if you pull that hard!"

Emilia turned her anger on Cheshirebaru and pulled his cat ears, but the thing she thought was a fake was warm and properly attached to his head.

Cheshirebaru squatted down with teary eyes in front of the surprised Emilia. "I don't know what you're mad about, but if you keep getting angry like that then everyone will be scared of you. You need to enjoy being invincible and use the strongest weapon a girl has: her smile."

"I don't know what you are saying but…yeah. You're right."

Emilia was told that others would get scared if she kept getting angry, which made her feel despondent and lower her posture.

At the sight of Emilia feeling down, Cheshirebaru looked up and scowled. “Alright. You need to party and have fun when you are feeling down. I’ll invite you to a tea party!”

“A tea party?”

“Yeah. A lively, noisy, and crazy tea party deep in the woods!”

After Emilia got invited by Cheshirebaru with a somewhat unsettling invitation, he led her out of the forest. After walking for a while, she saw an open space and a small house in the forest. The house that blended into the forest had a huge table in the garden so that many people could sit together and enjoy themselves.

And at the table were the tea party guests—

“…Oh, it’s you, Cheshirebaru. So you came.”

“So now there won’t just be just us here. I’m glad that it won’t feel like a funeral anymore…”

An extremely gloomy-looking pair…more like two gloomy-looking Subarus were sitting there. That surreal sight caught Emilia off guard, making her forget about the depressing energy around the table.

“Th-Three Subaru’s? Cheshirebaru, what’s happening?”

“I don’t know what you’re talking about. The ones over there are Hatter Subaru and March Subaru. The first one’s wearing a hat and the other has hare ears. It’s easy to distinguish between them, right?”

Prompted by Cheshirebaru’s explanation, Emilia checked, and the two who had their heads down each had their own quirks: a hat and hare ears. And everything got confusing when the Subaru with cat ears joined them. Leaving Emilia, whose eyes were spinning, Cheshirebaru sat on a seat as if it was only the natural thing to do and shrugged his shoulders at the two Subarus who stared back with dead eyes.

"Hey, come on," said Cheshirebaru. "Don't be so gloomy. Nobody coming after we send out invitations is nothing new for us."

"But isn't it normal for people to hope that today might be different?" Hatter Subaru replied. "Maybe the signals were bad, and they couldn't call us and inform us about them being late."

"Well, it began yesterday and a whole night has passed," March Subaru added. "But even if someone comes, I, March Subaru, am a nice guy who'd say that he wasn't made to wait long."

"Don't do that, I might fall for you," said Cheshirebaru.

"Fall for you, fall for you," parroted Hatter Subaru.

"My era might come. A new tide for me," replied March Subaru.

The three Subarus, who had lifted their heads up, started exchanging some nonsense with each other at a rapid speed. The funeral atmosphere disappeared immediately, and a strange, disorganized, noisy mood replaced it.

He was right. This is a lively, noisy, and crazy tea party.

"Oh yeah! For you two who are sad, shabby, and helpless, I've properly invited a guest for you today. You can applaud me for my fine play."

"Who's the guest?" Hatter Subaru asked. "I'm sure you'll hype us up only to bring Beako, who's doing nothing in the forest, right? I know quite well how useless you truly are."

"Well, even having Beako is better than having no one," March Subaru added. "Alright then, let's put a lot of sugar into Beako's tea and bet on how long she'll be able to endure it! I'll go with five minutes!"

"That's tempting, but that's not it. It's not Beako today, but a different girl. And she's super pretty. A walking oasis I found in the forest that can heal our dried-up hearts—her name is Emilia-tan!"

Just as the excitement had reached its peak, Cheshirebaru pointed towards the forest. Their eyes shining with expectation, Hatter Subaru and March Subaru looked in that direction. But…

“—There’s no one there!!” the three of them shouted.

Fearing getting involved in the madness, Emilia had run away from there long before the others had realized.

4

“I’m reaaally tired…”

Emilia thought that she was used to talking with Subaru, but it was no surprise that dealing with three Subarus was still a tad too much for her. She felt bad about it, but she had given up on the tea party quickly and left the forest alone. Fortunately, it was only a short walk from the venue of Subarus’ Mad Tea Party to the edge of the forest, and when she bathed in the sunlight for the first time in several hours, her body and mind felt refreshed.

“And there’s a much more reassuring landmark than before.”

The thing that Emilia headed for without hesitation after exiting the forest was a tall building in front of her—as far as she knew, it was identical to the royal castle she’d seen in the royal capital, Lugunica.

It’s a castle. There must be someone I can trust there.

Emilia was no longer thinking about how she fell into a hole and how odd it was for there to be a castle here anymore. All she had on her mind was a desire to do something she couldn’t quite put her finger on and a motherly instinct to spank Puck.

“I’ve arrived. Alright, I need to talk to someone…”

Emilia reached the castle and looked around, searching for people, without noticing how strange it was for the castle to be surrounded by a garden of blooming flowers. And then…

“The trial! The trial is going to begin!”

She bumped into a cat who was crossing the flowerbed, shouting loudly. Puck, who had been missing since he was swept into a window, had appeared. And just like that, he rushed into the castle without noticing her.

“You did it again, Puck! And a trial…geez, this is no time to be playing around!”

Emilia puffed her cheeks at Puck for ignoring her, then entered the castle as well. The white light that spread out in front of her made her shield her eyes as soon as she went inside. She timidly removed her hand from her face, and the sight in front of her eyes was…

“So is this…the court?”

It was a huge place. The ceiling was so high that it couldn’t be seen, and it was surrounded by grandstands. The seats were all filled with the audience and the surroundings were dominated by a noisy buzz.

“—Off with her head.”

At the far end of the court was a pink-haired girl who passed down a cruel verdict.

She was dressed as a maid as usual, but the hair ornament on her head had been replaced with a crown—it was Ram.

Ram looked down at the witness stand with a cool expression. And in front of her gaze was Beatrice, who had been tied up and thrown on the ground for some reason, screaming with a red face.

“B-Betty demands a retrial, in fact! This is tyranny of the state, I suppose! Betty has been framed!”

“Off with her head.”

“Is that all you can say, I suppose?! Give Betty a break!”

Though Beatrice pleaded that she had been wrongly convicted, Ram didn’t listen and was determined to execute her. A blue-haired girl was snuggled up next to Ram.

The younger sister, Rem, touched her elder sister's shoulder and said, "Hey, Sister. Maybe you should hear Miss Beatrice out a little…and if it's just about the pastry, then Rem can bake it again."

"What about Ram's feelings of looking forward to the pastry Rem baked but it got snatched away from Ram. There will be no end to this humiliation until the culprit's head is publicly displayed and her skull is made into a cup."

"What a treacherous thing to do just for a pastry!" Beatrice screamed. "You Oni! Devil! The Demon King of the Sixth Heaven!"

The more abuses she hurled, the more her crimes accumulated. Lèse-majesté got added on top of it all, and the court's atmosphere made it seem like everyone had accepted that she'd be executed.

Startled by the tension in the air, Emilia called out to wait. "Wait! The punishment is too cruel for her actions!"

"Oh, so you are going to protect Betty, are you? You really are ignorant of your social standing, child, for you to be defying Queen Ram. Ha-Ha-ha."

It was Puck who responded to Emilia's plea as if she were just some lightweight.

Puck, a gavel in hand that made it seem like he was overseeing the trial, ordered Emilia to stand in the witness stand.

"I don't know what you are talking about, but Beatrice wouldn't go that far. It's too much to behead her. What has happened to you, Ram?"

"How dare this girl talk to Ram in such a familiar manner. But if what you are saying is true, then who else could have eaten Ram's pastry?"

"Betty doesn't know who ate it…but Betty can smell a faint aroma of sweets coming from this girl, I suppose. Betty can sense such things."

"Beatrice?!"

Beatrice, laying all tied up on the floor, sold out Emilia who had just stood up in her defense.

And in reality, Emilia was aware that she had eaten a pastry. She wanted to plead that Clind had made it, but she instantly felt a hostile shift in the court's atmosphere.

"Wait, wait! I feel like I'm getting a reaaally bad feeling here!"

"…Well, if this girl really is the culprit, then she would have just watched Miss Beatrice get beheaded," said Rem. "But she came forward, which means that…her conscience couldn't take it?"

"Aren't you going to look at it like I'm not the culprit?!"

Emilia turned pale, thinking that she would be presumed guilty at this rate. But once again, it was the gentle younger sister who stood by her ruthless elder sister's side who extended a helping hand to the miserable defendant.

"Sister, Sister. There's no way she could be the culprit…"

"Is that so? If Rem says so, then it may be right."

Ram seemed like she was ready to admit that she had been out of line with Rem's intervention. Emilia calmed her heart somehow, thinking that she had gotten out of trouble. And then…

"That's right!" Cheshirebaru exclaimed. "Saying that Emilia-tan is the culprit is a false accusation no matter what!"

"Cute is justice!" shouted Hatter Subaru. "Pretty girls are a treasure! Emilia-tan is my waifu!"

"Let's scare Beako to tears while we're at it!" March Subaru added. "We need to push her to the brink of despair!"

A series of shouts came from the grandstands and everyone's gaze turned towards the source of the commotion. As expected, the ones being noisy were the three consecutive stars: Cat, Hare, and Hat Subaru. It seemed like the tea party had ended.

"Subarus, are you acquainted with the lady here?" Ram said to the three Subarus, who were next to each other.

The three of them flashed a grin and spoke:

"Yeah, we know her!" said Cheshirebaru.

"We had a tea party together!" said Hatter Subaru.

"I'd say we have a deep relationship!" said March Subaru.

"I see," Rem said, nodding in satisfaction after hearing their replies. She then gazed at Emilia and smiled in an enchantingly adoring manner. "Let's behead her."

"Whaaaaa?!"

"Alright. Off with her head."

"Wait! Wait a second! Hey, isn't this strange?! What happened all of a sudden?!"

Emilia panicked and pleaded, but neither Queen Ram nor Minister Rem had any intention of listening. The door to the court opened with a loud bang, and in came a large group of Pucks—dressed as soldiers, a lot of Pucks came rushing in. To her left, right, and every such direction, were Pucks.

"Huh, cute?!"

Emilia felt happiness and fear at the same time as she was surrounded by Pucks dressed in armor, as gardeners, and in bizarre outfits that resembled playing cards.

"Su-Subaru!"

"Why did it turn out like this?" Cheshirebaru wondered. "Someone please get to the bottom of this. That's our only wish."

"Gosh, Subaru, you idiooot!"

"Tee-hee," the three Subarus giggled.

Emilia helplessly got engulfed by a group of Pucks charging into her while watching the three Subarus stick out their tongues.

5

“—Emilia-tan, earth to Emilia-tan.”

“Umm, umm…”

Emilia’s consciousness was awakened by the sensation of someone shaking her shoulder and calling her name.

Her long eyelashes quivered, then she opened her eyes and blinked a couple of times. She then looked up and realized that a familiar face was right in front of her.

“…Subaru?”

“Yeah, it’s me. You surprised me earlier, you know. I was calling you and you disappeared off somewhere. I didn’t expect you to go and take a nap just like that. You must have been tired.”

Subaru smiled for a split second, and then Emilia snapped out of her stupor. She hastily looked around and confirmed that it was the courtyard of Roswaal Manor, then sighed.

“I’m glad…”

“Hmm? What happened? Did you have a scary dream by any chance? Alright, if that’s the case, then you can come jump into my arms. I’ll hold you tightly in my capable arms for as long as you need.”

“Sorry, I don’t get what you’re talking about.”

Subaru, who had his arms spread out, dropped his shoulders, and Emilia tilted her head as she looked at him.

I think I was dreaming, but I can’t remember what I was dreaming about. But I feel like it was really confusing and chaotic. I’m glad it was just a dream.

“Anyway, I’m glad I found you. It’s almost time for dinner, so let’s head back. I’ll keep the fact that you skipped your afternoon studies a secret between us.”

“Well… Sure, thank you. I’ll be careful next time.”

Emilia stood up with the help of Subaru’s hand, then brushed the grass off and straightened her back. And while doing so, she felt like there was something she needed to tell him.

“Subaru… Um…”

“Yeah, what is it?”

Emilia pondered for a while after looking at Subaru’s face after he’d turned towards her. And then… “If you hold a tea party, I’ll come to it even if no one else does.”

“Why would you make such a sad assumption about a hypothetical situation?!”

Emilia burst into laughter after looking at the screaming Subaru.

If she was asked why, then all she could say was:

—I felt like I saw Subaru feeling lonely in Wonderland.

END

Bonus Short Stories

Anastasia Rising in Life Memorial Day

1

Kicking the pieces of wood laying in that backalley, Ricardo cursed his own bad luck in finding the child that had appeared in front of him. He had been sitting down, at the end of a dead-end street still wet from rain, about to eat the pastry he had just bought, when a problem appeared, ready to torment him.

Ricardo: "…!"

The one facing Ricardo in silence was a human child, dirty from head to toe. Her light purple-colored hair was untidy and unkempt, and worn clothes that looked like shabby tags. Her hostile gaze revealed a lack of trust in humanity, which meant she certainly was an orphan from the poorest area of the city.

It is not uncommon to find children without any parents. The rich are very rich, and the poor are very poor. It's a universal rule, and the same is true in Kararagi, where commerce is flourishing.

Ricardo: "Whaddaya want, brat? I just finished working and I'm hungry… I don't want trouble."

???: "You little shit! Where the fuck did you go?"

Suddenly, a yell reached Ricardo's ears, having taken the initiative to try and not be disturbed. In the end, he let out a sigh from his oversized mouth.

???: "Oh! I found you, kid! What's up with you… Huh? Who the hell are you?"

Four hoodlums, with a brown-skinned man as their leader, rushed into that dead-end street. The man's face twisted in anger when he first spotted the child, and raised his voice even louder once he saw Ricardo. But that rage quickly faded once Ricardo got up.

Ricardo: "Why are you so pale? What's the matter now?"

Leader: “That size… What damn kind of demi-human are you?”

Ricardo: “Can’t you see I’m a dogman? A Kobold.”

Leader: “There’s no such thing as Kobolds with bodies like that! You’re bullshitting me!”

As the brown man shouted, Ricardo made a frown, blocking his ears. Ricardo had already lost track of how many times he had heard that spiel, that sort of indignation. In truth, even though he towered at nearly two meters tall, his whole body was covered in brown fur, and his distinctively doglike facial features left no doubts on whether he was a canine demi-human.

Even though he had to admit he was one of the absolute tallest units of among dog-people.

Ricardo: “Oh no, brot’er… I don’t wanna stand in your way. In truth, this brat jumped in while I was eatin’. I was the one that was bothered here.”

Saying this with sternness, it had been enough to make the ruffians look like they had been intimidated by him. Snorting inwards at his lack of guts, Ricardo then tried to leave that place to avoid any further headaches.

Ricardo: “…”

At the very last moment, he took a quick glance at the child as he left the alley. He had no way of knowing what she had done. But judging from how fired up the crooks were, she was probably not going to get away from them unscathed. Ricardo wasn’t one for feeling sorry for others.

However, looking at those pale blue irises so careless, greatly changed Ricardo’s fate.

Leader: “Anyway, come on! At least you’re coming with me!”

Ricardo: “Wait a second, brother.”

The leader of the group grabbed the child’s shoulder, and tried to drag her petite body out of that place. The moment that child showed a sign of desperate resistance, however, Ricardo interrupted. In the narrow alleyway, the brown-skinned man was agitated by Ricardo's gigantic frame and backed up. Before he could open his mouth, Ricardo seized the child's head and hid her behind his back.

???: "…"

Leader: "H-Hey, what are you doing…?"

Ricardo: "You're holdin' a collar in your hand, aren'tcha? That's the kinda collar you put on a slave."

Pointing to the man's hand, he snapped back with a calm voice. That hand was gripping a collar connected to an iron chain, and the ruffians sharpened their gaze in response.

And they finally noticed. The towering demi-human also had the same kind of collar around his neck.

Leader: "You dog, on your neck, that's a slave's…"

Ricardo: "Don't get me wrong. No, my slave contract already ran out. The stone symbolizin' the contract ain't shining, see? I've done my time. I just keep wearin' this so I would not forget those days. But my personal history doesn't matter, what ya guys are doin' does."

While listening to Ricardo's story, the men had reached into their pockets. Sniffing the changing atmosphere, Ricardo pointed towards the child with his chin and continued,

Ricardo: "I wouldn't have stuck my big nose if the kid already had that collar 'round her neck, but I'm worried now that she has yet to use it… It ain't somethin' that can be taken off without a contract, and it ain't right to make that kinda deal in a dark alley like this. Besides…"

Leader: "…Besides what, goddamnit?"

Ricardo: "Ya people ain't talkin' with Kararagian dialect. Where's the shit flowin' from, then?"

Immediately after Ricardo laughed heartily, revealing his fangs, the brown man in front of him moved. Throwing the collar to the side, he drew a dagger with the other, free hand. In one continuous, flowing maneuver, the glowing tip of the dagger glints near Ricardo's thick neck for a sharp blow. Just before that—

Ricardo: "Hoho, an amateur."

The large machete that was propped up against the wall was swung, and the man's neck was snapped well before he could attack. The man's head, struck by that iron slab, turned the whole way around, and his body slammed into the wall and collapsed. Looking at that scene, the other three were paralyzed, shocked at their partner's tragic end.

Ricardo: "Correction… All of ya are amateurs, and very stupid."

The machete flashed a total of three times. Conversely, the number of men that stopped moving was exactly three times as well. That was all that was needed to draw the curtain on the quarrel that had just taken place in that alley, and, after stashing the corpses away to a corner, the monster of a Kobold turned around.

The child was still there, standing, without running away. She was looking at the remains of those men, unafraid but with the same kind of hostility that she had shown previously, just like the one she showed before she nearly was enslaved.

It was not weakness, it was pure, undiluted rebellious spirit—a look that awakened some interest in Ricardo.

Ricardo: "Hey, kid. Well, I'll be damned."

???: "…"

He scratched his head not knowing what to say, when he finally noticed the warmth held in his hand again. It was the pastry he had just bought and was planning on savoring before this had ever happened.

Ricardo: “Do ya want some of this pastry? It’s still warm.”

???: “…I do.”

Then, the child quickly took the pastry from Ricardo’s hand, at the same time her stomach growled, which got a chuckle out of the demi-human. Then, the kid started with an “And”, squinting,

???: “I’m no brat, I’m a girl. Don’tcha you call me that again, ochan.”

And she threw a grudgeful look at Ricardo, the kind not even those slave merchants had been dealt.

2

Ricardo: “However, man, things have gotten dangerous as of late. I didn’t think they wouldva swooped as low as to enslave little children as well. The name and philosophy of the Kararagi City State are cryin’.”

As he left that alley before more trouble emerged, Ricardo let out his internal thoughts with a grumble. By his side, stood the little girl eating that confection, which was most certainly going to be devoured entirely. He couldn’t blame her at all.

Ricardo: “It’s not shameful to be dirty. Ya got plenty of spirit… Bein’ captured by that gang of nitwits is quite the blunder, though. How did ya get caught, lil’ girl?”

Girl: “… T’was nothing, keep your nose outta it, ochan.”

The girl who had just finished eating curses, now walking on a busy street. Seeing as the child had gotten annoyed at that question, the Kobold laughed once again, making her frown even more.

Girl: “And why did ya help me, ochan? Ya know I can’t pay it back.”

Ricardo: “Even I don’t know… It wasn’t exactly by chance…”

He tried to dodge that question as he scratched his head roughly.

The girl didn’t seem to like that answer, but Ricardo was saying the truth, and couldn’t really explain his reasoning, unfortunately for her. Maybe, it had been her light blue eyes.

Girl: “—Ah.”

And as the Kobold reflected on his motivations, the child let out a short gasp. In the direction she was looking to, two silhouettes were dashing towards her. Two fox demi-humans, probably brothers, breathing heavily, running up to her and,

Fox Bro: “Th-Thankfully, you’re safe… You were taken in our stead, what sort of thing may have happened…”

Girl: “Shut up. I don’t know what you’re talkin’ about, you must be confusin’ me with someone else.”

Fox Bro: “Of course not! How would I be mistaken ‘bout my benefactor?”

The fox demi-human persisted, while the girl continued indifferent, acting unapproachable.

Girl: “I have no idea what you’re talkin’ about, but don’t ever enter alleyways like that one out of curiosity. There are others like them hangin’ around. They seem to think capturin’ demi-humans… ain’t a problem.”

Fox Bro: “That…”

Girl: “I don’t wanna get involved with that anymo’. Get out of here, go home, and cry wit’ ya momma. I won’t say it again.”

With a hurtful look at the cold girl’s words, the beastmen brothers went away resigned. After they had gone away far enough, the girl then turned to Ricardo, who had been watching them with his arms folded,only then did the child notice that Ricardo was looking at her with his arms crossed.

Girl: “…What’s with that face.”

Ricardo: “Nothin’. Ochan just found out somethin’ that has nothin’ to do with him.”

Girl: “…You’re annoying.”

Ricardo patted the girl’s head, who did not like it one bit and swatted his large hands away. That little event left the Kobold in a very good mood. After confirming those brothers were gone, he turned to her.

Ricardo: “Is that ok? You’re aware ya nearly became a slave for helpin’ them?”

Girl: “Yeah. It was somethin’ I did ‘cause I wanted to. Besides, if their family finds out they were involved with an orphan in a very poor town, they’ll be in trouble. This is best for them and for me.”

Ricardo: “You’re real mature for your age, aren’tcha? Sorry, but I don’t hate it, lil’ girl.”

Girl: “…I don’t like ya much, tho’.”

The girl reacted to that with a murmur and a pout. Ricardo reacted with a hearty laugh, tilting his head, and the girl then pointed at his neck.

Girl: “That collar is proof ya were once a slave. Why are ya still wearin’ it even after your contract is up?”

Ricardo: “Didn’t ya hear? It’s so I can never forget. I can’t forget my past as a slave. I am who I am today ‘cause I was once a slave.”

Girl: “…That’s ridiculous. It’s the same as shacklin’ yourself.”

After hearing Ricardo’s quiet justification, the glint that the girl had shown in that alleyway returned to her eyes. Their light glared him straight-on, the Kobold nearly forgot to breathe.

Girl: “Ya sound like those people from the poorest part of town… You’ve been slaves for so long, you’ve got a loser’s mentality stuck in you, it made ya a coward. They’re just excuses for why ya didn’t make it, and so you can say you’re a lil’ better now.

Ricardo: “Lil’ girl…”

Girl: “That way of thinkin’ is what’s wrong. You’re better now? Absolutely not, now’s the worst moment of all, because ya are standin’ still, not doin’ a thing. I don’t wanna be like that.”

Saying that with a shaky voice, the girl was shedding tears nonstop. Despite having nearly been captured by slave merchants, despite having seen a brutal murder in front of her, she had not cried, yet now she cried for an uncertain future. It was as if she could not forgive herself for being nothing but being a hollow, orphan child, and continued to cry as she leered to the collar worn by Ricardo.

Ricardo: “—Yeah. I hate the worst too.”

Saying those words, he patted the little girl’s head as she wept and looked at the sky, to steel himself to do what he felt was the right thing to do.

3

Ricardo: “Yes, now, ya look presentable.”

Girl: “…”

After having her hair done, which she wanted to let grow, washing her mud-dirtied body, and changing her ragged clothes, into new, beautiful ones, she actually seemed like a decent girl.

However, at Ricardo’s remark, she looked at her appearance, and with restless gestures,

Girl: “Wh-What is this…? Why do I gotta dress like this?”

Ricardo: “I’ve already arranged everythin’. Because you’re gonna start workin’ hard at a bar. Ya wouldn’t be able to work at all, all dirty like that.”

Girl: “W-Work…? This suddenly?”

Ricardo: “Don’tcha wanna change from bein’ the worst possible? Then, you can’t just say it, you have to work like ya meant it.

Besides, what's ya name? I need it so I can give it to the owner."

The girl was confused with this barrage of new information and stuttered before replying to the question posed by Ricardo. In the end, after a good while, she looked away while pouting, and,

???: "I have no name. But I grew up in a hole in the ground, so people call me Anastasia."

Ricardo: "…Gahahaha! That's great! That's a great name! Anastasia, from the hole in the ground, huh?! I'm sure ya gonna be a big girl with' that name!"

Then, pushing the back of the blushing girl, the two left the inn and entered the busy street. Amid the crowd, Anastasia closed her eyes as if looking towards something extremely bright.

Ricardo showed his fangs to that Anastasia, and continued,

Ricardo: "Look 'ere, lil' girl. This is the first and last time I'm helpin' ya. I don't know what to do next. If ya truly are determined, then this will go alright."

Anastasia: "…Why are ya doin' so much for me, ochan?"

The look the girl exhibited was one of heavy doubt and mistrust. For Ricardo, it was actually a relief that was her reaction, instead of a word of thanks.

Ricardo: "Nothin' but whimsy. But I think it's gonna pay off, if ya ask me."

He replied as he stroked the girl's head, punctuating his statement with a loud laugh. Once washed, her hair was thin, and soft, as if representing her gentle heart. Even the fact it was slightly wavy reflected her stubborn nature.

Ricardo: "I hope ya make it big soon. When ya do, I will be proud if ya remember me."

Anastasia: "…Ochan."

Ricardo: “Hmm?”

Called by a whispering voice, Ricardo waited for the continuation that never came. But the girl started running to the other side of the street, where she turned on her heels, and yelled back.

Anastasia: “Today I’m gonna take advantage of your kindness! But don’t ya forget. When I make it big, the first thing Imma do is buy ya. I’ll take off that slave collar with my own hands!”

Ricardo’s finger touched the collar unwillingly, unconsciously. Feeling its cold, hard sensation on his finger, the images of having been once bound by it flashed by. Regardless, he swallowed the memories of the days he thought it was an abomination and smiled.

Ricardo: “I am Ricardo. I’ll never forget what you’re sayin’, Ana-bo.”

A girl whose cheeks were swollen in a pout, and the demi-human who laughed loudly in amusement.

That was how the woman who would one day be in charge in the biggest merchant company in the country, and her first collaborator, once met.

END

The Saga of the Great Duchess Crusch Begins: Ferris's Sudden Emergence ☆

1

My neck feels ticklish, and the draftiness down there is making me uneasy. The feeling of the wind on my bare shoulders feels kind of nice though, and I can't get over just how different the world feels just from dressing differently. I know I shouldn't be like this, yet here I am. If I don't stay mindful of it, I'll probably behave the same way as before. I need to be careful.

"Oh, there you are. Perfect timing."

He heard a voice come from behind while walking down a familiar path in an unfamiliar outfit. He turned around and saw a gentle-looking man with a beard calmly walking towards him. He looked like he was almost in his forties, but each of his gestures made him look older.

To put it in other words, he looked older than his age.

"Duke Meckart?" Felix asked. "What's the matter? You look so feeble."

"I don't think I do though? Well, truth be told, my back hurts more than usual today… Eh-hm, that is not what I wanted to talk about. Have you seen Crusch?"

The man—Meckart—smiled calmly at his rather insolent reply.

He is a good-natured man, though I must say that he's not at all suited for the world of political warfare full of scheming and deception.

But even if he was like that, he was the current head of a ducal family that also happened to be one of the most prestigious families in the kingdom. So, things weren't easy for the people around him. While having such an opinion about Meckart, the person who had been questioned put a finger to his lips, and…

“Hmm, Lady Crusch went for a long ride this morning. She said she would be back by lunch, so I think she will be back soon.”

“What?! A long ride?! Why?! I told her beforehand that His Highness, Prince Fourier, would be visiting and that she should receive him!” Meckart’s face turned pale, and it was obvious that he was flustered. He smiled wryly and pointed at the magic time crystal placed in the mansion’s hallway and…

“Regarding that, I…I too have circumstances that make it hard for me to answer.”

Meckart looked at Felix, who had changed to a feminine tone in the middle of his sentence, and lowered his eyebrows in a troubled manner. “I am sorry you are going through so much trouble. If it’s Crusch we’re talking about, she probably forced you again, didn’t she?”

“No, it isn’t like that.”

He smiled softly and brushed his chestnut hair over his shoulder in a natural motion.

Meckart let out a sigh while looking at his gesture. It seemed like he was both impressed and deplored by it. “Seems like you are really getting used to that look, Felix.”

He called the name of the boy—who was being bashful like a young girl.

2

He cut his long hair short and replaced his formal menswear with fashionable women’s clothes. It was his first time wearing a skirt or tight stockings. He wiggled his long, thin tail that protruded from the skirt specially tailored for demi-humans or beastmen. Next, he styled his hair so that his demi-human cat ears would stand out and then put on a flirty smile to complete his new look.

Oh wait, I can’t forget to decorate my hair with my important white ribbon.

Felix Argyle thus assumed the role of a femboy just like had been asked of him.

"…"

He was shocked and pleased to find that his cross-dressing looked surprisingly natural. With this, he could see the promise he had made with his master through, in the best way possible. It would be Felix's greatest joy if he could be of service to her.

Thus, he sincerely wished that he could be useful even in a situation like this, however…

"What is the meaning of this?! I have come here, yet Crusch is nowhere to be seen!"

"Ha, ha-ha-ha!" Meckart laughed nervously. "My daughter is at an age where she may feel embarrassed. Since Your Highness has come here to meet her personally. Maybe that's why she isn't showing up!"

It didn't seem like he could come between the two who were having a verbal tug of war at the gate of the mansion anytime soon. One was Meckart, the master of the manor, whose pale face was even paler and seemed desperate. And the one facing him was a rather handsome boy with long blond hair. He was around the same age as Felix, which put him at around eleven or twelve. His crimson eyes were shimmering like jewels, and he had spoken in somewhat of a carefree tone. With his fur coat, servants following closely behind him, the luxurious dragon carriage that he came out of, and from how a duke was bowing his head down, it was clear that he was from a prominent family.

Or rather, his background was obvious.

"So that's His Highness, Fourier Lugunica."

He was royalty who held the title of Fourth Prince of the Kingdom of Lugunica and was the son of the current king. Now, the reason why a person of such high stature had taken the trouble to visit a duke's domain was because—

"I was wondering where all that noise was coming from, but it turned out to be Your Highness. I had no idea that you had already arrived. Apologies for my impudence," said a girl who had appeared on an earth dragon, expertly controlling it, with her tied-up green hair fluttering in the wind. She was a real beauty.

She was a beautiful girl, and yet, words like pretty or cute hardly suited her. The way she stood reminded people of the sharpness of a sword. She had a gallant, strong face, and piercing eyes. She had such a commanding presence that it was hard to believe that she was a young girl, and the way she carried herself could make anyone gasp. There was no mistaking that she was Felix's master and the girl everyone there had been waiting for.

"Ooh, Crusch! Are you feeling alright? Only you could get away with making me wait like that!"

"My apologies. I was told that Your Highness would be arriving in the afternoon. I did not expect you to arrive before lunch."

"Yes, I hastened the earth dragon since I wanted to meet you."

Fourier became overjoyed and excited at the arrival of the girl—Crusch Karsten. He'd replied to her boastingly, but he had completely missed the mark and puffed his chest arrogantly, as if he had said something admirable. Looking at that, Felix was convinced that he was exactly like he had heard.

Crusch and Fourier were exchanging pleasant remarks, but Meckart, who was a duke and also a father, couldn't watch it in peace. He spoke up, his face still pale. "Hey, Crusch. How long are you planning on playing with the earth dragon? Take it to the stables and then come right back after changing your clothes. Don't forget to take a shower, alright?"

"Yes, alright. Felix, come." Crusch, who had received an order from her father, called Felix, who was standing among the servants.

He reacted to her call like a dog with an "OK!" and quickly went to her side.

“Take the dragon to the stable. You can accompany me on a long ride next time. It feels quite nice on a windy day.”

“I’d love to do that after my training. Oh, and you might need to hold my waist and hands while teaching me, so…”

“That won’t be a problem. If that is what you wish to do, then you can pick a time and date after looking at your schedule.”

With the promise in place, Felix grabbed hold of the reins with a smile on his face. Crusch bowed to Fourier, and as she was about to head back to the mansion…

“Don’t make His Highness wait too long, and change into the dress that has been prepared for you. I will not tolerate any complaints, Crusch.”

“…Father, I have told you many times. I shall no longer wear dresses, only formal men’s attire. I don’t want to be the kind of master that breaks her promise with her retainer.”

“Crusch…”

When Crusch respectfully corrected Meckart’s misunderstanding, Felix turned pale when he found out that he was the reason behind that.

Fourier then interrupted them. “Stop. What is the meaning of what you just said? Speak in a way that even I may understand,” he asked, cutting into their parent-child conversation without reading between the lines.

Crusch briefly told Fourier that she had made a vow to see a certain promise through: to stop acting like a woman, and to become the finest swordswoman and noble. As Felix felt proud listening to that, Meckart put a hand to his forehead and lamented his daughter’s future.

Fourier’s face turning red, he said, “No, no, you cannot do that! What on earth are you saying! Stop being a woman? Stop being stupid! I will not forgive such a thing! Since you are a girl!”

“I believe it would be out of line for Your Highness to dictate to me about what I should be,” Crusch responded rationally to Fourier, who was being emotional.

“Arggghhh…!” Fourier groaned, at a loss for words. His gaze wandered and then landed on the sword at Crusch’s waist. “Alright, then pick up your sword! Use your sword to show me how big your ambition is!”

“…A duel? Between I and Your Highness?”

“Yes! I am learning swordsmanship in the royal castle. Everyone was saying that I have talent. I shall personally teach you the difference between the strength of a man and a woman!” Fourier declared with a bright face, thrusting his fist towards the sky.

Fourier quickly turned around to look at Meckart, then smiled at the pale duke. “I am fine with the garden being the location for our duel! Bring two wooden swords! I shall turn your daughter into a woman!” he so boldly declared.

3

Felix was performing healing magic on Fourier, who was sprawled out in the garden like a torn-up rag. He had seen the duel—which was more of an execution, though it would be referred to as a duel for the sake of propriety—and wasn’t sure who was at fault here.

Was it Fourier’s fault for daring to continue challenging her without realizing the difference in ability? Or was it Crusch’s straightforward personality’s fault, which prevented her from holding back? Either way, the result of the combination of both was the cruel state of the fourth prince.

“Father collapsed with a pale face. It’s possible he might scold me later.”

“Hmmm, he might do that.”

Crusch saw Meckart off as he was being carried away by the servants, looking exhausted. There was no trace of sweat on her, making Fourier's lousy fighting skills seem even more pitiful.

"Uuh… P-Paper thin, it was a paper-thin difference."

"Is that so? Then the paper must be quite thick."

"Lady Crusch, His Highness will feel miserable if you do not treat him a bit more kindly."

It was a straightforward statement, something typical of her, but it was too honest, so Felix gave some advice.

The three of them were talking in a corner of the garden while basking in the breeze. The soldiers accompanying Fourier and the servants of the mansion were looking at them from a distance. They were probably thinking that it was a lovely sight.

"Anyway, Crusch… I did not know that you were so skilled at using swords."

"I am still quite lacking. But, Your Highness. A promise is a promise. From now on, leave me to…"

"I-I know. You can do as you please until I best you at our next match."

The part where he effeminately asked for a rematch was part of his loveable character, and it brought a wry smile to Ferris's face.

Crusch probably thought so too, as her lips were relaxed, and she was smiling.

Felix and Fourier were completely enchanted by her charming, gentle smile.

"I-I need to be strong. Or else I will ruin the reputation of the royal family."

"It isn't like that. Besides, how good you are at the sword won't diminish the prestige of Your Highness and the royal family. The sacred blood pact—as long as the Dragon protects the kingdom, the respect from the people will remain unshaken.”

“Mhm… I don’t think so.”

Fourier immediately tried to conceal his emotions, but Crusch followed up and denied his words.

Fourier looked displeased after hearing what she had to say. “If the Dragon does everything, then why does the royal family exist? That is not a reason for me to stay weak. It shouldn’t be a reason for me to be weaker than you…a woman!”

“Your Highness…”

It was the kind of stubborn words that boys his age would say in front of girls they liked. Felix, however, instinctively sympathized with the rebellious attitude against his own weakness in his words.

Felix felt like Fourier’s words pierced his heart since he once had nights where he would wrap his arms around his knees and cry at his own helplessness.

And Felix wasn’t the only person who was deeply impressed by those words.

“‘Then why does the royal family exist’.” Crusch opened her eyes and mouth and repeated Fourier’s words, tensing her cheeks.

Even Crusch didn’t know just how deeply his words resonated in her mind now. Though she didn’t know it, it was an unshakable fact that it left a mark on her heart and shook her soul.

“Your Highness, let us cross swords like this again. I believe your feelings to be most noble.”

“Hm, is that so? Yes, it is as you say! Hmm, I am glad that you understood me! But it is that! It’s okay if you are a little gentler with me next time! I don’t want to feel pain…”

“You won’t learn anything if I go easy on you.”

“You really aren’t kind at all, are you?!”

“Pffft—” Felix burst into laughter, unable to hold it in after hearing Crusch’s reply and Fourier’s scream.

Fourier stared at Felix for the first time after seeing his reaction. Felix was about to open his mouth to immediately apologize for the disrespect, but… “I thank you as well. You are more skilled in healing magic than the people in the castle. It felt rather pleasant. You have earned my praise. Your name…yes, it was Ferris!”

With a bright face, he boldly said the wrong name. But he seemed so full of confidence that Felix wasn’t sure if he should correct him or not. And then…

“—It’s a fine name. Your original name feels somewhat odd due to that attire. Ferris has a nice ring to it. If you like it, I would like to call you that too… What do you think?”

Crusch smiled gently and revealed that she liked the name he had been called by a mistake. Felix muttered that name in his mouth in front of Fourier, who looked confused, and then nodded. “Yes, then please call me Ferris. I would like My Lady and Your Highness to call me by that name from now on.”

“Hmm? I don’t get it, but oh well. Alright then, Ferris, I’ll be expecting good work from you!”

Fourier’s expressions were that of a person who didn’t understand anything, and he ruined his beauty by laughing loudly. Felix smiled wryly at that, and Crusch tenderly and lovingly said, “—Ferris. Yes. That name seems like a better fit for my woman.”

She said that without thinking, causing a commotion that once again made Fourier explode and Meckart fall unconscious.

END

Volume 6

Chapters 41-53

Chapter 41:
Immature Negotiations

1

“It’s quite an interesting turn of events for you to be my last visitor today, My Guest.”

Despite her schedule being thrown off, Crusch laughed, seemingly in good spirits, and settled deeply into the armchair in the reception room.

Across from her, facing her directly, sat Subaru and Rem. Behind Crusch stood Wilhelm and Ferris, poised and waiting— A scene Subaru felt he’d seen before.

The same location and people as the first time, when he’d declared his return to the mansion. The topic Subaru was about to bring up now was even more contentious than it had been back then.

After all, this wasn’t just about Subaru and Rem returning to the mansion; it was much bigger.

“Fortunately, there’s no longer a reason to dine out. I have time to accompany you until dinner is ready at the mansion.”

“You usually wouldn’t have time like this without any prior notice. Subaru-kyun should really appreciate Lady Crusch’s boundless generosity, you know?”

“Well, the truth is, I just had some free time because my negotiating partner stood me up.”

“Oh, Lady Crusch is so wonderful for not even trying to save face…!”

While the master and servant engaged in their usual banter, Subaru weighed his opening in his mind.

Considering the time limit, he couldn’t afford to hesitate too much.

However, if his delivery was too poor, he wouldn't achieve his goal.

"Well, it's probably best to keep the conversation simple."

If he were to prolong the conversation with roundabout, verbose explanations, it would likely displease Crusch, given her personality.

He knew what he needed to say, so he shouldn't hesitate.

Changing his demeanor and expression, Subaru watched as Crusch adjusted her seating posture. "Now," she prefaced, extending a hand towards him.

"This meeting was requested by you, My Guest. I'll leave the opening to you. —What is it you desire?"

Subaru thought, She really gets straight to the point.

Licking his dry lips to moisten them, Subaru took a deep breath in front of Crusch. Then,

"The Witches Cult is planning an attack on Roswaal's domain. I need your help, Crusch-san, to crush them."

Subaru stated the conditions necessary to achieve his goal directly.

The forces essential for annihilating the Witches Cult— Since they couldn't be expected from Roswaal's territory, he had no choice but to pull them from elsewhere. And despite his short stay, Subaru knew that Crusch possessed that power.

At Subaru's direct words, the four others present showed their respective reactions.

Wilhelm's reaction was a mere twitch of his eyebrow. Ferris's eyes widened in surprise, and he looked at Crusch with concern. Rem, beside Subaru, silently pressed her lips together, her gaze piercing his profile.

And then,

"I see, the Witch Cult."

Crusch rested her chin on her clasped hands, her elbows on the reception room table, and smiled.

It was a captivating, alluring smile, showing a new side of her to Subaru, who had always strongly associated her with a stern and intense impression.

In any case, the die was cast.

Since he had directly plunged into the main topic, he had no choice but to continue non-stop. Calming his quickening heartbeat, Subaru waited for Crusch's next reaction.

However, she didn't utter anything beyond her initial remark. Subaru, finding this puzzling, slightly furrowed his brow.

"What's wrong? I told you, it's your turn to speak."

"No, well… I said what I needed to say…"

"Are you implying that simply stating a demand is the end of it? You must explain why you seek this demand, what evidence supports it, and what benefits we stand to gain by acceding to it. Without demonstrating these, it cannot be called a negotiation."

Crusch narrowed one eye, looking bored, as Subaru choked on his words.

Realizing that he was about to fall into her pace, Subaru inwardly chastised himself and continued speaking.

"Right, you're absolutely correct. My apologies, that was rude of me. It's just, I don't have much experience with negotiations like this."

"It's important to understand one's own inexperience. Don't worry about it. However, I have set a time limit until dinner. —Do not forget that."

She showed magnanimity while also mentioning the time limit, a clear display of carrot and stick.

Subaru re-organized what he needed to say.

“First, the reason I want to borrow your strength is… simply put, we’re short on fighting power. Our numbers are completely insufficient against the Witch Cult’s. As a result, we can’t counter their attack.”

“Indeed, a simple explanation. But isn’t Lord Mathers enough for that? His ability to wipe out groups is among the best in Lugunica. Numbers shouldn’t be an issue.”

“That would be true if they were all in one place, but that’s not the case. Since Roswaal can only be in one place at a time, we’re doomed if two locations are attacked.”

At the very least, it was confirmed that the Witch Cult would attack the village and the mansion. And hypothetically, they seemed to have also attacked passing dragon carriages. The word “evacuation” was uttered several times by Petelgeuse, which was the basis for this.

“I see, I can understand that. However, wouldn’t that be a dereliction of duty on Lord Mathers’ part as a lord? It is a lord’s obligation to maintain military power to protect their own territory. If he neglected that, overestimating his own strength, I would have no choice but to lower my evaluation of him.”

“You’re absolutely right on that front. In any case, that’s why we can’t resist the Witch Cult’s indiscriminate methods. We need more fighting power, in terms of numbers, for that reason.”

If the attack locations were limited to two, they would need enough military power to defend both simultaneously. Since Roswaal might be absent, if Rem and Ram were to handle one side, the other would require another reliable presence.

Subaru glanced at Wilhelm as he pleaded with Crusch. If possible, he definitely wanted to enlist Wilhelm’s help.

Wilhelm must have understood the meaning of Subaru’s gaze, but he showed no reaction. Crusch, looking at Subaru who had slightly lowered his eyes, waved her hand at Ferris beside her.

“The Witch Cult. It seems they’ve begun to move, after all.”

“Indeed. Well, it was expected once Lady Emilia, a half-elf, stepped onto the public stage.”

Ferris agreed with Crusch’s words, and Subaru frowned at his attitude.

Before he could question it, what drew Subaru’s attention was the surge of emotion emanating from beside him. When he looked over, a silent Rem was looking down, her lips pressed tightly together.

Seeing her intentionally emotionless expression, he could tell that her inner turmoil was anything but calm.

The first time he heard the phrase “Witch Cult” was from Rem, he recalled. The Witch Cult, which seemed to be an abhorrent entity to her, was now Subaru’s greatest enemy as well. He was probably making a face as grim as hers.

Seeing Rem’s indignation, Subaru cooled his head. Crusch, observing his state, swept her long green hair behind her back. “And then?” she asked, tilting her head.

“I understand the situation. Next is your reason for choosing our house as your collaborator and… the basis for that choice.”

“We’re choosing you, Crusch-san, as collaborators because it’s the most promising option given the current situation. You’re taking care of me and Rem, and compared to the other royal selection candidates, I think you’re in a position that makes it easier to cooperate.”

This was a part he had prepared an answer for, expecting to be asked.

Truth be told, if Subaru were to be completely honest, there was another party who would be even easier to deal with than Crusch. However, prioritizing ease of contact in the current situation led to him initiating negotiations here first.

“Easier to deal with, huh.”

Crusch muttered softly in response to Subaru’s answer, then smiled meaningfully. To Subaru, who couldn’t gauge the intent of her smile, she raised a finger and said, “Allow me to correct one thing.”

“Perhaps my treating you as guests has caused a misunderstanding, but there’s something I want you to reconsider.”

“…What is it?”

“I am not treating you as enemies. It is a fact that Emilia is already a political adversary to me. Understand? I am already in opposition to her.”

Emphasizing her surprisingly harsh words, Crusch clearly stated her position.

At her attitude, Subaru recalled the first iteration.

“No, but still, you’re currently… us…”

“That is because a contract has been formed. It is only because there is a contract between Emilia and me, albeit through her attendants, based on mutual compensation, that I have taken you in. If that agreement ceases, our positions will be clear, and in matters unrelated to the agreement, we are merely adversaries.”

Cutting off Subaru’s clinging words sharply, Crusch held her ground.

Even in the first world, she had clearly declared hostility to Subaru when he broke the contract. That could be called sincere, or inflexible.

In other words,

“There’s no chance of forming an alliance, then?”

“That has nothing to do with this. I told you, Natsuki Subaru. If this is a negotiation, you must present mutual benefits that both parties can agree to. So far, you've only confirmed the reason and the preconditions. I need to hear the rationale and the pure advantage for us to lend you our forces."

"However," she continued, after a pause,

"Regarding the rationale, it could be said that it's not strictly necessary. It was expected that the Witch Cult would begin to move once Emilia's lineage became known to the public. Whether the source of that information is reliable or a product of imagination, there is a near certainty either way."

Crusch apparently had no doubts whatsoever about the premise of this negotiation—that the Witch Cult had made its move. This seemed to be a common understanding unique to this world, shared by those living within it, which was a stroke of luck for Subaru, who was negotiating as an amateur.

The fact that the Witch Cult was so widely known, frankly, was on a level that made his skin crawl.

"In short, what's needed for this negotiation are mutual benefits. In your case, by borrowing our strength, you can eliminate the threat of the Witch Cult. So then, what do we gain by lending you our hand? Let me hear it."

"J-Just pure humanitarian aid or something…"

"An amusing jest. So amusing, in fact, that I'm tempted to jokingly order Wilhelm to draw his sword."

Only Wilhelm and Ferris were armed in the room, but the fact that she'd order Wilhelm, not her primary knight, indicated the power balance.

In any case, this was not a situation to be avoided with jokes. Subaru spun his mind at full throttle.

"Ah, well, you know. For example, if you lend a hand in this crisis, we could owe your camp an enormous favor…"

“—If I were to accept that proposal, it would mean Emilia’s withdrawal from the Royal Selection. Are you aware of that when you say it?”

“Huh?”

His words were cut off, and at the sharp interjection, Subaru’s mouth hung open. But Crusch’s gaze, looking at Subaru, was like a dangerous blade.

“Of course, isn’t it? To completely entrust the crisis of one’s own territory to a lord from another territory is a problem even before considering whether one has the qualities of a queen. If one cannot protect and command one’s own people, how can one possibly bear the burden of a nation? Natsuki Subaru—let me correct one more misunderstanding.”

Raising a finger, Crusch pointed it at the silent Subaru, as if to pierce him.

“You are conducting this negotiation on behalf of Emilia’s camp. The validity of all your statements rests on her, and your words carry Emilia’s weight. You should not make judgments lightly, nor can you easily go back on what you’ve said.”

“Ah, um…”

“With that said, I ask again. —If this matter creates a debt, it means the defeat of Emilia’s camp. Is that acceptable?”

Of course, it wasn’t.

Only now did Subaru truly begin to understand where he stood.

Subaru wasn’t in a casual debate where he bore no responsibility. This was a situation where a single word could shake the positions of many people and even influence the fate of the kingdom.

The stage Subaru had willingly stepped onto was precisely such a pressure-filled arena.

“Even so…”

Feeling crushed by the weight on his shoulders, Subaru bit his lip, his voice trembling.

As Crusch had said, if he accepted her help under the current conditions, it would put Emilia in an insurmountable disadvantage.

How much could she possibly recover in the Royal Selection, having fallen so far behind at this early stage?

If he were to make this proposal to Crusch, Emilia's Royal Selection would end here.

If he couldn't borrow her strength, Roswaal's territory would only face ravaging by the Witch Cult fanatics.

The scales swayed, and pain and creaking incessantly assaulted Subaru's brain.

As noise assaulted every corner of his thoughts, Subaru gritted his teeth and came to a conclusion:

"Even so, I need your help."

"…Even if it means withdrawing from the Royal Selection?"

"Better to be alive, right? —Once you're dead, it's over."

Subaru slumped his shoulders, unable to hide his disappointment, as he replied.

Once you're dead, it's over. Subaru didn't have the courage to witness the horrific state of that village and the incredibly tragic death of Rem, who was standing beside him, with his own eyes again.

If he could save lives by bowing his head and enduring humiliation, then he should do so.

Crusch, accepting Subaru's answer, pulled back her chin and said, "Understood."

"—In that case, the Karsten House will not lend you any forces."

She stated that definitively.

2

—For a moment, Subaru's world froze; he couldn't comprehend what Crusch had just said.

"—Huh?"

The sound that escaped him, though punctuated with a question mark, was just meaningless noise born of incomprehension. Crusch, accepting it, gracefully crossed her long legs.

"I repeat. Our house will not provide aid to the Mathers territory as you requested—and by extension, we will not lend forces to Emilia."

She repeated it, breaking it down into even clearer terms.

Her perfectly composed demeanor only made Subaru, who was struggling to grasp it, feel more foolish.

"You're ki—!"

The next moment, anger surged, and Subaru almost spat out the words, but he managed to check his impulsiveness just in time.

Raising his voice and yelling emotionally had never improved a situation. Moreover, his opponent was far more experienced and composed than he was.

He tapped his knee, maintaining a rhythm to temper his fervor.

"Why… why would it be like that…?"

He squeezed out the obvious question.

Before appealing to emotion, he had to first hear her side. Then, he'd search for a compromise and align their positions to find a solution. This was a fundamental of negotiation, and he couldn't just abandon it.

Petelgeuse's murderous intent— The fate of an entire village—rested on Subaru's judgment.

To Subaru's low query, Crusch held up two fingers. "First," she began.

"Your offer of Emilia's withdrawal from the Royal Selection, which you painfully accepted as our gain… Is not a valid hand in this negotiation. Do you understand?"

"Wh-Why not? A rival less is a substantial return for you guys…"

That's precisely why, because he couldn't trade it for lives, he had wagered it as the heaviest counterweight on the scales.

He knew Emilia was aiming for the throne, but he weighed it against so many lives.

Subaru bit his lip, refusing to back down, but Crusch shook her head.

"Don't you realize what you're saying? Emilia's withdrawal, as you described it, would occur regardless of my involvement."

"What are you—"

Subaru was about to finish his sentence, "—saying," when he suddenly understood.

As Subaru's face stiffened in stunned realization, Crusch nodded.

"As you said, without anyone's help, Emilia cannot protect her own territory. That directly means Emilia's withdrawal from the Royal Selection. I don't even need to lift a finger."

"Rather," Crusch waved the finger she still held up,

"It would be a greater detriment if other factions found out that my camp improperly interfered and caused Emilia's withdrawal. As you know, our house is currently in the most advantageous position in this Royal Selection. I want to avoid making enemies of the other factions all at once by prematurely knocking one of them out."

By doing nothing, she would gain precisely the advantage Subaru had offered. There was no need for her to deliberately take risks, like pulling chestnuts from the fire.

Then—

“Are you just going to abandon Roswaal’s territory… that village to the Witch Cult?!”

“Let me correct your misunderstanding. Don’t change the subject, Natsuki Subaru.”

Crusch’s cold gaze pierced through Subaru’s shouting. Her expression sharpened.

“It is Emilia who lacks the power to protect her territory, and it is Emilia who will lose her people due to her incompetence. It is decidedly not me.”

Powerless, incompetent— Subaru felt as if he had been punched in the head by those words.

He wanted to argue against Crusch’s claims. But only childish emotional arguments came to mind, and he couldn’t muster the strength to counter her logical reasoning.

“It seems you have nothing more to say.”

Crusch, her eye half-closed, murmured at Subaru’s repeated opening and closing of his mouth. She then looked out the window with her open right eye, gazing at the sky.

“It’s almost the hour of the earth—dinner time. Right on schedule.”

Ending the conversation, Crusch made to stand.

Subaru, desperate at her unapproachable demeanor, cried out,

“W-Wait!”

He gestured with his hand to stop her as she was about to rise, and Subaru, hovering in his seat, moistened his lips and desperately tried to find a way to continue negotiating with Crusch.

“A-Are you seriously going to abandon them? The villagers have no fault, no reason!”

However, what came out of Subaru’s mouth was just a string of effeminate words, clinging to her mercy. Hearing this, a faint disappointment flickered in Crusch’s eyes.

“I told you. It is not I who lacks the power…”

“To know and then abandon them! Isn’t that evil?! If you have the power, if you can help, why won’t you help?! What’s wrong with helping?! If it’s another territory, are you just going to look away because it won’t affect the votes?!”

He interrupted, screaming his rage, despite knowing it was rude.

Crusch frowned at Subaru’s outburst, and Ferris, his eyes blazing with anger at the sheer impudence, started to step forward, saying, “Just a moment—” But,

“Ferris, it’s fine.”

“But, Lady Crusch… that’s too much.”

“It’s raw spirit. If I don’t respond, my standing will diminish.”

Ferris grumbled in discontent, but quietly retreated at Crusch’s command. Watching him out of the corner of her eye, Crusch settled back into her chair.

“To overlook, to abandon, is that not evil, you ask?”

Deeply, with a sigh, she replayed Subaru’s words.

Seizing on her attitude as a hook, as a last possibility, he clung to it.

“That’s right! You’re aiming to be queen, aren’t you? You’re going to bear the burden of the entire country, aren’t you? Then what kind of queen abandons an entire village?!”

Subaru passionately argued, spittle flying, fists clenched.

As Subaru's words pressed on, Crusch closed her eyes in thought, then slowly,

"Let me correct one thought."

She said, holding up two fingers, and fixed Subaru with a piercing gaze.

Subaru flinched at the sharpness of her gaze, but then frowned at the discrepancy between her fingers and her words. Crusch then allowed a small, provocative curve to her lips.

"This is the second of the two reasons I gave earlier. That should answer most of your questions."

The first reasons— That is, why Crusch wouldn't help Emilia. The answer was:

"The answer is—because your story lacks the credibility to move our house."

Her statement, which seemed to overturn all their previous words and premises, struck Subaru hard. With just one word —"lack of credibility"— their previous exchange was dismissed.

"Huh?"

"The Witch Cult, you say. Indeed, it's plausible they might move. Their doctrine and past activities make that clear. The problem lies beyond that."

"Beyond that…?"

"It's a simple matter. How can you pinpoint where they will strike next?"

Crusch pointed her raised finger at Subaru, her voice and gaze sharp.

"Their elusiveness is unfathomably thorough. The fact that they've survived for nearly four centuries without being eradicated is good proof of that. How then, did you come to know their next folly?"

"That's… but you just said earlier that wasn't…"

"The obscurity of their intelligence network is proven by history. If you've grasped it, then show me your evidence. Otherwise, there's only one reason you could know."

In Subaru's place, Crusch slowly, thoughtfully, articulated:

"That you, too, are a member of the Witch Cult."

"You're kidding—!"

This time, a scream surged up his throat, about to erupt in full fury. However it was stopped again, just in time.

This time, it wasn't the result of his own conscience or self-control.

"…"

—It was due to the intense, truly demonic aura emanating from Rem, who had been silently observing the exchange between Subaru and Crusch all this time.

Beside Subaru, Rem sat upright in her chair, hands on her knees. However, a power so immense it seemed to distort the very air overflowed from her expressionless face, and it was clear as day that it stemmed from the recent conversation.

"Lady Crusch, please cease your jesting."

Receiving the gazes of everyone in the room, Rem spoke in her usual tone, then demurely tilted her head towards Crusch.

"There's no way Subaru could be a part of the Witch Cult."

"—Is that so? Considering Natsuki Subaru's statements, if he cannot explain how he knows, then there is no other conclusion to draw. Do you have any thoughts on the matter?"

"—No."

Did Crusch notice the momentary hesitation?

Only Rem, who could sense the Witch scent from Subaru, felt something catch in Crusch's casual baiting and her tongue clicked.

In any case,

"Regardless. For those two reasons, our house cannot lend a hand to Emilia. —In the first place, you haven't been given the authority to negotiate, have you?"

"—Uh."

"Earlier, I threatened you by saying Emilia's fate rested on your shoulders, but that's a problem even before that. There is nothing for you to bear in this current situation."

Running wild on his own, trying to protect on his own, failing selfishly.

Crusch's words, cold and sharp, gouged and tore at Subaru's raw heart.

His passion dissipated, and what filled Subaru's chest transformed from hot to cold. His mouth opened and closed clumsily, like a fish gasping for air.

Crusch looked at Subaru with pitying eyes.

"You currently lack the power to move me. Quietly, allow yourself to be protected."

"—!"

Those were words repeated to him again and again, over and over.

They forced Subaru to admit his powerlessness, thrust his ignorance upon him, demanded his inadequacy, and mocked his reckless, clumsy foolishness— A rotten sympathy.

Nothing went as he wished, and a gnawing frustration dominated Subaru.

Why, why did everyone prevent Subaru from achieving his desires? What was wrong? He was supposed to be doing the right thing. He believed it was right, believed he could help, and acted accordingly.

“The Witch Cult is coming! They’re going to slaughter everyone in the village…!”

Subaru pleaded, his voice filled with anger and sorrow, so intense it felt like his throat would tear.

He had seen the sight. He had touched the deaths.

His loved ones, precious beings, everything frozen, transforming into white crystals.

It was something that would surely happen. A merciless reality that would inevitably occur if left alone.

Why wouldn’t they understand? Why wouldn’t they let him stop it? Why wouldn’t anyone interfere, and simply let Subaru twist fate?

“Kill, just kill them! Those damned Witch Cultists, just kill all of them! That way, everything will be fine! Don’t you understand?! Those guys, they shouldn’t be alive! Kill, give me the power, kill, lend it to me!”

He knelt on the floor, prostrating himself, begging.

If only he could rub his head against the floor and plead, if only someone would look down with pity in their eyes, he would play the fool, do anything, just for their help.

He would imitate a dog, take on the role of a beast, anything. If only that killing intent could be realized—

“—Is that the source of your actions?”

Subaru’s act, unhesitatingly exposing his shame, “Hatred for the Witch Cult, is that why you approached Emilia?”

—It elicited not a shred of pity from the authority figure who allowed no personal feelings to influence her judgment.

Chapter 42:
A Night of Breakdowns

1

Torn apart by her cold gaze, Subaru's shoulders trembled, silent. He no longer knew if it was from anger or sorrow—just a torrent of mixed emotions sweeping him away.

All he could say was,

"No… I'm actually… everyone's…"

Crusch's assertion was completely off the mark. To say he was motivated by hatred for the Witch Cult was nothing but a misguided, prejudiced view.

Subaru's feelings, their very source, had always, always been for someone else's sake. They had to be. Yet, his words wouldn't clearly follow, and Crusch, listening, shook her head.

"You cannot deceive others with lies that can't even deceive yourself. What else would you call the light in your eyes right now but madness and murderous intent? Do you realize, Natsuki Subaru?"

"…"

"You've had that look in your eyes ever since you returned to the mansion."

The dry accusation laced with pity, or perhaps sympathy? In any case, Subaru's reaction to hearing it was dramatic; he involuntarily touched his eyes, trying to confirm with his fingertips something he couldn't see. Yet, the very act proved he couldn't entirely deny Crusch's words.

"I don't know why you're so fixated on the Witch Cult. Many have had their lives twisted by them. Perhaps you are one of them. Your anger, your hatred, may be justified. However it has no bearing on this negotiation."

"What if—"

"Hmm?"

Subaru persisted, unwilling to let the negotiation end, even as Crusch declared its conclusion. He held his breath, waiting for her to continue, her one eye closed.

"What if I do hate the Witch Cult? What then? Yeah, they're the world's pests. It'd be far better to kill every last one of them. I do think that. But as you said, that has nothing to do with this."

An undying hatred, an unyielding despair, the craving for Petelgeuse's death festering in Subaru's chest—all surged through his body as negative energy. He knew it wasn't the kind of thing that would give others a good impression. But even so, right now, such feelings were necessary to maintain his sanity. And he prided himself on being able to assert what needed to be done without being swayed by those emotions.

So,

"That wouldn't be a reason to break off negotiations, would it…!"

"You're straying from the topic again, Natsuki Subaru. The question of whether the origin of your actions is hatred has no bearing on the validity of the negotiation itself. However, it does heavily relate to your unsuitability as a negotiating partner. One might even say it's hard to call it unrelated to the negotiation."

"Unsuitable… what do you mean by that…"

Subaru gritted his teeth, literally, and continued to press his questions, as if squeezing them out. Crusch folded her arms, patiently dissecting Subaru's questions with the same tolerance one might show a disobedient child.

"If we assume the origin of your actions is hatred for the Witch Cult, then isn't it possible that your very approach to Emilia was merely a stepping stone for that purpose?”

Listen, Crusch said, raising a finger on her folded arm.

“If Emilia announces her candidacy for the Royal Selection, and her origins are revealed on the public stage, it’s clear the Witch Cult will start to move according to their dogma. For once, there wouldn’t be a more effective decoy to pin down their leaders, who usually leave no trace of their activities.”

“You’re saying I’m using Emilia as bait to get revenge on them?!”

“Given your current behavior, do you truly believe screaming ‘no’ would be convincing? Hatred dwells in your eyes, and murderous intent seeps into every word. Both are so deeply ingrained they cannot be stripped away, faded, or even forgotten.”

No, no, no, no, no.

Crusch’s statement absolutely did not capture Subaru’s true nature. The root of Subaru’s feelings stemmed from a desire to save someone. The murderous intent toward Petelgeuse was merely a necessary component to achieve that goal. To suggest he’d mistaken the means for the end, focusing solely on that, was nothing but a wild conjecture.

Since things wouldn’t be resolved without killing them, what was wrong with seeking the means, the methods, to kill them? They deserved to die. They shouldn’t be allowed to live. He was right. Since he was trying to do the right thing, everyone should cooperate with him.

“My hatred and their wickedness are unrelated! They! They shouldn’t be alive! That’s why they should all be killed! Then everyone will be saved! Everyone will be helped! No one will have to die, so they deserve to die, and…”

“I told you, Natsuki Subaru. You cannot deceive others with lies that cannot even deceive yourself.”

As Subaru retorted, panting harshly, eyes bloodshot, her voice was cold. Crusch narrowed her eyes, looking up at the gasping Subaru from her seated position.

“Your assertion that you are not motivated by hatred, by murderous intent, by hatred for the Witch Cult, is unconvincing.”

“Why…?”

“Don’t you understand?”

As Subaru hoarsely asked again, Crusch’s eyes held clear pity. Subaru, still not grasping her meaning, merely furrowed his brows. Receiving this, she lowered her gaze, unable to hide her disappointment and disillusionment.

“—You haven’t once said you want to save Emilia.”

“—Huh?”

“Your words merely pretend to want to save someone, to protect others, but underneath that facade, black emotions are boiling. At least, you don’t resemble the person I saw in the throne room.”

Unable to comprehend the meaning of her words, Subaru’s gaze wandered.

—He didn’t want to save Emilia?

That couldn’t be true. Ever since he fell into this world and she first saved his life, Subaru had always lived for Emilia. It was true in the throne room, at the training grounds, and even now. If he left this situation unchecked, she and the village would be lost. He was acting for that very reason. Absolutely, absolutely, absolutely, he was not consumed by hatred—

“We cannot allow you to proceed further than that, sir.”

Suddenly, that voice broke the silence and was thrown at Subaru.

The moment his consciousness snapped back to reality, standing before Subaru was an old man with straightened posture—Wilhelm. He stood beside Crusch across the table, watching Subaru with a faint trace of pity in the wrinkles that spoke of his age. That condescending gaze, that attitude, that pitying expression, oddly irritated him.

"—Subaru."

As his frayed emotions turned to irritation, he felt a tug on his sleeve. Looking down, he saw Rem, still seated, pinching the edge of his clothing with her fingertips. Her composed face held a sense of urgency and a touch of sadness.

"Please calm down. Raging here won't solve anything. Even if you were to rage, Rem is no match for Sir Wilhelm."

"…Rage? What are you talking about? Rage, or anything like that…"

"Whoa, whoa, isn't that a bit much, nya?"

He was about to say he wouldn't, but Ferris shrugged and sighed heavily at Subaru. He looked up at Subaru, then pointed at the arm not clutched by Rem.

"You've got a teaspoon clutched in your tightly clenched fist, what are you planning to do with that, nya? Maybe your parents didn't teach you well, but that grip is unacceptable, nya."

It was Ferris's remark that made him realize for the first time. Subaru's right hand was gripping the spoon that had been with his teacup. And he was holding it with the handle reversed, in a rough grip as if to strike something with it.

—When did I even do this?

"Just because you've been found out, don't stop raging, nya. If you make a big scene here, Old Man Wilhelm will cut you in half while Rem tries to stop him, nya?"

"I would prefer not to give such an order. We have spent several days together, and political issues would arise. Most of all, the room would get dirty."

Despite being the one almost subjected to disrespect, Crusch, looking up at him, remained composed. It seemed to show the breadth of her character, and it also seemed to mock Subaru's weakness, who could only entrust his anger to such a tiny piece of metal. All of it was terribly irritating.

"So, no matter what, you won't lend a hand, huh?"

Therefore, words of defiance preceded any apology. In response, Ferris looked displeased, and Wilhelm closed one eye, looking at his master. Crusch herself simply answered, "Yes," to his question.

"Your statements lack credibility, and any cooperation would not yield attractive benefits for us. —Therefore, we shall observe quietly."

"The Witch Cult will come. When they do, you'll be the one who killed those villagers. Your 'sloth' for knowing and doing nothing will kill that village."

"What an arrogant way to speak. In that case, just one thing."

Subaru spat out the moniker of the despicable man and glared at Crusch. Receiving his clouded gaze, Crusch stood up and looked directly into Subaru's eyes. Her clear, penetrating gaze gave Subaru an unpleasant sensation, as if she were peering into his very soul from deep within his eyes. And then,

"I can largely discern whether the person I'm facing is lying. I've always prided myself on never having been deceived by others."

Crusch suddenly began to speak of such a thing. She peered into the depths of Subaru's eyes, which changed color in suspicion.

"From that experience, I must say, you are not telling a 'lie'."

"Then…"

"You are stubbornly convinced that a delusion, which you yourself don't perceive as a lie, is the truth. —That is nothing short of madness, a madman, Natsuki Subaru."

Right here, right now, Subaru clearly understood that this negotiation had broken down. He couldn’t imagine achieving anything important with someone who would treat him as having the same nature as that madman, that hateful man. Most of all, his heart could no longer bear this level of humiliation.

Subaru gritted his teeth, and blood traced a path down his chin from where he'd bitten the corner of his lip. Seeing his pathetic state, Crusch said,

"Ferris, you should heal him."

"Don't bother!"

Subaru rejected it far faster than Ferris could move, turning and leaving his chair. His destination was the exit of the reception room, and,

"It's almost dinner time, aren't you joining us?"

"Eating with a madman sounds disgusting, doesn't it? I don't care if you're a man of culture or a kabuki actor, that's a bit too far-fetched."

Replying to her sarcasm with sarcasm, Subaru reached for the reception room door. Turning his head back briefly, he saw Rem, too, had straightened her posture and was bowing politely to them.

"It was a short time, but we apologize for any inconvenience. On behalf of our lord, Rem express our gratitude."

"Is that your… no, Lord Mathers' answer?"

"Yes. Rem has been instructed to respect Subaru's wishes in everything."

It was an incomprehensible exchange, and from Subaru's side, he couldn't see Crusch's face. However there was a noticeable sense of regret in her voice as she spoke to Rem, who was bidding farewell. It was a different emotion from the clear severance she had directed at Subaru, and even that felt somehow irritating.

Seeing Rem approach with quick steps, Subaru opened the door. It was someone else's house, but he knew his way around. The path from here to the entrance, and then out the gate to the noble district of the capital, was clear.

“Do you have a plan?”

“Just be a good queen, the type of dictator that leaves the weak to die.”

He spat out his reply to her final words as he closed the door roughly. And so, the negotiation with Crusch concluded in a disastrous fashion.

2

It was well past dusk when negotiations broke down and Subaru stepped into the noble district. The sun had already sunk below the western horizon, and the world was slowly being enveloped by the curtain of night. Crystal lamps illuminated the streets at regular intervals as Subaru, arms crossed, leaned against an iron fence, waiting for Rem to emerge.

“Damn it, everyone’s just…”

Subaru tapped his crossed arm with his fingers, letting out a frustrated groan. He replayed his recent exchange with Crusch, reliving the humiliation of being outmaneuvered. Swirling in his chest was the regret of failing to secure her cooperation, and “Those stubborn fools… Why do they stand in the way of what’s right…?”

A feeling akin to an unbearable hatred for those who obstructed his path.

Subaru’s plan to eradicate the Witch Cult shouldn’t be wrong. Therefore, their refusal to cooperate must be what’s wrong. They couldn’t understand because they hadn’t witnessed the tragedy, the mercilessness, the wicked man’s cackling laughter, they hadn’t heard it, hadn’t felt it firsthand. That those guys were pests, not worth keeping alive.

“That’s enough, it’s fine now. Forget about your failures and those heartless people. Focus on what’s right in front of you…”

It was better to move forward, even a little, than to wallow in self-reproach. Besides, asking Crusch for help was merely a secondary option for Subaru. There were other, more promising candidates for annihilating the Witch Cult. That is,

“Rem is sorry to keep you waiting, Subaru.”

Rem appeared, passing through the gate, as Subaru was tapping his foot in frustration. In her hands were the belongings she’d used during her stay at Crusch’s mansion for the past few days— Subaru had been waiting for her to retrieve them, as they couldn’t just leave without them. It wouldn’t look good to leave with such a grand statement only to return for forgotten items. In place of Subaru, who couldn’t go back, he greeted Rem, who was carrying the luggage in both arms.

“My bad. Hand over the luggage. I’ll carry some too.”

“It’s fine. It’s not heavy, and you’re still recovering, Subaru.”

However, she firmly refused Subaru’s offer. Normally, Subaru would have pressed the issue more, but with his mind occupied by other tasks, it wasn’t something he needed to insist on. He quickly lowered his outstretched hand and said,

“Speaking of which, Rem, you’re not against leaving Crusch’s place, are you?”

“No. If that’s what Subaru has decided.”

“Well, it’s a bit late now. After all that, there’s no way I can just leisurely continue my treatment. What with the favors and all, I feel bad for Emilia-tan.”

Emilia, who had offered something in return and entrusted them with Subaru’s treatment. There was some guilt for repeatedly disregarding her kindness in such sudden ways. Regarding that, once the Witch Cult matter was settled and he reconciled with her, they would need to talk properly. It would be okay; surely she’d talk with Subaru after he’d saved them from their predicament. For that to happen, Petelgeuse definitely had to die.

“Subaru. About the negotiations with Lady Crusch…”

"She just kept spouting off complicated nonsense about credibility and benefits. She has no heart. Who'd follow someone like that?"

Subaru cut off Rem, who seemed about to say something, and then abruptly ended the conversation. Perhaps out of consideration for Subaru's feelings, Rem didn't pursue the topic further. Instead,

"What will we do now? If what Subaru said is true, we don't have a moment to lose."

"If it's true?"

"—! We don't have a moment to lose. Lord Roswaal's mansion… should we go back?"

Subaru interjected at her hesitation. Rem ignored him, and Subaru put a hand to his chin, shaking his head. "No," he said,

"If we go back alone now, we won't be able to do much. We need to go back with sufficient forces to counter them. Even without that, we need an alternative plan."

If Subaru and Rem went back alone, it would just repeat the previous outcome. Alternatively, if they left earlier than before, there was a chance they could reach the mansion without encountering the cultists—

"Ultimately, my unease about confronting them with the forces remaining at the mansion hasn't changed."

The only ones who could fight were effectively Ram and Rem. Emilia, if she cooperated with Puck, might also be counted among the fighters, but the rest were just villagers and Subaru, amateurs. All the Witch Cultists led by Petelgeuse were armed, and their combat ability, while not on par with Rem's, was on a level that Subaru couldn't hope to contend with. The chances of the villagers and Subaru being included in the fighting force were very slim.

"We don't have enough numbers, enough fighting power. What in the world is Roswaal doing…?"

If he were there alone, he could potentially wipe out the Witch

Cult's forces if used effectively. Yet, in both the previous loops, his presence hadn't been confirmed. The same went for Emilia; where in that mansion were he and she—?

"Subaru, about Lord Roswaal… If he's following his schedule after leaving the royal capital, there's a very high possibility he's not at the mansion right now."

"—! You knew? That Roswaal not being at the mansion was part of the plan?"

"Lord Roswaal was supposed to visit Garfiel's… um, a prominent figure in the domain, and he might be staying there for several days."

"Damn it, what terrible timing! Is that why they can't deal with the attack?!"

Subaru tore at his hair and cursed at Rem's answer, which confirmed his fears. As expected, that perverted lord wasn't at the mansion during the crucial period. If that became the fatal cause of the domain being ravaged, then,

"It's not just an excuse for Crusch; it's a problem with the lord's competence…"

As Roswaal's image transformed from "perverted but competent" to "perverted and incompetent," a truly hopeless state, Subaru frantically racked his brain. This meant that since Roswaal, the greatest fighting force, couldn't be counted on, the situation of overwhelming lack of combat power, as envisioned earlier, continued. This would be the same even if Subaru and Rem returned safely, and so,

"As I thought, there's no option but to return with reinforcements."

He looked up and declared, then nodded to Rem, who was watching him with bated breath. The plan was set. And they had no time to spare. To surpass the results of the previous two attempts, they had to leave the royal capital by tomorrow at the latest. Considering that it was now early night, they had about half a day.

“Anyway, we have no choice but to find someone else who might cooperate. Rem, are you familiar with the geography of the royal capital?”

“Rem has visited several times, and Rem has spent a few days touring with Subaru, so Rem is reasonably familiar. …But who?”

“It’s obvious, isn’t it? —The most likely candidate, the righteous handsome guy.”

3

It was no exaggeration to say that Reinhard van Astrea was the ideal person for Subaru.

He possessed a martial prowess that could only be described as divinely favored, and handsome looks bestowed by the blessings of a goddess. His personality was gentle, treating everyone without discrimination, and above all, his sincerity was beyond doubt. Subaru was convinced that he would secure Reinhard’s unwavering cooperation, considering his character as an absolute symbol of justice who would never overlook even the slightest evil.

The wickedness of the Witch Cult, of Petelgeuse, debased human dignity. That was unforgivable, and what Subaru couldn’t forgive, Reinhard would surely never forgive either.

Furthermore, there was the calculation that Reinhard wouldn’t bring up clever reasons like mutual benefit, as Crusch and Felix had. It would be foolish to wield such self-serving interests in negotiation before someone as sincere as him, someone whose heart glowed with righteousness. If it was truly about justice, he wouldn’t allow any oversight that would sacrifice the citizens. Therefore, for Subaru, the breakdown in negotiations with Crusch wasn’t even a setback.

Reinhard would surely be on Subaru’s side. With his astonishing swordsmanship, he would surely cleave off Petelgeuse’s head.

Feeling his lips twist with anticipation and an even greater sadistic satisfaction, Subaru slowly walked towards him— Only to arrive at an deserted villa and learn the fact that his hero had “departed the royal capital two days ago”.

Night was falling. Roughly twelve hours remained until the time limit to leave the royal capital. Approximately four days until the mansion was attacked and that tragedy unfolded.

Dark clouds began to gather over this latest attempt to annihilate the Witch Cult.

Chapter 43:
A Pig's Desire

1

"You wouldn't think it to look at me, but I'm quite fond of books."

The girl, seated in a luxurious chair with one arm resting on the armrest, spoke these words.

In her other hand, she held an elaborately bound book, open and already past the halfway mark. The way her eyes scanned the pages was somehow different from her usual demeanor.

She wore a thin, negligee-like garment, with a white cloth of the same color draped over her shoulders. Her voluptuous curves were laid bare without a hint of modesty, yet the girl seemed oblivious to the man's gaze.

She was absorbed in the world of her book, so naturally it was hard to believe she was receiving a guest.

Slipping his sneakers across the carpeted floor, Subaru stood dumbfounded and at a loss.

He had been let inside, but the room's occupant showed no interest in him. When he tried to force the conversation, all he got was that initial remark.

Could it be that she was telling him to wait until she finished the book since she was almost done?

"Surely not…"

He tried to dismiss the thought that had bloomed in his mind, but watching her gracefully turn the pages, he couldn't quite shake his unease.

In fact, Subaru knew that she was the kind of person who might say something that unreasonable.

Her orange hair was like the reflected sun, and her crimson eyes like flames that could scorch everything they beheld. Her skin was a translucent white, her figure exquisitely curvaceous.

With her mouth closed, quietly gazing at her book, her beauty was beyond words.

If only her personality hadn’t been cultivated to irritate others, how unfairly would God have dealt with her?

The girl’s name was Priscilla Barielle.

She was one of the royal selection candidates, and the next person Subaru had come to ask for cooperation.

2

Subaru found out that Reinhard was absent from the royal capital while he was staying at a mansion he was using as his residence.

It was a villa used by the Astrea family, Reinhard’s birth family, and according to the elderly couple managing it:

“To prepare for the royal selection, Lady Felt and her family have returned to the main estate. We can communicate between here and the main estate with a dialogue mirror, but…”

The crucial path between the royal capital and the Astrea main estate reportedly takes nearly four days by dragon carriage. Since Reinhard left the capital two days ago, he hadn’t arrived at the main estate yet.

When Subaru asked for the location of the main estate, he learned it would take at least five days to reach Mezares territory. No matter what he did, Reinhard’s participation was hopeless.

“Both Roswaal and Reinhard… useless when it matters most…!”

Subaru bid farewell to the elderly couple and clutched his head once the villa was out of sight.

Their bad timing this time was uncanny. With the disappearance of the only candidates who would have unconditionally lent their strength, Subaru truly lost his composure.

It was painful that he hadn’t even considered Reinhard’s absence before being rejected. Moreover, with his departure two days prior, it was impossible to make it in time with ‘Return by Death’.

If he wanted Reinhard’s cooperation, it could only have happened in the first iteration, where he could have spent the two days before ‘Return by Death’. However that was impossible for Subaru, who had unknowingly wasted those days, unaware of the tragedy that awaited him.

“There’s no point in crying over spilled milk… Think, think, think, think, think, think, think, me… I don’t have enough power, numbers, or time. All I can do is wrack my brain.”

Subaru desperately racked his brain, trying to come up with a fallback plan.

With Crusch out and Reinhard out, Subaru, who knew few people in the royal capital, had almost no cards left to play.

If the reports of the Witch Cult’s appearance were questioned for their credibility, as Crusch had suggested, then storming the knight’s barracks seemed unlikely to yield cooperation.

Above all, Subaru was not in a position to directly negotiate with the Kingdom’s knights, and before that, it was expected that he was in very bad standing with them.

Subaru hadn’t forgotten the ugliness of those who cheered and egged on during his decisive battle with Julius at the training grounds, watching him get beaten to a pulp. He didn’t think such people would lend him a hand, nor did he want to ask them.

Having been abandoned by Crusch, whom he had believed to be sincerely supportive until then, suspicion swirled within Subaru towards others.

In fact, during the latter half of the incident at the training grounds, there were no knights cheering; rather, many frowned upon Julius’s actions. However, Subaru at that time couldn't have known that, nor would he have had the luxury to confirm it after his subsequent exchange with Emilia.

In Subaru's mind, the knights were still shameless wretches deserving of abuse. Even if he swallowed his pride and begged, he didn't believe they would genuinely listen to him.

Thus, Subaru had no choice but to pretend not to notice that his past actions were narrowing his options, and frantically devise a fallback plan.

If the Royal Knights couldn't be relied upon, Subaru knew only two people left in the capital. And with one of them, for the same reasons as the knights, bowing his head was absolutely impossible.

That left only one candidate.

"Subaru, what will we do now? Rem is…"

"It's fine. Leave it to me. Rem doesn't have to do anything. You don't have to. Just stay behind me, always."

Seeing Subaru lost in thought, Rem started to say something.

Interrupting her, Subaru continued to think, offering her a faint smile.

It was dangerous to put Rem in harm's way.

He knew she wouldn't hesitate to throw herself into danger, even sacrifice her life, to protect him.

Since that was the result of Subaru's actions, which had saved her and made her dependent on him, he had to accept it. Having accepted it, he absolutely had to avoid any outcome where she would be lost.

For that reason, Subaru stubbornly refused to let Rem step forward.

Subaru had to do it himself. Otherwise, he couldn't protect Rem, saving Emilia and the villagers would be meaningless, and his hatred for Petelgeuse wouldn't be satisfied—

"Huh, something feels…"

For a moment, Subaru touched his temple, feeling as if a very unsettling thought had crossed his mind.

It was as if he prioritized killing Petelgeuse over saving Emilia and the others. On top of that, it was crazy to think that Emilia and the others' lives had to be saved by his own hands.

It was a momentary lapse. As long as he was aware of it, Crusch's words were off the mark.

"It's okay. It's okay. I am, truly, doing the right thing."

Subaru affirmed himself, as if convincing himself, as if biting back the words, as if unseeing what he had seen, as if sealing off an abyss.

If he didn't affirm himself, he couldn't maintain his sanity.

3

The next morning, after spending a night at the inn, the two visited Priscilla's mansion on the outskirts of the royal capital.

It was the Barielle estate, located on the edge of the aristocratic quarter, and it was once the residence of Priscilla's deceased husband, an old man named Leip Barielle. He was apparently a figure of some standing in the royal palace, and his name was even known to Rem. However—

"At the very least, this can't be that dead geezer's taste."

Even from a distance, the mansion's splendor, reflecting the morning sun, was dazzling.

The roof must have been repainted very recently; its golden hue was so lavish it looked as if gold leaf had been scattered over it, shining with a fresh glow. Maintaining such brilliance would likely require frequent repainting.

Beyond the gate, the mansion walls were adorned with numerous elaborate decorations, no less extravagant than the roof. Every window facing them was an artistic piece with intricate designs carved into it.

Subaru had never actually seen anything like “nouveau riche” taste, but the visual assault strongly suggested this was exactly that kind of money being spent.

“Well, well, well, actually, this is Princess’s taste. They did it pretty much as a rush job, you know? She only came to the capital from her territory about a month ago. I sympathize with the guys who worked all night, but when you’re slapped in the face with a bag of gold coins, you can’t complain.”

“No, getting hit in the face with a bag of gold coins is pretty much the same as getting punched. Don’t try to gloss over it like it’s a bundle of cash.”

In some mysteries, people even fill socks with sand to make a blunt weapon. Being beaten to death with a bag full of gold coins? Cause of death: nouveau riche, indeed.

“Is that so?” Al tilted his head, scratching the back of his neck through a gap in his helmet. He was a mercenary hired by Priscilla, and apparently, like Subaru, a fellow countryman summoned from Earth to this other world.

His frequent use of modern slang and eccentric fashion sense made the consistency high, but given that he was summoned nearly twenty years ago, a generation gap was undeniable.

Anyway, disregarding Subaru’s inner thoughts, Al, who greeted them at the gate, yawned with an alarmingly unguarded demeanor.

“So, what brings you here so early in the morning? As you can see, I’m low blood pressure, so mornings are my absolute weakness, seriously. I’m neck and neck with the King of Carp.”

“Okay, I don’t need to hear about some super dangerous guy who shoots a Crusher Beam when he levels up. I know it’s rude to drop in unannounced, but I need to talk to your Princess."

"Princess?"

Al, who had been swaying bonelessly, straightened up and stared intently at Subaru and Rem.

Behind his black helmet, the sharpness of his gaze, which they couldn't discern, left them feeling uncomfortable. After watching Rem for quite some time, Al clicked a joint in his helmet.

"Ah, I've had my fill of maid-san content. Alright, I'll announce you."

"Surely this mansion has maids too. Not to mention the light reaction."

"Whoa, whoa, you don't understand Princess. Princess, who thinks she's the cutest, doesn't hire maids. The mansion is full of only shota butlers."

"Sounds awful to hear… My opinion of her is plummeting, but just announce us for now."

"Kay," Al mumbled in an unenthusiastic voice and disappeared into the mansion.

Rem, beside Subaru, silently stepped back, her expression remaining neutral. However, the way she tightly clutched Subaru's sleeve revealed an uncontainable anxiety. Even if Subaru wanted to comfort her, he was overwhelmed by an equal amount of anxiety, rendering him helpless.

Though he couldn't think of anyone else to rely on, it was remarkable how much anxiety their interaction with the attendant stirred, even before the main person appeared.

For Subaru, who had no time to be choosy, this was his last resort.

"Maybe coming at this hour was a mistake. With Priscilla, she'd probably just say something like, 'You're disturbing my precious sleep time—'"

"Hey! She'll see you!"

Subaru's words, spurred by anxiety, were cut off by Al's loud shout as he leaned halfway out of the mansion's entrance and waved.

After a moment of stunned silence, Subaru tentatively pushed open the gate and walked towards Al, who was beckoning him.

"You… you got an appointment so easily?"

"It might surprise you, but Princess is actually a morning person. On the other hand, she goes to bed super early. Anyway, this way, this way."

Al probably chuckled behind his helmet at Subaru's flustered reaction, then casually led them inside. Stepping into the mansion, it was clear that the interior, like the exterior, had undergone significant modifications.

The corridors, lined with an excessive number of artworks, were actually a hindrance to walking. The sight of everything, down to the lighting and picture frames, being adorned with precious metals, felt almost insane.

"At first, your eyes might sting, but you'll get used to it. It's better now because it's morning, but the corridors at night are seriously terrifying."

"Don't talk about scary night corridors like a child, you're a grown man."

"The statue's eyes glow at night, you know?"

"Then your master is crazy."

Looking up, Subaru saw that the eyes of the statues lining the corridor were indeed embedded with something like jewels. They would probably glow when it got dark. Madness.

Al tilted his head as if sensing something amiss with Subaru quietly overlooking these artistic sacrileges, but he didn't comment on it. Subaru tried to be considerate of Rem following behind him, but Rem, who was clutching his hem, had been frequently sniffling and kept her gaze fixed on his back, as if seeing something suspicious.

Then,

"Princess is on the top floor of this mansion. It's a luxury suite, taking up the entire floor."

"Sounds like a hotel suite somewhere. Can we go up?"

Subaru asked as they reached the stairs, and Al, pointing upwards with his thumb, nodded and said meaningfully, "Yes, go for it bro."

Subaru gave him a questioning look.

"No, no, no, I'm not being mean. Princess said she'll only see the 'brother'. The young lady will be escorted to a guest room."

"Do you think I'd entrust her to someone who just talked about 'maid-san content'…?"

"Don't worry, I'm also told to wait outside her room. It's frustrating, a real shame, but the young lady's escort is a shota butler."

Anticipating Subaru's concern, Al gracefully stepped aside, and a boy with blonde curly hair and blue eyes appeared from behind him. The boy, who could only be described as a beautiful youth, was clad in a small-sized butler uniform, exuding an endearing precociousness.

"Well then, make sure you don't offend the guest."

As Al casually patted his shoulder and gave instructions, the shota butler gracefully gestured, "This way," attempting to escort Rem. For a brief moment, Rem looked at Subaru with hesitation.

"Sorry, please wait until I finish talking. I'll take all the dangerous individuals, including him, upstairs, so you can relax and be at ease."

"Dangerous individual, that's harsh, brother. Though I am often called a suspicious person."

"Actually, 'suspicious person' is a lower rank than that."

Subaru gave Al a cold look as he blandly responded, then turned back to Rem and stroked her head to reassure her.

Rem, whose hair was ruffled by the stroking, narrowed her eyes playfully and softly said, "Understood," reluctantly accepting. Then,

"Please pay special attention to that person over there," she whispered, leaning slightly closer to Subaru.

Her eyes had briefly flickered towards Al, and he was likely the one she was warning him about. While Al's appearance was indeed among the most suspicious Subaru had encountered in this other world, this warning was questionable given that he somewhat trusted him. But,

"Mm, got it."

Naturally, Rem had a higher level of trustworthiness.

Considering the exchange at Crusch's mansion, he couldn't completely trust someone just because they were from the same world. He should approach this as if it were enemy territory.

After seeing Subaru nod, Rem, led by the shota butler, disappeared down the corridor. She left with a lingering reluctance towards Subaru.

"Whoo! You're good, bro. You're loved, aren't you?"

"If you're going to whistle, do it properly. Can't you, just like me?"

There was nothing colder than making whistling sound effects with your mouth.

This behavior, familiar to Subaru who had never been able to whistle despite countless attempts, made him feel a sense of kinship. Al's rather heavy reply, "Ah, my lips aren't exactly intact," stopped him short.

Anyway,

"It wouldn't be good to keep the young lady waiting, and it'd be even worse to keep Princess waiting too long and incur her wrath. Let's just head upstairs already."

"It helps that you're quick to understand… By the way, what's Priscilla's mood like?"

When attempting an important negotiation, it was best to avoid a situation where the other party was in a bad mood. While this might not significantly affect other people, with Priscilla, that invisible "mood" status seemed likely to have an exceptionally large impact.

Al tilted his head languidly and said, "Nghhh," to Subaru, who harbored such concerns.

"I don't think it's good or bad, but then again, that's not really reliable, is it? Princess's mood changes constantly, before, after, during, and all around a conversation. She doesn't have a fixed preferred topic either, so you'll just have to rely on your improvisation skills."

"A gamble then… my biggest weakness."

Receiving such encouraging advice from the chief attendant, Subaru ascended to the upper floor, his face clouded with anxiety.

Up the stairs, past a landing, was a door.

"Inside here is Princess's overly spacious private room. I haven't been called inside, so I'll wait here. Go on in."

Al said casually and sat down on a step in front of the door. As he did, he unstrapped the Guan dao from behind his back and placed it on his lap.

"Try not to upset her too much, alright? I don't want her throwing a tantrum, and when she's in a bad mood, she makes a ton of unreasonable demands."

"…Sorry, but I've come to make some pretty unreasonable demands myself."

Subaru responded curtly to Al’s plea, then took a breath and pushed open the door.

Then—

4

Now, time returns to the confrontation with Priscilla at the beginning.

Subaru, ushered in by Al, found her waiting in a spacious hall further inside. However, she was seated on a raised chair, elegantly reading a book, without so much as a glance in his direction.

Since he wasn’t kicked out, he assumed he was acknowledged as a guest, but her lack of action left him unsure how to proceed.

As he hesitated, time continued to tick away.

Deciding that hesitation only led to stagnation, Subaru steeled himself and took a breath, ready to jump into the topic.

“—Now then,”

The moment he was about to speak his first word, the crisp sound of a book closing echoed through the room.

Priscilla, closing the book in her hands, shut her eyes. She savored the lingering numbness in her palms from closing the book, enjoying the post-read silence for a while. Then,

“That was a boring story.”

“You seemed pretty engrossed in it for being boring…”

“When one reads, it’s proper to immerse oneself in the world of the book. Then, once the story is finished, one voices their thoughts. How could one call it boring without reading it?”

To Subaru’s weak retort, Priscilla responded unexpectedly like a proper book lover.

It seemed her claim of being a book lover was no lie. Declaring that she wouldn't criticize without reading, she carelessly tossed the finished book into the air.

"—Ah."

Before Subaru's stunned eyes, the moment the thrown book reached its apex, it was suddenly engulfed in intense heat and burst into flames.

Consumed by furious heat from cover to content, the book vanished instantly. After a blink, only black ashes fluttered down.

"Now then, you're taking away my precious morning reading time. —You've at least brought a story that will pique my interest more than that last book, haven't you?"

Priscilla laughed salaciously and wickedly, re-crossed her slender legs, and pointed a pale finger towards him.

Feeling as though heat was being pressed against his forehead from her fingertip, Subaru felt a cold sweat break out on his back as he said,

"—The candidate Emilia, and the current situation surrounding her, I need your help to break through it."

5

"Witch Cult, huh…"

Priscilla rested her head on her armrest, tapping her knee with the fingers of her other hand. Having finished recounting nearly the same details she'd shared with Crusch, she muttered softly, eyes closed, as if lost in thought. Subaru, noticing her apparent feelings about the Witch Cult, pressed on:

"If we leave them be, they'll harm the villagers. I want to defeat them before that happens. For that, I need your strength…"

"Heh, heh."

"—?"

As Subaru tried to extract agreement with a barrage of pleas, Priscilla's shoulders trembled, her face hidden as she looked down. "What's going on?" Subaru wondered, furrowing his brows, when she suddenly looked up with an explosive burst of laughter.

"Hahahahaha! Amusing! You are amusing, Subaru. Indeed, you've stirred my heart far more than that book just now. Such buffoonery, when taken this far, is a kind of exquisite skill."

She laughed, and laughed, mocking Subaru.

Subaru's instincts told him this was not a benevolent smile, but the kind a ferocious carnivore displays, the kind a cat shows when toying with a mouse before killing it.

"What's so funny?"

"The sheer absurdity of you not understanding. Good heavens, you! Do you not realize how incoherent your actions are right now?"

Priscilla threaded her fingers through her orange hair, twirling a lock around her index finger, as she asked with genuine amusement. Her condescending tone, as if she could see right through him, sounded familiar. It was the same tone Subaru had encountered countless times at Crusch's mansion, as if to say he was slow-witted.

Priscilla snorted at Subaru, whose gaze unconsciously hardened.

"Whether you have no one else to rely on or whatever, all you're doing is going around telling other factions about your own camp's weaknesses. 'Oh, we're short on strength for this and that reason…' You must have a remarkably blissful mind."

Priscilla tapped her temple with her finger, ridiculing Subaru's actions.

Her utterly contemptuous demeanor made Subaru's mind go blank. He hadn't expected such blatant mockery.

As Subaru remained silent, unable to process his emotions, Priscilla looked down at him.

“Being reckless is fine, but you lack thought. Far too much. You try to help, and you only drive them into a corner. Your actions are those of an incompetent busybody. You’re unmanageable; you’d be better off dead.”

Having said her piece, Priscilla stood from her chair, bent forward, and stared directly into Subaru’s wide eyes. “In fact,” she began,

“I might as well just lop off your head.”

The next moment, the fan drawn from Priscilla’s chest lightly touched Subaru’s neck.

He hadn’t seen her approach, hadn’t even seen her arm move— It was incredibly fast.

The sensation of the fan’s edge, warmed by Priscilla’s body heat, touched his right carotid artery. It wasn’t a sharp blade, yet it gave Subaru the illusion that his head would fall the moment she moved it.

As Subaru instinctively held his breath, Priscilla muttered boredly, “Can’t even follow with your eyes, can you?”

“To be foolish and dull is truly beyond saving… However, your loyalty, to act for your master even after such harsh treatment, is truly admirable.”

As she spoke, Priscilla removed the fan from Subaru’s neck, opened it to cover her mouth, and narrowed her eyes. “Therefore,” she continued,

“Even I can’t bring myself to simply laugh at your actions and send you away. So, I shall give you an opportunity.”

“…An, an opportunity?”

“Yes, an opportunity. A ‘chance’, as you call it.”

Perhaps she heard it from Al; Priscilla extended the folded fan towards him, speaking a modern term with an uncertain pronunciation. For some reason, Subaru couldn't evade it as it came straight and calmly towards him. When it pressed his forehead, his upper body swayed, and he landed on his backside.

Thus, their eye levels reversed. Subaru, now in a renversé position, looked up at Priscilla with surprise and protest, but—

"…"

"Lick it."

Before his eyes, Priscilla's bare foot, now removed from its shoe, was presented close-up.

Subaru didn't understand the meaning of her words, his gaze wandering between her face and the foot before him. Priscilla snorted at Subaru's lost expression, then spoke cruelly, as if lecturing a misbehaving child or tormenting a slave:

"Crawl on the floor, chew on the shame and humiliation, and like a pathetic, comical stray dog, lick my foot. —If you can do that, I will consider your proposal."

"Wha—?!"

"If you don't want to, that's fine, too, you know? If you prioritize your petty pride and abandon the master you wag your tail for, that's fine. That, too, would bring me pleasure."

Priscilla covered her mouth and sneered, implying she'd enjoy it either way.

Priscilla's utterly malicious attitude made Subaru's guts boil with rage. But he managed to restrain himself from raising his voice and acting on his emotions at the last moment.

If he let his emotions take over now, the negotiation would collapse.

Above all, there was no denying that he had coaxed a willingness to compromise from her.

He looked at the foot still extended before him and Priscilla’s face, which mocked him.

Closing his eyes, he saw the silver-haired girl and the pink-haired maid. Then, the faces of the village children and adults appeared one after another, and the boiling magma slowly began to subside.

Then,

“I… I underst…and.”

Swallowing his humiliation, Subaru took Priscilla’s foot in his hand.

Compared to the painful deaths Emilia and the villagers would suffer, what was the humiliation Subaru endured here? If he could avoid that future and reach the world they deserved, he didn’t care if he had to become a dog or anything else.

His trembling lips neared the white instep, about to touch its smooth skin—just before,

“Ah, you really have—degenerated into such a boring man.”

His nose was violently kicked, and Subaru was lightly sent flying through the air.

Spinning, his vision blurring, Subaru didn’t understand what was happening. A tremendous impact shook his head, disorienting him, and the sensation of floating was immediately cut short by the feeling of hitting something hard all over his body.

After a moment of silence, he finally realized he was sprawled on the ground. A viscous liquid dripped copiously from his nostrils.

“What you possess is neither loyalty nor devotion. It is a filthier, dog-like dependence and pig-like desire. You are a lazy pig, always wanting. A pig’s desires are the most hideous.”

A constant ringing in his ears and nausea bounced wildly inside his skull.

Priscilla’s voice reached him from somewhere, but the content didn’t register in his mind.

Only,

“Even if you repel the Witch Cult, a faction that harbors a lowlife like you, I will crush it when it’s exhausted. Your imprudent actions have made me decide so.”

Small hands gripped his chest, pulling him up roughly.

More blood flowed from Subaru’s nose as he was forced upright, and more merciless words were hurled at him as he choked for breath.

“—Be proud. You are the one who will lead that woman, Emilia, to ruin.”

He was shoved hard, and Subaru’s body slid across the floor, reaching the entrance door. A trail of blood marks remained where he had rolled, but Priscilla’s expression seemed to say that seeing Subaru himself was more unpleasant than the stains.

“—Aldebaran!”

When Priscilla cried out sharply, the only door connecting to the outside opened from the other side.

Drawn by her call, the figure in the jet-black helmet appeared.

He looked around the room, and upon seeing Subaru lying bloody by the door, he put his single arm to his head.

“Whoa, whoa, what’s going on here…?”

“Throw out that unpleasant rag. If you care, you can even cut him down.”

“Of course I care, about various things… Come on, let’s go, brother.”

Without protesting his enraged master, Al grabbed Subaru’s body, easily lifted him with one hand, and hoisted him onto his shoulder.

“Don’t get so angry, Princess. Your cute face will lose its value with that ferocity.”

“If you don’t want your already ruined face to be further ruined, take him away quickly. I won’t say it twice, Aldebaran.”

“Stop calling me by that name.”

Al said dismissively, then left the room with Subaru on his shoulder.

Quietly closing the door, Al quickly began to descend the stairs.

“For now, it’s best to get out of here fast. Knowing Princess, she might change her mind and say to lop off your head. Get out before you get chopped.”

“Oh… oh…?”

“This is no good. I’ll go get your lady friend, then you’re on your own.”

Seeing Subaru still dazed, Al sighed, shrugging his one-armed shoulder, and then descended the stairs even faster, practically flying down.

6

“Subaru!”

Rem’s face instantly blanched, and she rushed over to Subaru, who was slumped against the gate. She touched Subaru, who was limp and unresponsive, checking the extent of his injuries, and began chanting healing magic, “Water mana…”

“What happened?” she asked the suspicious one-armed man standing beside her, as a faint light touched Subaru’s face.

Receiving her question, Al tapped the ground with his toe, looking sheepish.

“Ah, well, you see. It seems he pissed off our Princess. I told him to be careful not to… but I guess it’s impossible to perfectly predict a cat’s mood as a human.”

Although he looked sheepish, Al’s tone held no trace of guilt. He sympathized with Subaru, but felt no remorse for his master’s violent outburst. Rem, realizing this, was stunned and about to protest, but—

“—Rem, it’s fine.”

“Subaru. You are conscious? Are you alright?”

As the concussion subsided, Subaru’s consciousness began to clear, and he spoke to Rem. Her face brightened at this, and she closed her eyes to concentrate further.

“Subaru is truly someone Rem can’t take my eyes off of. Rem only left you alone for about an hour, and you come back with injuries like this.”

“I… I didn’t mean for this to happen…”

As his blood circulation began to normalize, blood started flowing from his nostrils again. He quickly put a hand up to catch the dripping blood, and Rem gently placed a handkerchief she pulled from her pocket to his face.

“Hold this. Once the wound heals, the bleeding will stop after it’s flowed out completely.”

“—Okay.”

Subaru held his nose as Rem instructed, accepting the healing while feeling a gentle warmth seep in.

Seeing this, Al commented, “Looks like he’ll be fine,” and then,

“No point in sticking around, so I’m heading back too. I don’t know what you two talked about, but it looks like it didn’t go well. If I’m too slow getting back, Princess might seriously start talking about cutting off his head or something.”

“Cut Subaru…?!”

“Don’t make such a scary face, miss! I said she might start talking about it! So get out of here before she says it. I don’t want to do something like that either.”

Al waved his single hand dismissively at Rem’s overreaction, then relaxed his shoulders and took a sloppy step back.

“Alright, take care of yourself, brother. And you too, miss… Ah, I think you said Ram? Take care.”

“—Ram is Sister’s name. My name is Rem, Sir Al.”

Rem introduced herself in a light tone as Al turned to leave.

Suddenly, Al stopped.

He looked slightly upwards, then slowly turned back towards them.

“Don’t be stupid. It’s Ram, isn’t it?”

“It’s Rem… Excuse me, Lord Al, have you met Sister somewhere?”

Rem asked, mistaking her twin sister for herself, but Al gave no answer.

He touched the helmet covering his head with his one arm and muttered, “What’s going on…?”

“The young lady is Rem… and your older sister is Ram?”

“Yes, that’s right.”

“I know this is a strange thing to ask, but… is the young lady’s sister alive?”

“…? Rem doesn’t understand the intent of your question, but Sister is, of course, alive.”

The moment Rem responded, Subaru, who had been silently listening to their conversation, felt goosebumps prickle his skin. Surprised by this strange reaction, Subaru couldn’t help but shiver.

Then,

“—You’re not kidding, are you?”

Low, cold, the words struck his eardrums with a heavy resonance.

It was a whisper squeezed from Al’s throat as he looked down, touching his forehead through his helmet.

At the same time, Subaru realized that the chill that had seized his skin was caused by an unknown, ominous aura emanating from Al.

His instincts screamed a warning: Do not be here. Rem seemed to feel the same way.

“Subaru, can you stand if Rem lends you her shoulder?”

Rem, interrupting the treatment, asked, still hunched over, her guard clearly raised.

Subaru nodded, pulling his chin in, and waited for Rem to move. He had to be taken out of here when she made her escape.

However, their caution was rendered baseless by—

“Relax, I’m not going to do anything.”

Al shook his head, suppressing the ominous aura he had been emitting.

The sudden disappearance of the chill made Subaru realize he had forgotten to breathe. Rem, too, visibly relaxed her neutral expression.

Al, the cause of their reactions, then said,

“Sorry to break the tension, but get going. I think you understand now, but I don’t seem to be in a very good mood either.”

“—Understood. Please tell her thank you for her time.”

“Aye, got it. Be careful.”

Exchanging somewhat cold pleasantries, Rem lent Subaru her shoulder, and they began to walk. Leaning his weight on her small frame, Subaru moved away from the Barielle mansion. They went down the slope, putting distance between themselves and the mansion gate. Suddenly, Subaru glanced back for a moment.

—Al was still staring intently at them, at Subaru’s back.

7

“Don’t screw with me. Is that… is this really happening? It makes me sick.”

The muffled murmur echoed only within the black helmet.

Chapter 44:
Departure from the Royal Capital and Reunion

1

Negotiations with Priscilla Barielle had collapsed, and now, truly, all paths were closed off.

Crusch and Priscilla had flat-out refused him, and Felt, who had Reinhard on her side, was nowhere to be found. Bringing up the matter with Julius's camp, who could only be an enemy, was out of the question. Subaru, with his bad reputation among the knights, had even thrown away any right to appeal to the authorities.

In other words,

"So, securing combat power, which was my immediate goal, is impossible for me…"

Overwhelmed by despair and powerlessness, Subaru touched his nose and muttered.

His nose, which Priscilla had kicked in, was somehow reattached, and the remnants of the nosebleed were gone; it was practically back to normal. However, Rem, who had treated him, warned Subaru to "please rest" when he tried to move immediately, so he was currently staying put.

They had moved from the noble district and were now in the commercial area of the capital's lower city.

Just like the main thoroughfare, crowds of people bustled about today, and Subaru watched the passing human tide from inside a snack shop.

He silently ate a meal resembling pork and lettuce sandwiched between bread-like food, satisfying his hunger alone.

The morning had been thoroughly wasted at Priscilla's mansion, and it was probably around noon now. He had only about seven or eight hours left until his self-imposed deadline to leave the capital, so his time was running out.

Despite this, the situation wasn't just stagnating; it was actively getting worse.

Considering that straightforward solutions had been shut down, one could argue that it had at least narrowed down his options, but…

"I'm not so optimistic as to mistake this for progress. Damn it, that arrogant woman… Forgetting the favor I did her…"

Subaru twisted the corner of his lips and spat out his bitterness, bringing up how he had helped her when she was surrounded by ruffians during their first meeting.

It was true that she had acted as if she owed him nothing, but he hadn't expected her to refuse even someone desperately pleading for help like him.

On top of that, she had kicked Subaru, insulted him with some inexplicable logic similar to Crusch's, and then unceremoniously thrown him out. Al too. His heartlessness, not saying a word about his master's outrageous behavior. What good was a fellow countryman like that? Useless.

"To hell with all of them. They don't know anything, they don't understand anything… They can't protect anything, but they keep getting in my way…!"

He gnashed his teeth, irritably tearing at the bread and meat.

His mouth, roughly chewing, was filled with anger and humiliation; he couldn't taste anything.

He needed to think of a second-best plan, a next step, but Subaru's mind was filled only with bitter complaints and curses directed at the people he had encountered so far.

These fools spouted nonsense, hindering Subaru's path as he tried to protect and save everyone, effectively aiding the wicked Petelgeuse.

“I wish everyone who gets in my way would just d—”

“Rem is sorry to keep you waiting, Subaru.”

Subaru’s dangerous remark was cut off by a blue-haired girl whose apron dress swayed—Rem.

She sat in the empty chair across from Subaru.

“You have sauce on you, Subaru.”

She reached out and gently wiped the corner of Subaru’s mouth with a cloth in her hand.

Subaru, letting her do as she pleased, silently looked at Rem, requesting a report. There was, of course, a reason why she had separated from Subaru and acted independently.

That was:

“Rem reported to the Knight’s Headquarters that the Witch Cult’s activities would take place. Rem mentioned Lord Roswaal’s name, so Rem wasn’t turned away at the gate, but…”

Subaru bit his lip at her weakening tone toward the end of her sentence.

Instead of Subaru, who wouldn’t be well-received by the knights, Rem had been sent to the Knight’s Headquarters as Roswaal’s envoy.

He had thought that if she suggested the Witch Cult’s existence, perhaps they could get the knights to move, but…

“It didn’t go well, huh?”

“…It seems the Knight’s Headquarters has received many similar reports. The Witch Cult’s background is unclear, so any suspicious reports are immediately forwarded up the chain.”

“Ah, I see. So it’s like how witches were treated back in the days of witch trials… If that’s what they’re using as a cover, it’s not funny.”

For every person who implicitly feared the Witch Cult, a phantom Witch Cult activity was constructed.

If that fear was drawn up and collected by the Knight's Headquarters, and as a result, the value of real information became diluted and disappeared, how utterly counterproductive was that?

Rem's shoulders drooped apologetically, but he had no intention of blaming her.

This was not Rem's fault; the cause lay in the knights' negligence and the Witch Cult's depravity. The knights should meticulously scrutinize the veracity of incoming information, and the Witch Cult's very existence was nothing but harmful. Subaru gritted his teeth at these inconveniences and made a decision.

"If gathering forces is impossible… it's frustrating, but there's no other choice."

"What will you do?"

"It's decided. We're going back to the mansion. We'll return and get Emilia and Ram out. Either to the capital or wherever Roswaal has gone. In any case, that place is dangerous."

Petelgeuse's cackle echoed in his mind, and Subaru clenched his fists in vexation.

Even if he wanted to smash that skeletal face, his hands couldn't reach that far. He vaguely knew their hiding place. Still, he didn't have enough forces even for a surprise attack, and even if he tried with their current strength—Rem would be on the front lines.

He didn't want that.

He couldn't bear that.

It was absolutely out of the question for Rem to be hurt, or even worse, put in a life-threatening situation, because of Subaru's actions or the results of his thoughts.

If he couldn't prepare any combat power other than Rem to fight

Petelgeuse, then he shouldn't even consider confronting them.

His guts were still churning with murderous intent, and an endless torrent of hateful curses resonated continuously within his skull. Resonating. But…

"Still a day and a half— If we can leave the capital now, we can reach the mansion by the third day. If so, there should be time to get Emilia and the others out."

Recalling the first iteration, Subaru repeatedly verified the time limit.

Three days spent idly at Crusch's mansion. Hearing that there was a shadow of unease in Roswaal's territory, he spent one day with Rem, and then another half day with Otto, whom they picked up in a village along the way. After that, they traveled to the location on foot, greeting the sunrise of the fifth day with slaughter.

In other words, if they could arrive on the third day, there was still leeway.

"The second time… Damn it! How many days was I out of my mind?!"

On the other hand, the second iteration held no value in organizing the timeline.

Immediately after returning, Subaru, whose mind had become abnormal, remembered nothing of the journey back to the mansion with Rem. How many days had Rem spent at Crusch's mansion, carrying the deranged Subaru, and when had they fallen into Petelgeuse's hands?

In any case,

"Time for thinking is precious. Rem, let's arrange for a dragon carriage. This time we can't rely on Crusch or anyone… So, what should we do?"

"Dragon carriage arrangements usually require using specialized stores. However, the use of dragon carriages is quite busy right now, so it's hard to say if we can arrange one immediately."

Receiving Rem's somewhat uncertain reply, Subaru wolfed down the rest of his meal and stood up, urging her, "Anyway, let's just go."

Ideally, they could rent a fast, long-distance dragon carriage. At worst, they would have to consider the method from the first world, swapping carriages along the way.

Grabbing his belongings, and growing increasingly exasperated with a reality where nothing went his way, Subaru quickened his pace, as if grudging every second.

Behind him, Rem, whose stride didn't match his, struggled to keep up. Subaru, without even a glance, never noticed.

2

"Today, the main street feels particularly charged with a sense of danger," Subaru remarked, leaning his back against a familiar wall, noticing the different atmosphere of the passing crowd.

It was a view he'd only experienced for a few days and hours combined, but even with such limited exposure, the difference was palpable to Subaru— The shopping street today had a strong sense of unease.

That was because,

"Word of the Royal Selection has spread, and people are finally gathering from all over," Kadomon, the scar-faced fruit seller who had become quite familiar, replied with a sigh, resting his brawny arms on the counter and narrowing his eyes in boredom.

He casually glanced at Subaru, who had stopped in front of his shop as if it were the most natural thing in the world.

"When changes happen in the capital and the clientele changes, what sells also changes. If you just stand there, you'll scare away the busy season that's finally coming to my shop, so beat it."

"Even if the capital and the customer base change, the owner's face hasn't, so this shop's sales won't change either. More importantly, the number of people has increased, hasn't it?"

Subaru retorted with sharp sarcasm to Kadomon's complaint, then added a question. The shop owner made an especially displeased face but touched the white scar on his face with a finger and replied, "Yeah."

"A lot of traveling merchants from outside have come in. Well, timing is key for business opportunities. If you join late, there's less profit. The shrewd ones probably got in quickly, set up their goods, and are already raking in money."

"I wonder what a shop owner with no business sense, who still arranges unsellable appa in front of his shop, is thinking with such a big chance right before his eyes. Ah, I just don't know."

"Do you have a grudge against my shop? Do you die if you don't talk trash when you come here?"

Subaru threw out a slightly duller barb than usual and then looked at the street again.

Indeed, just as Kadomon said, within his sight, there seemed to be more vendors looking for places to display their wares than customers rushing to buy products.

Their feet naturally gravitated towards the area of the main street where street vendors set up, while others, pulling dragon carriages, headed towards the noble district.

"I understand peddlers setting up stalls, but what's with the dragon carriages heading to the upper district?"

"They probably went to directly unload goods to the nobles up there. If they do it right, they can make more profit than going through a merchant guild, and the important people will remember their faces. If they mess up, they'll be marked, and there's a chance they won't be able to come back down, though."

Kadomon said with a disinterested tone, as if he wasn't interested in other people's money-making schemes. Subaru gave him a perfunctory reply, his eyes still fixed on the passing dragon carriages.

Could he at least manage to borrow just one of them? In the worst-case scenario, if a dragon carriage couldn't be arranged, he would have to consider stealing one.

If it was a problem that money could solve, he should do it because human lives were more valuable. If it became a problem that money couldn't solve, then he would still commit a minor crime under the pretext of saving lives.

It was a completely different matter than stealing a bicycle from a parking lot, but Subaru resigned himself to it as unavoidable. And as he watched the dragon carriages, Kadomon seemed to think Subaru was interested in their cargo.

"With more people coming because of the Royal Selection, both demand and supply are increasing. Right now, what's especially valuable are iron products, and weapons like swords and spears, and armor. They're being bought up not only from outside but also from shops that were already established in the capital."

"Iron and weapons… I think I've heard that before."

He touched his chin, trying to recall where, and remembered it was a scene from a conversation with Otto in the first world.

Otto, who had a large amount of oil, was faced with the decision of whether to hang himself because iron products and the like were selling for high prices in the capital, and he had drowned himself in alcohol.

Combined with Kadomon's story, it seemed Otto's desperate situation had been set in stone even at this point.

Even so,

"Swords and armor. If they're collecting iron, are they doing something related to that? Are the people collecting it planning a war?"

"Well, they're fortifying their defenses… but it's a bit odd. If that were the reason, they'd usually do it in their own territory. If they gather too much in the temporary residence of the capital, they'll get bogged down and it'll be troublesome."

"From the way you're talking, you know the name of the person collecting them?"

Subaru casually asked, playing along with Kadomon's conversation. Kadomon crossed his arms, nodded wisely, and said, "Yes."

"It's Duchess Crusch Karsten. In other words, one of the Royal Selection candidates."

"Crusch…?"

A name much closer than he expected came up, and Subaru furrowed his brows, showing his surprise. On reflection, there were indeed points that matched up.

Crusch had received many visitors daily. Subaru had assumed this was part of diplomacy to secure connections with influential people, but in reality, there might have also been negotiations with merchants who brought in such goods.

In fact, as far as Subaru knew, the last person Crusch had met was a merchant deeply involved in the capital's economy, a man named Russell.

Suddenly, he felt like he wanted to hear more details, but a contradictory feeling that he shouldn't waste his thoughts on such unnecessary things made him hesitate.

While he was doing that,

"Hey, isn't that your companion waving over there?"

Following Kadomon's finger pointing across the street, Subaru turned his head to see Rem jogging towards them, waving. When she reached Subaru, her shoulders bounced, and her expression brightened just enough for someone familiar to notice.

“Found one! Somehow, Rem thinks we can rent a dragon carriage for long-distance travel.”

“Really? That’s great news. I didn’t have high hopes given how busy that shop was earlier…”

The dragon carriage rental shop was extremely busy, and negotiations had been difficult, just as Rem had worried. Judging that he couldn’t do much by being there, Subaru had left the negotiations to Rem and visited Kadomon to organize his thoughts while chatting.

Rem, who seemed to have successfully managed the subsequent negotiations, smiled faintly with a hint of pride.

“Yes. She was quite stubborn, but we agreed to pay a little more. Rem apologizes for making a decision on her own and using some of the travel money.”

“No, that was a great decision. At this point, we shouldn’t be stingy with money for our objective.”

Apparently, the system was that the shop staff would bring the dragon carriage to the capital’s entrance.

She had told them to meet immediately, so it would be hectic, but they would start moving right away.

“Well, that’s how it is. It was a short time, but thanks for everything, old man.”

“Leaving the capital, are you? You, I don’t mind, but it’s a shame about the young lady.”

Kadomon’s harsh words concealed genuine regret, likely because Rem had filled in for him at the shop several times, each time achieving a dramatic increase in sales.

The reason he didn’t simply chase away Subaru, who was arrogant and rude, was largely due to his good nature and Rem’s contributions. In any case, “Thank you for everything, Sir Kadomon. Rem will definitely stop by again when Rem visits the capital.”

“Thanks for being so polite. … Truly, I’m sorry for being so rude with my words, even though you must be the attendant of a highly-ranked person.”

“No. Rem, now, is Subaru’s before she is Lord Roswaal’s attendant. Please continue as before.”

“…I hate you even more now, I do.”

Kadomon made a big grimace at Rem’s reply, his scar crinkling, and he held out a paper bag to Rem. Subaru peered into the bag from beside Rem as she accepted it; it contained a variety of colorful fruits.

“It’s a token of appreciation for your sales contribution and patronage. Be careful on your journey.”

“…Old man. You’ll never make sales if you keep doing things like this. Your wife and daughter will lose patience with you.”

“I didn’t give them to you, I gave them to Rem! Now get going!”

Chased away by his rough kindness, Subaru and Rem hastily left the spot.

Until the very end, his interactions with Kadomon were free of any lingering resentment or ill feelings. It was just enough to save his heart a little—and Subaru tightened his slackening cheeks.

Laughing and being at peace were not necessary now.

After everything was settled, he would laugh without needing to hold back.

For that, such emotions were not needed now.

They were not needed.

3

The ground dragon pulling the carriage Rem rented was exceptionally large, even among the ground dragons Subaru had seen, and it thundered across the grasslands with powerful hind legs.

Its leg strength kicked up so much dust that it obscured their vision for a while. Though their speed increased, their view remained hazy. Sitting next to Rem on the driver's seat, Subaru squinted through the dust.

"It's fast… which is good, but can't we do something about this?"

"This ground dragon is originally meant for transporting heavy cargo. So, its running style doesn't consider passengers, and they said it can't run quietly even when specializing in fast travel."

"We were lucky to rent it, and it can run without rest, so I guess we can't complain… Still, this dust is rough. Isn't there anything we can do?"

Teary-eyed, he fumbled through his luggage, but the results were disappointing.

Resigned, he wrapped a thin towel around his mouth as a makeshift dust mask, and did the same for Rem, who was holding the reins.

"Okay, that's done. This should keep our mouths from getting gritty, and it's a bit better, right?"

"Yes. As for our vision, we'll just have to put up with it."

With their mouths covered, they looked like gangsters from some bygone era, but they didn't have the luxury to joke about it now.

Once the hindrance to observing their journey lessened, Subaru's thoughts naturally delved deep. As far as the eye could see, grasslands stretched out, and in this verdant world, changes rarely occurred. The only things that shifted were the positions of clouds in the sky and the slow but steady movement of the sun—which signified the passage of time, slowly burning Subaru's heart.

Their time management should be quite advantageous.

The day and a half spent in the capital was, frankly, unproductive and wasted time, but departing with the dragon carriage on the second day was a huge benefit.

Even if they considered the setting sun's position as their starting point, they would likely reach the mansion by tomorrow morning after half a day's ride on the highway. Arriving by the morning of the third day meant they would arrive half a day earlier than when he left Crusch's mansion in the first world.

There should be plenty of time to get Emilia and the others out of the mansion and escape.

If there was a problem—

"The possibility of encountering the Witch Cult again, like last time…"

His memories of the second world were unclear, but if the cave he woke up in was their hideout, and it was on the way to the mansion, then the encounter must have happened during their return trip.

The two of them, traveling back in a dragon carriage or something, were attacked by the Witch Cult, and as a result, Subaru was captured, and Rem, who came to rescue him, was killed—that seemed natural.

After that, even though he didn't feel it directly, he estimated it must have taken about a day or so for Subaru to break free from his restraints and escape the cave.

"So, they've been lurking around the mansion for a few days now."

He couldn't pinpoint the exact date.

If the timeline of the second iteration was the same as the first, the tragedy at the mansion and village would occur on the morning of the fifth day. If he calculated that Subaru was held captive for about a day and a half, then the encounter with them would be between the third and fourth days. In other words, "Since we're scheduled to arrive tomorrow morning, the possibility of an encounter hasn't disappeared…!"

A guttural grind, a familiar sound, brought blood to his teeth.

If they had departed yesterday, this concern would have been greatly alleviated. But with their current travel time, they were pushing dangerously close to the risk zone. He couldn't be optimistic.

"…"

Subaru subtly glanced sideways at Rem, who was focused on driving, holding the reins.

If they were to encounter the Witch Cult in battle, he would inevitably have to rely on Rem again. Or perhaps if he warned her beforehand about the possibility of encountering the Witch Cult and urged her to be cautious, they might avoid repeating the same mistake.

When he tried to vocalize it, Subaru realized he couldn't speak.

It wasn't the terrifying fear of a black mist appearing and the excruciating pain of his heart being crushed in a frozen world. There was certainly fear of that pain. Every time he remembered it, every time he experienced it, the pain was so piercing he wondered if his hair would turn completely white. It was unbearable to endure while sane. Even when he used it, it was only possible because of some inexplicable emotional explosion. If he were told to do it again, he would shake his head.

However, it wasn't that pain that made Subaru hesitate to talk about the Witch Cult now.

—Could it be?

Would Rem really believe him?

"—!"

Just thinking about it sent a shiver down his spine, and Subaru instinctively hugged his shoulders as if he couldn’t bear it.

His heart hammered absurdly fast, and a wave of nausea rose, pressing against his organs. The stress of his extreme mental state and the fatigue of his sleepless body were eating away at Subaru’s willpower and physical strength.

For Subaru right now, Rem was the most trustworthy person in the world.

Abandoned even by Emilia, and successively treated dismissively by Crusch and Priscilla, Subaru’s mind had fallen into a world of suspicion, unable to trust anything.

He couldn’t imagine a situation where his trust in Crusch and Priscilla would be restored, and even with Emilia, he couldn’t picture them genuinely laughing and talking until Petelgeuse was killed and their safety secured.

That’s why Subaru only had Rem now.

She was the only one he could fully entrust everything to, feel at ease with, and call a companion.

What if he confided in her about the Witch Cult and her expression clouded with doubt? —The thought alone was terrifying.

“Is this really the time to be a coward…?”

He tried to say it aloud to drive away his fear, but the sound was more like a breath than a voice. The volume, barely a whisper, was drowned out by the ground dragon’s rumble, not even reaching himself.

Still, he had to tell her.

As long as there was a possibility of encountering the Witch Cult, not knowing would just mean repeating the last time. Subaru had lost his life and returned to seize the best outcome.

So—

“Re-Rem… um, I need to talk about something—”

“Subaru—there are people gathered ahead.”

However, his voice of strained determination was cut off by Rem’s sharp voice.

“Huh?” Subaru questioned, following her gaze, and saw several foreign objects appearing on the road ahead where the ground dragon was running.

—Could it be a Witch Cult ambush?!

Subaru was so surprised, his heart nearly leaped out of his mouth at the too-early development, but as the shadows gradually drew closer, their true nature, now taking on definite outlines, became clear.

It was—

“—Hey! Could you stop the ground dragon for a bit? Shall we exchange some information?!”

Waving both hands in the middle of the road and shouting loudly, calling for them to stop—it was Otto, the merchant.

4

“Ah, I’m sorry. Thank you for stopping. At this time of year, there are many people heading towards the capital, but not so many coming from the capital. I was just hoping to talk to someone like you.”

The young man —Otto— said with a smile, greeting the two who had stopped their dragon carriage.

He wasn’t drunk or looking like he despaired of the world. Of course, he showed no signs of injury; it was clear that Otto the merchant was alive and well.

Leaving him behind in the first world, despite his desperate pleas, had been a slight thorn in Subaru’s heart. However, considering the horrific state of the village afterward, leaving him behind might have actually been a fortunate decision for Otto.

Anyway,

“Are all the people gathered here traveling merchants or something?”

“Indeed, they are traveling merchants. Everyone here is just eager to make a killing in the capital, which is the center of attention right now.”

Otto rubbed his hands together and offered an ingratiating smile as Subaru looked past him and asked.

Behind Otto, several dragon carriages were parked by the side of the road, and men, presumably their owners, were gathered in a group. There were around ten of them, ranging in age from young like Otto to about forty. Among them was the thin man who had introduced Otto to Subaru in the first world.

As soon as they saw Otto and Subaru finish their greetings, they slowly began to gather around the two, introducing themselves one by one and starting conversations.

The topics mainly revolved around the current state of the capital, changes before and after the Royal Selection, and fluctuations in currency value— All points that naturally concerned merchants.

Honestly, Subaru begrudged the time spent stopping to talk, but as soon as he confirmed Otto’s presence, the option of ignoring him and passing by disappeared.

Fortunately, he had confirmed Otto’s safety (which was natural in the third iteration), so he intended to leave as soon as the conversation reached a lull.

“Are you planning to depart now? It’s already night; won’t it be dangerous? We’re planning to camp here tonight, so… if you’d like, you could join us.”

Just as the one-sided “information extraction” masquerading as an exchange ended, Otto stopped Subaru and Rem, who were about to leave.

As he said, the last vestiges of the sun were already fading from the sky, and night was beginning to fall over the grasslands from beyond the orange-tinted horizon.

Soon, the Lifaus Highway would be completely swallowed by night, and visibility would rely solely on the light produced by crystal lamps.

The gathered merchants had already begun setting up their camp, and preparations for a fire were already made in the center of the area where the dragon carriages were parked.

They probably judged that wild dogs or bandits that might appear on the road would be less likely to attack if such a large group was together. While Subaru admired the merchants' wisdom, he begrudged even that safe time now.

"Don't say that, Otto. Aren't you just trying to reduce your excess oil stock because you missed the season? Don't act all charitable!"

Just as Subaru was about to refuse, a voice jeered at him. Laughter erupted from behind, and Otto, who was the target, made a sour face.

"That's not my intention at all. It's purely out of goodwill. Well, it's not that I don't have any desire for you to bring some oil for meals or lanterns, if you happen to have any…"

"Is something wrong with the oil?"

Rem asked Otto, who slumped his shoulders and spoke as if defeated. He raised his eyebrows at her question, then, after a rather affected shrug, replied,

"Well, you see. It seems I made a blunder with this business opportunity. I'm stuck with a large quantity of oil that's of questionable value as merchandise. It was supposed to fetch a lot of money in Gusteko to the north… but now, at this time in Lugunica, I wonder how much of my loss I can recover."

His distressed demeanor was probably a ploy to elicit sympathy.

He probably wasn't underestimating them as people who would fall for such a trick, but it was clear he hoped to sell the oil at a decent price if it worked out—that level of calculation was transparent.

Rem seemed to understand this as well. Though sympathetic, she didn't seem to have any further thoughts, merely offering a perfunctory "Is that so? That's tough."

"Even if I go to the capital, I don't know if I can get rid of all this oil. If I have to sell it for next to nothing, I'll be bankrupt. —Bankrupt, I tell you."

He seemed to have said it twice because it was important, but Subaru didn't possess the kind of generous goodwill that would make him offer to buy all his oil.

They had a relationship from the first iteration, but their involvement this time was minimal. He wished for happiness in Otto's future, but his own future was the top priority.

Now, they had to race down the road through the night and enter the Mathers territory as quickly as possible.

The possibility of encountering the Witch Cult, and strategies to safely escape with Emilia and the others— His thoughts were focused on these. He was about to utter words of farewell when he suddenly realized something.

If he could make something happen with money, shouldn't he?

"Otto, I have something to discuss… no, a business proposition."

Subaru's expression suddenly turned serious as he whispered. Otto's eyes widened. But sensing no hint of a joke in his tone, he immediately straightened his posture.

"If it's a business proposition, I'm all ears, customer. What do you need?"

"I'll buy all the oil loaded in your dragon carriage. In return, lend me your legs."

Subaru pointed at Otto's earth dragon —that familiar carriage— and then, spreading both hands, he spoke in a voice loud enough for the merchants preparing to camp to hear.

"All you merchants and dragon carriages here—anyone willing to sell their legs for money, I'll buy all of you!"

Chapter 45: Encounter

1

—I don’t want to die.

“Haah, haah, haaaah, haah, haah—”

Gasping for breath, stumbling clumsily, spitting out the grass and dirt that got into my mouth when I fell, with drool and bloody vomit dripping from the corners of my lips, I race through the impenetrable darkness.

The light of the crystal lamps has vanished into the distance, and darkness has fallen over the road, where even the moonlight is obscured.

An almost deafening silence echoes in my skull; no reliable sound can be heard. My own breathing, even the sound of my heartbeat—nothing can be heard. I’m stranded in a world of absolute silence.

—I don’t want to die, I don’t want to die, I don’t want to die.

Kicking the ground, I’m certainly moving forward in the darkness. Yet, the unlifting darkness makes my position uncertain, and I don’t even know where my feet are heading.

I’ve already lost count of how many times I’ve stumbled and fallen. If each time I strayed from the original path, then where am I headed now?

There was a place I had to go.

There were people I had to meet.

There were people who aimed for that goal with me.

Yet, here I am, surrounded by endless darkness, utterly alone.

“Is anyone—!”

Terrified by the darkness that engulfs my vision and the silence that severs the world, I raise my voice.

My hoarse throat, my voice trembling so much I can taste blood, must have reached beyond the night. The only reply to that scream is the painful, repeated torment of silence.

No one is here. I’ve been left behind.

There’s no sign of anyone returning. Of course. No one wants to die.

Knowing that staying here, returning here, remaining within the reach of this darkness means losing your life—who could come back?

I feel despair slowly seep into my heart. My chest grows cold, and my limbs begin to go numb as if ice water, not blood, flows through my veins.

I’m aware of the end, and my body is refusing to resist.

Just,

“No… I don’t want to… die…”

My heart, my emotions, my soul, refuse the body’s reaction to accept the end.

I shake my head, throwing a tantrum against this fate trying to force an end upon me. I drag my lead-heavy limbs, limbs that no longer convey any fighting spirit, and push forward.

Forward—no, I’m fleeing. Keep fleeing. No purpose. Just scrambling in fear. Forever, lost and confused.

—From far, far away, beyond the darkness, a sound can be heard.

Shaking the air, pushing back the darkness, the end approaches, taking shape.

Desperately, with a look of agony, I continue to flee, slow as a turtle, trying to distance myself from what is pressing in from behind.

As he displays such a pathetic and shameful spectacle, Subaru thinks:

—How did it come to this?

2

“All you merchants and dragon carriages here—anyone willing to sell their legs for money, I’ll buy all of you!”

The peddlers exchanged glances at Subaru’s “business proposal”, seemingly thinking it was some kind of joke, and let their cheeks relax into an unpleasant smile.

However, everyone’s expressions changed when Rem, embodying Subaru’s will, held up the bag containing their travel funds, opened its mouth, and showed its contents around.

From that point, led by Otto, a scramble of eager volunteers began.

As a result, out of the fourteen peddlers at that relay point, ten decided to accompany Subaru and his group.

Initially, the negotiations were difficult, but thanks to Otto’s suggestion, everything landed smoothly. His method, which ensured no one lost out, was this:

“We’ll entrust the transportation of all cargo to the four individuals with large dragon carriages and vehicles. The profits will be distributed later in the royal capital via the guild. In this case, we’ll reconcile the freight charges with the sales, you see.”

Otto, skillfully consolidating the differing claims, explained this with a beaming face, standing at the head of the ten accompanying merchants. Despite being the youngest, his immediate ability to devise a path that satisfied everyone, and his persuasive words, showed his innate talent as a merchant.

Of course, for him, it was probably the result of being desperate not to miss a once-in-a-lifetime chance to cleverly dispose of inventory that could determine the fate of his merchant career.

“I’m happy you’re buying my oil, but what’s the reason you also need dragon carriage ‘legs’?”

Watching his fellow merchants transfer their goods, Otto folded his arms and asked Subaru, who was concerned about their departure time.

In response, Subaru prefaced with, “Well,” then continued,

“We’re heading back to the Mathers territory. For now, our cover is that we’re servants of the Margrave Roswaal.”

“I know him. Margrave Roswaal L. Mathers, with his ‘demi-human fetish’. I’ve heard he’s quite an eccentric among Lugunica nobles with titles.”

Subaru gave a wry smile at Otto, who was peeking up at him, gauging his reaction. If Ram had heard that, she’d be furious, but—

“Well, I can’t deny it. He is kind of a pervert.”

“You say that about your employer! No, actually, I kind of expected that answer, which is why I brought it up. But still, Mr Natsuki, you don’t look like a noble’s servant.”

“I’m still an apprentice. The only things I’ve gotten passing marks on are sewing and bed-making.”

Anyway,

“Assuming I believe you’re on an errand for the Margrave… why do you need dragon carriages? Honestly, a Margrave would surely have his own dragon carriages, wouldn’t he?”

“Like I said, we need a lot of them. We have a large amount of stuff to transport, so it’d be ideal if the carriages were empty… Though in your case, Otto, since we’re buying your oil, it can’t be helped.”

"I appreciate it. So, the goods you're transporting are…"

He smiled at the corners of his mouth, rubbing his hands together as if to gauge Subaru's mood. But behind his narrowed, relaxed eyelids, his eyes were frozen with a lack of emotion, peering into Subaru's.

It seemed he didn't entirely believe Subaru's story about being a Margrave's envoy. Beyond that, regardless of the truth of the identity, he seemed concerned about the danger level of what they were being asked to transport.

That was a natural concern.

If his identity as the Margrave's attendant was true, they would be transporting something that required hiring outsiders.

Conversely, if his stated identity was false, they would end up aiding people impersonating those connected to the Margrave. It was only natural for him to exercise maximum caution.

Subaru couldn't afford to have them refuse the job due to such suspicions.

Therefore, Subaru decided to tell them the reason he hired them without holding anything back.

"The goods we're transporting are… people."

"People?"

"Yes. Humans, that is. There's a small village near the Margrave's mansion, with fewer than a hundred villagers in total. I want to load those people onto the carriages and move them."

That was the reason Subaru had suddenly thought of hiring Otto and the others.

The dragon carriage Subaru and Rem were riding in was quite large, designed for heavy cargo, and the vehicle pulled by the dragon was considerably sized. The shopkeeper had said it could easily pull over a dozen people.

"Humans… you say. You don't mean, by any chance, that you want us to transport corpses, do you? Because if so, I'm very sorry, but I'll have to refuse."

"…I want to bring you along so that doesn't happen."

If they had multiple dragon carriages, they could evacuate all the villagers.

Initially, before encountering Otto and the others, Subaru, in his haste to meet Emilia, had completely forgotten about the villagers' escape.

If he had realized this later, at worst, he might have had to load only the mansion residents, including Emilia, and the village children onto the dragon carriage, transport them to a safe zone, and then risk multiple round trips.

In that sense, meeting Otto and the others here could be called a twist of fate, a rare stroke of luck that worked favorably for Subaru.

Subaru, noticing Otto's furrowed brow, indicating undeniable distrust and confusion, uncrossed his arms and prefaced with, "Actually," then said,

"Soon, there's going to be a large-scale witchbeast hunt in the entire area around the Margrave's mansion."

"Witchbeast hunt, you say?"

Subaru nodded, affirming for Otto, who leaned forward at the unexpected word. He then made a serious face and continued,

"Witchbeasts, Juggernauts, have inhabited that area since long ago. Until now, a barrier kept them separate from humans, and we managed somehow… Recently, a Juggernaut crossed the barrier and caused damage. It was quite a commotion."

"That's why you decided on a witchbeast hunt? But…"

As Otto tried to press the point, seemingly having reservations, Subaru silently pulled up his right sleeve. Otto then let out a choked “Ugh!” of surprise.

His trembling eyes caught sight of the vivid remnants of tooth and claw lacerations on Subaru’s upper arm. Moreover, countless other unerasable scars were etched beneath his clothes.

“By the Margrave’s kindness, I received treatment in the royal capital when I nearly died. Now that my treatment is mostly done, I’m on my way back.”

“I… I see… So that’s it. Then, why isn’t the Margrave arranging the dragon carriages himself? Why are you doing it on the road, Mr Natsuki?”

“The Margrave intends to simply clean up, without moving the residents. However as you can see from my body, there’s a chance the witchbeasts might cause trouble. So I want to take out insurance. It’s not that I don’t trust my master, though.”

Subaru lowered his gaze and confessed apologetically. Otto grunted softly, “Hmm,” and after a moment of silence,

“Understood. I’m sorry for prying into things you didn’t want to discuss. I’ll explain it well to everyone without mentioning your injuries.”

Looking at Subaru with concern, Otto’s usually good-natured face showed a bitter expression. He probably felt guilty for inadvertently touching upon Subaru’s injuries.

In that regard, he seemed a little too soft-hearted for a merchant.

“Don’t worry about it. You can tell everyone exactly what I said. It’s much better than being needlessly suspected.”

Otto, who seemed to be a good person at heart, nodded, apparently satisfied.

Watching him, Subaru secretly clenched a small fist, thinking that he himself was much more of a villain.

It was about an hour after the negotiations concluded that they left the camping ground where the merchants had gathered.

Their cargo had been transferred to four dragon carriages, leaving nine merchants and their now-lighter wagons. Adding Otto, who still had his oil, made ten companions. Including the dragon carriage Subaru and Rem were on, that made eleven—it would be quite cramped, but it should be possible to fit all the villagers.

Bidding farewell to the remaining group, who would head to the capital in the morning, Subaru and the eleven dragon carriages departed the main road in the dead of night.

The thin merchant who had introduced Otto to Subaru —Ketty— was among the ones staying behind. As he waved, Subaru felt a profound sense of their paths truly diverging.

“If we keep running through the night, we should enter the Mathers territory sometime after dawn, wouldn’t you say?”

Otto, riding his own carriage alongside theirs, called out, looking over at Subaru.

He wasn’t raising his voice much, yet it still reached them, apparently due to the ground dragon’s blessing of wind. Not being affected by wind or tremors must extend to things like this.

For Subaru, who had a sand cloth wrapped around his mouth, making breathing difficult, not having to shout was a genuine relief. He nodded and replied, “Sorry about the no breaks.”

“Oh, no! I have no complaints whatsoever. With the chance to clear out my inventory and get generous freight fees, I’m invincible! I’ve even run for three days and three nights straight!”

“Sounds like you’d collapse and sleep right after negotiations finished.”

“Huh?! Did you read my mind?!”

Subaru gave a wry smile at Otto, who was flustered that his punchline had been stolen. Then, Subaru shifted his gaze to Rem, who was holding the reins.

With the sand cloth Subaru had re-wrapped covering the lower half of her face, Rem's expression, as she looked straight ahead, was even more unreadable than usual. For Subaru, who prided himself on being able to discern her emotions despite her usual lack of expression, this was a somewhat unsettling situation.

Especially now, when he was dying to know what she was thinking.

Just then,

"—Subaru."

"…! Ah, oh, what is it, Rem? Is something wrong?"

Subaru, who had been staring intently at her profile, was startled when she spoke. He swallowed a gasp of surprise, then spoke with an exaggerated calmness.

Hearing this, Rem gave a small shake of her head and said, "No," then,

"It became quiet, so Rem wondered if you were tired. It's a bit bumpy and sandy, but it's alright if you want to sleep. Rem will keep watch."

"I'd like to say I'll take you up on that, but my eyes are wide open. Besides, it'd look way too uncool to make you do all the work."

"Subaru, you're still recovering."

Subaru was silenced by Rem's considerate and deferential attitude.

Her words were gentle, but her will was firm and unyielding. At the very least, Rem would absolutely never assign Subaru a task on this dragon carriage that would burden him.

Each time she treated him with such kindness, an unremovable thorn pierced Subaru's chest.

He didn't know Rem's true intentions for being so sincere and devoted, and wanting to know, yet not wanting to know, his conflicting heart twisted.

“Rem, are you…”

“Yes.”

Suddenly, that anxiety slipped out, and he called her name.

It seemed to have clearly reached her, and she immediately responded, waiting for Subaru’s next words.

The source of the anxiety he had unwittingly stumbled into. Now, he could pull back with a simple “never mind”, and Rem probably wouldn’t press him. But it was clear that not knowing what Rem was thinking when she didn’t press him would torment him.

In that case, he might as well just be blunt.

“Rem, don’t you have any doubts about what I’m doing? I haven’t explained anything to you. Not about the Witch Cult, or about hiring these merchants like this.”

He gritted his teeth, suppressed his weakness, and forced out the question, holding back his voice that threatened to waver with anxiety. It was something he had wanted to ask for so long, but had been too afraid.

Hearing him, Rem closed her eyes once, then,

“Lord Roswaal has instructed Rem. All actions in the royal capital are to respect Subaru’s wishes.”

She replied, her face showing the frozen expression of a servant.

Hearing that answer, Subaru’s face stiffened in disbelief.

She followed Subaru’s words because Roswaal had commanded it.

Then it was as if,

“Instructed… by Roswaal…?”

"Yes. While Rem hasn't been ordered to do anything specific, Rem was told to follow Subaru's policies in everything Rem does in the royal capital. Rem also intended to do so as much as possible."

Rem's supplementary words, for some reason, didn't quite register in his mind.

Only one thought echoed dispassionately in Subaru's head:

"Roswaal's command…"

She didn't object to Subaru's actions and followed them because her master had commanded her to.

Did that mean her obedience to Subaru up until now wasn't her true intention?

No, more than that, even the fact that Rem was by Subaru's side like this…

"Subaru?"

Rem, perhaps finding Subaru's silence puzzling, tilted her head toward him, her brows faintly furrowed. Even her worried gaze looking at Subaru, he couldn't accept with an honest heart now.

Was all of it— Her worried care, her gentle support when he felt like collapsing, her constant presence by his side when he was on the verge of madness from loneliness, her following him and affirming his belief in what was right— All merely because Roswaal's command was foremost in her mind?

To be even more extreme, did Rem perhaps not truly approve of Subaru's actions in her heart?

"—!"

Nausea surged, and Subaru instinctively swallowed the acidic bile rising in his stomach. The restrained urge to vomit had nowhere to go, becoming a bomb that spread shivers throughout his body, raging within him.

His limbs tingled, his vision flickered, and his brain itched unbearably. An urge to smash his skull open and plunge his fingers in to scratch it wildly made his breathing ragged.

His fingers, pressing into his scalp, never broke through his skull. He could only gnash his teeth at the unyielding itch and endure the crushing pressure as if his stomach were being squeezed.

He didn't want to think about anything. He didn't want to think.

The more he thought, the more he replayed, the more he sought, the further what he wanted receded, his ideals transformed into fantasies, and his hopes were painted over with despair and disappointment.

"Subaru?"

He hated it. He was sick of it.

He didn't want to think. He didn't want to doubt. He didn't want to believe. He didn't want to be betrayed.

He clutched his head, shutting out all external stimuli and withdrawing into himself.

Rem called Subaru's name a few times, but perhaps thinking Subaru was trying to sleep in that position, she stopped speaking further and looked straight ahead again.

At that moment, Subaru was finally, truly, utterly alone.

4

"—ru. Rem is sorry, please wake up. Subaru."

A call, and the sensation of consciousness being stirred.

The feeling of someone's hand on his shoulder. Lifting his face, he rubbed his blurry eyelids to clear his vision, and in the brightening view, he saw a familiar girl's face.

"Rem, huh. What is it?"

Consciousness surfaced from unconsciousness, and the moment he recognized her, a dull pain throbbed deep in his chest. However it wasn't unbearable.

Struggling to keep it from showing on his face, Subaru waited for Rem, who had reached out to him, to answer. After apologizing for waking him, she said,

"We should be arriving at the road's fork soon. It's a path we couldn't possibly miss if it were bright, but now we're relying solely on the crystal lamp's light."

As she spoke, she pointed to the ground dragon still kicking the ground single-mindedly—to the glowing crystal lamp attached beneath its thick neck.

In this world, where streetlights and other lighting devices don't exist, securing visibility at night relies on the glow of lagmite ore, the light of primitive torches, or, more naturally, unreliable moonlight.

For a night-sighted ground dragon, the lagmite ore alone was probably enough to run without losing its way, but,

"Unfortunately, for me, it's pretty much invisible. There's a small one on the driver's seat too, but I can only see my hands."

There was a dedicated lamp inside the dragon carriage, but it wasn't bright enough to illuminate the entire driver's seat. Anyway,

"So, you're saying we're lost?"

"No. Before we get lost, Rem had wanted to confirm the map. The map is in the luggage at your feet, so could you please get it out?"

"At my feet, this?"

He fumbled in the darkness with his toes and pulled the object that hit his foot closer.

He lifted the considerably heavy item onto his lap and rummaged inside, but, “Ugh… I can’t quite tell which one’s the map. Besides, even if I find the map, won’t it be too dark to see?”

“Don’t underestimate a Oni’s night vision… is what Rem would like to say, but Rem is not that confident about her night vision, either…”

Rem’s expression clouded over, wondering what to do. Then, suddenly, something flashed in Subaru’s mind in the darkness. Come to think of it,

“Hold on a sec.”

Calling out to Rem, Subaru pulled out the small pouch containing his personal belongings. Inside were the hand towel Rem had given him, a pouch of spending money, and other items. He rummaged his hand inside, searching for the desired sensation, and,

“Found it.”

In Subaru’s hand was a cold, hard sensation.

Rem tilted her head, unable to identify it in the darkness, but Subaru opened what he hadn’t touched in a long time and pressed the power button.

“Haven’t turned it on in a while, but it better not be dead… Oh.”

After a brief silence, a “startup” effect appeared on the screen. Exactly one second later, Subaru’s hands were suddenly illuminated by a dazzling light.

With the sudden bright light, Rem raised her eyebrows in surprise.

“Subaru, is that…?”

“It’s a lost technology, no, a future technology: a mobile phone. Barely, atleast it’s alive and well, thank goodness.”

It was its first startup since the day he was summoned to this world, and despite its low battery, the phone shone brightly.

It was one of the items he had brought from his original world when he fell into this one. Although he had brought several other personal items, this mobile phone's utility was probably by far the highest. Though that came with the limitation of its battery life.

"I kept it off because I didn't know when I'd use it, but I never thought the day would come when it'd be useful as a light."

Grateful for civilization's unexpected use, Subaru illuminated the luggage. Spotting a rolled-up map inside the light-filled bag, he quickly pulled it out and held it out to Rem's lap.

"I'll shine the light, so take a look at the map."

"Yes, thank you."

As he illuminated Rem's view, who was looking down, Subaru let out a small sigh that she couldn't hear.

It seemed he was managing well without revealing his trembling emotions.

"Mr. Natsuki, what is that? I've never seen anything like it."

Otto, his voice almost cracking, was intensely curious about the phone in Subaru's hand. Otto, riding to the left of their carriage, leaned forward to peer at it.

"A crystal lamp I've never seen… no, it doesn't look like crystal. In fact, I've never seen the material before."

Lured by Otto's excited observations, another dragon carriage, slightly behind, pulled up on their right. Likewise, an older man with a bandana wrapped around his head stretched his neck to look. But he too, with a childlike sparkle in his eyes unfitting his age, was fixated on the phone in Subaru's hand.

Normally, Subaru would have welcomed their reaction and cracked a joke or two, but unfortunately, he didn't have the capacity for that right now.

Shaking his head, Subaru prefaced with "Sorry", to the two who wanted an explanation.

“It’s a secret tool given to me by the Margrave. If too much is known about it, one might go missing. It’s best you forget you ever saw it.”

“Wow, what kind of shady, money-smelling backstory is that?”

Subaru inwardly gritted his teeth, seeing that he had only piqued Otto’s interest further. However, their conversation was interrupted by Rem, who said, “I understand”.

She looked up from the map, pointed ahead in their direction of travel, and said,

“A little further ahead, there’s Flugel’s Great Tree. If we follow the road that leads northeast from there, we should be able to enter the Mathers territory.”

“Flugel’s Great Tree?”

When Subaru tilted his head at the unfamiliar name, Otto, still huffing excitedly, raised a finger and said, “Well, you see,”

“Flugel’s Great Tree is the name of a massive tree that towers into the clouds in the middle of the Lifaus Highway. ‘Towers into the clouds’ is an exaggeration, but it’s truly enormous. The legend says a sage named Flugel planted it several hundred years ago.”

“So, Flugel’s Great Tree, then. Do they not know why he planted it, or anything about that?”

“Well, it’s a story from hundreds of years ago. Mr. Flugel, too, is a bit of a mystery, beyond the story of him planting the tree.”

Subaru wondered what made him a sage, but he kept it to himself.

After driving straight for a while, a massive tree towering beyond the night gradually became clearly visible even to Subaru’s eyes.

“I see… That’s amazing.”

If he were to compare it to anything from his original world, perhaps the "thousand-year-old tree" class giants he'd seen in TV specials would come close.

Otto said this tree was several hundred years old, but perhaps the growth rate of plants here was different; despite its shorter age, the Great Tree possessed a majesty comparable to those ancient trees.

A trunk so tall that its peak couldn't be seen even when looking up. The branches, stretching skyward, were immense in number, and the foliage was equally vast. Supporting the thick, powerful trunk were countless roots, sprawling across the ground like coiling great serpents, sinking into the ground.

It wasn't in the middle of a great forest; such an enormous tree stood alone in the plains, making it an unmistakable landmark.

Next to Subaru, who was awe-struck by its size, Rem coolly handled the reins, subtly changing the dragon carriage's course. According to the map, they would now head northeast and enter the Mathers territory. Watching the Great Tree approach, then gradually recede, Subaru thought,

"If I had more battery and peace of mind, I would've taken a picture."

He peered at the screen, which showed only one bar of battery life remaining, and muttered with regret. Hearing Subaru's murmur, Otto asked, "Huh, what was that?!" Subaru irritably replied, "Nothing!" and lowered his raised hips back onto the driver's seat.

Then, tearing his attention away from the Great Tree, Subaru suddenly noticed something.

"Hey, where did that bandana guy who was riding on the right go?"

He looked around, but the person who should have been there was nowhere to be found.

Had he suddenly fallen behind? Subaru checked slightly behind them, but there was only the dragon carriage that had been following the bandana-clad man, leaving a gaping void where he should have been.

“Don’t tell me he got separated looking up at the tree.”

“What’s wrong, Mr Natsuki? Are you looking for something?”

“Looking for something? He’s your buddy! Where did that cool old man with the bandana, who was riding on this side just now, go? Is he reliving his childhood by climbing trees?”

Subaru irritably hurled sarcasm at the carefree Otto, blaming him for the oversight.

However Otto, on the receiving end of Subaru’s irritation, looked bewildered, as if he didn’t understand what was being said, and tilted his head.

“What are you talking about, Mr Natsuki? No one was riding on my opposite side.”

—Huh?

Subaru was dumbfounded, unable to voice his confusion at the meaning of Otto’s words.

Otto stared at Subaru, who had frozen, and showed no sign of joking. He answered with genuine bewilderment, having seemingly processed Subaru’s statement.

However that was precisely what Subaru couldn’t understand.

“What are you talking about? Just now, you were both looking at the phone with keen interest, drooling practically.”

“Oh, it’s called a phone, is it? More importantly, can you guarantee my safety after I’ve heard that?”

“Don’t play dumb!”

Subaru snapped at Otto, who was trying to brush off his words, and looked to his right. The same empty space stretched out, the presence that should have been there was nowhere to be seen.

He couldn’t have not been there. Subaru remembered his face and his voice.

“—?”

Then, while staring intently at the empty space, his vision blurred faintly.

A fuzzy, indistinct sensation, as if mist had fallen before his eyes. Subaru blinked several times. Still, the unsettling feeling wouldn’t clear.

The vague darkness continued to parallel him, and it felt eerily unsettling, fueling his anxiety.

So, Subaru unfolded his phone again and shone a light into the space on his right.

He was searching for a trace of the person who should have been there, wanting to know the true nature of the indescribable, unsettling sensation that couldn’t be erased.

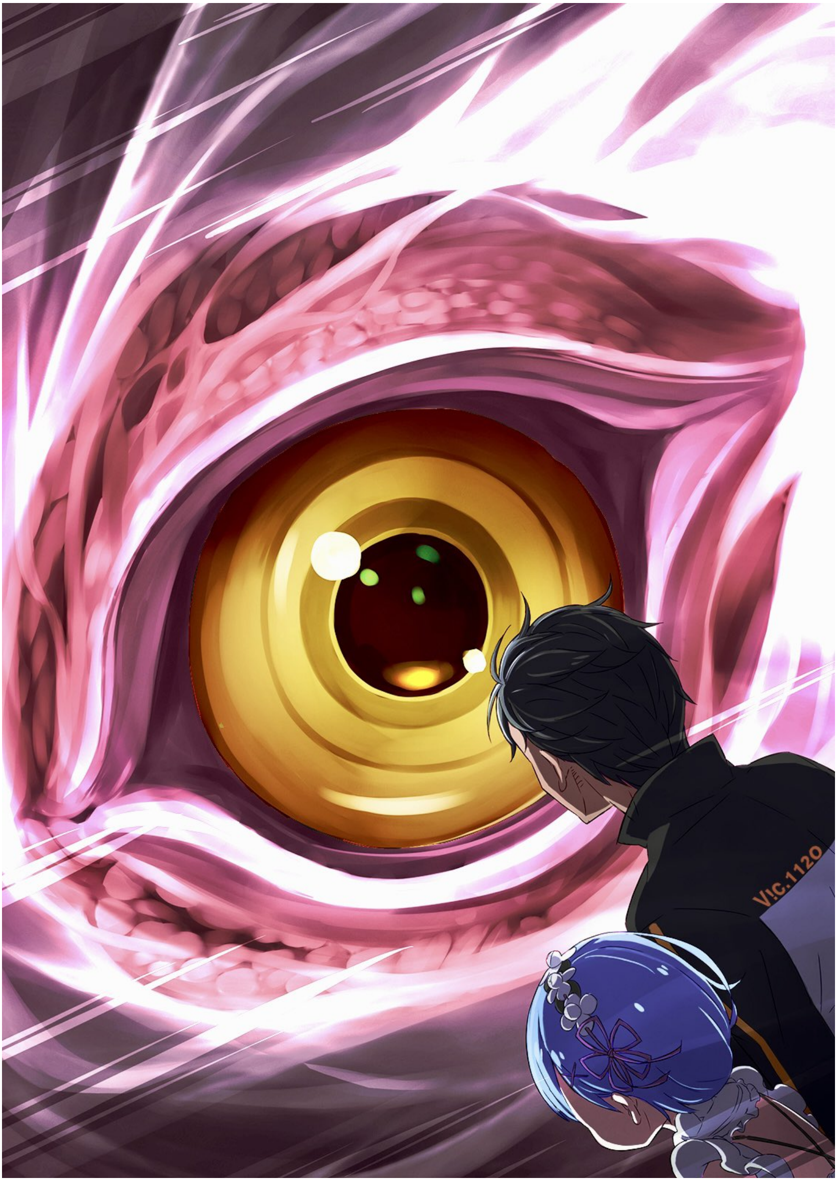
In the illuminated light—

“—Huh?”

Subaru met eyes with an incredibly colossal eye floating in the darkness.

A roar echoed, and fog enveloped the Lifaus Plains.

—Fog enveloped the Lifaus Plains.



V!C.1120

Chapter 46:
The White Whale's Maw

1

Blasted by a wind filled with spray, Subaru felt as if he'd been punched square in the face.

"—gh!"

The tempest, like a physical blow, lifted his body, threatening to hurl him over the driver's seat and out into the open. His outstretched fingers found nothing to grasp, and he was about to fall into the unprotected darkness—

"—ru!"

A hand gripping the back of his collar forcefully pulled him down. He was slammed onto the seat, landing on his rear. At the edge of his sparking vision, he saw Rem, one hand reaching for his neck, the other pulling back on the reins. Her usually composed profile was etched with terror, her sharp eyes fixed on the direction of the whipping wind.

"—!!"

Rem opened her mouth and roared, revealing sharply pointed canines. But even her fierce battle cry was swallowed by the storm, failing to reach even Subaru, who was right beside her. However, the mana permeating the air heard her scream, though his eardrums did not.

Mana converged at Rem's exhaled incantation, and world-altering magic activated. Three spears of ice, each as large as Subaru himself, materialized in mid-air, their sharp tips aimed at the darkness.

After a moment of suspension, the ice spears shot forth like arrows with tremendous force. The ice projectiles, moving at a speed barely discernible to the eye, streaked towards their target in the darkness. They struck—their points embedding themselves in the surprisingly close edge of the seemingly endless void.

Immediately after,

"—Huh?!"

He felt his neck gripped again, and then he was abruptly pulled upwards. The seat receded as if he were being extracted, and Subaru, unable to resist, shot straight into the night sky. He soared over the driver's seat, leaving the dragon carriage behind, and from his perch in mid-air, he watched the carriage below rapidly shrink into the distance.

Falling. Not a fall from a horse, but from a dragon—as that escapist thought crossed his mind, Subaru saw it.

An enormous, sideways mass utterly obliterated the dragon carriage.

The heavily built carriage body was torn to shreds like paper, and the large ground dragon pulling it was also scattered by the impact — Blood, flesh, and organs splattered onto the road, transforming into a minced mixture of wood and meat.

The unreality of the scene turned Subaru's mind blank. It was a shocking sight that made him forget the fact that he was currently suspended in mid-air. What brought Subaru, whose consciousness was reeling from the catastrophe before him, back to his senses was:

"To the left—!!"

A girl's voice, close by, barked out. In that instant, his body, unable to brace itself, tumbled onto a hard floor. A dull ache shot through his shoulder and hip, but before he could protest, he was flung by the centrifugal force of a sharp turn. He rolled, and just as he was about to be thrown out again, he managed to grab onto something like a rope with his fingertips, stopping himself just in time. After a beat, Subaru lifted his head and looked around, realizing he was in the cargo bed of Otto's dragon carriage.

He was clinging to part of the tarp-covered carriage's fastenings, a rope tangled around his wrist, as he struggled to stand amidst the violent shaking. Then,

"No, Subaru! Don't stand up! The ground dragon's blessing has worn off. Rem and Subaru can't move properly!"

Rem's sharp warning flew at Subaru, who was struggling to stand upright. He saw Rem, who had landed on Otto's carriage in the same way, bracing herself by digging the edge of her right hand into the floor. Even with her physical abilities, standing upright in this shaking was difficult.

The familiar violent shaking was due to the ground dragon's physical support blessing having ceased. With the ground dragon's blessing, which eliminated obstacles like wind, sound, and shaking, gone, he felt nauseous and found it difficult even to stand.

Understanding this and seeing Rem, Subaru finally grasped the situation. Rem had carried Subaru and leaped from the exploding carriage to Otto's carriage. If her judgment had been even a moment slower, they both would have shared the same fate as the carriage— Their limbs blown off, joining the unrecognizable mincemeat.

Shaking off the shiver that ran down his spine, Subaru pressed himself against the edge of the cargo bed, raising his voice to be heard over the wind and the sound of their movement.

"Wh-What happened?! What in the world is this…?"

The anomaly that had occurred in mere tens of seconds was too dense for his mind to process.

"Don't you understand?!"

Otto turned back to Subaru's confusion, letting out a cry that sounded like a scream. His face was pale, and he yelled, his teeth chattering,

"Night fog is out! There's only one thing that big that swims through the sky with fog!"

His voice was tainted with the tremor peculiar to despair. As if to confirm, as if to reject what he didn't want to admit, he shook his head reluctantly, desperately drawing breath into his convulsing lungs, and Otto shouted with all his might.

"—It's the White Whale!!"

2

The White Whale.

The only time I'd heard that name, before or since, was in the first iteration. The name of the monster said to be shrouded in fog, blocking the highway. Because of that White Whale, which had supposedly appeared on the Lifaus Highway, the first iteration had to detour on the way back. One could say that was why I didn't make it in time for the tragedy that befell the village and the mansion the first time. However I'd never actually encountered it, nor had I heard its name again until now.

"Could it be that it's showing up at this timing?!"

When we left the capital half a day ago, there should have been no reports of the White Whale's appearance anywhere. Rem hadn't mentioned it, and most importantly, Otto and the others, whose profession should have made them wary of the White Whale, were still using the highway. The White Whale's appearance must have happened after Subaru and the others departed.

—No, even worse, could it be that it appeared on the highway at this very moment?

The timeline fit. In the first iteration, Subaru and the others departed on the third day. By then, the highway was already blocked by the White Whale's appearance. Now it was the middle of the second night— If the White Whale's appearance became known in the morning, the highway would be blocked by tomorrow. In other words, if they were going to collide, it had to be tonight.

"To think that at this time of year in Lugunica… we'd run into… the White Whale… Oh, Dragon, Dragon. Save us, save us…"

Otto muttered prayers for salvation with vacant eyes, like a Buddhist chant. Seeing him completely devoid of not just fighting spirit but even vitality, Subaru truly understood the merchants' fear of the White Whale. In the previous world, Otto had described the White Whale to Subaru as a symbol of ill omen for merchants. At the time, Subaru had thought he was being overly dramatic, but seeing Otto's utter exhaustion now that he'd actually encountered the fog, he couldn't help but feel how childish that description had been.

Otto's lips trembled, his mind elsewhere, yet he still managed the reins. His ground dragon, sensing the White Whale's presence, was in a state of panic, kicking at the ground with a speed that disregarded its remaining stamina, accelerating.

Feeling the direct impact of the shaking throughout his body, Subaru turned and peered into the darkness. He searched for the White Whale, but the lightless abyss had completely shut off the world. It was already a deeply dark night, where even his hands were barely visible without light. And on top of that,

"I thought something felt sticky… so it's fog."

He felt drops on his forehead that weren't sweat, and grimaced at the wet sensation on his palm. In a night already devoid of light, with fog on top of it, securing vision was hopeless. Indeed, the light from the crystal lamp illuminating the ground dragon's neck was blurred by the night fog, barely performing half its function.

"Rem! Can you see the White Whale?!"

"It's too dark, absolutely impossible! …But!"

Subaru looked behind, to the side, and up, searching for a fish-like shadow. Rem responded to Subaru's voice with a pained tone, stopping her words as if contemplating something. He looked at her, concerned, but she was only a silhouette; even her expression was indiscernible in the thick fog.

The fact that the White Whale, the cause of this situation, was invisible only amplified the terror. When Subaru first saw what he thought was the White Whale's eye, it was probably larger than the circle he could make with both his arms. For a single eyeball to be that massive meant the White Whale truly possessed a physique comparable to a whale, as its name suggested.

"Rem's preemptive attack should have hit… There's a chance it retreated."

Was that too optimistic? The power of the ice spears launched by Rem's incantation was among the strongest magic he had ever seen; it was powerful enough to kill Subaru three times over with just one spear. Even a creature of immense size would flinch if it sustained a deep wound.

"What about the other carriages…?"

"They've scattered and fled. When the fog appears, separate immediately and escape. With luck, you won't be caught by the White Whale and should be able to get out of the fog."

Indeed, there were no other carriages running alongside theirs. The other carriages, which had certainly been following behind, seemed to have scattered in various directions according to that manual.

—Internally, Subaru bit back his regret at losing the precious means of escape he had secured.

The timing was terrible. The plan to evacuate the villagers had collapsed again. If the fog hadn't appeared, it would have been a precaution against other threats.

"No use regretting it. Let's just get out of this fog quickly…"

Feeling the discomfort of his internal organs churning from the violent shaking, Subaru thought about the problems after their escape. If they were down to one carriage, they would need to figure out a way to evacuate the villagers after getting Emilia and the others to safety. This would also mean a significant loss of time. Just as Subaru's vision extended beyond the immediate crisis to what lay ahead— That is, the path of the carriage—

"—!!"

A jaw lined with powerful, millstone-like teeth was bearing down on them from the front, about to swallow the carriage whole.

A roar thundered, and the overwhelming sound and blast caused the ground dragon to cower. Its legs tangled, scraping the ground, and the wheels lifted, causing the carriage bed to tilt sharply. A jar of oil burst through the tarp and flew off, and Subaru, clinging to the edge, was almost thrown out.

Desperately clinging to the carriage bed, he looked straight ahead— In the darkness, only the grimy teeth inside the White Whale's mouth stood out clearly.

At this very moment, Subaru belatedly realized how naive his perception had been.

Encountering the White Whale and wandering through the deep night fog. There was no longer any room to think about what would happen after escaping the fog; the problem had shifted to how to survive this very moment.

"—Uwaaaaaah!!"

As the jaw, large enough to easily swallow the carriage, bore down on them, a roar erupted, and with a shock, the plank floor of the carriage bed exploded. It was Rem who had kicked off, leaping forward like a bullet. From beneath her white prim, fluttering in the storm, her sharp horn was exposed in her Oni form. Rem, wielding a chained iron ball she had pulled from somewhere, shouted,

"—Run through to the left!!"

"Left left left left left!!"

The iron ball smashed down on the White Whale's upper jaw from directly above, causing it to spew dark blood-smoke and slightly close its open maw. Otto's carriage, driven by him spitting saliva and frantically controlling the ground dragon, rushed past the giant face that was still advancing, digging into the earth. The right side of the moving carriage bed, unable to fully avoid the massive body, was caught in the intersection, scraping with a sound like hard rock and then crumpling and flying off. The carriage bed, having lost a wheel, groaned loudly, lost its balance, and was about to flip over.

Naturally, Subaru, who was on it, was also about to be thrown into the darkness, helpless.

—Am I going to die?

Just before the consequence of his delayed judgment was about to mercilessly scatter his body, a light clinking of metal chains echoed amidst the roar, followed by a merciless pain as his torso was squeezed— He was pulled up from below his feet as if being extracted, and then dragged forward. And then,

“Take this—!!”

With the iron ball that had pulled Subaru up in her right hand, Rem, who had destroyed the connection between the driver’s seat and the cargo bed with her free left hand, grabbed the edge of the cargo bed as it began to separate and move away— At that instant, a load so immense that the ground dragon pulling the carriage neighed was generated, and with a single roar, the large cargo vehicle was hurled backward by Rem.

The super-large mass projectile, like throwing a small house, directly struck the flank of the White Whale as it passed. The sound of splintering wood echoed, and the White Whale’s writhing tail exploded the ground, scattering clods of earth. It was unclear if there was any damage. However there was no doubt that the White Whale was still alive and well. And most importantly, it had turned its body, swimming through the air, and glared at them.

“D-D-Did we do it—?!”

Even without fully understanding what had happened, Otto seemed to grasp the fact that most of his carriage was gone. Hope, mixed with desperation, was plastered superficially onto his voice as he asked the question, as if to justify the sacrifice. The thundering roar. The unending rumble. The pressure of despair closing in from behind. Facing these, he knew it was a meaningless delusion.

“Why is it so persistently after us…? We’re not the only prey, are we?!”

Otto screamed, cursing his misfortune. His words were filled with resentment at the unfairness of being attacked when there were eight other candidate groups. Subaru felt the same, but seeing Otto continue to curse foully, he refrained from speaking. It felt as if he had glimpsed a part of how Subaru himself might have used them as stepping stones, or a meat shield, if he had faced the Witch’s Cult.

Besides, there was no time to spare for such thoughts.

The threat of the White Whale still loomed behind them, and its speed as it swam through the air surpassed that of the ground dragon. Even with the ground dragon shedding the burden of the cargo, it was only a matter of time before they were caught. And if they were to lose the ground dragon, Subaru and the others would have no chance of escaping on foot.

He had to think. Is there anything? Anything? Anything? But no solution came to mind. Even trying to devise haphazard plans, with the spreading night fog making even the ground invisible, he couldn’t find a single hint. And as Subaru wasted time, once again unable to choose anything, the Oni girl made a decision herself.

Rem quietly approached Subaru, who was clinging to the carriage body, enduring the violent shaking. Though she must have been feeling the same impact, she moved with steps that betrayed no discomfort, coming close to Subaru and saying,

“Subaru. Please take this.”

“What?! Is there something that can fix this situation…?”

A heavy pouch was pressed into Subaru’s hands, who had slightly raised his face as if seeing a glimmer of hope. He frowned at the weight, and immediately realized from the feel of the outside of the bag that it was a money pouch containing gold coins or other currency.

What good would this money do in this situation? Subaru couldn't suppress a chill as Rem handed him the travel money, and he forced a smile onto his face.

"R-Rem…? I know coin-tossing can break game balance, but that's just… in games…"

"Rem will descend to the ground and engage. In the meantime, Subaru, please escape the fog with this person."

Rem told Subaru this in a voice clearly tinged with resolve.

Subaru, who had been trying to lighten the mood with a dry joke, was struck silent. In the meantime, Rem turned only her head and said,

"Sir Otto, please take care of Subaru. The promised reward is in his hand. —Please escape the fog and report the White Whale's appearance."

"M-Money?! This is no time for that, our lives are at stake!"

Otto's reply, who hadn't heard the exchange behind him. Still, the fact that he was desperately driving the carriage was conveyed, and Subaru saw Rem's lips relax in relief. And Subaru hadn't missed it. Telling Subaru and Otto, who would be escaping, to report the White Whale's appearance meant,

"You… Rem, you're not planning on coming back alive, are you?!"

Rem's expression clouded with a tragic determination. The world remained dark and deep, yet for some reason, her white face alone seemed strikingly clear to Subaru at that moment.

"I won't let you, I won't let you! If you die, I'll… I'll!"

He dropped the gold coin pouch at his feet and pulled Rem, who stood before him, by the waist. He held her small body in his arms, trying to keep her from leaving. If he let go of her hand, she would throw her life away and leap out. He had to stop that. Otherwise,

"Ah…"

Amidst the surge of emotion that brought tears to his eyes, Rem, embraced, let out a warm sigh. He lowered his gaze at the incongruously ecstatic sound, and in Subaru's arms, Rem looked up at him, smiling dreamily.

"Rem was born for this moment, wasn't she?"

"What are you…"

He couldn't continue his words.

An impact struck the back of his neck, and a sensation of the world flipping over assaulted Subaru. Rem, who had reached out to hug him back, had struck the back of his head with a hand chop. Strength drained from his body, and he leaned against Rem's body as if collapsing.

"Re-Rem… what are you doing…"

Not only his vision but his consciousness swayed violently, and Subaru, finding it difficult even to lift his head, desperately clung to the girl. Rem looked at Subaru, struggling like this, with a loving gaze, and whispered into his ear as his consciousness faded. It was,

V!c.ll20

“It’s alright. Rem will always be behind Subaru.”

—You don’t have to do anything. Just stay behind me.

Subaru himself had told her that, this morning, before they departed. So, true to those words, she stood, would stand, to protect Subaru’s back.

“No… I didn’t mean it that way…”

His consciousness was fading. Drifting away. He couldn’t hold on.

He felt as if he was hugged tightly once. A gentle, soft sensation was pressed against his forehead, then quickly pulled away.

That was the last of it.

Chapter 47:
At the End of Disgrace

1

—.

—.

—Ah.

A jolt, an impact—the sensation of his face being struck.

That stirred Subaru's consciousness from its blank state, and he awoke to reality.

He lifted his face and tried to sit up, but the swaying prevented it. His hand slipped, and just before he could fall headfirst to the floor again, a weight supporting his abdomen stopped him.

A heavy, hard sensation pressed against his stomach. He touched it, confirmed it was a bag filled with gold coins— With that, his memory of the moments just before he lost consciousness flooded back.

"—Rem?!"

"Mr Natsuki?! You're awake?!"

Tossing aside the bag of gold coins he'd been clutching, Subaru swept his gaze around, still on all fours. The darkness remained thick, and the violent shaking confirmed he was definitely still on the dragon carriage.

In front of him, Otto responded to Subaru's cry, turning only his head. He watched Subaru shake his head and try to move forward.

"Don't move. You hit your head, and the divine protection has run out. The ground dragon is at full speed; we don't have the luxury of accommodating you!"

"I don't care about that! Rem, what about Rem?!"

Subaru retorted with a shout to Otto's voice, scanning every corner of the driver's seat. The carriage, having lost its trailer, was unbalanced with only the driver's seat remaining. The space for a person to ride was limited, so he didn't even need to desperately search to realize she wasn't there.

Even so, he couldn't accept the fact until he saw it for himself.

"Answer me, Otto. What happened to Rem…!"

"That young lady…"

Seeing Subaru in such an agitated state, nearly lunging at him, Otto must have understood the danger of not responding.

He gasped, then made the agonizing decision to deliver the next words:

"To let our carriage escape… she got off to confront the White Whale."

The last exchange before he lost consciousness —the fact that it had actually happened— was conveyed to him.

"…"

At those words, Subaru gasped once, then said,

"Go back."

"Huh?"

"I said go back! We have to save Rem. Go back right now!"

In the cramped driver's seat, Subaru closed the distance and grabbed Otto.

Otto, preoccupied with controlling the chaotic ground dragon, couldn't react to Subaru's rough actions. His collar was seized, and he panicked, "Hey, wait!"

"A-Are you serious?! Go back… What good would going back do?! Didn't you see how terrifying that monster, the White Whale, is?! It's suicide!"

"Precisely because I saw that monster up close, I'm telling you to go back to save Rem!"

Subaru's voice strained as he glared at Otto, who was shaking his head and refusing the order.

The threat of the White Whale was burned into Subaru's eyes. With that massive body, it moved faster than the carriage, and a single flick of its tail easily sent a large vehicle flying. What's more, even in the fog, it easily pinpointed their location, and Rem's magic seemed to have done little damage.

Without a doubt, it was the greatest adversary he'd faced since falling into this world.

Compared to that, dealing with Elsa, who was humanoid, or challenging countless hordes of Juggernauts would have seemed to offer much clearer strategies.

However for this, he couldn't imagine a way to win.

"That's exactly why I can't leave Rem here…!"

Subaru knew full well the strength of Rem when she became an Oni.

His understanding told him: even with her, she was nothing more than a helpless weakling before the White Whale.

If he left her behind, she would surely be lost.

That would be meaningless. There would be no meaning for Subaru to survive. Subaru had returned to rescue her. To save her.

Her presence was indispensable to the future Subaru desired.

Without Rem, Subaru would even lose sight of himself. He wouldn't be able to affirm himself. Subaru needed her, someone who would affirm him.

“I won’t let her pull such a ridiculous stunt as buying time. If we’re going to escape, we’ll all escape! Otto, go back! Otherwise…”

“Are you an idiot?!”

However, Subaru’s voice was drowned out by an even louder roar.

The hand gripping his collar slid up and twisted, and in an instant, his feet left the floor, and he was slammed onto the driver’s seat on his back.

“Agggh!”

“If you think you can forcibly persuade a merchant, who sometimes travels alone on roads with no divine protection, you’re gravely fogaken.”

Twisting Subaru’s wrist, which he still held, Otto pinned Subaru’s arm, turning him face down. The one doing this was Otto’s right arm, still holding the reins with the other.

Otto panted, addressing the groaning Subaru, who was taken aback by the unexpected counterattack.

“Please understand. That’s your current state. What do you think you can do by going back in that condition? Are you going to waste the feelings of that girl, the one who stayed behind for us?!”

“Don’t you dare talk about Rem! You, who would abandon Rem… Who would leave her to die, have no right to speak of her! Go back! Save Rem, right now!!”

“Agh! This is hopeless!”

Otto clicked his tongue at Subaru, who thrashed and struggled to free his pinned arm. He then looked straight ahead, keeping the ground dragon running in a straight line.

“Don’t you understand how terrifying the White Whale is, even after seeing it?! It’s reigned in this world for decades, and there have been countless attempts to kill it! The fact that it's still alive is proof of its strength!"

Otto's voice was filled with intense anger and frustration as he lectured the obstinate Subaru from above, "Do you understand?!"

"Hundreds of armed people have challenged it, and still they can't kill it! What good will it do for us to go there, without weapons, without the power to fight?! Save the girl who stood before it?! We can't even do that! We couldn't possibly!"

"Before we even try…!"

"Some things are obvious! A subjugation force formed by the Lugunica Kingdom… There's no way anyone can defeat a monster that even killed the previous Sword Saint…!"

His strained confession contained a trembling, as if holding back tears.

Otto himself harbored an unshakeable rage towards the monster. Yet, to vent that anger, the opponent's presence was too overwhelming.

To make the stubborn Subaru understand, he himself was forced to utter words that emphasized the opponent's magnitude, repeatedly breaking his own spirit in the process.

"Sword… Saint…"

Amidst this, Subaru, who had shown no willingness to listen, lost his momentum. His dazed lips spoke a single word from Otto's outburst.

'Sword Saint' —That was the title given to the strongest person Subaru had encountered since falling into this other world, and for Subaru, it was a symbol of strength itself.

Even if the previous Sword Saint wasn't the same person as Reinhard, if they possessed enough power to bear the same title, then—

"The White Whale, which killed that…?"

Would it be stronger than Reinhard?

Subaru felt terror rapidly consuming his heart.

Reinhard's existence, his strength, was the very 'strength' Subaru yearned to possess. If even Reinhard would have to kneel and perish before that powerful, monstrous being— Then,

"How can that be…? Why is this happening…?"

He wanted to save Rem, to rescue her. If he didn't go back now, it wouldn't happen.

His heart understood, yet the crucial fighting spirit wouldn't reach his limbs, his soul.

Otto looked at the crumbling Subaru with a look of pity and said in a small voice,

"I am weak, and you are weak. That's why we can't save that girl. —We can't keep up with that girl's strength."

—Rem wasn't strong either.

Subaru knew that, he should have known, yet he couldn't utter a single word in protest.

He remained slumped, surrendering to the rocking of the dragon carriage, as the ground dragon sped straight through the darkness.

Rem, left behind, was still receding into the distance.

Subaru moved away from her without stopping, continuing to move further and further away.

2

It was about five or ten minutes after Subaru had hunched over.

"Mr. Natsuki, is that…?"

Otto, who had been silently riding the ground dragon until then, called out to Subaru, his eyes fixed on something he spotted ahead.

Slowly, Subaru raised his head and crawled next to Otto, looking in the same direction he was. —Beyond that, a faint light could be seen through the darkness.

“It’s obscured by the fog, but… it’s a human light!”

“Are we… breaking through the fog?”

“Even if we do, it should be night outside, so a light would be unnatural… It’s probably someone, like us, who got caught in the fog…”

As if to confirm Otto’s speculation, the other party, who must have noticed them as well, came charging straight towards them. After a moment, it was indeed a dragon carriage that pulled alongside them, and the man shouting from the driver’s seat was—

“Finally… finally, people…! Hey, this is fog, right?! That means the White Whale… the White Whale appeared…!”

A middle-aged man cried out, foam flecking the corners of his mouth, in literal panic.

Caught in the night fog, he sought answers, pulling his dragon carriage alongside theirs as if he’d found a tiny ray of hope.

Otto knew that his voice carried a nuance of desperate hope, wishing it were all a misunderstanding, but he still shook his head.

“Yes, it’s the White Whale. We’ve already encountered it. Fortunately, we should have escaped for now, but we don’t know when or where we’ll run into it again until we’re out of this fog.”

“I-Is that true…? Ah, this is the worst. Why, why is this happening…?”

Watching the man despairingly hold his head, Subaru glared at Otto’s profile next to him, who had just explained. It felt as though Otto, by saying “fortunately”, had completely forgotten the fact that they had left Rem behind.

Without knowing whether his anger was justified or merely a means to distract from his guilt, Subaru called out to Otto, “Hey.”

“Yes, Mr Natsuki?”

“Don’t talk like that, Otto. ‘Fortunately’, you say… How do you think Rem felt when we… left us behind…?”

Every time he spoke of Rem, who had been left behind, a searing pain, like thorns twisting his heart, shot through him. The thought that she, left behind, might be using her wits to survive against the White Whale—such a hopeful notion couldn’t even form in his mind after witnessing that horror.

At this point, Subaru had no choice but to admit it.

Rem stayed there, once again to save Subaru and the others, to save Subaru—and to die.

“Rem, who are you talking about?”

That tragic resolve and feelings of hers—

“—Huh?”

“No, I mean, who is Rem? There wasn’t anyone by that name among the other merchants who scattered… Who are you talking about?”

Otto tilted his head, unable to grasp the meaning of Subaru’s words.

That gesture clearly felt like an act of trampling on Rem’s last wishes, and—

—He swung his raised fist and punched him hard across the face.

Immediately, a violent jolt shook the dragon carriage, and Subaru, losing his footing, toppled backward into the driver’s seat. Otto, similarly knocked sideways in the driver’s seat, clutched his face and quickly scrambled up to face Subaru, his eyes wide.

"Wh-What are you doing?!"

Otto's eyes were wide with disbelief at Subaru's violent act. Subaru felt the same disbelief about Otto's words and actions.

Pushing himself up from where he'd fallen backward, Subaru bit his lip and snarled, "Don't mess with me."

"What are you talking about…? You're asking 'who is Rem', after she stayed behind to let us escape?! Don't mess with me! You… do you want to die…?!"

Otto continued to play dumb as Subaru persisted.

His vision turned red with uncontrollable rage. Time seemed to slow, and the surging murderous intent commanded Subaru to snap the thin neck of the man before him.

He reached out, ready to forget everything and crush that ungrateful life, when—

"Wh-What are you two doing?! This isn't the time to be arguing, is it?! If you have time to make a fuss, just get out of the fog…!"

The man in the parallel dragon carriage cried out in alarm, seeing the two glaring at each other, on the verge of turning their shouts into a deadly fight.

The man's desperate pleas for them to stop could not possibly reach the two locked in a stare-down. The man's voice didn't even register in Subaru's ears; he was about to act on his hostility towards Otto.

What stopped him, just barely, was an action from the adjacent dragon carriage.

However, it wasn't the man's earnest persuasion that led to their reconciliation.

"Get through the fog and escape the White Whale—"

The man, who had been discussing a practical escape plan, was thrown into the White Whale's jaw, which swallowed the ground and the dragon carriage from behind.

The White Whale, with its mouth aimed straight up, having swallowed the ground dragon pulling the carriage, let out a tremendous sound of destruction and death throes.

Wood and iron were crushed, and the ground dragon screamed as its flesh was ground by teeth like millstones. The man's voice, muffled by the sound of destruction, did not carry, and was fleetingly extinguished before the reality.

"N-No way—"

Subaru and Otto were speechless at the silent approach and devastation of its colossal body.

Otto's eyes flickered at the reappearance of the White Whale's imposing figure and its threat, and Subaru—

"Wh-Why… are you here…?"

Subaru muttered in a trembling voice, dropping to his knees as he looked at the White Whale's flank.

The still-present White Whale, seemingly uninterested in the despair of the two tiny beings right beside it, was engrossed in savoring the banquet unfolding within its mouth.

"If you're here… then what happened to the girl who stayed behind to lure this colossal beast away?"

Faced with such an overwhelming presence, he couldn't help but ask a question that already had an answer.

Of course, the grotesque creature before him wasn't going to answer Subaru's question. Slowly, the White Whale swallowed the food in its mouth and, after sending it to its stomach, looked down at the parallel dragon carriage —at Subaru— with its large eyes, as if appraising its next prey.

"U-Uwaaaaaahhh—!!"

Otto, unable to bear the pressure, was the first to lose his composure and screamed.

The ground dragon also recognized the White Whale's presence and, obeying its master's command on the reins, increased its speed even further. For a moment, they pulled away, trembling at the overwhelming mass behind them.

"Why, why, why, why, why… are you so relentlessly pursuing us…? We were supposed to have gotten away…!"

Clinging to the accelerating dragon carriage, Subaru, his body limp, barely registered Otto's words. He was trying to avert his eyes from his own despair by listening to Otto's screams and lamentations.

"Why us, out of everyone…? In this darkness… why…? Is there, is there some kind of… marker… on us?!"

Otto's cry, sobbing and rejecting the imminent death, struck a painful chord in Subaru's chest. But in Otto's desperate wail, Subaru felt an unforgivable image forming in his mind.

The White Whale relentlessly pursuing them. The reality of that monster closing in on them as if they had a target on their backs. It was—

"No way…"

Subaru tumbled backward into the driver's seat, his eyes fixed on the White Whale swimming in the darkness behind them.

The deep black of the world obscured even its massive body, making it indistinct. However, even in that darkness, the front of the colossal body, the monster opening its huge mouth and bearing down on them, could be faintly made out.

The existence of the grotesquely twisted horn protruding from the White Whale's head.

—The Juggernauts that had formed a pack in the Witchbeast Forest looked like large wild dogs with horns.

The witchbeasts, said to have been created by the Witch's power, had a habit of being attracted to the Witch's scent emanating from Subaru and attacking. In other words—

"Could that monster… the White Whale, also be a witchbeast…?"

Subaru uttered an unbelievable possibility, shaking his head at the reality he couldn't accept.

If he thought about it that way, everything clicked into place. The reason it singled out Subaru's dragon carriage so quickly among the scattered carriages. The reason it relentlessly pursued their carriage even after jumping to Otto's. The reason it managed to catch up to their carriage, even after Rem had braced herself for death and descended to the ground to buy them time.

The presence of the White Whale relentlessly pursuing them in the darkness. Rem's hesitation, as if she had noticed something about its pursuit.

"Is it… my fault…?"

Subaru was there. Did that mean, the White Whale relentlessly targeting this carriage, chasing the scent of the witch clinging to him?

Did Rem realize this fact before anyone else, and that's why she got off the carriage herself to protect Subaru? To protect Subaru. For Subaru's sake.

"No, Rem… I… I can't… because of me…!"

Overwhelmed by an unbearable weight and grief, Subaru covered his face and crouched down.

The fact that he had lost Rem, and the fact that he was the reason for her loss, assailed Subaru from both inside and out. As Subaru was crushed by such despair,

"Mr Natsuki…"

Otto approached from behind, calling out to him in a quiet voice and touching his shoulder.

His fingertips trembled, as if he didn't know what to say. His weak hand gripped Subaru's shoulder,

“Otto…”

“Die.”

The next moment, his body was forcefully pushed forward, losing its balance, and he was thrown headfirst from the dragon carriage.

—Huh?

His vision inverted, and his body spun wildly, losing all sense of up and down as he was flung off.

In the completely inverted world, he saw Otto reaching out toward him, laughing maniacally. Otto's mouth was wide open, showing his white teeth, and drool dripped from it.

“No… I don't want to die… Help… I don't want to die! I don't want to die, I don't want to die, I don't want to die… No, no, no, no… Help me, Rem, help me…”

Whimpers, weak pleas, and an endless, grimy clinging to life leaked from his lips.

A weakling who could do nothing, a loser who achieved nothing, a piece of trash who could protect nothing, still cried out, clinging to the lives he had lost and the lives he had caused to be lost, desperate to save his own.

He crawled, stumbled, slid through a sea of blood, bit into stones, threw away all his pride and dignity, peed himself, mixing the red of blood with tears and drool, clinging to his life.

It was pathetic. It was tragic. This was the very definition of a disgrace.

A sight everyone would turn away from in its absurdity, hurling words of scorn, deeming it painful to even witness. Humans couldn’t possibly find beauty in clinging to life in such a way.

It was miserable. Even the way an insect lived was more endearing. To defile the dignity of a noble and proud existence for one’s own sake— That was truly ‘the greed of a pig’ itself.

“No… I don’t… want to die… Help…”

Still, he crawled, still he fled in panic, pathetically lamenting, seeking any possibility to cling to life.

His body, long since drained of strength, couldn’t move forward; his fingertips brushed grass, no longer having the strength to dig into the dirt. Even the energy to cry out had long been squeezed dry, and rolling onto his side was his last effort.

“I don’t… want to die…”

So, the plea for his life leaked from Subaru’s mouth as he lay on his back.

That was his final resistance. He could do nothing more. He could think of nothing. He could initiate nothing; he could only submit.

Yet, the impact never came.

The familiar sensation of death, the terrifying future of being crushed, never arrived.

The fear of waiting for an end that might never come easily breaks a person’s spirit.

Writhing in terror that was unbearable, Subaru struggled with his trembling body, searching for that despair, his gaze sweeping around,

“…Huh?”

—He realized that the White Whale, which should have been close by, was nowhere to be found.

Subaru ran on, driven by nothing but a desperate clinging to life.

“I don’t want to die… I don’t want to die, I don’t want to die…”

His breath hitched, his legs faltered, and dripping blood obscured his vision. Regardless, Subaru ran on, uncaring. His sight was already lost in the profound darkness and the deep mist. He couldn’t even comprehend that blood had entered his eyes.

In the embrace of a night devoid of stars or moon, Subaru couldn’t even see his own limbs. Even as his feet pounded the ground, he couldn’t be sure he was truly running on solid earth. Perhaps, without realizing it, Subaru had long been swallowed whole by the White Whale, and was now merely moving deeper within its being, heading towards his own end in its belly.

“Hmph!”

A dangerous thought flashed through his mind, chilling him to the bone, and Subaru ran on, tears streaming down his face. He didn’t even know if the tears were from pain or despair anymore.

In the darkness, Subaru was utterly alone.

He had lost Rem, been abandoned by Otto, and even the White Whale had left him behind. No one would care for Subaru, a being who had lost all purpose.

“I don’t want to die.”

He no longer even knew why he felt that way. What was the point of being alive? What was there to gain by not dying?

He couldn’t save anyone, couldn’t protect anyone. He was useless, incapable of anything. What meaning could there be in the life of such a man?

There was no answer. He understood nothing. It was a question so vague he wasn’t even sure if an answer existed. Would the day ever come when he found it? And if it did, would he be the one to grasp it?

Were these rambling thoughts merely a self-defense mechanism, a way to distract himself from the pain and fear? Or was his own mind, still clinging to self-preservation even in such a situation, truly abominable?

Still, he ran. He kept fleeing. He didn’t know when the formidable witchbeast he had left behind, the one that swam as long as the mist remained, would pick up his scent again and reappear. Perhaps even such fear was a luxury Subaru couldn’t afford right now.

“—Huh?”

After exhausting every self-deprecating thought and running out of curses, it arrived suddenly.

He had emerged from the edge of the mist, and moonlight suddenly pierced his vision.

The abrupt end to a darkness that seemed infinite left Subaru in disbelief, yet his body continued to run. It was as if he feared this soft moonlight would vanish if he stopped.

After running for a while longer, Subaru finally clearly acknowledged that this was not a convenient delusion. With that acceptance, the sensation of blood flowing through his limbs returned, and the fact that he had survived permeated his mind.

However what welled up was not joy at having grasped life, but—

“Again… I…”

Only disappointment in himself for having clung to life once more after such a pathetic struggle. Even with the life he had so desperately craved in his hands, it brought him no emotion now. On the contrary, an unbearable guilt surged within his chest, and a forgotten sense of shame threatened to consume him.

“Rem… Rem…!”

He covered his face, continuing to shed hot, uncontrollable tears. Even knowing he had no right or value, Subaru could do nothing but call her name and try to soothe his own soul.

How much time had passed as he slumped down and continued to weep? With a slow, creaking sound, it came towards Subaru, who was huddled on the ground.

“You…!”

It was a single dragon carriage and ground dragon, stained with blood, its form distorted, approaching him unsteadily. The familiar sight was unmistakably Otto’s ground dragon. However, the young man who had pushed Subaru off was nowhere to be seen on the driver’s seat of the dragon carriage it pulled.

“Why are you… Where is he, Otto?”

The questions spilled from his lips, but naturally, there was no answer. Subaru, who had stood up, also staggered towards the approaching dragon carriage and, looking up at its terribly damaged form, noticed something.

The numerous cross-shaped daggers stuck around the driver’s seat and the traces of blood.

They had been attacked after passing through the fog. He couldn’t imagine how Otto, who had fled so frantically for his life, had faced the despair that had assailed him afterward. What had happened was clear from seeing the ground dragon moving alone like this.

“…Let’s go.”

Subaru mumbled, lifting his aching body and climbing into the driver’s seat. He kicked away the stuck blades, grabbed the nearly severed reins with his functional right hand, and mimicked what he’d seen, giving the ground dragon commands.

Unused to the feel of his master’s reins, the ground dragon looked up at Subaru with confused, clear eyes. But after seeing him repeatedly wave the reins, the ground dragon, for whatever reason, slowly began to move its feet, following the road.

Under the glow of the silver moon, the dragon carriage slowly began to move.

A pairing of those who had both lost precious things, as if licking each other’s wounds, slowly, slowly, under the stars’ mocking gaze.

Slowly, slowly, the dragon carriage continued to run.

It continued to run.

Chapter 48: Indescribable

1

The dragon carriage continued its creaking journey.

Leaning back against the driver's seat, gripping the reins in a perfunctory manner, Subaru was utterly exhausted, his consciousness hazy. Fatigue, injuries, and above all, immense mental strain weighed heavily on him.

His broken bones and cut forehead remained untreated, and his dislocated left shoulder throbbed intermittently. The sensation of his cracked teeth in his mouth was utterly repulsive, and his clothes, soiled with blood, mud, and urine, transmitted a chilling cold directly to his skin.

Why had he survived?

Even as his consciousness hovered on the edge of oblivion, Subaru pondered, not quite falling into a dream. He had been protected by Rem, lost her, abandoned by Otto, shamelessly begged for his life, even cast aside by the White Whale, and then, defenselessly, he had traversed the misty road and emerged. Beyond that, he had stumbled upon the dragon carriage and was now moving further and further down the road with a ground dragon that had lost its master.

Where was this road leading him, he wondered? And even if it led somewhere, what could he possibly do once he arrived?

He had believed that he was driven solely by the desire to protect, to save, to help. But in reality, he had merely sugarcoated the things he didn't want to see with pretty words. He had realized he was nothing but a lump of flesh, selfishly clinging to his own life.

When he left Rem behind before the White Whale and ordered Otto to turn back, had he not felt a sense of relief, feigning heartbreak when Otto protested? If even a Sword Saint couldn't defeat such an opponent, then returning would only be a dog's death. Rem wouldn't want that either. Therefore, he didn't need to go back. He didn't need to die.

He wanted to believe that he hadn't thought that way. Yet, as a matter of fact, Subaru had begged for his life before the White Whale, an entity he should have hated. He had cried and screamed that he didn't want to die, soiled himself, crawled, and fled in terror. In that moment, Rem's safety had not once crossed his mind. All he had thought about was how to desperately cling to his ridiculous and pitiful life.

Now that he had miraculously survived, there was nothing he could do with this salvaged life. He was just breathing, pointlessly consuming oxygen. For Rem to throw her life away to protect a man like him, what a foolish thing she had done.

"Even so… the most foolish one is…"

She was nowhere to be found now. The merchants who had accompanied him had also vanished, leaving Subaru utterly alone.

The ground dragon, without waiting for Subaru's instructions as its passenger, seemed to understand his unspoken wish and continued down the road. The fact that the road was moderately paved was the only evidence that this journey wasn't endless, but a path that would eventually lead somewhere.

Anywhere was fine. Just take him anywhere.

Feeling utterly resigned, Subaru finally released the reins and lay down in the driver's seat. Just above his prone form, a cross-shaped dagger he hadn't managed to remove was still lodged. It was a remnant of the Witch Cult's attack, which Otto must have encountered after passing through the fog.

Would Subaru, perhaps, meet the same fate as Otto and be attacked by the Witch Cult? Or, if he were to face such a situation again, would he once more beg for his life, just as he had with the White Whale? Even if it were Petelgeuse he faced?

"Petelgeuse."

Uttering the name softly, Subaru became aware of the emptiness in his heart. Calling the name of that madman who had brutally murdered Rem, ridiculed Subaru, and was the root of all evil, brought no ripple of emotion to his heart. Just a few hours ago, the unending rage towards that man had been the only thing giving Subaru genuine vitality. Hatred had driven his feet forward, indignation had made him hold his head high, and murderous intent had given him the will to live. Now, that tainted vitality was nowhere to be found.

Having lost even the will to kill, even his hatred, what was he doing?

"What in the world am I…?"

The wheels of the dragon carriage groaned, emitting a terribly shrill sound that grated on his eardrums. Wincing at the pain the sound caused, Subaru slowly sat up. He saw that, at some point, the ground dragon had stopped. Naturally, the dragon carriage, following the ground dragon's movement, had also ceased its forward motion, and the now motionless scenery was—

"A forest…?"

Pushing through a forest path surrounded by trees, the dragon carriage was now moving on bare earth. It must have been a while since sunrise, for when he looked up, he could feel the sunlight lightly burning his body. As he became aware of it, the warmth slowly permeated his body, and then—

"—Huh, Subaru?"

A high-pitched, rather silly voice suddenly called his name, startling Subaru. Leaning forward, he looked down from the driver's seat to the ground where the voice had come from, confirming the presence of several small figures.

"It's really Subaru!" "What's up, Subaru?" "You're filthy, Subaru!" "You stink, Subaru!"

They, too, recognized Subaru and began to point and laugh at his miserable state, their voices rising. However it wasn't a malicious, mocking laughter; rather, it was the kind reserved for close acquaintances, and—

"You guys…"

Pointed at by the familiar village children, Subaru's throat constricted. He knew these faces. He had seen them several times over the past few days. All of them had been twisted by pain and grief, faces he had only seen after they had stopped moving.

These were the smiling faces of the children living in the village near Roswaal's mansion.

Subaru stared blankly, then looked beyond the forest path, towards a hill. Seeing white smoke rising, a sign of life, Subaru realized:

He had finally arrived at the place he had so desperately yearned for, so intensely wished for.

Only when he had lost everything, despaired of everything, and given up, had Subaru managed to make it in time.

"—Subaru?" "Huh, what's wrong?" "Oh, watch out!"

The children's voices grew louder, and he could tell they were worried about him. He understood, but his head was too heavy, and he couldn't support his body anymore.

Like a taut string snapping with a sound, Subaru's consciousness, too, quietly and deeply fell, as if released from all his anguish.

"Ah, falling—"

—Falling.

2

When Subaru awoke, the first thing he saw was a familiar white ceiling.

The simple ceiling, adorned only with a crystal lamp, was unusual in a mansion filled with overly decorative rooms. It made him realize how much of an ordinary person he was for choosing this room as his own. The pillow beneath his head was still uncomfortably hard and high, and he quickly understood that he was lying in bed, loosely covered by a sheet up to his shoulders.

Regardless of how terrible his condition, Subaru's nature was such that his consciousness fully awakened almost immediately upon waking. He slowly looked around the room, confirming it was the one he had spent several days and nights in. And in the midst of that,

"—Ah."

Beside the bed, a girl sat on a chair, quietly absorbed in a book.

Dressed in a black-based apron dress, her shoulder-length hair adorned with a vibrant white prim, she was a striking figure. Her pretty, well-defined profile showed no emotion, a somewhat stiff beauty proclaiming her noble spirit both inside and out.

The moment he noticed her, Subaru sprang up, startling the girl who hadn't realized he was awake, and took her hand. Her eyes widened at Subaru's sudden action, and she stared fixedly at his face. Subaru felt a wave of relief that her face, her demeanor, her gestures, her every movement, were exactly what he had longed for.

"—Why are you touching me so casually, Barusu?"

Cold and indifferent, the sensation of his hand being shaken off, and her tone of voice, shattered his illusion. The reunion with the girl he thought he had lost was painfully revealed to be a mere fabrication the moment he noticed the girl's hair was pink. This was the twin sister, identical to the girl Subaru wanted to see, save for her hair color.

"I understand you're happy to see Ram after several days, but pouncing on me so instinctively is more brutish than manly. You beast."

Ram moved her chair away from the bed, her gaze filled with contempt. The coldness of her gaze and words revealed a clear difference from her sister, who looked so much like her. This wasn't the reunion with the one he sought, and Subaru was once again reminded of his own arrogance. Hadn't he thrown away even the desire, even the right, to wish for such a thing?

Subaru fell silent, biting his lip and looking down, causing Ram to furrow her brows in puzzlement. To her, this was merely a light jest, on par with a morning greeting. It was the start of the kind of playful banter that the usual Subaru would have met with a loud, exaggerated reaction. Yet, instead of playing along, Subaru was silent, his face grim.

"Hmph. —Please don't make Ram do things that aren't her style."

As she spoke, Ram leaned in, her outstretched hand pressing down on his head. Then, sliding her fingers through Subaru's short black hair, she began to stroke it slowly. The quiet, gentle rhythm seemed to soothe Subaru's racing heart, filled with mercy and care, causing an unexpected ripple of confusion in Subaru, who knew the girl named Ram.

"You're making a rude face, Barusu. Surprised?"

"Yeah, I'm surprised… You're the type to kick someone when they're down, aren't you?"

"There's no maid more skilled at reading the atmosphere than Ram, you know. Tormenting Barusu now would be overly malicious. I'll save it for later and unleash it then."

"Correction, you're the worst after all."

Subaru responded to Ram, who was already meticulously planning her next prank, yet he could feel on his skin that the affection hadn't left her fingertips. Despite their entirely different demeanor and words, they were indeed sisters. The quality of their compassion felt so similar that it squeezed Subaru's chest.

There was something he had to tell her, and it wasn't a conversation that could be avoided. No, it was a conversation that must not be avoided. He had to at least be able to do that much.

"Ah…"

As he fumbled for how to tell her, where to even begin, her fingers left Subaru's head, and a sound of reluctance slipped from his lips. He quickly clapped a hand over his mouth to stop it, but Ram's eyes, already glinting mischievously, were much faster. She looked at Subaru's abashed face, her eyes still sparkling, and asked,

"Did you want more?"

"I'm not a kid. I don't need it…"

He retorted, and Ram let out a rare "Hmph" through her nose. Had it really been nearly two weeks, in his perception, since he'd last seen such a gesture from her?

"You say that, looking like a child about to cry. Your stubbornness is exactly like a toddler's."

Ignoring Subaru's sentimentality, Ram shrugged and spoke condescendingly. After watching Subaru stumble over his words for a while, she said,

"Alright then, Barusu."

"—Yeah."

Subaru replied as Ram moved the chair and sat opposite him, gazing at him. Her gaze seemed to pierce through his eyes, directly into his heart. Naturally, Subaru shifted uncomfortably, and Ram paused for a beat before saying,

"—Now, I'll hear your story."

3

"It was quite a sight. One minute, an unknown dragon carriage pulls into the village, and the next, there's a half-dead, grimy Barusu. When the villagers came to the mansion to call Ram, I honestly thought it was some kind of joke at first."

Ram calmly recounted the events leading up to Subaru losing consciousness and being carried into the mansion. She pointed at Subaru, who was listening in silence.

"Your dislocated shoulder and cut forehead. Your broken ribs have been set, but they'll open up if you strain yourself. Your blood- and mud-stained clothes have been disposed of. And don't worry, I'll keep the… 'leakage' a secret from Lady Emilia."

"…Yeah, that'd be a big help."

Subaru's voice was hoarse, and Ram shrugged, a bored expression on her face. She probably intended to use this information as leverage to heap impossible demands on Subaru later, but with him in this state, that wouldn't work.

Ignoring her intentions, Subaru confirmed that his injuries were indeed healed, just as Ram had stated. His left shoulder moved without issue, though with a faint ache, and there was no discomfort in his forehead or chest. Healing magic was truly a blessing. The problem was…

"The one who healed my injuries was…?"

"Lady Emilia."

Ram stated the very thing Subaru had been dreading, without hesitation. She put her hands on her hips, prefaced it with "It couldn't be helped," and then looked at the downcast Subaru with a worried gaze.

“I asked Miss Beatrice first, but she refused. I knew there was a risk of that, as she’s a difficult person.”

“Did… Emilia say anything?”

“That’s something you should discuss with her yourself.”

Subaru, touching his still-sore shoulder, asked hesitantly, but Ram’s reply was cold. The low temperature of her gaze made Subaru’s shoulders tremble, and seeing his pathetic reaction, Ram sighed.

“Ram doesn’t know what happened between Lady Emilia and Barusu in the capital. I can guess something happened, but I haven’t heard the details. Nor am I interested. Judging by Barusu’s reaction now, you must have done something worthless, as usual.”

“That’s harsh.”

“I think it’s an appropriate assessment, wouldn’t you agree? At least for a coward who lacks the courage to broach an uncomfortable topic and instead leaps at a different subject to procrastinate.”

Ram saw right through his thoughts, snorting softly. Hit squarely by the truth and mercilessly slammed, Subaru couldn’t utter a sound.

He knew the words she was waiting for. After all, he had returned, but her presence wasn’t beside him. It was the topic that should have been brought up immediately, without a second thought. Was her silence, her waiting for him to speak, a sign of her kindness or her strictness? —Most likely, it was a gentle yet stern consideration.

He couldn’t rely on it forever. Even Subaru had that much sense. Above all, there was so much he had to talk about. So much. So, Subaru took a sharp breath, his gaze wandering, forcing himself to overcome his body’s every feminine attempt to buy time, and finally, with a choked whisper, he said:

“—Rem is dead.”

The moment he spoke, something slipped out of Subaru’s chest. It had been a heavy, suffocating lump deep in his heart, but the instant he uttered those words, it crumbled, falling into his stomach, demanding to be acknowledged.

It was only when he felt the hot sensation on his cheeks that he realized what that lump had been.

It was sorrow, regret, and a plea for a lost life. Up until now, he had only acknowledged it with his lips, but he finally accepted it, finally swallowed the unbearable truth, understanding it as it dissolved into his mind and body.

—I let Rem die.

Tears streamed down his face. And then he realized. He finally realized. Subaru had caused Rem's death countless times. This was the fourth time he had personally experienced her death, including the loops back in the mansion. It took four times of her dying for him to finally realize. This was the first time he had shed tears for her, for her sake.

Just because he cried for her didn't absolve him of his actions. He had wasted the time she sacrificed her life to create, groveled and begged for his life from the one who killed her, and then fled, even turning his back on that truth. Now that he saw his own ugliness, now that he couldn't look away and escape, at least, for her sake, who had dedicated herself to such a man—

"I… couldn't do anything. There was fog on the road… the White Whale appeared. And Rem tried to get me to escape… but all the other dragon carriages got separated too, and I was left alone in the fog… and in the end…"

He couldn't form coherent sentences. His words were choked with sobs, his speech jumbled. Excuses poured out of him, endlessly, and he felt as though it was defiling Rem's last moments. Unable to bear it, Subaru clamped his mouth shut, giving up on speaking impulsively. He had admitted his sin. Now, he would accept the punishment. For that, he needed a clear explanation—

"Who, Rem?"

—.

——.

———.

He didn’t understand what she had said.

“Huh, eh, wh… what?”

Unable to comprehend the meaning of Ram’s words, Subaru asked again, his voice sounding idiotic. Rem, who? What did that mean?

Ram looked at Subaru with an inquisitive expression, as if he were the one saying something strange, and repeated:

“Who is Rem, Barusu?”

Without even a flicker of an eyebrow at the name of her twin sister, she asked who it was.

“No, wait… Don’t be ridiculous…! She’s your, that’s your sister’s name, isn’t it?! It’s Rem, isn’t it? It’s Rem. It’s Rem!”

“Ram’s sister…”

Putting a finger to her lips, Ram closed her eyes, thinking deeply. Just that gesture, trying to remember, was already unbearably frustrating for Subaru. He wanted to shout at her, to drag her out into the fogy road right now and throw her in. After a moment of silence, she said:

“Ram’s sister, Rem. Ah…”

“You remembered?!”

Subaru jumped at the exclamation, his eyes widening as if he’d seen a ray of hope. However Ram merely nodded once at Subaru, then gave him an incredibly blank stare.

"It's impossible to remember something that never happened. Ram has always been alone. I couldn't possibly have a sister."

She stated it plainly, without any hint of teasing. Subaru shook his head at her demeanor, muttering, "That's impossible."

"What are you… saying…?"

"—Ram doesn't have a sister."

Her tone was far from someone hiding something or forcing their emotions to freeze. It was utterly cold and matter-of-fact.

—In her mind, the existence of her twin sister was truly gone, from its very foundation.

"If Rem didn't exist, then what about the commotion in the witchbeast forest?! You, Rem, and I, the Juggernaut—"

"You're truly being absurd, Barusu. Annoying as it is to admit, half of the credit for eradicating the Juggernaut's horde goes to Barusu's contribution; the rest was all Ram's efforts and Lord Roswaal's power… There's no room for some long-lost sister named Rem to slip in there."

Ram stubbornly refused to acknowledge her sister's existence, despite Subaru's protests. Even the outcome of those repeating days in the mansion seemed to have taken a different turn in her memory than in Subaru's. Subaru had run himself ragged, spitting blood, advanced with Rem, was protected by Rem, went to the forest with Ram to save her, who had rushed ahead, and burned his soul there, risking his life. Such events, which should have happened, were now painted over in her mind as false.

He didn't understand. Why was she answering that way? It made no sense.

"This isn't even a joke… Even as a nightmare, it's too poorly made…"

"Ram is always serious. It's Barusu who's dreaming, isn't it?"

"Don't you dare—!"

Enraged by Ram's unyielding attitude, Subaru threw off the sheets and got out of bed. His still-recovering body wobbled at the legs, but the uncontrollable surge of emotion made him lift his face, preventing a pathetic fall.

"Barusu, if you stand up now, you'll—"

"Shut up! Just… just watch!"

Ram reached out a hand, seeing Subaru sway. He roughly slapped her outstretched hand away, then took careful, deliberate steps. Once he was sure he wouldn't fall, he burst out of the room.

Subaru had been laid in his private room on the second floor, the one used by servants. Although there were several servant rooms, in reality, only three people in this mansion actually fit that role, so most of them were empty, unused spaces. Subaru knew that all the other rooms on the same floor were empty, so he passed their doors without a glance, as if they weren't there.

His destination was the stairwell, and he hurried towards the upper floor. Along the way,

"If you keep pushing yourself when your strength hasn't returned, you'll collapse and cause Ram trouble."

Ram, who was following behind him, called out those words, but Subaru, walking with bristling shoulders, didn't listen. He climbed the stairs much slower than usual, then went straight down the third-floor corridor of the mansion, heading for a room he had entered countless times. The third room from the west staircase on the third floor of the servant's quarters—there, the answer that should prove his feelings were neither a nightmare nor a delusion had to be.

He stood before the door, grabbed the doorknob, and pushed it open in one swift motion. No hesitation was needed. If he wasted time here, he would only give his heart a chance to become afraid. —There was no need for time to worry or waver. He burst into the room without a knock or anything, and there, a simple but modestly decorated girlish room was—

"…No way."

There was nothing.

The room he stepped into contained only a bed, neatly made in form but nothing more, and a small desk at the back of the room, just like the other rooms. Her room had indeed been simple, but that didn't mean it was this utterly featureless, generic space.

"That can't be right…!"

Subaru looked around the room, then rushed out, disbelief etched on his face. Ignoring Ram, who stood silently by the door, watching him, he poked his head into the hallway and counted. The third room from the stairwell. He couldn't have miscounted, and besides, he had been there so many times he didn't even need to count. He could get there with his eyes closed.

—So why?

"Barusu, are you satisfied now?"

She must have understood what Subaru had come to check. Ram quietly questioned Subaru, who was aghast, having found nothing he sought. Her expression was tinged with sorrow, showing a concern for Subaru that was unthinkable for her usual demeanor. It was precisely because he felt that concern so acutely that Subaru couldn't help but understand.

"Rem isn't… here…"

"—Such a person never existed in this mansion."

Ram shook her head, looking directly at Subaru, whose eyes were clouded. Then, taking a breath, she added,

"Ram doesn't have a sister."

This time, as if to deliver the final blow, she spoke those words again.

4

Subaru had been disciplining himself, believing he had a responsibility to bear for Rem's death.

Rem had sacrificed her life for Subaru. He had to bear that responsibility. And just when he was finally about to take a step forward, to accept something too heavy to carry, something he would have thrown away and run from before.

"I…"

—Did he not even have the right to beg for forgiveness?

Everything was pushing Subaru away. Everyone was leaving Subaru behind. His actions, taken for Emilia's sake, weren't accepted by her, and the chasm between them remained unbridged. Rem, who sacrificed everything for Subaru, would tragically lose her life with each repetition. And when he tried to take responsibility for that life, the world stripped even that duty from him. Time, the world, the Witches Cult, the White Whale— Every obstacle stood in the way of Subaru's desires.

Why? What was wrong? Why was the world so cold to him, and why did all his hopes betray him?

It was…

It was—

"Barusu, go back to your room."

Ram spoke to Subaru, who stood frozen, his thoughts stagnant in a daze. She moved closer, pushing Subaru's back towards the stairs.

"You must be tired; that's probably why you're confused. Go back to your room and continue your dream in bed. Ram has been called, so I have things to do. I can't keep doting on Barusu."

Even in the face of Subaru's shock, Ram's judgment was harsh towards him. She offered no comforting words about staying by his side; she simply went to fulfill her duties. With one firm push, Ram moved away from Subaru towards the opposite set of stairs. Before she left, she turned back once more and instructed, “Go back to your room and sleep.” Then, she finally departed, leaving Subaru alone in the hallway.

Wobbling, he staggered in the direction of his private room, just as Ram had told him. Perhaps, as she said, if he lay down on the bed and let his consciousness sink, he could escape this feeling of utter loneliness, as if everything was abandoning him. It must be a bad dream, he thought. It was strange to get into bed to dream while already dreaming, but if the goal was to face a dream by pursuing one, it didn’t seem like a bad idea.

Above all, if he could just shift his consciousness to sleep, he could surely bid farewell to the noise that kept swirling in his skull, over and over again. He should just run away. He had run, and run, and run and run, and made it this far. In the same way, as before, if he just ran and kept running and stumbled away—

“Running… what will that accomplish?”

Subaru murmured, his feet halting just before descending the stairs. He pulled back the foot he was about to step down, the foot that wanted to flee. He lifted his chin slightly, turning his gaze in the opposite direction from going down.

Running wouldn’t solve anything. Once again, Subaru was about to betray Rem. Why had she protected him, letting him escape from the White Whale? To allow Subaru to achieve his goal. Subaru’s goal was to keep the people in this mansion safe from the clutches of the Witches Cult. If he were to abandon that goal now and throw his consciousness into escape, then that would be—

“More cowardly than begging for forgiveness, wouldn’t it?”

He turned around, his back to the stairs he had been about to descend. This time, there was no hesitation in his steps. Subaru passed the room of the girl whose existence had been erased, and headed for the same stairs where Ram had disappeared. At the top of the stairs, in the wing accessible only from that direction, awaited the reason Subaru had returned.

He slowly ascended the stairs, carefully stepping on each riser. He climbed the spiral staircase, and at the top was a door leading to a single room. As his hand touched the doorknob, Subaru noticed how remarkably quiet his heart's beating was.

When he had burst into the lost girl's room just now, his heart had pounded. Now, it beat with a terribly quiet rhythm. He couldn't tell if it was because he was calm, or if his heart had sunken heavily past the point of pounding. But,

"Lend me your courage, Rem—"

As he spoke that name, a tiny surge of strength flowed into Subaru's hand. It moved the doorknob that had felt heavy and unyielding, gently pushing open the door that had seemed stubbornly shut. And beyond the opened door, the girl seated at the desk turned only her head to look at him.

"—Subaru?"

Hearing the bell-like voice call his name, Subaru closed his eyes. He savored the deeply inexpressible emotion that surged through his chest and entire body, and then, finally, he remembered.

—That he had returned to hear that voice of hers.

With silver hair, translucent white skin, and deep violet eyes. Her fragile beauty tinged with an air of sadness, she stood up— Emilia spoke.

"…Why did you come back?"

5

It sounded so terribly weak, and Subaru's consciousness was drawn more to the tone of her voice than the meaning of her words.

Emilia's lips trembled, and a lifeless light flickered in her eyes. Two weeks in his subjective experience, about one week in the real world— That's all the time that should have passed, yet she looked slightly smaller as she gazed at him. She seemed thinner than when he'd last seen her. Her voice and eyes were heavy with fatigue, making him wonder if she hadn't slept at all.

Emilia, seemingly driven to this state by herself, and more so by external interference. Subaru knew the reason. That's why he had come back to her. So,

"Let's go, we can't stay here."

He stepped forward, ignoring Emilia's question, and reached out his hand. Emilia's eyes widened slightly at his forceful manner, and she pulled back a little, putting distance between them. As the gap he had tried to close widened, Subaru frowned, and Emilia shook her head.

"Go…? Where? No, for what purpose?"

"Anywhere but here. If you ask 'for what purpose', I'd say 'for you', I…"

"Again with that?"

Emilia's voice was filled with disappointment. Her deep amethyst eyes shimmered faintly, and she glared up at the silent Subaru.

"You suddenly came back, covered in wounds, making me worry. — Weren't you supposed to be getting treatment from Ferris in the capital? Why are you here now?"

"A lot happened! I'd love to explain, but we don't even have that much time. Please, just listen to me. Let's get out of this mansion together…"

"I told you I can't, didn't I? I told you I can't trust you if you're like that… I told you."

Emilia stubbornly shook her head, rejecting Subaru with a trembling voice. This was a continuation of the exchange they'd had in the waiting room of the royal castle, and more than anything, it was a repetition without progress. Subaru's desperate feelings weren't reaching her, and Subaru couldn't understand why Emilia wouldn't understand his intentions. Yet,

"If you refuse, I'll drag you out by force. In a few days, you'll understand, whether you like it or not, that I was right. So…!"

"Wait, wait, Subaru. What's wrong with you? You weren't like this before. I… me, Subaru, you…"

"Just shut up and listen to me!!"

The moment he roared, Emilia's shoulders trembled slightly. Before Emilia, whose eyes widened in disbelief, Subaru gasped, still fueled by his outburst, glaring intensely at her.

"You can't stay here. You'll regret it. Absolutely. It won't help anyone. No one will be saved. I don't want to suffer anymore, and I don't want to cry!"

"What are you… talking about? Subaru, I don't understand."

"Shut up! You guys… you, you just need to do as I say! Then it'll work out. It will! Why won't anyone understand me…!"

Tearing at his hair, Subaru spewed curses, not at Emilia in front of him, but as if unleashing his resentment for all the absurdities he had faced. Subaru's angry, shouting words probably made no sense to Emilia. But for Subaru, there was no other place to vent. All the absurdities Subaru had encountered— This was something he could only let out in front of her, their starting point.

Watching Subaru plead with a tearful voice, Emilia's eyes lowered slightly. Then she whispered, "I'm sorry," before continuing.

"I don't understand what Subaru is saying. I can't understand. I want to, but I don't have the time to… There are many things I have to do, pressing in on me. So…"

"It won't work out."

Cutting off her words, Subaru crushed Emilia's thoughts with a brief statement. Emilia gasped softly, blinking repeatedly as if unable to accept Subaru's words, which were filled with nothing but malice. Looking at her, Subaru felt as if he were seeing a mirror image of himself. The empathy for having every intention and wish thwarted. It brought Subaru a terribly cruel yet sweet sensation.

"It won't work out. You're no good. You'll fail. You can't do it. You're completely useless. All talk. Unsavageable. Unsaved. You'll pile up recklessness and imprudence, and you'll see a mountain of corpses equal to their number. —That is your future."

It was a dark, ugly, vile, repulsive—pleasure.

Each word, each syllable he spoke, vibrated in her eardrums, and he could feel the pain in her expression, a crack in her heart, a blade piercing her thoughts. In that moment, all of her attention was on him. For just that fleeting instant, there was a dark joy in knowing that all of Emilia was devoted to him.

Her resolve trampled, her determination laughed at, her actions maliciously thwarted, her past mocked as futile, and her future declared utterly bleak. Watching Emilia be tormented by each of these, Subaru—

"Why?"

Emilia whispered, a faint sound.

Emilia's expression twisted in anguish from Subaru's heartless words, from the pain of having a future of only darkness foretold. But even then, her deep purple eyes never clouded. Captivated by their mysterious radiance, and seeing the world reflected within them— That is, Subaru himself, whom she was gazing at—

"Subaru, why are you crying with such a pained expression?"

—He realized that he was crying, while wearing a distorted smile.

"…"

He felt everything bounce back. Reflecting on each word that had trampled her feelings while he cried, it was clear: those were all words that weighed down on Subaru himself.

Subaru, too, had his resolve, determination, actions, past, and future denied.

He felt as though anything he did would be pointless. He also knew there was a sense of obligation, urging him to do something. No one knew why he was doing it anymore. But if he did know anything, it was that—

“I… for Rem, who sent me here… no, who brought me here… for Rem, there are things I have to do…”

“Rem?”

Subaru’s halting words. Listening to his unintelligible sentences, Emilia tilted her head at the suddenly spoken word. The way that word sounded coming from her mouth clearly showed she didn’t know its meaning, so—

“—You too.”

“Eh?”

“You’ve forget Rem too—”

Forgotten by even her twin sister, with every trace of her existence vanished, and even the person who was his reason for risking his life to return, didn’t remember her. Where would her days, her time, her thoughts, her way of life, her wishes, all disappear to then?

Those smiles, that anger, those tears, that touch, all the things that made her who she was— What would become of them?

“—Fine, I’ll tell you everything.”

The words that came out of his mouth were those of someone who had reached their breaking point.

Emilia looked surprised, her face showing a faint “Eh?” at Subaru’s words. Looking up at her face, Subaru reaffirmed the source of the feelings that had driven him this far. If her presence, her memories, were simply going to vanish into oblivion like this, then—

“It’d better to expose everything, even if it means spitting up blood.”

He made his decision. To confess everything, to tell the truth, to lay bare the depths of his heart.

Subaru’s gaze changed, and sensing it, Emilia gasped. Before her, Subaru placed a hand on his chest. His heart was pounding rapidly. It was the fear born from already understanding the outcome of what he was about to do.

It was pain. A pain so intense it could drive him mad. His heart would be toyed with, as if crushed in a hand, subjected to suffering that would never end, unable to even scream.

He thought. He also thought this:

Who cares? What does it matter? What is pain compared to this suffering?

Not being believed, not being understood. More than anything, if he had to endure the suffering of no one remembering Rem’s existence, then pain was nothing.

—Let it come. I’ll give you my heart.

“Emilia. I’ve seen the future. I know it. That’s because I… I ‘Return by De—’”

The moment he tried to confess everything, speaking the words aloud, the stagnation returned.

As anticipated, the world’s movements gradually slowed, eventually coming to a halt. Immediately, the scenery began to lose its color, and all sounds that had been there vanished. The sound of the wind, breathing, heartbeats— They receded, receded, and didn’t return. His consciousness left all five senses behind, and Subaru became isolated from the world.

—Then, as if not to leave the isolated Subaru alone, the palm of an unwanted benevolence slowly materialized.

The emerging black mist silently, yet with a gliding speed, formed the shape of an arm. Before, only his right arm had clearly taken shape. But now, even the left arm, which had appeared as if chasing it, clearly formed up to the shoulder before Subaru. Both hands approached Subaru; the left continued to caress him lovingly. The remaining right hand slid into his chest, slipped past his ribs, and reached his heart.

A soft, unsettling sensation of his heart being toyed with in the palm of a hand sent shivers throughout his body. Unlike before, when it had delivered instant, violent pain, the black mist, which literally held Subaru's life, manipulated him viciously, as if trying to break his resolve with extreme terror.

The expected pain didn't arrive, and a quiet dread began to sprout in Subaru's heart. Unlike the previous actions of the shadow, its behavior now showed a cunning intelligence, toying with Subaru. This would tear at Subaru's heart even more deeply, and the pain would manifest in a different form than before. Subaru almost screamed with his unmoving throat at the unexpected way the torment was delivered. His unmoving teeth refused. Even if pain, terror, and the unknown tormented Subaru, he would absolutely not look down.

Otherwise, it wouldn't be worth it. Otherwise, he wouldn't be forgiven. In this world where no one remembered her existence, if Subaru, who bore the responsibility for her death, was to beg for forgiveness, it could only be from his own soul.

Let all the pain and suffering come, however they wished. In return, Subaru would pour out everything he had experienced, reclaiming all that he should have gained. With that, the negotiation with the black mist would be over.

It was too grim to be mere bravado, and too much would be lost for it to be a simple decision.

But for Subaru, it was a resolute determination that had never solidified before.

—This resolve, this determination, would not be easily broken.

Staring at the black mist toying with his heart, Subaru held his breath, waiting for the impending moment. But the mist showed no sign of unleashing its malice on Subaru. Precisely because it could do it at any time, it could also refrain from doing it indefinitely. In a world where time was stagnant, if a war of attrition was waged, there was no choice but to fight until one's spirit was worn down. Even if he was hot-blooded now, unable to imagine breaking, there would come a time when he would collapse, swallowed by resignation, and wish for the end. —Such a thought was too naive.

He would endure any hardship, for hours, for days. He hadn't died so many times for nothing. If he wasn't going to die, he could endure any amount of pain. Subaru's resolve was—

"—Huh?"

Suddenly, colors began to emerge in the stagnant world. The pain that should have come ended with a mere gesture and vanished. Sound, color, and time steadily returned to Subaru, who was left bewildered.

Breathing, heartbeats, the sounds of the world starting to move again surrounded Subaru, and 'normalcy' began to prevail, as if mocking the dazed Subaru.

Uncertain of the black mist's true intentions, Subaru blinked repeatedly. But even as he wondered if it was some mistake, even as he braced himself for the stagnant world to return after blinking, the world's colors remained unchanged.

Had the black mist realized the immaturity of its actions in the face of Subaru's unyielding resolve? He almost scoffed at the idea, thinking "No way", but the possibility that his own determination had brought about an unexpected outcome prevented him from doing so.

Even now, he could still feel the sensation of the black mist's right hand softly gripping his heart. If it had squeezed, by now—

"…"

Thinking that far, Subaru suddenly had a question. He clearly remembered the right hand gripping his heart, scheming to break his spirit. During that time, where had the left hand gone, the one that had first touched his cheek, the one that had slipped from his awareness—

"—Fuh."

Before he could find the answer to his question, Emilia in front of him mumbled something.

Her voice pulled his consciousness back to reality, and Subaru remembered the rest of the words he had to speak. The quiet, unreal stillness, as if he were dreaming, caused him some confusion, but considering its impact on what Subaru was about to do, it was nothing but a positive turn.

The time constrained by what could only be called a curse, forbidding him from explaining the situation, was finally over. He would reveal everything, share the future he had gained, and this time, his actions to achieve the world everyone desired would finally bear fruit—.

"Ah."

Suddenly, Emilia's body leaned forward, collapsing onto Subaru. Instinctively, he reached out and caught her. He felt a warm, soft sensation in his palms, and Subaru was slightly unsettled—

Splatter.

"—Eh?"

Splatter, splatter, splatter.

"—Emilia?"

Splatter, splatter, splatter, splatter.

Emilia, whom he had caught, was now spitting out large amounts of blood from her mouth.

—While the right hand touched Subaru's heart, where had the left hand disappeared to?

With her face buried in Subaru's shoulder, Emilia's vomiting of blood wouldn't stop. The immense amount of fresh blood gushing out stained Subaru's body crimson, and Emilia's body grew lighter.

"Stop… eh? Wait, what?"

He tried to lift her face to stop the blood gushing out, but her weakly moving neck, her limp, hanging shoulders, her lightless eyes — They told him everything.

Vic.ll2o

—Before Subaru's eyes, Emilia was now losing her life.

"OOOOOOOOHHHHHHHHAAAAAAAAAAAAHHHH—!!!!!!"

A scream echoed. If screaming, screaming until his throat burst, could make him forget everything, then he wished his throat would be cut, torn, and ripped out right now.

In his arms, Emilia's body, her strengthless body, grew lighter. The gushing blood wouldn't stop. Subaru's body turned red, redder and redder.

—When the right hand touched Subaru's heart, the left hand had been on Emilia's.

His resolve, his determination, his actions, his past, his future, were trampled by mockery.

His firm resolve, the determination he had just solidified against being shattered, was pulverized, driving Natsuki Subaru into the abyss of despair.

—The scream trailed higher and higher, never fading.

Subaru had finally, finally…

—Killed Emilia.

Chapter 49:
The Beast of the End

1

—It was as if I'd finally squeezed out every last drop of blood, vomit, and tears from my body.

How much more do I have to cry?

How much more do I have to suffer?

Have I truly done something so unforgivable? What about my actions could have possibly displeased them so much? Why won't they just grant me a quick, merciful end?

I've been wounded, my heart trampled, precious people snatched away, those I should protect left unsaved, and the life of the most important person to me was cruelly extinguished by my own hands.

—Whose punishment is this, exactly?

"I… I…"

I was wrong. I misunderstood. I got carried away. I foolishly thought I could use the "Witch's Curse" that clung to my soul to my advantage, simply because I'd managed to turn it around once. The careless idea that I could return even if I died fueled this, leading me to underestimate the abominable existence known as the "Witch".

All of that accumulated into this horrific scene before me now.

Collapsed, with Emilia in his lap, Subaru's vacant eyes wandered. How much time had passed since Emilia's life was lost? Her body, when he touched it, had long since grown cold, and the fresh blood she'd coughed onto Subaru had also lost its warmth, turning frigid. Her soft limbs were beginning to stiffen everywhere, forcing Subaru to accept that what lay before him was an undeniable reality.

Yet, even understanding this, no reason for his emotions to stir emerged. He was just too tired. He had suffered so much already; wasn't that enough? How many people in this world had endured more suffering than Subaru? Compared to his past self, he had pushed himself unimaginably hard, and he had made countless efforts to make things right. Still, the worst could not be avoided, and calamity mocked him.

If everything he did was futile, meaningless, and pointless, then perhaps ending it all right here—

"—You look like you're about to say you're the unhappiest person in the world, in fact."

The voice, dripping with undisguised contempt, echoed as it looked down on the stunned Subaru. In the room, which should have been empty, Subaru lifted his head at what sounded like a hallucination, turning his gaze toward the entrance. His neck rotated slowly, maddeningly so. And then, finally, in his now-focused vision, a single girl stood looking at him.

She was a beautiful girl with long, cream-colored hair divided into two large ringlets, wearing a luxurious dress like one a Western doll might wear. She lived in this mansion, and in the repeating days leading up to this, she was the last person he hadn't seen, despite her supposed presence in the mansion.

"Beatrice…"

"Have you become even more of a simpleton since I last saw you, I suppose?"

Uttering the harsh words, the girl —Beatrice— crossed her slender arms and lightly lifted her chin, surveying the devastated room. Seeing the blood-soaked floor and Subaru, and Emilia submerged in a pool of blood, she said,

"You've certainly made quite the mess, in fact."

She commented on the situation with shocking nonchalance, almost with a sigh. Was that truly the only thought that came to her mind upon seeing the unmoving Emilia and Subaru holding her with such hollow eyes?

Even such a faint sense of indignation failed to well up in Subaru now. He, the very person who had caused this disaster, had no right to be driven by righteous anger, and succumbing to passion would only increase his exhaustion. In that sense, Beatrice's current demeanor, one that didn't involve questioning him with a horrified expression, was rather welcome to Subaru. It would have been even better if she would just leave him to wallow in his despair alone.

"Bubby can't come out, I suppose."

As she spoke, the girl walked closer and knelt. When the petite girl lowered herself, her head was almost at the same height as the seated Subaru's. She looked at Subaru, who remained motionless with vacant eyes, and then, still with a contemptuous gaze, pierced his profile.

"Even if I told you to look for him, you probably wouldn't listen, in fact… Perhaps you just don't want to get your hands dirty, I suppose."

Muttering in a small, reluctant voice, Beatrice reached out to Emilia, who lay on her back. Subaru vaguely thought she might do something to the deceased Emilia, but her small hand smoothly slipped into Emilia's clothes. There was no hint of magic in her fumbling hands or gestures as she searched inside; she was simply rummaging through Emilia's body.

An unspeakable discomfort arose from her actions, and Subaru began to open his mouth to reprimand her. However, his parched lips only let out a faint breath, refusing to form any meaningful words. As Subaru struggled in vain

"Found it, I suppose."

Beatrice pulled her hand from the clothing, revealing a glowing green crystal in her palm. It was a familiar sight, one of Emilia's crystal stones. It was the vessel used by her contracted spirit —Puck — which Emilia always carried with her. That crystal stone was now…

“Broken…”

“The one who broke it is being awfully innocent… Though you probably aren’t even aware of it, in fact.”

Looking sorrowfully at the stone, now split in two in her palm, Beatrice dropped it to the floor. With a faint clatter, the stone fell and sank into the blood on the floor. The sparkling green light was stained by the color of fresh blood, and its dim glow eventually vanished.

—What happened to the broken crystal stone and the spirit that should have been inside? What became of that spirit who called the girl now sleeping in his arms his “daughter” and loved her more than anyone? What was he thinking?

“Don’t worry, Bubby won’t die, I suppose. He just needs a little time to come here since he lost his vessel, in fact. —You don’t have much time, I suppose.”

Answering Subaru’s unspoken question as if it were obvious, Beatrice swept her long hair back. As he caught a glimpse of her vertical curls bouncing, Subaru felt a sense of relief. If that spirit was alive and coming to this place, then surely…

“—Do you have anything to say, I suppose.”

Subaru sighed with a terribly out-of-place sense of relief. Keeping her eyes at his level, Beatrice asked Subaru in a calm voice. The serenity of her voice made Subaru question why she showed no emotion toward the situation. But he didn’t feel like vocalizing that. Moving his mouth, Subaru’s lips formed not a question about the inexplicable Beatrice, but rather a purely selfish plea:

“Kill me.”

It was a request that took advantage of her kindness, clung to her, and disregarded her goodwill.

I wanted to die, right then and there.

I was sick of everything. Exhausted by it all. I'd been abandoned by everyone. There was no hope left in this world.

I just wanted to die. To die and end it all. Even if I could die and start over, I'd probably just end up with the same outcome. Whether I could die and start over or not, at the very least, I didn't want to be in this world anymore.

Emilia was dead, Rem had been erased from existence, and Subaru had nothing to show for it.

So,

"Kill me…"

An end was Subaru's only salvation now.

If hating the object of his hatred, or acting for the sake of those he wanted to protect, no longer served as excuses to keep his heart alive.

If he could have one wish granted, he begged to have this hopeless life pecked away.

To have this miserable, foolish body, which had trampled the dignity of lives it touched, rendered feelings meaningless, and been forsaken by everything, burned to ash and annihilated.

The girl before him, possessing supernatural power, should have been able to do it.

She probably hated Subaru, and if she were to grant his wish, she would surely give him a gruesome end, one befitting his foolish actions.

Subaru, this foolish human, hadn't changed even after dying nine times.

This would be the tenth. A nice round number. It was a good time for gods, Buddhas, goddesses, and Witch to give up on him. So, "Kill me, here."

Embracing Emilia's corpse, Subaru pleaded with Beatrice.

If this was to be his end, he wanted it to be with her corpse in his arms. His final, selfish whim, after always getting his way and ultimately causing the worst.

He tightened his grip on her, closed his eyes, and awaited his end.

Then, how much time passed in silence?

It was then that a faint voice suddenly echoed, reaching Subaru, who had selfishly fallen into a moment of calm.

"…fact."

"—Huh?"

It was a small, frail, hoarse voice.

Involuntarily, Subaru asked again, opening his closed eyelids to look up at the girl. The girl, who had been kneeling beside Subaru, stood up and looked down at him.

Hugging her small body with both hands, as if she were feeling cold, she said,

"To ask Betty to kill you… that's too cruel, in fact…"

Said with a tearful face and voice, Subaru was utterly bewildered.

He blinked, again and again, waiting for the expression on the girl standing beside him to change. However no matter how many times he repeated it, the profound sorrow in her expression remained.

It was an expression unlike any he knew of her.

She had hated Subaru, always treated him coldly, and occasionally revealed a kindhearted side that couldn't completely disregard his feelings, but he had fundamentally believed her to be capable of being utterly heartless.

Even if she wouldn't readily accept, and he might be rejected, he expected it to be accompanied by scorn and derision.

"You don't understand anything… You don't understand anything, I suppose…!"

He hadn't expected his request to be killed to be rejected with such sorrow.

"Be-Beatrice…?"

"Betty won't grant any of your wishes, in fact. If you want to die, do it yourself, I suppose… Betty refuses, in fact."

Shaking her head, Beatrice closed both eyes, her face devoid of emotion. The tears that had welled up were hidden deep within her eyes without falling, and as the girl raised her arm,

"The scenery…?!"

It began to warp.

Subaru saw the space around him distorting, cracks appearing. It felt like a premonition of the world collapsing, and in his anxiety, he instinctively hugged the cold body in his arms tighter.

Looking down at him, Beatrice muttered "You're the worst" in a voice devoid of warmth,

"Everything's already ruined anyway, but it's a problem if you stay here, I suppose. —At least, I'll protect this mansion, in fact."

"What… no, Beatrice, you…"

"—Betty is different from Roswaal, I suppose. Even if it's meant to gain a future, Betty hates all pain, all hardship, all suffering, all sadness, all fear, in fact."

An unasked question was met with an unanswering reply.

However, Subaru couldn't form words due to the poignant emotion embedded in those words, and his body was caught in the twist of the warped space. —There was no pain.

“At least, Betty wants you to die where Betty can’t see, in fact.”

Her final murmur, though feigning coldness, was accompanied by a terribly lonely smile.

He couldn’t say anything, he understood nothing. Only one thing was conveyed.

—Beatrice was saddened by Subaru’s decision, his actions.

The distortion reached its limit, and the crushed space exploded, vanishing.

A momentary sense of something like static in his vision swept through the world, and immediately after, the atmospheric distortion was nowhere to be found.

All that remained was the gouged-out, blood-stained floor, a vestige of where Subaru and Emilia had been.

Standing beside the empty space where the two had been, Beatrice put a hand to her forehead as if tired, covering her eyes with that hand, hiding herself from the world.

“—Mother, how much longer does Betty have?”

3

The rift in space spat Subaru out onto a pile of moss-covered, tangled vegetation.

“Bwaugh!”

He plunged face-first into it without warning, tasting grass in his mouth before lifting his head. Hastily, he spat out dirt, leaves, and a bug caught on his front teeth.

“Ugh, bleh, hah… Where is this…?”

Shaking off the repulsive sensation of a bug crawling on his cheek, Subaru furrowed his brow as he looked around.

His vision was filled with a cluster of dim trees, and after a full rotation of his head, there was no sign of their continuous line breaking. In other words,

“A forest… At night…”

Fortunately, the moonlight wasn’t completely obscured, allowing him to barely see.

A world dominated by the rustling of leaves in the wind and the chirping of insects could only be a twilight forest. As he realized this, Subaru understood that half a day had passed since he expected to wake up in the mansion.

At the same time,

“Is it safe to assume this is some kind of spatial transfer…?”

The atmosphere had warped, he’d been thrown into the resulting rift and flung into the forest.

Unless this was some kind of hidden garden stage within the mansion, it was safe to assume he’d been transferred somewhere far away. If Beatrice was the one who did it, she possessed the power to connect her library and other room doors as she pleased.

However, even if he understood that, her true intentions remained a mystery.

She had refused Subaru's plea to kill him and forcibly sent him outside the mansion via spatial transfer. Her tearful face still lingered in his mind.

He had thought that if she refused, she would simply abandon him, unable to even bear the sight of him. Yet, she had looked at Subaru as if she were disappointed—

"Then, it's almost as if…"

…she had been expecting something from him.

Subaru shook his head, dismissing this as an overly self-centered and egocentric thought.

He already understood and accepted that he was a jinx, capable of nothing. The world was hopelessly merciless, and everyone he tried to save met a brutal end.

What could anyone expect from Subaru, knowing this yet being unable to stop it?

If he couldn't expect anything from himself, then no one else could possibly expect anything from him.

Moreover, to demand it even from someone who supposedly hated him was simply "arrogance" gone too far.

"I'm hopeless, aren't I…?"

With a desolate smile, Subaru slowly bent his knees. Then, his movements felt sluggish, and he realized, far too late, the horrifying truth.

Emilia's corpse was still resting on his lap, just as it had been in the mansion room.

“Emi…lia…”

In the dim world, her pale face was faintly illuminated by moonlight.

Her death mask showed neither agony nor peace, but simply the confusion of not understanding what had happened. She had been alive, and her heart had suddenly been crushed in a world where time had stopped. It was doubtful if she even had time to comprehend the pain.

However, even if she hadn’t felt pain, he couldn’t believe it was a salvation.

Subaru had little experience with instant death, but he had died about nine times more than the average person. He didn’t want to believe that any of those deaths were peaceful, nor did he think death would be a salvation. —Except for himself now, that is.

“I’m sorry. I’m sorry, I’m sorry, truly… I’m sorry.”

As he looked down at her face, droplets fell onto her pale cheek.

Tears he had believed to be dry welled up again, once more forcing an unending torment upon Subaru.

He heard voices. Voices accusing him. Everyone he had ever met hurled cold, angry insults at him.

Among them were the silver-haired girl and the blue-haired girl—

“Someone… anyone, please…”

—Kill me.

Enduring the ceaseless insults, Subaru picked up Emilia in his arms and stood up.

He then began to walk slowly through the night forest, trampling grass and breaking branches.

In the distance, he heard the howling of a beast.

Now, he felt like he could accept meeting that black witchbeast with horns. He wanted it to tear apart his flesh and mana, to utterly devour him and kill him.

A beautiful death like Emilia's was unfitting for him now.

He wanted to be killed horribly, trampled until he lost all human form, all dignity.

Otherwise, unless that happened, Natsuki Subaru would never be saved.

4

As he walked through the forest, Subaru realized something.

"Here… across this ditch, and then…"

He carefully descended a slope, using exposed roots like steps. The handicap of being unable to use his arms was draining his energy more than expected, yet strangely, he felt no fatigue.

His body, pushed beyond its limits, seemed to suppress any cries of pain, and his worn-out mind sharpened his focus. Navigating the dark night, using only his lower body, was effortless; his vision, which should have been unable to see even a few meters ahead, was as clear as if illuminated.

This wasn't just because Subaru's body was exerting itself like a flame about to burn out. Simply put, it was a familiar path.

There it was—

"Ah, you're here."

A smile, one of misplaced relief or perhaps resignation, formed on his lips.

It was the mad grin of someone stained with blood and worn down mentally. An ominous smile that would make anyone witnessing it recoil in disgust and choose to flee.

However those it was directed at were accustomed to such madness.

—Subaru was surrounded by a group cloaked in black garments, blending into the darkness.

They emerged from the shadows of the forest, encircling Subaru silently, without a sound, their very presence fading as they stared intently at him.

Bathed in their gaze, devoid of any discernible intention—neither hostility nor benevolence, malice nor goodwill—Subaru recalled the world where he had first encountered them.

Yes, back then—

"It's the same…"

As if echoing his memory, the black-robed figures all bowed their heads in unison.

It was the first sign of "respect" they had shown Subaru, despite their previous lack of discernible will.

Subaru didn't understand the specifics of why they directed such an emotion at him. What was clear was that they were Witch Cultist, and the darkness that clung to Subaru had some connection to this 'Witch'.

"—Move."

He thought he had so many questions he wanted to ask.

Before he had surrendered to this utter resignation, there would have been countless things he wanted to demand answers to. But now, even such sentiments were merely useless burdens.

At Subaru's terse command, the black-robed figures retreated smoothly without protest, sinking back into the darkness.

As their presence vanished from his sight, the already silent world seemed to become even quieter.

He realized he could no longer hear the chirping of insects or the rustling of wind.

Was it as if all living things detested them? He remembered that even in previous iterations, when the Witch Cult appeared, not a single insect sound could be heard.

Perhaps it meant that the presence of the Witch Cult —Subaru's presence alongside them— was a despicable situation. —That seemed like a fitting assessment for him now.

The non-obstacles vanished, yet their presence had given Subaru certainty.

The slight hesitation in his steps completely disappeared, and Subaru's progress, stepping over roots and treading on soil, was unstoppable.

His path eventually led him out of the forest and onto a rocky area with sheer cliffs.

—There, a cave, its entrance blocked by a large boulder, awaited.

"We've been expecting you. Disciple of Love."

A gaunt man, sporting a mad grin that mirrored Subaru's own, greeted him.

5

"Oh my~, oh my? Is that, by any chance, the… half-elf girl you're holding in your arms?"

Petelgeuse tilted his head, looking at Emilia in Subaru's arms as he stepped on the grass. With his head still tilted parallel to the ground, he gleefully stuck out his tongue, drooling.

"To think she lost her life before even undergoing the ordeal… What misfortune! What a tragic end! Ah! And, and, and… how diligent you are! Before we even moved! To take the half-elf's body! Her life! From her!"

Petelgeuse swung his arms, dramatically shouting about Emilia's death.

Subaru noticed that, at some point, cultists had crawled out of the cave and surrounded them, all intently listening to Petelgeuse's madness.

He was insane.

"Me… diligent…?"

"Yes! That's right! Diligent! Ah, how wonderful! Unlike us, who are slow to judge, dull in wisdom, and lacking in the resolve to act! You are the first to embody the Witch's will!"

Hearing Subaru's faint murmur, Petelgeuse laughed gleefully and rushed towards him, sliding to his knees and slamming both hands onto the dirt. "Compared to that!" he cried,

"How slow, foolish, and deficient I and my fingertips are! Ah! Forgive me! Forgive this unworthy body that cannot repay love! Forgive this unfaithful body that is slothful! Please, please forgive this deficient one who cannot respond to the love you bestow…!"

Tears streamed down Petelgeuse's face as he repeatedly slammed his arms against the rock face, drawing blood.

Despite the violent self-mutilation, with blood splattering and bone visible through the torn skin of his wrists, his frenzied actions didn't stop. Far from stopping him, the surrounding cultists knelt in imitation of Petelgeuse, each beginning to express their apologies to the being they worshipped in their own way.

Subaru felt nothing, even witnessing the madness of these lunatics.

Before, just a day ago, Subaru would have rushed to take Petelgeuse's life without a second thought.

Now, seeing the man he should have hated right before him, no emotion stirred within him, and his desire remained unchanged.

"Ah, what can I do for you, who have accomplished the trial in place of this unworthy one who cannot repay that person's feelings? I want you to tell me. What can I do to show my love, to prove that I am not slothful?"

"Kill me."

To Petelgeuse, who was pressing in, weeping and pleading, Subaru quietly uttered those words.

Thrown such an abrupt statement, even Petelgeuse's expression showed astonishment—

"Is that all you wish for?"

—He didn't show it, and without hesitation, he shoved Subaru.

Petelgeuse watched Subaru stumble back, then formed an ecstatic expression.

"Ah, how wonderful, how wonderful, wonderful, wonderful, wonderful! How diligent I am, to immediately bring salvation and love to a faithful follower who has completed the ordeal and seeks salvation! Ah, I will not be slothful! My thanks to you! My love to my diligence!"

Without any doubt about Subaru's desperate answer, without any remorse for his own actions, and without a single waver in the laws of this world, Petelgeuse unleashed his murderous intent.

Seeing the madman's form, Subaru closed his eyes, a turmoil stirring within him.

—With this, at least, Subaru's desire in this moment would be fulfilled. So,

"Even so,"

Petelgeuse muttered something to Subaru, who felt the approaching murderous intent on his skin.

"To not even overcome a single trial, and moreover, to not even face one of the great sins, to harbor such a grand ambition only to stumble on the first pebble…”

That was,

“—Ah, you were truly ‘ Slothful‘!”

That was an insult to Emilia’s death.

“…”

The moment he opened his eyes, Subaru saw a black mist in the shape of a palm looming before him.

For a moment, memories of pain flashed through his mind, chilling him to the bone. There was one difference from that time: his body moved. His legs moved. His arms moved. Therefore, he could dodge.

Dodging the slowly approaching black palm, Subaru, still holding Emilia, leaped sideways. The palm, having overshot, vanished as if bewildered, and Subaru, following it with his eyes, exhaled roughly. Then,

“…You, did you see the Unseen Hand just now?”

With a trembling voice, his gleaming eyes wide open, Petelgeuse looked at Subaru.

He put his thin, twig-like fingers into his mouth and bit them off one by one. With each one, a sickening sound of flesh bursting and bone cracking echoed, and as blood dripped,

“No, no. This is wrong, mistaken, incorrect, erroneous. My authority, the authority of ‘Sloth’, my ‘Unseen Hand’ granted by favor! It is not permitted for others to see it!!”

Spitting blood, chewing on the fragments of nails and bone remaining in his mouth, Petelgeuse turned his bloodshot eyes on Subaru.

There was unmistakable murderous intent gleaming there, distinctly different from the fanatical emotions he had displayed before. What was contained within was purely a murderous intent stemming from hatred towards Subaru's very existence

.

—Suddenly, black arms erupted from behind Petelgeuse as if gushing forth.

Petelgeuse's shadow split, forming multiple palms, numbering seven in total. They were strikingly similar to the cursed arms that appeared when Subaru tried to reveal "Return by Death", the sight of them sent shivers of terror down Subaru's spine.

But,

"If I can see them…"

…I can dodge them.

The black arms were not particularly fast. Their terrifying aspects were their long reach and their strength to tear a human body apart, but what was fundamentally terrifying was their 'invisibility'.

Now, with that invisibility rendered ineffective, they couldn't reach Subaru, who, as a burnt-out husk of a life, was exhibiting abnormal physical abilities.

"Why, why, why, why, why, why, why, why, why, why, why… Can you dodge them?! Can you see them?! This is mine… Only mine…!!"

"I just decided I don't want to be killed by you."

Subaru spun around to dodge a palm, then leaped forward to avoid another reaching finger. He immediately ducked to avoid arms closing in from both sides, then rolled in close to Petelgeuse.

He savored the sight of the madman's distorted expression of shock, a dark pleasure cheering within him.

—He remembered. He had intended to kill this man.

"—Bu-gah!"

With a leap, he plunged headfirst, delivering a headbutt to Petelgeuse's nose. Petelgeuse, caught off guard, reeled back, scattering blood, and Subaru, feeling a sharp pain in his forehead, flew backward.

His vision, blurred by the blood dripping from his forehead, saw the palms flailing wildly, losing their precision. His front teeth must have hit, cutting his forehead. The profuse bleeding obscured his right eye for a fleeting moment.

—Seizing that opening, Subaru's body was thrown, using his grabbed leg as a pivot.

The moment he was slammed against a large tree, Subaru didn't cower; instead, he held Emilia's body tightly in his arms.

Not clinging, but protecting.

"—Gwah!"

He crashed hard on his back, feeling as if his spine had snapped.

Multiple ribs simultaneously gave way, and several of his recently healed wounds burst open all at once, initiating a chorus of intense pain. Subaru convulsed like an insect on the ground where he fell.

"How pathetic! How utterly pathetic! Ah, good. Truly good. If I were to remain 'Slothful' like this, my actions would be in vain. Ah, indeed, I must diligently, strive for love…"

"Shut up, you idiot…"

Subaru hurled insults at the madman who was about to loudly mock his own superiority.

His breathing sounded abnormal, and he felt severe damage to his lungs. The pains in his abdomen competed to be the worst, and his consciousness flickered white.

Even so, Subaru smiled, blood trickling from the corner of his mouth.

“What love, you fool. The ‘love’ you supposedly received… I can see it too, can’t I? …You’ve been cheated on, serves you right.”

“What are you! Saying… Saying, saying, saying, saying, saying, saying… My brain, my brain is trembling, trembling, trembling, trembling, trembling, trembling, trembling, trembling!”

Foaming at the mouth, Petelgeuse raged.

He walked right up to Subaru, then kicked Emilia, still held in Subaru’s arms, forcefully away from him.

His fingers lacked strength, and Subaru couldn’t hold onto Emilia as she was kicked away.

Emilia rolled, hitting tree roots and coming to a stop. With a cruel sneer, Petelgeuse looked at her body out of the corner of his eye and then,

“You will not be forgiven for insulting my love! Ah, I’ve decided, I’ve decided! The half-elf who was to be given the ordeal has perished, but the sins of those who basely sheltered and supported her remain!”

Shouting, spewing out nothing but displaced anger, Petelgeuse stomped on Subaru. He crushed Subaru’s palm with his heel, and a black palm squeezed Subaru’s neck, preventing him from screaming.

His breathing cut off, his upper body lifted by a strength that threatened to tear his neck itself, Subaru, his core bones shattered, couldn’t even utter a sound from the intense pain.

Petelgeuse’s expression seemed somewhat relieved at Subaru’s state.

“First, I will eradicate all those connected to the mansion, then I will offer the lives of the nearby villagers. Leaving nothing behind, sloppiness is a sign of ‘Sloth’. I and my fingertips, who hold diligence supreme, will take everything, and bring everything down. —The road has already been blocked! No one can cross the fog and interfere!"

Spitting saliva in his excitement, Petelgeuse ranted at Subaru.

Then, he said "Before that," and breathed his foul breath onto Subaru,

"You seemed to be holding her very preciously… If I destroy that half-elf's body, how wonderfully will she scream?"

Petelgeuse tilted his head, twisted his lips, and his eyes gleamed with curiosity. From behind him, five more arms, separate from the one strangling Subaru, rose and moved independently towards Emilia's corpse.

Each grasped a limb, and her neck, in its palm.

"Can you see? Do you understand what is about to happen?"

"…St-Stop…!"

The terror that now assailed Subaru was precisely because he could see.

He vividly remembered what that man's black arms had done to Rem's body when they were invisible. Now, that was being directed at Emilia's body.

Subaru's view of life and death was a dry one. A body that had lost its life was merely a lump of flesh, with no possibility of a soul residing within it. Heaven and hell surely didn't exist; after death, only darkness awaited.

He had lived with such a dry view of life and death, thinking "I'm so cool", and he hadn't changed his mind even after arriving in this world.

He regretted that now.

Even if her soul didn't reside in her body, that body was Emilia. His soul couldn’t help but cry out in sorrow at its desecration.

However now, Subaru had no power to stop it, and Petelgeuse deepened his mad grin even further.

“—What are you doing?”

The voice suddenly descended as if from the heavens, landing on the eardrums of everyone present.

“—!”

Petelgeuse’s expression changed, and his gaze wandered, searching for the source of the voice.

So much power, and such a chilling, sharpened anger, were contained within that voice.

Indeed, Petelgeuse, sweeping his gaze around, found it.

A moment later, Subaru, enduring the pressure on his neck, also saw it in his blurred vision.

“I repeat.”

—Accompanying an immense quantity of icicles that seemed to cover the sky, there was a cat with gray fur.

His ragged breath turned white, and a chilling cold that froze the world swept through the forest.

The black-robed figures, still kneeling, and Petelgeuse, who had been grinning madly, were struck speechless.

“What are you doing to my daughter— You lowlifes?”

—The beast of end, staining the world white, had now come to end the world for the tenth time.

Chapter 50:
Where Sin Lies

1

Ever since coming to this world, Subaru had experienced death countless times, in myriad forms.

Considering that for most living beings, life is a one-shot, all-or-nothing game, Subaru, who had already gained his tenth challenge, was a seasoned veteran when it came to “death.” He possessed a sharpened sense that only he could perceive, a sense born from his forced, involuntary familiarity with death.

—It was the ability to clearly sniff out the distinct scent of impending death.

“Look at you all, doing as you please.”

The voice, accompanied by a bone-chilling pressure, rained down from the sky. As Subaru looked up, icicles floated, covering the sky, their sharp tips pointing downwards. A tiny shadow commanded these freezing blades.

He squinted, and only then, with conscious effort, could he discern that it was a cat-like creature with grey fur. However, it was an unusual sight, standing upright on two legs, its short arms stretched out and clasped together, its unusually long tail swaying, and a pink nose.

Faced with this being that spoke human words, Petelgeuse and the Witch Cultists were struck speechless. And Subaru, also collapsed on the ground, felt his throat seize up from a different kind of shock.

It was the first time he had witnessed this being, a spirit, acting with such overt rage. And he could feel the world dying from the aftershocks of that anger alone.

"…Puck."

The air around the floating spirit —Puck— turned a white mist, and the surrounding forest began to crackle and transform. Trees turned from green to white, their leaves, branches, and trunks freezing over, their mana drained as they withered and fell. The same effects began to appear on the ground: first the grass and plants died, then the soil, and finally, its chilling touch extended to Subaru and the Witch Cultists who lay on that very soil.

His skin tingled, and a burning pain spread throughout his body, like a scald. A gradual feeling of exhaustion welled up from deep within him, even breathing became a chore, and his consciousness began to drift. Mana collection— Subaru was familiar with it, the debilitating feeling caused by a spirit's forced mana extraction. What Puck, now enraged, was doing on a global scale was the very same thing that had once been done only to Subaru.

Indeed, in Subaru's vision, as he stifled a groan, Petelgeuse stumbled backward, sweat beading on his forehead, and the kneeling cultists gasped for air like fish out of water. Puck looked down at their state and let out a soft "Hmph" from his adorable nose.

"The Witches Cult, huh? Even after four hundred years, you haven't changed at all. In every era, you always do the things that grieve me the most."

With that, his black eyes moved, and Puck's gaze fixed on a single spot in the forest. Following his gaze, Subaru saw that there was a sole area unaffected by Puck's mana drain. While the entire surroundings were frozen and dying, there was a patch of green left untouched. —It was where Emilia's body lay, leaning against the roots of slender trees.

"Ah, my poor Lia. …You died without understanding anything, didn't you?"

The voice, which had been deliberately devoid of inflection, now carried an undeniable hint of sorrow. After gazing at Emilia sadly and forlornly, Puck slowly turned his eyes to the survivors present.

“The sin of taking my daughter’s life is grave. Not a single one of you shall return alive.”

“What does a mere spirit, what, what, what, what, what, what, what are you talking about?! A half-devil who failed the ordeal is nothing but a filthy impurity! Your ‘Sloth’ for failing to protect that foolish girl is what should be condemned! Ah! Ah! Ahhh! My brain, trembles, trembles, trembles, trembles!!”

Petelgeuse spat, looking up at the sky and extending both hands towards the threatening Puck. His bloodshot eyes darted erratically, and Petelgeuse’s murderous intent swelled. Even knowing the spirit’s immense power, Petelgeuse chose to resist. This wasn’t a choice born of bravery. For him, the distinction between strong and weak was utterly meaningless.

Because,

“All phenomena, all possible phenomena are recorded in the Gospel! The Witch loves me! Therefore, before my diligence, which repays her love! You lazy ones have no means of resistance!”

—Love, death, love, depart.

For Petelgeuse, his faith in the Witch was nothing less than an act of repaying her love, and he firmly believed that only demonstrating his love for the Witch through his actions was the absolute truth of the world. All actions demonstrating love for the Witch took precedence, and anyone who dared to impede such actions would be shattered before that love. —For his love for the Witch surpassed all.

“The half-devil died! You, too, shall receive the recompense for your sloth! Perish for the Witch’s favor! For the love that makes your heart tremble!”

Waving his arms and howling, Petelgeuse stamped his foot. Puck’s eyes, looking down at Petelgeuse’s madness on the ground, remained utterly cold. It was a clear, penetrating gaze, not one of pity or anger, but one that saw no value in the target. And as he bathed in that gaze, Petelgeuse reached for his head, an exaggerated gesture to draw attention, and behind him, the kneeling figures in black began to move—

“Die.”

—The raining ice blades mercilessly pierced the backs of the black-clad figures, bursting from their stomachs and pinning them to the ground, ending their lives. Like insects impaled for display, their torsos and limbs were pierced and tethered to the earth, and the black-clad figures died without a single cry of agony. The ice stakes embedding their wounds rapidly spread freezing erosion through their impaled bodies, leaving a row of grotesquely posed ice statues in the forest.

Without a single preparatory movement, Puck took nearly twenty lives in an instant, his gaze unwavering. But Petelgeuse, hand still on his head, watching him from the corner of his eye, was equally unmoved. He paid no heed to his followers, who had moved at his command and literally become stepping stones. He used the fleeting moment when Puck’s attention shifted from him.

“—My brain, trembles.”

The moment Subaru saw Petelgeuse’s lips contort into a sinister grin, he watched as Petelgeuse’s shadow exploded outwards. From his fallen, ninety-degree tilted perspective, Subaru saw countless black hands shoot out from Petelgeuse’s shadow, rushing towards Puck floating in mid-air.

Black hands that, given his true power, Puck should undoubtedly be able to avoid. Yet, Puck, with his arms crossed, seemed utterly unconcerned by their approaching threat. —He couldn’t see them.

“Puck—!”

“Stay quiet, Subaru. —You’re different.”

Puck calmly told Subaru, who was trying to warn him of the danger. Interrupted by his voice, Subaru’s warning didn’t reach the spirit, and the approaching hands gripped his small body, enveloping him.

"Hmmph?"

Puck's tiny body was small enough to be covered by a single adult's hand. When seven black hands reached him, his body was completely obscured from Subaru's view. Moreover, each of those hands possessed enough power to easily tear a human body apart. Even as a spirit, what would become of him under such physical force—especially since the owner of those black hands was the Witch Cult fanatic, Petelgeuse?

"Carelessness! Negligence! That is Sloth! You should have finished me off immediately! Despite your power, you failed to do what was necessary. That is what brought about this result !!! !!"

The "Unseen Hand", visible only to Subaru, crushed Puck's enveloped body. Within that densely packed, black mass, the spirit's body was about to be obliterated by the malicious force—

"Pointless."

The next moment, the black mist instantly blew away, and Subaru saw.

"It's too soon for you to invoke the Witch's name with this level of power— four hundred years too soon. If you truly intend to kill me —"

Trees snapped under the excessive strain, and a long tail swung amidst the fallen timber. The frozen remains of the black-clad figures shattered into countless pieces, and the front paws that caused it turned the ground they touched into a world of absolute zero. His quiet breath alone was equivalent to a blizzard, and the golden eyes glowing brightly within the white mist looked down upon the dying land with merciless light.

Why stood there was—

"—Show me half of what Satella could do, a thousand shadows extended."

A grey-furred, cat-like quadruped, its massive body spanning the forest. It was the majestic manifestation of the lord of ice, the one who had once brought down the mansion in another world and driven Subaru to his death.

2

The grey beast, transformed into a colossal figure that truly looked down upon the world, swelled with a cold so intense it painted vision white, making it painful even to keep one's eyelids open.

"…"

Despite the faint pain, Subaru's consciousness was no longer there. He simply stared, dumbfounded or perhaps awestruck, at the beast that was too massive to fit into his vision without looking up, unable to utter a sound.

"What…?"

A trembling voice suddenly echoed in the freezing world. The tremor in the voice wasn't due to the piercing cold. The speaker himself, like Subaru, wouldn't have the luxury of thinking about the cold.

"What have you brought forth, you?!"

It was Petelgeuse who screamed, shaking his head as he looked up. His parched lips split vertically from the recent shriek, a trickle of red blood oozing out—but even that froze instantly, stanching the flow. With a wind that threatened to prevent his eyes from opening again if he dared to blink, Subaru replayed Petelgeuse's scream and looked up at the beast once more.

No matter how much he pondered, there was only one answer to Petelgeuse's words. That is,

"Is that you… Puck?"

"You can't tell just by looking? Though that's a mean thing to say."

In response to Subaru's faint question, the massive grey beast moved its enormous mouth. Each word brought a gale, and the giant beast, without smiling, confirmed Subaru's question with sarcasm. At the same time, Subaru understood something.

—Why he had died the way he did, at the very end of the last loop.

“Impossible.”

Ignoring Subaru’s silence, Petelgeuse squeezed out the words. He put his fingers into his mouth one by one, biting off their tips without hesitation, as if trying to forcibly cling to his consciousness fading in the cold.

“Impossible, impossible, impossible, impossible, impossible, impossible, impossible! A mere! Spirit! A mere spirit! It’s impossible for it to possess such… such power! Such power is…”

“—Echidna.”

“…”

Foam of blood spilled from the corner of his lips, and Petelgeuse, who had been wide-eyed, stopped moving. Interrupting the madman’s words of denial was a word Puck whispered. The moment Petelgeuse heard what sounded like a name, he clamped his mouth shut.

“If you’re from the Witch Cult, you’ll understand the meaning of that name, won’t you?”

As if to prod Petelgeuse’s frozen thoughts, Puck posed a question. Petelgeuse’s reaction was dramatic. There was the sound of something hard cracking, and Petelgeuse spat something out. What he spat out was a white fragment—a back tooth, broken from being ground too hard. And then,

“Filthy…!”

Glaring at Puck with bloodshot eyes, Petelgeuse drooled blood from his mouth, staining his jaw and the collar of his cassock crimson, he continued,

“It’s abominable to even speak that name! Ah! You foolish, pathetic, lazy one who knows no fear! In front of me! In front of us, the Witch Cult! To utter the name of a fallen Witch other than the Witch of Envy, Satella…!!”

Perhaps capillaries had burst, for Petelgeuse’s blood-stained eyes were a deep crimson. Tears of blood streamed from the corners of his eyes, and the madman, spitting bloody foam, pointed his mangled hand at Puck,

“It’s nothing less than an insult to our faith, our love! The time we’ve devoted!”

“—A human, barely a few decades old, shouldn’t speak of time to a spirit.”

Puck said coldly to the stomping Petelgeuse, his golden eyes glowing. That alone stopped Petelgeuse, who had been shivering in madness. No, he hadn’t stopped consciously. He was being forcibly frozen from his feet up.

Lying down, in his hazy vision, Subaru watched his hated enemy succumb to death. Petelgeuse, freezing, must have also realized his end was near. Facing his death, he looked up at Puck with glittering eyes,

“The depth of faith has nothing to do with time! Because you possess time equivalent to infinity, you waste most of it uselessly. Don’t lump us in with lazy people like you! Ahhhhhhh, my brain, trembles, trembles, trembles, trembles, trembles, trembles, trembles, trembles!”

Even facing his demise, Petelgeuse’s fanaticism showed no wavering whatsoever. To Subaru, who knew the horror of “death”, the absolute phenomenon, better than anyone, Petelgeuse’s attitude was truly deranged. To maintain his composure like that in the face of death—that was truly proof of pure madness.

“Death isn’t even a punishment. —That’s why I hate you people.”

“The ordeal have been fulfilled! Eventually, my body will reach the venerable Witch and join her ranks. …Ah, I look forward to that time…yes!”

Spreading his arms and looking up at the sky, Petelgeuse let out a cackling laugh. The blizzard intensified, the wind dyeing his emaciated body white, and gradually his voice and movements slowed, then began to fade. Even so, Petelgeuse did not stop laughing, and until his cackles finally ceased, his expression remained one of pure, almost joyful, madness.

"—You got away with it, didn't you?"

Muttering, the grey beast swung its front paw, shattering Petelgeuse's ice statue. With a single strike, his upper and lower body separated, and the upper part, falling to the ground, crumbled under the crushing weight from above. His remaining lower torso was lost among the fragments of the black-clad figures that had shattered earlier, his demise beyond doubt.

—Just as Puck said, even in death, his will could not be broken.

Witnessing his hated enemy shatter and their life brutally extinguished, Subaru felt only an overwhelming emptiness in his chest. This was the man he had hated so much, the man he had wanted to kill. He had believed that Petelgeuse's existence was the root cause of everything, the eye of all problems. If only he could kill that man, everything would surely go well, he thought.

But what was the result?

Petelgeuse was defeated, and the threat of the Witch Cult could be considered removed. However, Rem, whose presence should have shared in this joyful outcome, had vanished from the world, and Emilia, with whom he should have reconciled with good news, Subaru himself had allowed to die. Subaru himself had abandoned responsibility in the face of their deaths, tried to throw away his own life but couldn't even do that, and his foe was vanquished by another avenger—yet his spirit remained unbroken. In the end, he had accomplished nothing. That was the only outcome of this ordeal.

"Now then—"

As Subaru reeled from his powerlessness, Puck, who had silently witnessed Petelgeuse's end, looked down at Subaru. Realizing anew that this giant beast was Puck, Subaru keenly felt his immense power. Earlier, when the knights and wise men in the royal capital had trembled in fear upon seeing Puck, Subaru had watched as if it were someone else's problem, but now—

"Shall we talk?"

—Now, he understood their feelings all too well.

His consciousness was hazy from the cold. All signs of the pain that had raged within him had vanished, and he felt no sensation from his injured spine, broken ribs, or internal organs pierced by bone fragments. He was hearing the quiet footsteps of approaching death. Before those silent, dark steps, trivial sensations like pain receded into the distance. But,

"If you think you can simply disappear, you're gravely mistaken."

"—Gah!!"

In the cold, his eyelids, which had been closing under an enveloping drowsiness, jolted open as the pain he thought had receded now burned with an incredible heat. His throat seized up in agony, and when Subaru looked at the afflicted area that cried out in pain, he saw that his right leg from the knee down had been repeatedly stabbed by thin ice needles.

The information of the wounds, received visually, traveled to his brain, and his hypersensitive brain correctly transmitted the pain throughout his body. Blood burst in the back of his eyes, and his vision turned crimson. This wasn't just "painful". It transcended pain; it was a living hell manifesting in his body.

"Subaru, you've committed three sins."

Looking down at Subaru, who writhed and screamed in agony, the grey beast continued speaking as if nothing were amiss. Despite his gigantic size, with a mouth full of sharp fangs, and even a changed voice, the fact that his tone remained the same was terrifying. As Subaru's mind raced with pointless thoughts, trying to distract himself from the torment, Puck swung his long tail, toppling the frozen trees.

“First, your break your contract with Lia. You seem to lack understanding of how heavy a promise is for a spirits arts user. Carelessly breaking that contract, and how much that hurt Lia’s heart… you probably don’t even know.”

As the last word of his sentence was uttered, the tip of his left foot was pierced next. The tip of an icicle, having entered through the sole of his foot, emerged from his knee, and the ice stake, still embedded in Subaru’s body, branched out, agitating muscle fibers and nerves, bursting pink flesh from the inside.

—The pain dominated his brain. He couldn’t see, couldn’t hear, couldn’t understand, didn’t want to know. It hurt, it hurt.

“Second, ignoring Lia’s request and coming back. Without that, the Witch Cult would have waited a bit longer, and there would have been more time before the fog appeared. If not for that, perhaps some things could have been saved.”

Just like the black-clad figures, Subaru’s outstretched hands were pinned from above by icicles. What was different from their complete freezing was that the icicles, revealing sharp cross-sections, remained impaled through the backs of his hands and moved towards his elbows—the middle of his arms, from wrist to bicep, was cleanly severed, flesh, bone, blood vessels, and nerves exposed to the air.

“And third, letting Lia die.”

All his wounds simultaneously froze, and the pain that had been grinding away at Subaru’s soul suddenly receded. The crimson pain, like nerves immersed in magma, was abruptly snatched away, and Subaru, having forgotten how to breathe, convulsed his lungs and throat, desperately gasping for air.

He gasped for a while, finally getting the hang of breathing. As his lungs expanded and oxygen permeated his entire body and brain, his consciousness slowly began to return. He had thought before that suffering, despair, and pain were lesser than “death”, but now that thought was nowhere to be found.

“Pain”, “death”, and “fear”— All these things that humans abhor— All possessed the power to break a weak human like Natsuki Subaru, equally.

In a world where tears forming at the corners of his eyes instantly turned into drops of ice, Subaru realized that his four limbs were already beyond repair. Frozen together with his wounds, they had become one with the ground, and any attempt to move them would easily tear them off at the shoulders or thighs. In effect, even though his limbs appeared connected, it was clear to him now that he was like a human doll.

“—According to our contract, I will now destroy this country.”

Puck told Subaru, whose consciousness was sluggish and who was beginning to comprehend death. It was the first moment he, who had appeared on the scene carrying anger, clearly showed an emotion differentiated from rage.

“I will bury everything under ice and snow, and make it a farewell gift to Lia.”

“…That’s, not, right.”

“It’s not about whether she’d be happy. What’s decided, what’s promised, cannot be broken. Even if it’s a contract made with myself.”

In response to Subaru’s incoherent voice, Puck continued, “But”,

“I know it will end without being fulfilled. Even if I try to expand the world of ice and cover the entire land, like the forest where Lia and I lived —Reinhard, the Sword Saint, will surely stand in my way. I cannot defeat him.”

Uttering the name of the red-haired hero, Puck murmured as if lamenting the difference in their power. Subaru couldn’t believe those words, their meaning. Even Puck, so immensely powerful, so overwhelmingly strong, declared he had no chance against the Sword Saint. And yet, knowing this, knowing he would be struck down midway, he held onto his stubborn resolve not to stop.

“Why…?”

“—Lia, Emilia, is my reason for existence.”

Puck answered Subaru’s question. Rubbing his nose against the ground, writhing as if to hide his large face from Subaru’s sight, Puck spoke in a somewhat lonely voice,

“In a world without her, there’s no meaning for me to exist. In that case, let the world disappear, a fit of pique from me. —Everything about me ended when she died.”

Shaking his head, Puck concluded his words, and the wind suddenly intensified. The wind grew significantly colder, piercing his skin, freezing his eyelids, and even beginning to freeze the blood circulating in his body. —The end was near.

“If I freeze a person slowly, gradually, from their fingertips and toes, where do they die? Are you curious, Subaru?”

“…”

“I’ll take your silence as a yes. You can find that answer for yourself.”

Slowly, slowly, the encroachment of the frost began to consume his flesh. Beyond his already frozen limbs, his shoulders and thighs began to freeze, bringing with them the same level of destruction, intense pain, and despair that his limbs had endured.

“—The fog has appeared. Looks like you’ve summoned a troublesome fellow before you die.”

If pain could drive him mad, then shatter this sanity already. Tear it, break it, shred his heart. Otherwise,

“Gluttony… Ah, I believe it’s now called the White Whale? You called that, let Lia die, and now you’ll lose your own life… Truly, you’re hopeless, aren’t you?”

He couldn’t hear. Someone’s voice was distant, only his own screams continued to echo. Gradually, the screams faded, and laughter, cackling laughter, could be heard.

Cackle, cackle, cackle.

It was a familiar laugh. The voice of the man he had hated to death. He felt an inexplicable need to confirm where it was coming from, and his consciousness blurred as he searched for the source of the laughter. And then, he realized.

The cackling, uncontrollable laughter, was coming from his own mouth.

The pain vanished, and pleasure began to dominate his brain. A world of madness expanded, and he stepped into a landscape so distorted it was almost pleasant.

The cackling wouldn’t stop. It was laughter mocking himself.

He let Rem die, killed Emilia, and even he himself died a pointless death. Ah, truly, what a mess.

“—You truly are Slothful, Subaru.”

With a snap, his consciousness cut out. And it wasn’t just his consciousness or his life that had broken. —Something far more, something he had desperately held onto, had just snapped with a sound.

With a snap, it had broken.

Chapter 51: Entreaty

1

Everything vanishes into a world of white.

Whether my frozen body melted, shattered, or will remain forever encased in ice, I don't know.

The fate of the body left behind felt utterly irrelevant to me now.

Only one thing became perfectly clear.

Again and again, each time witnessing a brutal end, each repetition worsening the situation, until finally, with my own hands, I destroyed the very thing I most wanted to protect— Only then did I finally realize.

—Natsuki Subaru is not, nor ever will be, someone anyone expects anything from, not even himself.

2

Even after experiencing it countless times, the sensation of my lost five senses suddenly returning was something I could never get used to.

The cold air would permeate to the core of my being, and I'd lose even the feeling of cold, a sense of loss like sinking endlessly into a white void. Then, that feeling of losing everything would abruptly clear, and after a blink, everything would be back to normal.

The limbs that had been so brutally tormented now pulsed with blood, and the utterly violated nerves functioned normally, as if they'd forgotten all pain. The biting cold air vanished, and the sunlight was humid enough that I'd be sweating if I didn't roll up my sleeves.

"…"

"—Tch!"

"—Ah."

In the bustling crowd where I stood frozen, sounds flew from right and left, thrusting an unforgiving workload upon my supposedly dead hearing, demanding its immediate return. Processing these meaningless noises, Subaru checked the movement of his limbs. Both arms, which had been filleted, his right leg, which had become like a bed of nails, and his left leg, which had burst from being impaled, were all intact. He stood firmly on the ground, and his fists were tightly clenched.

Everything was back to normal. The control over his lost body had returned, and Subaru felt a wave of relief.

More than anything—

"Subaru, why are you spacing out?"

Across the counter, a blue-haired girl tilted her head, looking at him with concern.

Abandoned by everything, overwhelmed by an unbearable sense of powerlessness, despairing in self-inflicted disappointment and loss, dying a pointless death with no way out, and then returning,

"Rem."

"Yes, Subaru's Rem… What's wrong?"

Responding to his brief call, Rem then ducked under the counter and stepped outside. Coming before the still Subaru, she reached out her hand towards his face and touched his cheek. Her brows furrowed with concern, and a shadow of worry crossed Rem's delicate features.

"Rem apologizes, she didn't notice. You must be tired. To forget Rem's duties and become engrossed in something else, Rem is a failure as a maid."

"Tired… Ah, yes… That's right."

Subaru lifted his hand and covered Rem’s hand on his cheek. Rem’s eyebrows rose in surprise at the contact, but she held back her reaction, seeing Subaru’s utterly haggard expression and voice. Without even looking at her, though she seemed about to say something, Subaru clung to Rem’s presence, so surely there in his palm—to her warmth, as if to make sure she wouldn’t slip away.

“I dropped it, wore away… I’m exhausted, aren’t I?”

Even so, the one he had surely lost was truly here.

“—Subaru?”

—Subaru resolved that he would never let go of this, right before his eyes, again.

3

I quickened my pace through the crowd, descending a gentle slope.

I winced as a ground dragon carriage kicked up dust right beside me, but my gaze remained fixed straight ahead. My steps were unwavering, aimed directly at my destination. Looking back, I realized I’d been lost so many times during these repeated days.

Lost in who I was, lost in Emilia’s heart, lost in my own purpose, lost in what to do to grasp the best future, lost in a whirlpool of madness, lost between life and death—ultimately, just a lost person who stumbled into another world.

Now, Subaru, who couldn’t even manage a proper step before, was pushing forward with an unprecedented clarity of purpose.

He finally understood. The loops, the repeated days, were not in vain. The third iteration, what happened in that loop where Subaru was truly pushed to his limits, both physically and mentally, clearly taught him.

What Subaru could do.

What Subaru must do.

"—Kun!"

His cleared gaze was fixed on his objective, and his feet powerfully kicked the ground with each stride. His body felt light. Freed from every heavy burden on his heart, there was nothing for Subaru to fear now.

"Subaru, please listen!"

He tugged her arm, and once they finished descending the slope, they headed towards the main street—one of the widest in the royal capital. They wove through the throngs of people coming and going, pushing against the human tide. As they approached a familiar road, Subaru's momentum only increased. His surging emotions were reflected in his breathing, his steps, and his buoyant body.

Suddenly, entering the shade, Subaru looked up at what was blocking the sun. Above him, filling his vision, were the walls surrounding the royal capital and the main gate connecting the inside and outside, a break in those walls. He'd once been taught that the unreadable 'Ha' and 'Ro' characters carved above it spelled "Royal Capital Lugunica."

This meant that Subaru —no, both of them— were now at the royal capital's main gate.

"—Subaru!"

Her following steps, which had been gradually giving way, stopped, and his arm was forcibly shaken off. With their connection broken, even Subaru had no choice but to stop. He paused and turned around. Rem was looking at him, her eyes clouded with confusion.

"What's wrong? What happened? You have to explain…"

She placed her left hand on her right arm, which he'd grabbed, and her plea made her seem to shrink slightly. Hearing her words, Subaru understood that her confusion was natural. From her perspective, he had suddenly changed and dragged her along. He hadn't explained anything on the way, and rushing her like that, it was only natural for her to be upset.

“Ah, my bad, Rem. I was a bit too impatient. There was just so much I had to, you know, think about. So I skipped the explanation, I’m sorry.”

“Honestly, it’s troubling. Rem knows Subaru thinks a lot, but you still have to tell her… Though Rem doesn’t dislike being forced.”

Placing both hands on her cheeks, Rem, who was slightly flushed, let out a sigh of relief. She must have heard the calm, modulated tone return to Subaru’s voice and decided that his strange behavior earlier was just a slight overreaction on her part.

Indeed, seeing her relief, her concern was understandable. Subaru’s transformation right after “Return by Death” must have been dramatic for Rem, who had only experienced a few seconds of it.

In fact, there was a difference of “seconds” versus “days” of accumulated experience between them. Furthermore, Subaru had accumulated those “days” three times, shaping his current self. Looking back calmly, his inner gloom during this period must have been something even he would want to turn away from.

He had disgraced himself at the Royal Selection, was half-killed by Julius at the training grounds, created a fatal rift with Emilia, was abandoned in the capital, and lost his purpose.

Spending idle time at Crusch’s mansion, he had endlessly struggled to find answers to what he could do, what he had to do. Then, his confusion suddenly cleared, quite literally in the blink of an eye. For Rem, it must have been a bolt from the blue.

“Sorry for worrying you. I’m okay now. I feel like I’ve only shown you my pathetic side, getting knocked down and knocking myself down, but I finally understand.”

“No. Thinking about Subaru isn’t a hardship for Rem… ‘Finally understand,’ you said?”

Rem’s voice was light as she responded to Subaru, whose eyes were now clear of confusion. It had been so long since they’d had an exchange like this, and Subaru couldn't hide the slight joy in his heart. Then, to Rem's lingering question, Subaru nodded and said, "Yeah."

"I've been agonizing and going off track, causing trouble for everyone, and honestly, I feel incredibly bad about it, but I finally figured out how to resolve things peacefully. No, come to think of it, I probably saw it from the beginning, and I should have been told… but I'm stubborn, you know."

"Rem thinks that's one of Subaru's wonderful qualities, though…"

Subaru gave a wry smile at Rem's softly mumbled words. Then he looked up at the sky, letting its vastness and height sink into his eyes. For the world, which had always looked down on Subaru unchangingly, it must have been a frustrating time. But now, he could finally put an end to that heart-wrenching period.

The answer had been right in front of him all along. No matter where Subaru went, what reckless challenges he took on, or how foolishly he acted, it had followed him without a single complaint. Yes,

"I've decided, Rem."

He looked directly into the eyes of the girl standing within arm's reach.

Her shoulder-length blue hair swayed in the wind, and Subaru was reflected in her clear, twin eyes. The black-based apron dress that enveloped her small frame was devoid of unnecessary embellishments, embodying her noble nature. The white primroses adorning the top of her blue hair looked resolute, and her small, well-defined features delicately adorned the charming form of the girl.

"Yes, Subaru."

Her pink lips formed a smile, and her narrowed eyes gently curved into an arc. The sweetness of her voice was filled with a melting affection, permeating Subaru with an irresistible allure as he was about to speak just one word.

“First, let’s rent a ground dragon carriage. The reception might be a bit crowded because of the Royal Selection chaos, but we’ll still make it by tomorrow afternoon, so I think there should be a bit more availability now.”

He wanted a fast one, with good stamina.

They needed to keep moving. Day and night, lightly, without needing to rest, a ground dragon that could keep going.

“A ground dragon carriage…?”

Rem tilted her head, repeating the words Subaru had spoken. Confusion flickered in her eyes; she probably couldn’t see the conclusion of Subaru’s rather rushed plan. But Subaru, feigning not to notice her bewilderment, gestured towards the gate.

“It might take a while to pick out a ground dragon, so we might as well use any spare time to stock up on food and stuff. Oh, I really dislike the crumbly type of portable food. I’d rather just have water than eat that.”

He recalled a class in his compulsory education where they actually tasted preserved food and emergency rations under the guise of experiential learning, but for Subaru, both were unpleasant memories that he’d have to rate as “no”. If that’s how it was in his original world, with its developed seasonings, the taste of preserved food in this world was even less trustworthy.

“No, but on the other hand, maybe some magical power makes preserved food surprisingly delicious…? We managed to make mayonnaise, so maybe there’s a spirit of ‘try before you throw’ alive here too…”

“Um, Subaru?”

“Huh, oh, sorry, my thoughts just went off on a weird tangent. What’s up?”

Correcting his rambling, Subaru smiled gently at Rem, slightly bending at the waist to meet the girl's gaze. Rem was silent for a moment at Subaru's earnest demeanor, then, her lips trembling, as if shaking off hesitation, she said,

"Well, Rem apologizes. Rem isn't very perceptive, so she doesn't understand what Subaru is trying to do. Um, what are you…?"

"Oh! That's right, my bad! Sorry, I didn't realize at all! No, I was completely convinced I was already explaining what we were doing and making plans, how embarrassing!"

Subaru slapped his knee, laughing brightly at his oversight. After laughing at his blunder for a moment, he said,

"After everything I've been made to realize, everything I've experienced, and through various circumstances, this is where I am now, but the answer was right there all along."

A wry smile, truly a bitter smile, formed on his face. He had tasted bitter defeat. He had chewed on regret. He had shed tears at unreasonableness and impermanence, been toyed with by cruel fate, and been covered in his own and others' blood, and in dirt.

The answer to all of it was now crystal clear.

"Rem."

Calling the girl's name, Subaru slowly reached out his hand to her. Seeing his outstretched hand, Rem waited for Subaru's next words. Responding to her posture, Subaru let his surging feelings ride on his tongue—

"Let's run away. Together. As far as we can go."

He had clearly declared his defeat to fate.

4

"…Eeh?"

Perhaps not understanding the meaning of my words, only a faint sigh escaped Rem's throat. While acknowledging her understandable reaction, I shook my head.

“From now on, I’m leaving the capital and heading far west… or north. They say you can’t enter the Southern Empire, so those are the only two options. I hate the cold, so personally, west is my top pick.”

“Um, no, well…”

“The distance is honestly vague, and it’s a completely rash decision, so I don’t think it’ll be an easy journey. Oh, also, what do I do if there’s no way to return the ground dragon carriage? Would it be better to buy one rather than rent?”

I figured it was a system similar to car rentals, but I was unfamiliar with those intricacies, having not reached the age for a license. I hadn’t accompanied Rem when she rented a ground dragon carriage last time, so I didn’t know what kind of paperwork was exchanged. I couldn’t imagine the shop doing business without considering the possibility of someone just running off with it, so I assumed some conditions were properly agreed upon—

“Wait, please!”

Rem stopped me in my thoughts. She held out her palm towards me, a rare look of impatience on her face.

“Run away… what, what do you mean? From what Subaru is saying, it sounds like you’re trying to leave this country, Lugunica…”

She voiced her guess, her tone barely concealing her disbelief, then let out a small “Ah” and her expression brightened slightly.

“Could it be that you’ve thought of something amazing again? Something that will help Lady Emilia or Lord Roswaal…”

“That’s not what this is, Rem.”

“Eh—”

She clung to the hope, drawing a future so utterly believing that my words meant what she wished them to. But I quietly shook my head, clearly stating my denial.

“I told you, I’m running away. If I stay in the capital, I can’t do anything. Even if I go back to the mansion, my powerlessness won’t change. —I’ve finally realized that.”

Powerlessness, emptiness, the unreasonableness of the world— They had weighed heavily on my body. Now, after admitting that those things, which had entangled me the more I tried to deny them, were undeniable facts, how light I felt.

“So, let’s run away, Rem. We can’t stay here. Everyone, everyone kept telling me that. I didn’t want to admit it, I desperately kept denying it… but ah, yes. I am weak. No one ever needed me at all.”

I must have been conceited. I had been mistaken. I had misunderstood, gotten carried away.

Falling into another world, given the power to redo fate a little, and then, by chance, things went well, and I felt like I had saved someone twice— That’s why I made mistakes. Even though I had no power, no feelings, no right to help anyone.

“Such a thing…”

“It’s true. I was told explicitly. —I was told again and again.”

That I wasn’t needed.

In the first iteration, I ignored Emilia’s wishes and rushed out of Crusch’s mansion. I didn’t listen to Rem’s words trying to stop me, and the result was that terrible disaster. In the second iteration, I didn’t pay for creating that scene, escaped reality, and ended up scattering Rem’s life tragically, again saving no one. The third iteration produced the most despicable outcome. Along the way, I got merchants involved, Rem was swallowed by the White Whale, and I took Emilia’s life with my own hands. The Witch Cult was probably massacred by Puck, but if Puck turned that rampage on the whole country after my death, the damage would be beyond comparison to anything before.

If I were to go back even earlier, to the days that couldn't be redone, at the Royal Selection in the royal castle— At that very moment, I couldn't even help Emilia, could I? Far from standing beside her, I butted in and dragged her down, and instead of making up for it, I was completely beaten by another candidate's knight. And then, I had a falling out with Emilia, hurting her with words I never intended to say.

"…Kuh!"

I felt a dry laugh burst from my throat.

Thinking back, it was a masterpiece. When I calmly reflected on my actions and thoughts, I clearly felt how much of a jinx I was.

—Want to help Emilia? I must be able to save someone? Without me, everyone will surely be doomed?

What delusions. What misconceptions. Oh, what arrogance. All I had done was worsen Emilia's position, greatly betray and hurt her heart that had considered me, and foolishly cause Rem, who had followed me, to die every time.

Amazing, everyone must have known this would happen. That's why everyone told me to be quiet. To do nothing. To stay out of the way, that my power wasn't needed, to disappear. Everyone around me who told me that knew the future far better. I should have known, but I couldn't do anything, couldn't understand, couldn't comprehend—I was so different from them. Maybe everyone else was actually looping?

"Otherwise, who would expose such a pathetic sight… like me?"

I was miserable. More than anything, I felt so sorry for myself, helpless. A clown is only a clown because they act with the readiness to be laughed at by others. So, I, who wasn't aware of being pointed at and laughed at by the audience, wasn't even a clown. —I was just a hopeless fool.

"So I decided to disappear. That should be fine, it is fine. No matter what I do, it'll just be one more corpse… or even more, depending on the situation.”

Corpse, corpse, corpse, corpse, corpse.

Someone’s corpse I didn’t know. Someone’s corpse I knew. Someone important’s corpse. Someone precious’s corpse. Someone I believed in’s corpse. Someone I wanted to believe in’s corpse. —Someone’s corpse I…

I was sick of it. Why did I have to suffer like this? I’d suffered so much, couldn’t I be rewarded? I knew that things like “effort always pays off” or “if you set a goal, anything is possible” were pipe dreams. But even so, was it wrong to wish for even a tiny bit, to avoid the worst?

“Let’s run, Rem. I, and you, shouldn’t be here… in this country.”

Throwing everything aside, disregarding it all, I decided to run away. And on this escape, this decision that would earn scorn from all sides, I decided to take only the girl before me —Rem— with me.

There was something I couldn’t let go of, even when I tried to throw everything, absolutely everything, away. Loneliness was terrifying. Loneliness was dreadful. In this vast world, this dark world where nothing made sense, even knowing it was the right thing to do, abandoning protection and running alone was too frightening to allow.

That’s why I had hope that only she, only Rem, would come with me. In all the repeated days, only she had stayed with me. She had witnessed my ugliness, my pathetic words and actions, my misguided way of life. Because it was her, I thought she was worth betting on in the end.

Three times, in all the repeated iterations, I had let Rem die.

To prevent her from dying, I mustn’t return to the mansion. Even if I reached the mansion, or on the way there, she would meet a tragic end, scattering her life. So, should I keep her in the capital? That wouldn’t work. Even if she spent time in the capital, if news of the Roswaal mansion’s anomaly reached Crusch’s estate, she would rush out of the capital to save the territory. Surely, I wouldn’t be able to stop her once that happened. Only I would be left behind at Crusch’s mansion, hearing the aftermath later. I could clearly envision myself losing everything and becoming empty.

To prevent Rem from dying, Rem must not know anything.

If I truly wanted to save Rem, I couldn’t stay here.

“Even if you tell Rem that suddenly, Rem can’t…”

To my plea, however, Rem shook her head slightly. It seemed like a gesture of denial, but in reality, it showed her hesitation. My words were too sudden for her to process. More than anything, the amount of information I was offering as a basis for her judgment was too little.

She couldn’t possibly agree to suddenly abandon everything and run away.

Yet, despite understanding the unreasonableness of it, I still had to convince Rem. I no longer knew the limits of how much information I could give.

It felt like anything I said would invoke the Witch’s curse. Any action I took felt like it would fall victim to an unreasonable fate.

I was at a dead end. Trapped in fate’s cul-de-sac. So the only card I could play was a plea. To simply appeal to her good nature. Even knowing how utterly despicable it was, knowing I was exploiting her dependence on me.

“There’s no time. I’m truly sorry it’s so sudden. Really, truly. I apologize from the bottom of my heart… However, please choose.”

“Choose…”

“Me, or someone else… please choose.”

With so little information given, and spoken so suddenly, I hated my own cowardice in forcing such a choice, and the desperate situation. But it was also true that giving Rem time to think slowly was inconvenient. I couldn't deny that I was using this situation to my advantage.

In a situation with limited time to think, with me, an object of dependence, pleading before her— I had a chance.

A chance, or perhaps it was a desperate hope. A selfish hope that Rem, only Rem, would forgive my degradation, my escape.

"Let's get a ground dragon carriage and head west. Leave Lugnica, far west… to Kararagi, was it? We'll buy a small house there and live together."

Speaking quickly, I began to describe the future I envisioned. It was an ordinary, peaceful future, surely unrelated to unreasonableness or cruelty.

"It'll be bad for Roswaal since I'll be using the travel money, but we can just say I'm borrowing it and pay him back someday. For now, once we get our lives settled, I'll definitely work hard… I've never worked before, but I'm sure it'll be fine."

Less than a high school graduate and a shut-in. A natural indoorsman with no part-time job experience. Even my work after coming to this world, as an apprentice servant at the mansion, was like child's play at best. It would probably be extremely difficult to find a decent job, but I would cling to it and get one. Compared to pain, hardship, and dying, it was completely easy.

The more I thought about it, the more my future opened up. Compared to the days when I struggled and thrashed, aiming for only one future and inviting the worst disasters, how happy this was.

"Even if it's modest, if you're there, I'm sure I can do my best. Just having someone waiting for me at home with a smile, no matter how tired I am, if I think Rem is waiting for me, surely…!"

Even if everyone I left behind pointed fingers at me wherever I escaped to, if Rem was by my side, I felt I could endure it. So, please, I have no greater wish than this—

“Choose me…!”

I squeezed out the words, my hand still outstretched, pleading.

“If you choose me, my everything will be devoted to you. My whole life is yours. I’ll serve you, live only for you… so please.”

I couldn’t look at Rem’s face right then. I didn’t have the courage to see what expression she wore. I had no courage left, not a shred. If I had, perhaps a different outcome could have been reached. Because there was nothing left in me, the cowardly, despicable, pitiful me.

“Let’s run away with me… Live with me…!”

I pleaded from the bottom of my heart, asking her not to die, only her.

Having poured out my heart with a parched voice, my heart pounded, and my breathing was ragged. A feeling of exhaustion, like I’d sprinted at full speed, and intense mental depletion assailed me. And then, a silent period weighed heavily on me.

Rem gave no answer. The sounds of the bustling crowd now seemed distant, and how the surroundings viewed the two of us having such a conversation in public— Such trivial matters didn’t enter my consciousness at all now.

Unable to bear it, I slightly opened my tightly squeezed eyes, peering at Rem’s expression before me. Enduring the fear that perhaps the answer might be etched on her face.

“…”

Silently, unaware that I was watching her, Rem kept her lips tightly sealed. Her expression seemed to be trying to maintain a neutral facade, yet there was a slight strain between her eyebrows and at the corners of her eyes, showing she couldn’t maintain her usual composure.

I could see confusion, bewilderment, and hesitation swirling within her. The multitude of words I had just spoken were shaking Rem's heart deeply, strongly, violently.

The silence stretched on. An eternity, it felt like, slowly pressing down on my back with a creeping impatience. Eventually, that time came to an end.

"—Subaru."

Gently, with an affectionate resonance, my name was called.

The moment I heard that voice, that tremor, I was convinced my plea had reached her. She would accept me. She would forgive my weakness, and embrace Natsuki Subaru, flaws and all.

My heart swelled with emotion. For the first time, I felt like I had been rewarded. Then I looked up,

"Rem cannot run away with Subaru."

With a terribly sad expression, Rem clearly rejected my wish.

"Because,"

"…"

"When talking about the future, you have to be smiling, don't you?"

With an expression that was a mix of tears and laughter, Rem spoke the words—the words I had once said.

Chapter 52:
From Zero

1

—I lost the bet.

Rem's tear-streaked smile and the echo of his own past words crushed Subaru. His heart was filled with the utter exhaustion of having lost a gamble he had staked everything on.

Subaru had believed —no, hoped— that she, with her strong dependence on him, might choose him.

Perhaps she would abandon everything else and pick him.

It was a fleeting dream, an arrogant thought. He should have known better from the start.

He couldn't find any worth in himself, which was why he'd chosen to run away, so what had he even been hoping for?

"Right now… I might not be able to smile, but… Look, if we just go through with it, I'm sure we'll be able to smile together… Yes, that's right. So, um…"

Even though the conclusion had already been reached, what tumbled out of Subaru's mouth next was a pathetic, womanish attempt to salvage things.

He couldn't think of an effective rebuttal to Rem's words. Yet, he had to keep talking, or his hope would vanish. Maybe, just maybe, she might still change her mind.

If he just kept talking to her, surely—though that, too, was a convenient way of thinking.

"…Rem has thought about it too."

Gazing at Subaru, who looked as if he were clinging to her, Rem closed her eyes and murmured.

She tilted her perfectly sculpted face slightly upwards.

“When we arrive in Kararagi, first, we’ll rent lodging. We’ll want a house to build a foundation for our lives, but considering the money we have on hand, we can’t be unreasonable. First, we need to find a way to secure a stable income.”

She held up a finger, adding to Subaru’s earlier vision of the future.

“Fortunately, Rem has received an education thanks to Lord Roswaal’s arrangements, so she thinks it will be easy to find some work in Kararagi. As for Subaru… you might have to look for manual labor, or perhaps take care of Rem’s personal needs.”

Rem chuckled softly, teasing Subaru about his helplessness.

It was an accurate assessment for Subaru, who had little knowledge of this world’s culture and was utterly incompetent when it came to practical skills.

“Once our income is stable, we should find a more suitable place to live. In the meantime, Subaru should study so you can get another job… It might take a year or so until you can actually work. We’ll have Subaru work hard, and you should become independent soon.”

Unexpectedly, her educational philosophy was rather strict.

When she occasionally helped him study in Ram’s stead, her teaching method was gentle, but she was merciless with assignments and problems. He’d grumbled about it, but he also liked that about her, attributing it to her strictness with herself.

“Once we’re both working and have saved up a decent amount of money… We might even buy a house. We could even open a shop. Kararagi is a prosperous merchant city, so Rem is sure your wild ideas, Subaru, could be put to good use.”

Rem clapped her hands, sketching an overly optimistic future in the air.

Subaru, too, could clearly see the scene she envisioned.

In it, Subaru would still be causing Rem trouble and being pampered, but he would undoubtedly be working hard, sweating with some sense of responsibility.

He truly wished it could be that way.

How happy would he be if he could strive hard for her, and only for her?

“Once our work is on track… Well, it’s a little embarrassing, but… we could have children. Since they’d be half-oni and half-human, they’d surely be mischievous kids. Whether they’re boys or girls, twins or triplets, they’ll be adorable.”

With flushed cheeks, Rem shook her head slightly at her imagination, which had run a bit too far ahead.

She counted on her fingers, and when the count terrifyingly exceeded ten, she stopped.

“It won’t always be fun, and Rem doesn’t think everything will go as perfectly as we imagine. We might not have a boy, and only girls might keep coming, making Subaru feel out of place in the family.”

“…Rem.”

“However, even when the children grow up and reach an age where they might treat you coldly, Rem will always be on Subaru’s side. We might even be known as the famous lovey-dovey couple in the neighborhood, spending our time slowly, aging together…”

“…Rem…”

“Rem apologizes, Subaru, but if possible, please let Rem go first. On the bed, holding Subaru’s hand, surrounded by our children and their children, quietly saying, ‘Rem was happy’, and then being sent off…”

He couldn’t lift his face.

Rem's vision of the future quietly, gently, wounded Subaru's heart.

"Happily, so happily… I can end my life."

"If you've thought about it that far…!"

Rem concluded her description of a future filled with such a vibrant, almost ticklish, happiness that made him want to claw at the depths of his chest.

What remained in Subaru's heart after listening was an inexpressible, sorrowful passion.

His throat trembled. A heavy weight sank in the pit of his stomach. His head ached. Something hot welled up behind his eyes, and he shook his head to try and disguise it.

"If you thought… that far ahead…!"

She could have just run away with him, no matter how far, no matter where—

That plea,

"If Subaru smiles and wishes for that future… Rem truly believes it would have been worth dying for."

It didn't reach her, who was holding back even greater sorrow than Subaru, yet still smiled.

Stunned, Subaru stared at her heartbreaking smile and finally understood.

No matter how much he pleaded, he couldn't change Rem's will.

He had truly, undeniably, lost the bet.

"…"

A heavy, crushing fatigue pressed down on his shoulders.

He felt a weakness that threatened to make him collapse right there, but he barely managed to endure that indignity. Covering his face with his hands, Subaru despaired.

Rem had refused to go with him.

That meant the means to save her had been cut off. If he stayed by her side to protect her, what awaited them was the cruel fate that would befall her on her way to the mansion—an unchangeable tragedy, a cruel cul-de-sac of destiny.

Then, was he to abandon Rem and escape alone?

If he did, an uncertain future would remain, but at least he could escape the unavoidable despair looming before him. Of course, the outcome of events that would occur whether Subaru was there or not wouldn't change. It would merely be a small mercy, allowing Subaru not to witness that fact— If he covered his eyes and ears and pretended not to know, he wouldn't have to face that reality.

Even that small amount of salvation was something Subaru desperately craved right now. But what salvation could there be if he accepted it alone?

Whether he challenged fate, drowned in madness, threw everything away and fled, fate would never allow it.

Then, what could Subaru possibly—

"If Rem can live with Subaru… The fact that you thought to take Rem to the place you wanted to escape to makes Rem genuinely happy from the bottom of her heart right now. Rem is so happy. —But Rem can't."

Placing a hand on her chest, Rem tore up the escape ticket Subaru had offered, yet still, with a myriad of emotions, she lowered her head, her cheeks flushed.

She herself understood that the dream she had just spoken of would come true if they ran, and ran, and kept running.

Even though she called that story "happy", she still denied it because, “Surely, if we ran away together now… Rem would feel like she’d be leaving behind the Subaru she loves most.”

“…”

What on earth was Rem saying?

Subaru slowly raised his head, looking at her with bewildered eyes.

Rem kept a sorrowful smile directed at Subaru, yet her eyes pierced him with unwavering resolve. To Subaru, who was overwhelmed by her spirit, she continued.

“Subaru. Please tell Rem what happened.”

He shook his head. Impossible. If he did, Rem would die.

“If you can’t tell me, then trust me. Rem will surely figure something out.”

He shook his head. Impossible. If he let her do that, Rem would die.

“…At least for now, let’s go back? If we take our time and think calmly, a good idea might come to us.”

He shook his head. Impossible. If he waited, everyone would die.

“I’ve worried enough… I’ve thought enough. I’ve suffered enough… That’s why I gave up.”

No one believed Subaru.

No one had any expectations for Subaru.

Everyone had warned him, telling him not to do anything, against his shallow foolishness.

He had ignored all of that, worn himself down, made a fool of himself countless times, and reached this point.

That time, that emotional erosion, for Subaru—

“—Giving up is easy, but.”

Suddenly, Rem refuted Subaru’s faint words.

—Giving up is easy.

The moment those words registered, an inexplicable shock ran through Subaru’s entire body.

It was an overwhelming impact, like being struck by lightning through the crown of his head, something inexpressible that exploded in his chest. A searing sensation, as if every pore on his body had opened, consumed him.

“Giving up… is easy…?”

“Subaru?”

“Don’t you dare…!”

To Rem, who had bewilderment in her eyes, Subaru’s resentful voice, gritted through his teeth, escaped.

No way. Giving up is easy? Casually abandoning your goal, turning your back, and running off with empty hands is supposedly easy?

What a ridiculous thing to say.

“Giving up is NOT easy!!”

His uncontrollable, pent-up emotions exploded, spilling from his tongue.

Rem flinched in surprise at Subaru’s yell, and people passing through the main gate of the capital turned their heads, wondering what the commotion was about.

Ignoring the intrusive stares of the crowd, Subaru glared only at Rem standing before him.

“Do you really think I’m giving up because I’m not doing anything, not thinking about anything, just cutting everything off clean and throwing it all away because it’s easy?!”

It was a bitter decision. A decision reached after shedding tears of blood and experiencing his throat becoming hoarse from screaming, yet still realizing it wasn't enough.

Giving up everything— It was just a phrase, but the sacrifice he had made to reach that conclusion, that could never be trivialized.

"Giving up was never that easy for me…! It was so much easier to think 'I'll fight', 'I'll figure something out'… I just can't do anything… There's no path anywhere! All roads lead to giving up…!"

The cul-de-sac of fate blocked every path presented to him, mocking Subaru.

No matter how many times he challenged it, how many times he confronted it, how many plans he made, how many times he tried to entrust it to others, and even when he tried to escape.

It was no longer possible to salvage everything.

When even the people he wanted to help rejected his outstretched hand, how could he still be told to keep trying? Who could tell Subaru he was giving up too soon?

Could anyone truly speak those words after experiencing the same hardships, the same pain and predicament, and seeing the same hell as Subaru?

"If I could do something… I, would… I, too…!"

He truly wanted to do something.

He truly wanted to help, to save, to prevent it from being taken away.

He couldn't reach it. He wasn't allowed to reach it. All of this was the result of Subaru's accumulated days, of all that time turning against him.

That's why Subaru—

"Subaru."

Rem called out to Subaru, who was slumped over, having squeezed out his voice and exhausted his emotions.

The ringing in his ears was terrible, and it was bitter to have exposed such pathetic true feelings. Subaru couldn't even look up at her face.

To such a pathetic, helpless, and utterly defeated loser of fate,

"Giving up is easy."

"…"

"But."

Rem repeated the words that had just enraged Subaru.

Feeling something unbelievable in her words, Subaru's lips trembled, and he raised his face.

Why didn't she understand?

Even after all this, could she still not comprehend his suffering?

That inner frustration, that dissatisfaction, that emotional outburst born of lashing out,

"—It doesn't suit Subaru."

Dissipated before her, as she gazed directly into Subaru's black eyes and declared it.

2

Rem spoke clearly, as if she believed it to be absolutely, undeniably true.

"Rem doesn't know how much pain Subaru has endured, or what you've learned that causes you such suffering. Rem knows it's not something she can lightly say 'Rem understands'."

"…"

"Even so, there are things Rem does know."

"…"

"That Subaru is not the kind of person who gives up halfway."

Before the man despairing before her, who had thrown everything away and was now speaking of surrender, Rem wove her words without shame, without fear, without wavering.

"Rem knows."

"…"

"Rem knows that when Subaru wishes for a future, you're someone who can speak of that future with a smile."

"…"

To the man who spoke of a world that should have been calm and peaceful after escaping with Rem, but with a face contorted by guilt and regret, Rem wove her words with direct eyes, neither scoffing nor showing disappointment.

"Rem knows."

"…"

"Rem knows that Subaru is someone who cannot give up on the future."

Rem stated this emphatically to Subaru, who was looking down, as if chewing on her words.

In her eyes, there was only sincere radiance, only a profound belief in Subaru.

Subaru was overwhelmed by that fierce, strong glow.

It was nothing more than her misunderstanding. A ludicrous misconception, an overestimation of the person Subaru truly was.

He didn't know how noble or proud the person reflected in Rem's eyes was.

The real Subaru couldn't possibly be such a magnificent person.

Complaining, crumbling in adversity, aware of his own pathetic insignificance, and trying to run away, covered in feelings of defeat — That was Natsuki Subaru.

"No… I'm not that kind of person… I, I'm not…"

"No, you are. Subaru hasn't given up on everyone… on Lady Emilia, or Sister, or Lord Roswaal, or anyone else."

She denied him with a strong tone. But she was wrong. Subaru had abandoned them.

"I gave up, I did. It was impossible to save everyone from the start… My hands are too small, everything just slips through, and nothing remains…!"

"No, that's not true. Subaru has—"

Again and again, she denied Subaru's surrender.

Why, even after he had exposed himself in such an ugly way, would she not acknowledge his faults? How did he appear to her?

That was so unpleasant, so unbearable, that—

—No matter how much, no matter what you say.

"—What do you! What the hell do you actually know about me?!"

Passion, a burning fire inside his chest, a scorching red, erupted violently.

Shouting, Subaru slammed his fist into the wall beside him. A dull thud, blood splattered on the wall from his bruised knuckles, and he roughly smeared it with his palm.

"I'm just that kind of guy! I have no power, but my ambitions are sky-high, no wisdom, but I can only dream big, I can't do a damn thing, yet I struggle pointlessly…!"

Everyone has at least one good quality.

Everyone extends that one quality and goes to a suitable place.

—Natsuki Subaru didn't even have that. Even without that, the height of his desired destination was disproportionately too high.

"I…! I hate myself!!"

He'd always laughed things off, played the fool, and kept running, avoiding reality he never seriously confronted—and now, before it, Subaru exposed his true feelings for the first time.

Natsuki Subaru hated himself more than anyone, more than anything.

"Always just talk! Acting so high and mighty when I can't do anything! I never do anything, but I'm a full-fledged adult when it comes to complaining! Who do I think I am?! How can I live without any shame, huh?!"

He couldn't better himself, so he resorted to the petty tactic of putting others down to make himself look better. He didn't want to admit he was inferior to others, so he'd stoop to nitpicking to protect his flimsy pride.

"I'm empty. I'm hollow inside. Of course… It's obvious. It's perfectly obvious! Do you know what I've been doing until I got here, until I met you all like this?!"

Before he fell into this other world.

What he had been doing in his original world, during those ordinary, unchanging, boring days—

"—Nothing, I did absolutely nothing."

He indulged in idleness, sank into sloth, and spent his days utterly disconnected from effort or self-improvement.

Yet, he hadn’t given up on himself; he just thought conveniently that if the time came, he’d get serious.

“I’ve done nothing… I never done a single damn thing! I had so much time! So much freedom! I could have done anything, but I did nothing! This is the result! This is who I am now!”

If he had used his ample time effectively, Subaru surely could have become anything.

The real Subaru had largely wasted the time he was given, and as a result, he gained nothing, nor did he create anything.

So when he genuinely wanted to do something, he had no power, no wisdom, no skills to accomplish it.

“All of my powerlessness, all of my incompetence, every single bit of it! It’s all… the result of my rotten core…! To have done nothing and then presumptuously think I can achieve something, there’s a limit to that… The price of my laziness, my grand habit of wasting my life, is going to kill both me and you.”

He was beyond saving. He was hopeless.

Even if he were reborn, he would surely follow the same path, waste the same amount of time in the same way, arrive at this place with the same mindset, and feel the same regret.

His rotten core wouldn’t change. Natsuki Subaru possessed only such shallow humanity. That fact was unwavering.

“That’s right, my core hasn’t… Even living here, it didn’t change anything, I thought. That old man Wilhelm saw right through me. Didn’t he?”

Remaining in the capital, Subaru had studied the sword under Wilhelm at Crusch’s mansion.

Time and again he was defeated, and though battered, Subaru kept challenging him, yet the old man had seen through his true intentions.

"I thought it was pointless to lecture someone who has no intention of becoming strong on the mindset required to do so."

During their days of training, after defeating Subaru, the old man spoke of the swordsman's mindset and shook his head.

At the time, Subaru had denied it, saying he didn't understand what he was talking about— Deeep down, he clearly understood what it meant.

"I wasn't trying to get stronger, or trying to make something happen… I was just taking easily understandable poses, pretending I wasn't doing nothing, that I was making an effort… just to justify myself…"

He'd been abandoned by Emilia, and utterly humiliated at the Royal Selection.

He couldn't bear the stares and attention from those around him after that, so he pretended to be "making an effort" in a way that was visible to them, trying to protect himself.

—I'm doing fine. I'm not doing nothing. I'm trying to change.

That's how he'd looked for reasons to compromise, and that's how he'd arrived at that action.

Even though the very idea of "trying to change" was proof that nothing had changed at all.

"I want to say 'it can't be helped'! I want to be told 'there's nothing you could do'! That's all! Just for that, I pretended to put my body on the line! Even studying with you was just a way to hide my awkwardness! My core, that small, cowardly, dirty core of mine that only cares about how others see me, hasn't changed at all! It hasn't changed…!"

His bluffs peeling away. His vanity crumbling.

The vanity of not wanting to be thought ill of, the selfishness of wanting to insist he wasn't wrong, burst through his thin shell.

"…I knew it all along, really. That it was all my fault."

It would have been easier to blame someone else, to make an excuse, and loudly attack it.

He wouldn't have to look at his true self, wouldn't have to show his true self, and as long as the surface didn't peel off, no one would see what he harbored inside.

Weak, selfish, and all he did was yell, yet he craved to be loved.

To avoid seeing such an ugly self, to avoid having such an ugly self seen.

"I'm the absolute worst… I hate myself."

Exhaling all the murky darkness that had accumulated in his chest, Subaru breathed heavily.

He had thoroughly spewed out that muddy, turbid mess, the pent-up frustration from since he came to this other world—no, from when he was in his original world.

He thought his own humanity was sickening.

Even after spewing it out, the nauseating feeling wouldn't disappear. Shouldn't it feel a little lighter after venting what had been held inside?

Not only did it not feel lighter in the slightest, but the foolishness he had finally realized through his words now overwhelmed him with shame, making him want to die instantly.

After spewing out such filth, the weakness of only thinking about himself immediately afterward was the most pathetic thing of all.

Just now, in front of Rem, who had been looking at him with eyes full of belief, he had effectively smeared black paint over the light she saw, telling her it was all a sham, and yet Subaru prioritized his own self-pity before worrying about her.

In the end, that's just how it was.

Even recognizing and feeling his unpleasant parts, his bad parts, his missing parts, didn't automatically mean he could immediately improve them. Rather, the visible holes were unfathomably deep and dark, perhaps even robbing him of the will to do anything about them.

The gaping void was proof that Natsuki Subaru was an incomplete human being. His unwillingness to act in the face of it would also serve as passive self-indulgence, reinforcing that fact.

Subaru, who wasn't even worth pity. Hearing the depths of his grimy ego clinging to the bottom of his heart, even the blue-haired girl finally—

"Rem knows."

"…"

"That Subaru is someone who has the courage to reach out, even in the darkest, most uncertain abyss."

—Even then, Rem didn't abandon Subaru.

3

Subaru felt an unprecedented sense of impatience from Rem's absolute affection and complete trust.

He had cursed himself so terribly, exposed such ugly truths, confessed directly that everything was a lie, and that he was a hopeless good-for-nothing.

—Why was she looking at Subaru with such loving eyes?

"Rem likes it when Subaru strokes her head. Rem feels like we connect through your palm and her hair."

Quietly, haltingly, she suddenly began to confide in the silent Subaru.

"Rem likes Subaru's voice. Every time she hears a word, she can feel her heart warm. Rem likes Subaru's eyes. They're usually sharp, but Rem loves how they soften when you're trying to be kind to someone."

Rem continued, pressing on Subaru, who couldn't say anything.

"Rem likes Subaru's fingers. Even though you're a boy, you have beautiful fingers, yet when Rem holds them, they're strong and slender, reminding me that you are indeed a boy. Rem likes the way Subaru walks. When we walk side by side, Rem likes how you sometimes turn back, as if checking if Rem is still following."

His heart was screaming.

Each time Rem connected another word, a scream echoed in Subaru's chest.

"…Stop."

"Rem likes Subaru's sleeping face. So defenseless, like a baby, and your eyelashes are a bit long. When Rem touches your cheek, you become calm, and you don't even notice if Rem mischievously touch your lips… It makes my heart ache so much, and Rem loves it very much."

"Why…"

Why did she keep saying such things?

To such a foolish, empty Subaru, why did she keep throwing such words at him?

"If Subaru says he hates himself, then Rem wants you to know that she knows you have so many good qualities."

"That's all… a delusion…!"

What Rem saw was a convenient illusion.

The real Subaru wasn't that kind of person. The real Subaru was dirtier. There was a more malicious Subaru, the exact opposite of how Rem saw him so favorably.

"You just don't understand! I know myself best!"

"Subaru only knows about himself! How much does Subaru know about the Subaru that Rem sees?!"

Subaru instinctively raised his voice, and Rem shouted over him, cutting him off.

Subaru was startled by her raising her voice for the first time since coming here. Startled, he gasped, and finally noticed the large tears welling up in Rem's eyes, despite her efforts to maintain a neutral expression.

There was no way her feelings weren't hurt by Subaru's words.

There was no way her kind heart wasn't pained by hearing the full extent of Subaru's self-loathing.

Still, she believed in Subaru.

Even after knowing the twisted inner self he had described so maliciously, Rem believed in Subaru.

"Why… why do you believe in me so much…? I'm weak, and insignificant… and I ran… It was the same last time, I ran, so why…?"

—How could she believe in him so much, in him, who was so pathetic, so unreliable, always losing to his own weakness? How could she believe in him, when he couldn't even believe in himself?

"—Because Subaru is Rem's hero."

Subaru's heart quietly trembled at those words, expressing unconditional, complete trust.

No matter how many disadvantages were piled upon him, no matter how many flaws were flaunted, that single phrase contained a wish powerful enough to repel all that negativity.

Then, Subaru, belatedly, finally realized.

He had been mistaken. He had misunderstood. He had been wrong all along.

He had deluded himself into thinking that she, only Rem, would tolerate his degradation indefinitely. He had mistakenly believed that no matter how weak or pathetic he exposed himself to be, she would forgive him.

That was an error. A mistake. A fatal foolishness.

—Rem alone would never permit Subaru's weakness.

Everyone told Subaru to do nothing, to stay still, not to do anything useless.

Everyone kept telling Subaru not to expect anything from him, that his actions would be futile.

—Rem alone would not tolerate Subaru's weakness.

She alone kept telling him to stand up, not to give up, to save everyone.

No one expected anything from Subaru. Even Subaru himself had abandoned Subaru, but she alone would absolutely never abandon him, nor would she accept it.

It was a "curse" that Natsuki Subaru had placed on her.

"How you came to save Rem in that murky forest, in a world where even my sense of self was vague, when all Rem could think of was raging wildly."

"…"

"How you became a decoy to fight the witchbeast, allowing Rem, who was awake but couldn't move, and Sister, who was exhausted from overusing her magic, to escape."

"…"

"How there was no chance of victory, and your life was truly in danger, yet you survived… and returned to Rem's arms, still warm."

"…"

"How you woke up, smiled, and said the words Rem wanted to hear most, at the time Rem wanted to hear them most, from the person Rem wanted to hear them from most."

The "curses" Subaru had placed on her were recounted by her own lips.

Those "curses" were deeply gentle, binding her heart with chains of trust, still holding her captive even now.

"Rem's time had been stopped. From that fiery night, the night Rem lost everything except my sister, Rem's time had been stopped all along."

Speaking of fragments of a harrowing past, Rem gazed intently at Subaru.

Her gaze was filled with unwavering devotion.

"Subaru gently melted the stopped time and the frozen heart, and set them moving. Subaru can't possibly know how much Rem was saved at that moment, that morning. Or how happy Rem was."

Therefore, Rem continued, placing a hand on her chest.

"—Rem believes. No matter how painful or difficult things get, even if Subaru seems about to lose. Even if no one in the world believes in Subaru anymore, and Subaru himself can no longer believe in yourself—Rem believes."

Speaking, Rem took a step, closing the distance.

Within reach, she extended both hands and wrapped her arms around Subaru's neck, who was still looking down and unable to move. The pulling force wasn't strong, yet the unresisting Subaru was held in her embrace, helpless.

With his head cradled against Rem's chest, due to their height difference, he heard her voice descend from directly above him.

“The Subaru who saved Rem is a true hero.”

He felt her lips pressed against his forehead, a warm sensation.

Heat spread from the contact, and an inexplicable emotion swelled within Subaru’s chest.

Blood flowed through his previously unmoving limbs, and the noise that had filled his skull cleared.

“No matter how hard I tried, I couldn’t save anyone.”

“Rem is here. The Rem that Subaru saved is here, now.”

“I’m empty, I’ve done nothing. No one will listen to me.”

“Rem is here. If it’s Subaru’s words, Rem will listen to anything. Rem wants to listen.”

“No one expects anything from me. No one believes in me. …I hate myself.”

“Rem loves Subaru.”

The hand touching his cheek was warm, and the eyes gazing at Subaru up close were moist.

Her presence, her very being, affirmed the profound “truth” of her words.

“Is it okay… for someone like me…?”

No matter how many times he challenged it, how many times he started over, he ruined everything each time.

Everyone died. He couldn’t reach them. He let everyone die. He didn’t think enough.

Empty, powerless, foolish, slow to act, and even his desire to protect someone wavered, a half-baked person.

Was it okay to be like that?

“It has to be Subaru.”

“…”

“It has to be Subaru, or it’s not okay.”

If there was someone who believed in him, even when he couldn’t believe in himself.

Could Natsuki Subaru fight?

—Could he fight fate without giving up?

“If you’re empty and have nothing, and you can’t forgive yourself for that— Let’s start now, from here.”

“What…?”

“Just as Subaru set Rem’s stopped time in motion, now, you’ll set in motion the time that you thought had stopped.”

He had been regretting, shaming, and trying to surrender to the past where he had done nothing, the days where he could do nothing, and the time he had spent meaninglessly.

To that Subaru, Rem smiled.

“Let’s start from here. From one… no, from zero!”

“…”

“If it’s hard to walk alone, Rem will support you. Let’s share our burdens and support each other as we walk. You said that, didn’t you, that morning?”

Subaru had said they would stand side-by-side and talk about the future with smiles.

Subaru had said they would lean on each other, support each other, and walk on together.

"Please show me your cool side, Subaru."

He had only shown his uncool sides.

Subaru himself was the one who had placed an indelible "curse" on her.

Subaru had a duty to fulfill that responsibility.

"…Rem."

"Yes."

She responded quietly to his call.

He lifted his face. Looked forward. Gazed into Rem's eyes. They were calm, gentle, waiting for his answer.

So Subaru wanted to be the Natsuki Subaru she loved.

"—I love Emilia."

"—Yes."

At Subaru's confession, Rem nodded with a smile, as if she had known all along.

At that smile, at her kindness, Subaru, knowing it was cruel, still—

"I want to see Emilia's smile. I want to help with Emilia's future. Even if she tells me I'm in the way, even if she tells me not to come… I want to be by her side."

He reconfirmed those unchanging feelings, now that he had received Rem's feelings.

The way he felt that swelling emotion was different from before.

"Using 'because I love you' as an excuse to expect everything to be understood… That's arrogant, isn't it?"

"…………"

"It's okay if she doesn't understand. Right now, I want to help Emilia. I want to bring Emilia, who is facing a difficult and painful future, into a future where everyone can smile."

So,

"Will you help me?"

He extended his hand, asking Rem, who was right beside him.

He knew it was cowardly, accepting her feelings even though he couldn't reciprocate, knowing he was taking advantage of her devotion, yet because she loved him, a man who still couldn't give up on the future of someone important to him.

"I can't do anything by myself. I'm lacking in everything. I don't have the confidence to walk straight. I'm weak, fragile, and insignificant. So, will you lend me your hand so I can walk straight?"

"Subaru, you're a terrible person. You're asking something like that of someone you just rejected?"

"It's hard for me to ask this of someone who just rejected my once-in-a-lifetime proposal, too."

Subaru chuckled weakly, and Rem let out a small, uncontrollable giggle.

They laughed together for a moment, and then Rem straightened her posture, elegantly pinched her skirt, and curtsied.

"I humbly accept. If that is what it takes for Subaru —Rem's hero— to welcome the future with a smile."

"Alright, watch me, from the best seat."

She took his outstretched hand, and Subaru pulled Rem closer, having exchanged a vow.

Rem let out a small "Ah", and her small body fit perfectly into Subaru's embrace. Grateful for the soft, warm presence of the girl who loved him,

"—The man you fell for is going to become the coolest hero ever!"

His chest was hot.

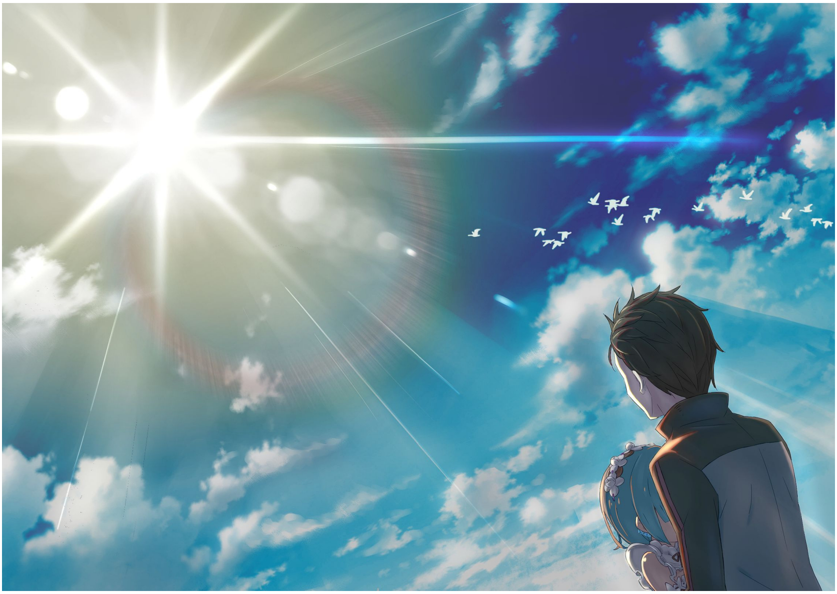
The embraced Rem pressed her face into Subaru's chest, hiding her expression.

Her breathing was hot. Her forehead and cheeks, rubbing against him, were hot. Surely, the tears streaming from her eyes were the hottest of all.

—Even now, Subaru couldn't bring himself to like himself. He still hated himself.

However, there was a girl who said she loved such a Subaru.

There was a girl he wanted to be liked by, even as such a Subaru.



—Emilia, I’m watching you. Rem, you’re watching me. So, I won’t look down.

“…”

It was borrowed courage, but he believed the feelings in his heart were real.

From here, let’s start from zero.

Natsuki Subaru’s story.

—Starting life in another world, from zero.

Chapter 53:
The Distributed Card

1

Silence, thick with tension, filled the hall.

Subaru tasted that tension on his tongue, wetting his parched lips before clenching his fist, a small victory for taking the first step in addressing the situation.

Above all, having everyone crucial to the current predicament gathered here was vital for him.

He had no power, not enough wisdom. If there was anything he, who lacked ability and connections, could do, it was to ensure his previous deaths weren't in vain.

"It seems I can finally understand the purpose of delaying dinner to gather us all."

The beautiful woman dressed as a man, Crusch Karsten, who was seated with her hands clasped on her lap, broke the silence. Her dignified expression showed a hint of understanding as she murmured this.

The first knight standing beside her narrowed his eyes slightly at his master's words, his adorable cheeks puffing out a little as he said,

"Oh really? Ferris is still pretty skeptical, nya~. How could a boy who was so pathetic suddenly get eyes like that, I wonder?"

Though his tone and expression feigned jest, the gaze Ferris directed at Subaru as he spoke was anything but careless. Even without great strength, his fervent desire to keep his master out of harm's way was palpable.

"…"

Still maintaining silence and not joining the conversation between master and attendant was Wilhelm, who stood rigidly to Crusch's left, opposite Ferris.

A sharpened sword aura emanated from him as he stood with his sword at his hip, eyes closed. Not a trace remained of the kindly old man who had greeted Subaru and Rem upon their return. He was now wholly immersed in his role as a public servant, a sword for his master, Crusch.

The setting was a detached villa in the upper echelons of the Royal Capital's noble district, used by the Karsten family during their stays. In line with the master's wishes, the decor was kept minimal, with the exception of this reception hall, which was appropriately adorned to welcome guests.

It was natural for the aforementioned three, along with the estate's staff, to be present. As for the other faces in the hall, excluding them—

"Returning to the fold is somewhat uncomfortable. Mr Subaru, I trust you have a story that will dispel this discomfort."

He must have noticed Subaru subtly scanning everyone's faces. The elegant man with dull blonde hair and a stylish goatee, Russell Fellow, a shrewd businessman who managed the Royal Capital's commerce, smiled as he met Subaru's gaze.

Subaru shrugged at Russell's remark, which could be taken as a warning.

"Rem's gone to get the last person now, so just a little longer. I can't guarantee they'll come, but… I have a chance."

"I look forward to their swift arrival. By the way, might I inquire about the basis of your confidence?"

Russell likely had an idea of who Subaru was waiting for.

Subaru shook his head at Russell's question, saying, "It's a simple matter."

"They said themselves they're sensitive to the smell of money. If that's true, they'll show up no matter what. You're the same, right, Russell?"

"Well, well… you've hit a sore spot."

Russell pressed a hand to his forehead, acting as if he'd been outmaneuvered. Of course, this exchange was made with the understanding that their respective hands were somewhat revealed.

An ostensible sense of security would be nothing more than a pretense, and in the first place, Subaru lacked the skill or composure for such cunning.

What supported Subaru now was simply borrowed courage.

"Everyone, thank you for your patience."

A few minutes later, the hall door opened to reveal a blue-haired maid—Rem. She bowed her head so everyone in the room could see, then looked at Subaru.

"Okay."

Making a small circle with the fingers of her right hand, Rem approached Subaru and stood on her tiptoes slightly to whisper in his ear.

"They'll be a little late, but they promised to come."

"Is that so? Good, you did well, Rem."

Snapping his fingers at the report, Subaru nodded, having found a way to turn a suboptimal situation into the best possible one. He then surveyed the waiting faces.

"The last participant will be a bit late, but the cast is assembled for now. No need to make you wait any longer. —Let's begin."

At Subaru's declaration, each person reacted, sensing a shift in the atmosphere.

Crusch gave a faint smile, and Ferris tightly pressed his lips together. Wilhelm remained utterly silent, his expression unchanged, while Russell settled deeply into his chair.

Receiving all their gazes, Subaru stamped his foot firmly once, steeling his resolve.

He felt his heart beat high and strong.

Blood rushed through his body, and at the same time, a great unease reared its head, threatening to plunge him into darkness.

But,

“Subaru.”

Softly, Rem, standing beside him, touched his sleeve as if to reassure him in his anxiety.

It was a touch through clothing, not direct skin contact—yet Subaru felt a sense of relief as if he had received aid from ten thousand.

Rem was watching. He couldn’t possibly do anything disgraceful.

With a defiant smile, hiding his fear behind it, Subaru prepared to challenge the first wall.

To navigate conditions as narrow as a needle’s eye and weave a happy ending.

To take one step closer to the hero believed in by the girl who said she loved him.

“There’s one thing I’d like to confirm, Natsuki Subaru.”

As Subaru braced himself and looked forward, Crusch’s voice came, a single finger raised. She waved that raised finger from side to side, meeting Subaru’s gaze.

“The purpose of this gathering. —From your own mouth, that is.”

With an arm resting on the armrest and her cheek in her hand, her shrewd eyes looked at Subaru.

Even though she likely understood, her stance in making Subaru articulate it showed no trace of leniency.

From the very beginning of the conversation, the match had already started.

Subaru understood this now, especially after his repeated failures.

“Right, of course—”

So Subaru gestured broadly, maintaining his composure so as not to be overwhelmed by Crusch’s piercing gaze, and with a confident smile to avoid repeating past mistakes, he declared,

“An alliance between the Emilia and Crusch factions, under equal terms— This is the negotiation for those terms.”

Numerous walls stood before him— The first challenge to overcome these obstacles was about to begin.

—After his exchange with Rem in front of the Royal Capital’s main gate, Subaru had resolved to restart himself.

He believed this was the honest way to be for the girl who had laid bare her entire heart and still chose to believe in him.

“Considering that, there are just too many walls we need to overcome…”

Reflecting again on the myriad walls before him, he could understand the weakness of his own heart, which had almost broken just moments before. The situation remained unchanged, seemingly one step away from checkmate.

Nevertheless,

“We have to do something, right? Lend me a hand, Rem?”

“Yes, anything for Subaru.”

He scratched his head and spoke before organizing his thoughts, and Rem readily nodded.

Rem’s unwavering trust shone in her fervent gaze, filling Subaru’s chest with both courage and a sense of duty.

He chose not to point out the faint redness at the corners of her eyes.

They had moved from the main gate to a corner of the lower district, leaning against a wall amidst the bustle.

Looking back and recalling their exchange at the main gate, he had hesitated to continue the conversation there. After all, he had laid bare all his complexes, practically in tears. If he had revealed Rem’s feelings in response, enduring the stares of the gawking onlookers any longer would have pushed his mental endurance past its limit.

Passing through the lukewarm gazes with Rem still in his arms, they finally reached a place out of sight of the onlookers and took a breath. In any case,

“There’s no doubt we lost time. Even if it was just an hour… it’s precious now.”

As he had previously confirmed, the limit before the overwhelming tragedy at the mansion was five days. —In reality, it was about four and a half days.

If nearly two of those days were spent traveling, the effectively usable time was two days.

“So, the walls we have to overcome are, one, two, three, many, many of them.”

There were many hurdles to clear, and their difficulty was vastly different from before.

Each one was independently despair-inducing, and their combined assault made them an almost indescribable challenge.

The first, naturally, was the Witch Cult.

If he didn’t somehow stop the fanatics led by Petelgeuse, not only the mansion but also the villagers would perish.

The second was Rem's death, which would inevitably come, in various forms.

Whether Subaru accompanied her or she went ahead alone, her fate always converged on death. The first time, when she died out of his sight. And the despair of the second and third times, when he lost her before his eyes— The shock of those incidents, it was no exaggeration to say, had driven Subaru to give up.

The third was the unimaginable wall that would be triggered by Emilia's death, a precondition that simply couldn't be ignored— The indiscriminate revenge of the Great Spirit Pack.

Recalling it, all of Subaru's deaths in this loop seemed to have ended with freezing by Puck.

This, in turn, produced circumstantial evidence that Subaru had never once arrived in time to save Emilia from a life-threatening situation in any of these worlds.

None of these walls could be disregarded.

If even one was overlooked, the future world would not be the one Natsuki Subaru desired, and it would betray the image of the hero Rem believed in.

"—A few things."

Subaru murmured, having sorted out the problems.

In front of him, Rem, watching him in silent contemplation, did not respond to his murmur. She knew his utterance wasn't seeking a reply.

To expect the best judgment from her beloved hero, and to contribute to the utmost.

That was how she maintained her composure now, and it was the greatest show of affection she could give.

Watched by Rem, Subaru, within the limited time, replayed memories that transcended those limits, letting his thoughts race in search of a single clue.

Believing that somewhere, there lay dormant a possibility, however slight, to move this seemingly impossible checkmate situation.

—Twist your mind, burn your heart.

His body and abilities couldn't keep up with his ideals now. If he couldn't even manage this much, then even a single step towards being a hero would be a laughingstock.

—Remember, think.

Don't let his three deaths be in vain. Don't let the will of the girl he had let die three times be in vain. All the worlds that had ended three times weighed heavily on Subaru's shoulders—

People he met, conversations he had. Parting, encounters, anger, madness, sorrow, the Witch.

Then—

"There's a possibility… right?"

Suddenly, a mere sliver of possibility flashed through his mind.

Each thread was thin and weak, and if forcibly connected, it was uncertain when it would snap. It was too unreliable to entrust everything to.

That's precisely why it was worth going "all in".

"Rem. There are a few things I need to tell you and a few things I want to ask."

"Yes."

To consolidate the rough draft he had just conceived, Subaru sought Rem's cooperation.

Now, before he began to disclose information to her, he first filtered out only the information that wouldn't infringe on the Witch's curse

—

“The news of Emilia joining the Royal Selection created the conditions for the Witch Cult to move. They’re going to rampage, targeting Emilia… and the mansion and village for some incomprehensible reason. I want to stop them.”

“The Witch Cult…”

For a moment, a dangerous emotion flickered in Rem’s eyes when she heard that term.

She suppressed that emotion with self-control, and then nodded slightly at Subaru’s words.

“Lord Roswaal was also considering the possibility of the Witch Cult moving. Rem isn’t privy to the details, but countermeasures should have been planned.”

“It’s just, that alone won’t be enough.”

In fact, it was unclear what preparations Roswaal had made against the Witch Cult.

Whether they failed, or whether they were activated but didn’t reach their target, was uncertain. As a result, those prior measures bore no fruit, and the white hell unfolded.

Knowing that future, what Subaru needed to do was secure self-defense without relying on Roswaal, and thereby find a way to protect the lives of the people in the mansion and village.

“The Witch Cult will likely attempt a quick decisive battle. Rem, what about the mansion’s forces?”

“…It’s difficult to say, but there’s a high possibility that Lord Roswaal isn’t at the mansion right now. He was scheduled to visit influential people in the domain immediately after returning from the Royal Capital.”

Rem said evasively, her words difficult, the same news of Roswaal’s absence that had previously appalled Subaru. Hearing it, he confirmed the fact that only Emilia, Ram, and Beatrice would likely be at the mansion.

Just three of them, and considering Beatrice's uncooperative attitude, it was highly doubtful she would participate in a fight against the Witch Cult.

He recalled the brief conversation he'd had with Beatrice last time.

How she had looked at him with eyes like a child whose expectations had been betrayed when he asked her to kill him—

"Sorry, but that'll have to wait for now."

Though it pained him to leave her tearful gaze behind, Subaru said to Rem, who was waiting for his words, "Then,"

"Only two can fight. Even if Rem and I return, it'll be a drop in the bucket."

"The majority of the main residence's combat power undeniably relies on Lord Roswaal's individual abilities. If Frederica had remained, things might have been different."

Nodding back at a regretful Rem, Subaru ironed out the details to avoid any discrepancies in information between himself and Rem at this preparatory stage.

Regarding the Witch Cult and the mansion's combat strength, there was nothing more to add.

Therefore, the next topic was the main point.

Composing himself, Subaru looked directly into Rem's eyes.

Seeing Rem raise her face, sensing the change in atmosphere, he said,

"—Rem, tell me everything Roswaal ordered you to do in the Royal Capital."

"…"

Subaru expected a bewildered expression, or perhaps surprise at being caught off guard.

However, Rem's reaction to his words betrayed all his expectations.

"—Yes. As you command."

She nodded at Subaru's words, and most importantly, she broke into a genuinely happy smile, and a single tear escaped the corner of her eye.

2

"An alliance, huh?"

Crusch murmured, her gaze fixed on Subaru as he declared the purpose of the meeting.

She thoughtfully lowered her chin slightly, then glanced at Rem. Silently understanding the meaning of her searching look, Rem slowly shook her head.

"As per Lord Roswaal's instructions, Rem has said nothing. —Everything Subaru has discovered, he's arrived at on his own."

"I don't doubt your loyalty. But, I see…"

Crusch showed understanding, more like realization than mere acceptance. She then turned her understanding gaze back to Subaru.

"Then, for this negotiation, the authority has been delegated from Rem to you —Natsuki Subaru, correct?"

"Yeah, that's how it is. Roswaal… our master, he certainly pulled a nasty trick."

With an exaggerated sigh, Subaru clicked his tongue at the image of the blue-haired figure's unpleasant smile in his mind.

The directive for Rem's actions in the capital had been given to her privately, without Subaru's knowledge. She had been strictly ordered never to reveal it to Subaru unless he figured it out himself.

“It’s not like there weren’t things bugging me from the start. For one, it’s obvious our faction is chronically short-handed.”

As far as Subaru knew, the Roswaal faction, which backed Emilia, was critically understaffed.

At the mansion itself, there were only the sisters Ram and Rem, Roswaal, and Beatrice, who was questionable to even count as personnel. Occasionally, other associates were mentioned, but even gathering all the unfamiliar names, it was hard to imagine them making a significant difference.

Under such circumstances, the fact that Rem had been left with Subaru in the capital, even under limited conditions, had always felt like a nagging inconsistency in the back of his mind.

Of course, the official reason could be seen as an act of courtesy, to repay Subaru for saving their territory from crisis with treatment and other forms of compensation, making it rude to leave him alone in the capital.

“I can’t imagine that pervert would let Rem go just for such a merciful reason. If I kept pushing the idea that there had to be some hidden agenda…”

“Naturally, our house, which had the most opportunities for an audience, would be chosen.”

Shifting her crossed legs, Crusch picked up Subaru’s words and completed his conclusion. Subaru nodded in affirmation, prefacing his next words with, “Also,”

“I’d heard that Rem and Crusch were secretly meeting night after night. I hate how stupid I was for not even bothering to think about what they were talking about.”

He could only self-deprecate, wondering how self-absorbed he had been. It had taken four revisits of the world for him to finally notice Rem subtly scattering hints for him to pick up on the hidden intentions— That’s how dense he was.

"The nightly discussions were about concluding an alliance. Regarding the conditions we're offering… I've heard all about them from Rem."

"The magical ore from Elior Forest, the subdivision of its mining rights, is the main bargaining chip."

Crusch interjected, cutting off Subaru's words, as if it was nothing to hide, something he had only vaguely hinted at.

Immediately, someone else's eyes lit up upon hearing it.

"Well, now, that's a conversation not to be missed."

Russell, who was also seated in a guest-purpose leather chair like Crusch, leaned forward slightly, his eyes gleaming.

"Mining rights for magical ore are, quite frankly, more valuable than ever with the rising demand for minerals. This is especially true if they are from unexplored lands."

Subaru couldn't hide his surprise at how eagerly the merchant had latched onto the topic.

When he first heard about this from Rem, Subaru had been so worried that he thought, "If this doesn't work, we might have to rethink the terms."

"What do you mean, the demand for ore is rising?"

"The season is about to shift from Red Day to Yellow Day, and then Blue Day. This year, in particular, the influence of water mana is expected to be strong, so there should be high demand for heating purposes."

Russell held up a finger, clearly answering Subaru's question.

The "Blue Day" and "Red Day" he mentioned were terms for the seasons in this world. As he understood it, Red Day was "Summer" and Blue Day was "Winter." Yellow Day was "Autumn" and Green Day was likely "Spring." In any case, it seemed clear that heating equipment would sell well before winter.

“Magic ore itself is a pure crystal of magical power containing mana. Depending on subsequent processing, it can be imbued with elemental properties and used for various purposes. It excels in strength, and if used correctly, its durability can be trusted. There’s hardly a more manageable product.”

“In exchange, the absolute quantity is small. Once a property is added, it cannot be undone. Many mining sites are managed by the kingdom itself, and a significant portion of the ore is diverted to public works. Only a minuscule amount circulates in the market; in simpler terms, it’s only available to the country and the wealthy.”

To Russell’s enumeration of the magic ore’s virtues, Crusch countered by listing its downsides in terms of usage, attempting to undermine its value.

However, Russell was undeterred, shaking his head and saying, “That’s precisely why.”

“One simply cannot resist the discovery of an untouched mining site. If that discovery is spoken of by the attendant of the Marquis Mathers, who built his fortune through the excavation and trade of magic ore —Furthermore, by the knight of Lady Emilia, a Royal Selection candidate— Its credibility and trustworthiness are exceedingly high.”

Russell spoke with heated enthusiasm, glancing sideways at Subaru as he did.

It was clear that his attitude, feigning a greedy eagerness for mining rights, also strongly contained a veiled warning to Subaru.

In other words, he was cutting off Subaru’s escape route, implying that since Subaru had brought up that material in his presence, there was no turning back now.

However,

“Yeah, you can trust me on that. During this long Royal Selection, I’m not so off the mark as to bluff the first party I’m trying to team up with.”

Since Roswaal presented it as a condition, there was no room for Subaru's personal will to intervene. This also meant there was no room for anxiety to intrude, and to put it bluntly, it relied on Roswaal's credibility as a lord. He certainly couldn't say that to Roswaal himself.

Anyway, Russell nodded in understanding at Subaru's reply, saying, "I see".

"It seems there's no need to worry about your readiness as a negotiator. I apologize for my testing remarks, it was rude of me."

"No, it's fine. I'm going to be leaning heavily on your input in our discussions from now on, Russell."

From the start, Subaru had no expectation of Russell having a high opinion of him.

The first time they met in the third world, Russell was aware of the disgraceful display Subaru had made at the Royal Selection. Naturally, he had assumed there would be an opportunity for Russell to question Subaru's abilities in a negotiation setting and confirm them.

Although Subaru had planned to prepare easy topics to avoid being cornered during the main discussion, he couldn't hide his relief that Russell had taken the bait in an easily avoidable situation.

However, if that relief showed so readily on his face, it wouldn't meet Russell's approval, so he had no choice but to respond with an air of importance, even after accepting the apology.

"That being said, now that you've apologized like this, I'd hope you'd overlook one or two missteps, wouldn't you?"

"So, that's why Russell Fellow is participating, then. Surprisingly, you make quite shrewd judgments."

Crusch muttered, a hint of a smile on her lips, seemingly grading Subaru and the merchant's exchange. Since the meeting hadn't been cut short, he was probably just barely passing.

Making such a judgment, Subaru continued his polite smile, putting a hand to his head.

“While securing an advisor by dangling a profitable opportunity is certainly a goal… I called Russell because it’s related to the main topic.”

“Oh, the main topic—”

At Subaru’s words, spoken as he scratched his head, the air in the room completely changed.

Crusch, who had until then maintained a posture of simply observing the meeting, straightened her posture, quietly closed her eyes once, and then slowly directed her sharp gaze at Subaru.

Before such an intimidating presence, so strong it felt like a wind had swept through, Subaru did not flinch, but resisted.

He had been exposed to oppressive violence enough to make him sick. Compared to that, Crusch’s gaze had no negative emotions whatsoever that would make one cower. There was only a commanding presence that straightened one’s posture and sharpened slack thoughts.

“I acknowledge, Natsuki Subaru. That you are the representative of Marquis Mathers, and a formal envoy from Emilia. In this negotiation, the content exchanged between you and I will be taken as exchanged directly between Emilia and I.”

Standing directly before someone, one could feel this much pressure.

Crusch wasn’t intentionally intimidating Subaru right now. She had simply shifted her consciousness from Crusch as a private individual to Crusch Karsten as a public figure. This was proof that the very presence of the head of the Karsten Duchy held such power.

This was the sight of the most formidable woman in the Kingdom of Lugunica, currently closest to the throne.

Amidst a shiver-inducing admiration, Crusch extended a hand towards Subaru, who stood his ground, and personally signaled the start of the negotiations.

“You should have already heard, but I will ask again. The negotiations between myself and your attendant… Rem, have not reached an agreement, even with the subdivision of mining rights and so forth included. You are fully aware of this point, are you not?”

“…Yes.”

He had heard from Rem that the negotiations were difficult and that her delegated authority was insufficient to reach an agreement. While the image of Rem lamenting her powerlessness came to mind, half of his lament was for his own lack of discernment, completely unaware of her struggles.

Combining these two regrets into one, Subaru decided to fully utilize the fortune of gaining future regrets in advance. That was the difference in development from the previous loops.

“I also want to confirm, but in reality, the previous conditions weren’t enough, right? Without excessive interference in each other’s factions, the subdivision of mining rights in Elior Forest. Plus, agreements on the handling of the mined magical ore itself.”

“The draft was presented by Rem. I must say, as expected of the Marquis Mathers. While securing ample profit for their own faction, it also brings twelve times the benefit to us. Normally, I would jump at it and immediately prepare a written agreement, however…”

Subaru couldn’t comment on the specifics of those numerical exchanges.

He could only pray that no intricate details would come up, as he might blurt out something like, “Then I’ll give you all the mining rights!” if pushed.

“In this case, there’s significant concern regarding the party with whom we’re trading. Do you understand?”

It wasn’t that his prayer had been answered, but the content Crusch spoke of after pausing was different from his anxiety.

However, it certainly wasn't welcome news.

"It's not about Roswaal being untrustworthy… is it?"

That was just wishful thinking. If Roswaal's conduct were the issue, he would compel him to lead a pure and righteous life from now on, but that wasn't the problem Crusch was raising.

It was an unavoidable issue that would perpetually follow Emilia.

"A rival candidate in the Royal Selection. Moreover, a half-elf… a transaction with Emilia, who is subject to accusations of being a half-demon. One cannot help but be cautious when considering the future ramifications."

Hearing her state that in a low voice, Subaru felt an unexpected disappointment.

The impression Subaru had of Crusch could best be described by words like "majestic" and "sincere".

In the Royal Selection, she had truly embodied those words in her stance and unwavering statements, so her current concern for public opinion felt out of place.

"Could that be… just a pretense for refusal?"

"Subaru-kyun? Ferris thinks it's not very nice to casually blurt out things like that during an important negotiation, nya? Nya~?"

Ferris had blue veins throbbing on his forehead despite his smile. The scary part of his smile had a strange masculine quality, and Subaru hurriedly covered his mouth and bowed his head.

Seeing this exchange, Crusch subtly curved the corner of her mouth.

"If you respond too frankly, it makes me, who responded with a pretense, seem rather shameful. I've learned something today. When you're always surrounded by the same people, opportunities like this are rare."

With that, his rudeness was overlooked through a line of reasoning difficult for Subaru to grasp.

Nevertheless, constantly relying on compassion would only create obligations and ultimately lead to a disadvantage for him.

Subaru nodded slightly.

“So, pretense aside… Can I assume that, deep down, you have no aversion to forming an alliance with Emilia?”

“Natsuki Subaru, let me correct your thinking.”

Crusch raised a finger and pointed it at him.

“The value of a being is determined by the nature and brilliance of its soul. Origin and environment are not the decisive factors that define one’s true essence.”

Of course, she wasn’t so naive as to deny that these could be indirect factors.

Nor did she lack the imagination to consider how much unreasonable hardship Emilia’s circumstances, the reality of being a half-elf, had forced upon her.

Therefore, Crusch nodded once.

“There was no falsehood in the words Emilia spoke at that Royal Selection. Precisely because there was genuine resolve and pride, I acknowledge Emilia as one of the rival candidates.”

“That’s complicated, so what does that mean?”

“The theatricality is a matter of my personal preference, forgive me.”

Seemingly aware of her own grandiose speech, Crusch briefly let a small smile play on her lips, then, after a single blink, her expression tightened.

“I will not use Emilia being a half-elf as a reason to reject an alliance. Rather, Emilia's existence, given that she is not politically hostile, can even be considered an opponent I do not actively need to confront. An alliance would not be objectionable."

"Then…"

"Do not rush to an answer, Natsuki Subaru. Whether I accept your proposal or not will largely depend on your answer from this point forward."

Crusch restrained Subaru, who was leaning forward at the promising reply, and questioned him again.

In other words, what would Subaru, having been granted negotiating authority, bring to the table?

"The mining rights in Elior Forest, they are certainly very beneficial to us. On the other hand, I feel there's no need to hastily advance the Royal Selection. The deadline is three years. Rushing the situation too much could leave lingering problems later."

"So, the benefits of allying with Emilia don't outweigh those disadvantages?"

"Slightly different. As it stands, the benefits and disadvantages cancel each other out. From our house's perspective, we need just one more push, a pretext, so to speak."

Crusch herself seemed keen on forming the alliance.

However, the complexities of a ducal house, a position that had grown too large, likely meant that not everything could move as freely as she wished.

That's why she was seeking it.

Something that could move the situation and silence the voices around her.

"…"

As he tried to speak, Subaru was slightly surprised by the sensation of his throat constricting.

Tension and anxiety swelled in his chest, blocking his throat as he tried to step forward.

He took a breath, and then mentally replayed what he was about to say.

He hadn't confirmed its certainty with anyone. He couldn't deny the possibility that it might be a completely off-base, irrelevant statement.

However he believed in his own idea: she would go for it.

"To finalize the alliance, we'll offer mining rights and… information."

"—Information."

Hearing that, Crusch touched her long hair, prompting him to continue.

The decision hadn't been made yet. This was the crucial moment.

"Yes, that's right. What I can offer is a certain piece of information."

"Tell me. Will what you speak be enough to sway us?"

Extending the hand that had been touching her hair towards him, Crusch waited for Subaru's words.

Naturally, a slight tremor ran through his legs and fingers. But the warmth he felt faintly around his elbow dispelled it.

Rem had placed her fingers on Subaru's arm, igniting his borrowed courage.

Taking a breath, Subaru spoke it all in one go.

"—The time and place of the White Whale's appearance. That's the one card I can play."

Bonus Short Stories

Felt Forms a Hooligan Squad

1

???: “It’s been a while since so many people have gathered in this mansion.”

Looking at the people meeting at the parlor, the elderly woman commented that with a smile. As she served black tea to each guest, her gait of walking was almost as if she was prancing around. However, her refined gestures and inability to sense the mood objectively are not unusual.

At the present moment, regretfully, the room cannot be said to have an atmosphere gentle enough for full enjoyment of a tea party.

At that moment, seven people had joined the room, even though four of those were of such standing that they would never have entered such a house in their lives.

???: “Are you gonna keep frownin’ like that? Well, I also took a while to get used to it, honestly, so I can’t really say much…”

A girl, looking even more carefree than the elderly woman serving tea, laughed. She had blond hair, red eyes, and pronounced canines, but her most distinguishing characteristic was her childish appearance. Maybe, in a few years, she could become a truly beautiful woman, especially if she wore proper clothing: her current taste was just too plebeian.

???: “I’m so sad that Felt-sama removed her dress the moment we came back…”

Felt: “Those clothes are just too suffocating, and it’s so annoying to walk around in them. Sorry Obaa-chan, but I’m not gonna wear that type of dress inside the house. Only when it’s unavoidable.”

Grandma: “Oh young master, did you hear? Felt-sama said she’ll start wearing those dresses.”

???: “Yes, I did. And I’m very glad to hear that she finally started fulfilling your wishes.”

Felt: “Don’t gimme that smirk! I would do it only when I have to! Only when necessary!”

The two who exploited the young Felt’s opening, were the elderly lady, and the red-haired knight, Reinhard.

This mansion was Reinhard’s residence, built in the Noble District of the Royal Capital. In the past two months, Felt has completely settled in, but the original residents are constantly trying to get her to do new things. In the middle of this routine exchange, a shadow with a large hand—old man Rom—intervenes.

Rom: “I’m sorry to interrupt this laid-back conversation… But let’s talk about what really matters here. I’m starting to feel sorry for these clearly uncomfortable rascals.”

Felt’s guardian pointed towards a trio of men trying to make themselves as small as possible with his chin. The group was composed of one short, one average-sized and one tall man, all wearing rags that did not fit the glamour that befitted a noble’s mansion. To make things worse, all three had bruises all over, and the average-sized man was knocked-out still. Then, the other two looked at each other, and the tallest one spoke up fearfully.

???: “Uhh… We ended up going with the flow, but… What is this group? I understand that the Sword Saint wants to make us fit into society, but what does that have to do with the old man from the loot house and the brat over there?”

???: “Gaston, you dumbass! Pay some fucking attention! I don’t even wanna wonder why, but can’t you see that brat is their ringleader? Be careful, damnit!”

Felt: “You’re also dumb as rocks. Who are you calling a brat? If you want to have a secret talk, do it in private, in private.”

The short one grew louder with impatience, and then grew quieter at the sound of Felt’s ill humor. Felt snorted at the situation, scratching her blond hair.

Felt: “It’s annoying to explain this properly… Reinhard, get them up to speed quickly.”

Reinhard: “Yes, Felt-sama. You should know that the King of Lugunica, and that the entire Royal Family has passed away?”

???: “—Passed away?”

???: “I’ve even heard rumors about their deaths, but those things don’t really have anything to do with us, so I never cared about it…”

In the daily life of a slum dweller, there is no opportunity to lament the death of the Royal Family. Reinhard squinted his eyes for a moment, before continuing his exposition.

Reinhard: “In other words, in the absence of a King, the Council of Sages has decided to elect a new monarch. Based on that, a new King shall be chosen from a few candidates, in preparation for the Dragonfriend Ceremony.”

???: “And what does that have to do with you…?”

Reinhard: “Felt-sama, who stands among us, is one of said chosen people vying for the Royal Throne. I am her loyal knight, and Rom-dono is her only family.”

???: “…What?”

Reinhard’s explanation was succinct enough, having only disclosed the important parts, but it was enough to stun the two men. Felt liked that reaction, smiling maliciously, before they turned to her and raised their tone.

???: “That kid is a candidate to become the King?! The most important person in the Kingdom?!”

???: “Why is that happening, why would she be a candidate? She’s just a mud-stained dog from the slums! Nothing but an ill-natured brat, working as a thief-for-hire!”

Reinhard: “Of course, we cannot ignore her past misdeeds, and we intend to compensate her past victims rightfully. My mission is to support her throughout, and that includes such details.”

Felt did not enjoy having her criminal past exposed like that, but pouted even further hearing Reinhard’s comment. It was apparent that their master-knight relationship had a vacuum that was yet to be filled. Rom picked up the cue and continued.

Rom: “At the very least, it seems all the worries you might have had were already discussed. If it’s any good, Felt-chan did not want to be a candidate at all, and only decided on that recently. Right?”

Felt: “At this point, I’m not gonna continue saying I didn’t have a choice. The truth is, yes, I decided to become King to slap those bastards in the face. I’m not gonna go back on my words.”

Hearing Felt’s assertions, the outcasts looked unsure of themselves. For them, it was a shocking twist, and found themselves thinking what kind of confusing situation they had found themselves into. And then-

???: “…Fuck all of that. If you want to be the King, that’s your own damn problem.”

—Coming beyond the two misfits, a voice was heard: that of the man who had fainted, as he got up slowly. Throwing a sharp gaze at Reinhard, he was displaying a lack of confidence in those words, that his companions had already dispelled.

Felt: “You’re not like the other two, you look like the most boneheaded of them. At the very least, you have the courage to speak up even after Reinhard knocked you out.”

Average Guy: “…What? Oh, so that’s why my neck hurts, damnit… Was it you, Sword Saint?!”

Felt: “Oh, so you hadn’t noticed it at all… I’m not so impressed anymore.”

Reinhard’s calm face neutralized any possible hostility by the average-sized man. The power gap between the two was so massive, that the man looked like a whining loser. Anyhow, the conversation's focus came to the question from the three hooligans.

Reinhard: "So, the reason why we brought you here is…"

Rom: "Wait, Reinhard. You should not be the one that has that conversation with them. That has to come from Felt-chan's mouth directly."

Reinhard immediately acted upon old man Rom's words, who had directed his gaze towards his granddaughter. And so, Felt stepped forward and faced the trio, who looked quizzically towards her.

Felt: "The reason why I brought you three is simple. As was said, I am in the middle of a dispute for this Kingdom's throne. I do not intend to lose. In fact, I want to win at all costs."

Average Guy: "Ha! You're out of touch with reality. What do you know about the world, having been born and raised in the slums? Aren't you underestimating those nobles, huh?

Felt: "…"

The man who had fainted until now that point greatly contested her point, albeit with a touch of sadness. His companions looked towards him as well, insinuating some past episode. However, no matter the circumstances, Felt was not going to change her mind for anything.

Felt: "You are correct, but I won't let myself be intimidated by such things. What worked for me previously may not work anymore, but I do not intend to change my essence. I will win my way, and for that, I need people to help me."

Average Guy: "And you want to get those helpers from the slums? If you seriously think that we're gonna wag our tails if you give us a bit of money, you're dead wrong. Don't look down on us."

Having already anticipated the rebuttal to come, the average-sized man slammed his fist on the table and continued,

Average Guy: "It looks like a bit of extra money does indeed ruin people's mentality. If all you wanna do is to act superior by doing a favor to the poor people from the slums, I'll let you know we will not accept that."

Felt: "Well, for what reason?"

Average Guy: "You know why—It's because I don't like you, brat."

The man capped his rebellion by showing his middle finger. The other two also sobered up and became serious in a single instant, looking at Felt as if they agreed with their friend.

Reinhard: "…"

Reinhard looked surprised with the stubborn attitude. No way had he expected them to refuse the offer in such a firm manner.

Felt: "Ehhh, did you hear that, Rom-jii? I knew these were the right people."

Rom: "Yes… We don't want those who are poor not only in money, but also spirit."

Despite the refusal, the young girl and her grandfather exchanged smiles, which was not only surprising to Reinhard, but also to the trio of hoodlums. So, Felt showed her protruding canines, and turned to them.

Felt: "I like what you guys are made of, not doing what you don't want to do, despite the reward, just because you don't like it. That's just like me."

Average Guy: "…What are you saying?"

Felt: "You know, I hate this Kingdom."

Felt suddenly looked at the delinquent dressed in black and white.

Felt: "I find those who speak of patriotism idiotic, and I couldn't stand seein' looking at the grey sky from the slums. I've always wanted to rip the pristine pretty clothes of those rich bastards, who think they are great just because they had the privilege of being born rich. Well, I still want to do that.”

???: “I don’t know if it’s okay for a person who wants to become King to say that…”

Felt: “Don’t you think it would be interesting to see what kind of country arises if someone like me became King?”

Felt laughed at the astonishment from the hoodlums, and continued before the trio could even think,

Felt: “I truly believe my essence is the same as yours. Of course, we do not have the same personality, and I’m not like you as to resign myself to a life in the slums, but…”

Average Guy: “Then what’s the same between us?”

Felt: “We’re the same, because we came from the same place, and hate the same things. I have not changed, but this opportunity came to me, and I still hate those useless bastards who can do nothing but order others around. And I will become the King without having to change a thing about myself.”

Her declarations were completely bereft of the character befitting a Royal Candidate. She had caused the dissatisfaction of many people present in the Royal Election Ceremony, but the contents of her speech were unaltered. After all, even if her words fell on the deaf ears of those who looked at her from above, satisfied with the status quo remaining unchanged, they resonated strongly on the populace that echoed the same frustration as she did.

Trio: “…”

The three rascals’ expression had changed. They had not found an answer yet, but the hints for their answer had already been handed over by Felt.

Felt: “I don’t want to do you a favor or to make you my subjects. All I have to offer is a little bit of fun, you know? Imagine if we can pull the carpet from under those bastards upstairs? Wouldn’t that be real fun? Let’s do that. Together.”

???: “Are you for real… And you think you’ll become a good King doing just that?”

Felt: “Well, I know that won’t do. But I don’t think it’s wrong to try and drain a bit of that backed-up swamp. If all those who hate the same things I do unite, then maybe we can do something very big. The voices that went unheard until now, can now be heard, exactly because I became a Royal Candidate!”

Laughing in amusement, the young girl was imagining an optimistic future. Her somewhat childish idea was not credible, nor was it realistic. And she had easier, wiser ways to be able to live decently. Because of that…

Average Guy: "…I am Rachins."

Big Guy: "I am Gaston, gentle and strong."

Small Guy: "I-I am Camberley… For the record, I don't trust you fully, okay?!"

The three rascals looked at each other and introduced themselves one-by-one. Understanding that as acceptance from their end, Felt turned to old man Rom and tapped his large hand. Following suit, she grabbed the sweet laid upon the table and exclaimed,

Felt: "Sweet, that settles it then! To celebrate, let's eat obaa-chan's sweets, eat, eat, eat! They're very good. The tea is probably cold, but the sweets still taste the same."

Rachins: "Tsk, I nearly forgot she's just a damn brat… I wonder if we didn't jump on board without thinking?"

Looking at Felt messily eating cookies, Rachins burst that out with a smile.

2

???: "Felt-sama is such a character. Only today can I really understand why the young master is so devoted to her."

During the night, a secret talk was being had in the dimly lit corridor of the Astrea mansion. The moonlight coming through the window was the only source of light, but it was nothing of the sort of a romantic encounter, just a meeting between a master and its servants.

???: "All I'm doing, is following what destiny dictates… That being said, I have to confess I am relieved in knowing she is a person worthy of my sword, and maybe I am a bit biased…”

???: “Felt-sama is a really interesting young lady you have taken in. Don’t you think, ojii-san?”

Even if only two people were conversing, three were present: Reinhard, and the elderly couple of butlers, who had looked after their young master ever since he had been a child and were like family to him.

Reinhard: “It may be a bit rushed, but I’m thinking of bringing Felt-sama with me to the main residence. Now that the Royal Election has begun in earnest, she has much to learn. I will require your assistance in reorganizing this House, which is lacking.”

Grandma: “You do not need to be so worried about that, young master… If only the head of the family, and his predecessor had been more careful.”

Reinhard: “As expected, you’re so strict, granny. Do you want to say anything towards your previous comrades in arms?”

Grandma: “Oh, pardon my insolence. Ojii-san, you have to stop me whenever I get too excited.”

Ashamed of her rudeness, the elderly maid covered her own mouth with her hand. The elder man next to her put his hand to his forehead, showing a mischievousness not befitting his age.

Grandma: “So… The young master is thinking of returning to the main mansion…? I will be lonely. When are you intending to depart?”

Reinhard: “I believe three days will be enough to prepare, but I will not stay longer than that. I am very sorry, having to separate you from Felt-sama. And—”

Reinhard paused for a second, and looked towards a small room on the other side of the wall.

Grandma: “About his wife, do not worry, you may leave her in our care. About Heinkel-sama… Are you sure we can allow his passage?”

Reinhard: “Yes, I am. I cannot revoke his right. I’m always giving you such a hard time.”

Grandma: “Young master is striving to be the best he can. We are very proud of you.”

Those had been words of genuine trust, without the intention of comforting Reinhard. Feeling as if he had been saved by those words, Reinhard looked towards the pale circle of the moon, clinging to it as if wishing something existed beyond it.

Reinhard: “Carol, Grimm. Everything will become busier from now on. Thank you very much.”

Grandma: “Yes, I am at your service.”

Grandpa: “—Young master.”

After hearing the reply from the couple that had been called by name, the Sword Saint turned away from the wall and continued walking along the corridor, knowing the two elders who had been serving the Astrea for long were still bowing behind him.

—And, assuredly, that was the day that would symbolize the beginning of everything.

END

Anastasia's Kararagi Merchant Path

1

Kararagi City States was the name of the country that emerged from the union of several cities. Although it had enough power to face the other three great nations—Lugunica, Vollachia and Gusteko –, it is said that its foundation was full of difficulties and obstacles.

???: "And the one who brought all these cities together to establish Kararagi was the famous 'Hoshin of the Wilderness', that became the first president of this country"—said a man with a loud voice.

???: "This guy Hoshin is the boss in Kararagi, then?"—asked a little girl's voice.

???: "He was, but that was hundreds of years ago. Since then, it's always the president that rules around here."

???: "President… And this person changes?"

???: "It changes whenever the president dies, or every five years when a new one is elected by vote. The rulers of the cities come together and elect the next president. Although, nowadays, this has become just a formality."

???: "What do you mean? Seems like a good way of choosing a leader."

???: "Because if someone wants to become the president, all it needs to do is buy the rulers, be it with money, women or booze… Hoshin's philosophy died a long time ago."

???: "In the end everything comes down to money, right? It must be tough, uncle."

The sigh that the girl let out made even the man sigh as well. The problem was that his blow was so strong that it messed up her hairstyle.

???: “Hey, look what you did! I got all dressed up today and you are ruining it!”

???: “Look at you, worrying about your looks… I miss the old Lil’ Ana that lived all dirty in the alleys, this way you will make me cry.”

Anastasia: “That’s because I get tips from the old geezers at the bar when I look pretty. If you give me too, I can reward you with my angelic smile”

She made her turquoise eyes shine, giving a mischievous smile showing her tongue. That gesture, showing that she was perfectly aware what her greatest weapons were, provoked a laugh from the man.

???: “Gah, ha, ha! You picked the wrong client if you are trying to sell your smile. I already bathed you, a silly smile won’t be enough to take my money. Come back when you grow some boobs and ass.”

Anastasia: “Saying things like that and you are not even drunk… Ah, I have to get back to work. Tell me some more stories later.”

With a wave, Anastasia got back to work and Ricardo let out a sigh. He stretched a hand to grab his beer on the counter and noticed the empty mug.

???: “Here, another one”

A woman, the owner of the bar, placed a new one on the counter.

Owner: “Ana is a good worker. I have to say, I was worried when you brought her here, but she is helping a lot. We even have clients that come only to get a glimpse of that smile.

Ricardo: “So it’s true that there are Lil’ Ana fans? I don’t get what they see in a midget like her.”

Owner: “She has something that captivates people around her, and you should know that, you were one of her victims, am I right?”

Receiving winks from the owner, the man just took the cold mug to his mouth.

He was a demi-human dog with brown fur and a big muscular build, his living armor. A relatively famous mercenary that always visited the tavern when he had a chance.

Owner: “Looks like Ana is enjoying the work here, and she helps me a lot. I hope she stays for long.”

Ricardo: “I don’t think so, no.”

Ricardo murmured to himself, something he hardly ever did.

It is undeniable that Anastasia was gifted with the talent to be the poster girl for the bar. But…

Ricardo: “Lil’ Ana, living as a waitress for a nasty bar doesn’t sound bad… It really doesn’t…”—the man kept murmuring

Compared to the days when she lived with eyes of sheer hostility, the change was shocking. But Ricardo knew the real desires of the girl, and the endless, pure ambition.

Ricardo: “And above all else, as a waitress, you won’t be able to fulfill that promise you made to me.”

He unconsciously touched the collar around his neck and felt the cold hard iron on his fingertips. That collar was from the time when he was a slave, and he kept using it after achieving his freedom, as proof of his past.

At the same time, he had the strange certainty that the girl would be the one to rip that out.

Owner: “…Hey, sorry to interrupt your daydream but, did you just call my bar nasty?”

Ricardo: “Oh, you shouldn’t listen to other people’s thoughts!”

Owner: “You are the one that doesn’t know how to talk low with this huge snout!”

Seeing the owner hit Ricardo with the tray, the whole tavern burst out laughing. Amid the spectacle, even Anastasia was laughing, that brought a small satisfaction to the dog-man.

2

Took about a month for his next visit to the tavern. Despite how it looked, Ricardo lived quite busy days and couldn't give too much attention to a little girl he randomly found on the streets. After all, paying the bills was the only way to keep his freedom.

But he couldn't deny his eagerness to see the bold little girl after a month, and, for this reason, he didn't hide his disappointment when the owner told him the news.

Ricardo: "What? Lil' Ana was hired by a trading company?"

Owner: "Yea… It happened all of a sudden, I couldn't believe it myself."

Ricardo: "What do you mean 'all of a sudden'?! She wasn't taken by force, was she?!"

Owner: "Slow down! That's not what I meant. She talked to them and agreed, no one forced her to do anything. She even gave me some money as compensation… Hey, don't look at me like that, I didn't let her go for the money."

Ricardo: "I didn't say anything. Besides, I wouldn't leave her with someone I didn't trust."

Ricardo couldn't believe he got that shaken with Anastasia's absence. Nevertheless, he kept pressing the owner with more questions, aware that she was a bit embarrassed.

Ricardo: "Anyway, tell me how everything went down. Even if it was sudden, something happened, right?"

Owner: "I'm telling you, it really happened fast… All I can remember is the guy saying he was 'buying Ana's gift'…"

Ricardo: "Gift…? Don't you tell me it's about her charm with customers and they are forcing her onto things a little girl should never do! Are you sure it was someone from a trading company? Not a slave merchant, right?!"

Owner: "Stop coming at me panting like that! I even got his name and all, go check for yourself if you are so worried. It's the Chuden Trading Company, they are based in the far east of the city."

Hearing that, Ricardo emptied the mug in a single swig and stood up aiming straight for the door.

Owner: "Hey, do you think beers are free?"—the owner shouted.

Ricardo: "Put it on my tab, I'll pay next time!"

Owner: "You are always like that! By the way…"

The woman was a little afraid to talk about, but she did it anyway.

Owner: "I think the guy who came to talk to Ana said something about tabs as well…"

Ricardo: "What? Tabs? Doesn't make any sense… Whatever, I'll check them out!"

With his objective set, Ricardo went into the streets like a bullet, going straight towards the Chuden Trading Company, not knowing the reason he was in such a hurry.

3

Chuden Trading Company belonged to the famous Ryushika Trading Company conglomerate. Based in a strategic city that connected all commercial hubs throughout Kararagi, Ryushika had a fast expansion in the hotel industry, and Chuden followed right behind it.

As far as public knowledge went, Ricardo was not aware of any shadowy stories involving Ryushika, and, to his relief, the reencounter with Anastasia was way easier than he anticipated.

Anastasia: "Uncle, hi. I was worried when you vanished from the bar. Did the owner tell you about my new job?”

When Anastasia saw Ricardo arguing with a guy in the reception, she came to greet him like it was nothing out of the ordinary. Relieved seeing the girl doing fine, Ricardo threw the man he was holding by the collars, astonishing everyone in the lobby that witnessed the scene.

Anastasia: “Uncle, did you get hired to fight with someone here? If that is the case, stop it before I get fired.”

Ricardo: “I’m not liking this ‘know-it-all’ face of yours, kid.”

As Anastasia clapped her hands with a big smile trying to deescalate the situation, Ricardo soothed down. With the situation seemingly under control, the man hurled by Ricardo got up, looked at the girl and asked:

???: “Anastasia, this man is…?”

Anastasia: “Oh, Mr. Chuden, he is an uncle that I know. He was probably missing me because we didn’t see each other before I left the bar.”

Ricardo: “It’s nothing like that at all, you mi…! Wait, did you just call him Chuden?”

Chuden: “Yes, I’m Chuden, Company representative, pleased to meet you.”

Introducing himself with the same name as the Trading Company, the man was still young and a little overweight. His harmless facial expression was enough to tell Ricardo that he was not someone cut for violence.

Ricardo: “You are the one who stole Lil’ Ana from the tavern then? I have nothing to say about that, no… But I’m the one who introduced her to the Owner, you know? I’m just wondering what made you hire her.

Chuden: “Hmm, I understand, you are worried about Anastasia.”

Ricardo: “No! That’s not it! Lil’ Ana, you are getting this all wrong, don’t fool yourself.”

Anastasia: “I didn’t say anything…”

Startled by the comment from Chuden, Ricardo lost himself trying to justify his actions, which left Anastasia somewhat sad because, after all that happened, she was thinking that the dog-man was worried about her.

Seeing Ricardo’s reaction, Chuden invited them to a meeting room so they could talk more easily, and when everyone sat down, he said:

Chuden: “Basically, the reason I hired her was love at first sight.”

Ricardo: “Wait, what?! Isn’t that what Hoshin called a ‘lolicon’?!”

Chuden: “Hold on, it was just a way of saying. I fell in love with her gift. I’m sure Anastasia is a genius, and I’m not talking about Divine Protections. A real genius.”

It seemed a little odd how much he overestimated a child like Anastasia and, to Ricardo, everything sounded more like a fantasy, making him start to wonder whether leaving the little girl working there was a bad idea.

Chuden: “For example… Do you remember the amount of your last tab at the tavern?”

Ricardo: “I don’t, no. Not the exact amount.”

Chuden: “That’s what I thought. But I heard about something that happened at the end of last month when the regulars went to pay their tabs. Please, try and guess what Anastasia did.”

Ricardo didn’t answer, knowing that Chuden was going to say it regardless.

Chuden: “She calculated the amounts for all twenty customers, without checking anything. Nobody seemed to be impressed by that, but I didn’t let it go unnoticed.”

Ricardo: “Maybe she looked at the Owner notes earlier that day.”

Chuden: “Impossible, she didn’t know how to read at the time. And that’s not all, she even mastered writing in just two weeks here.”

As Chuden shook his head having a hard time believing all he himself was saying, Ricardo couldn’t shut his mouth close. Anastasia seemed to be the only one having a hard time keeping up with the grown-ups conversation.

Chuden: “Now you probably understand the reason I hired her. I’m sure that Anastasia will become a monster in the future… One working for the Chuden Trading Company.”

Ricardo: “You are going to use her for your own success, is that it?”

Chuden: “I believe that both of us will profit from this, me and Anastasia. She perfectly understood all of this and accepted coming work with me, so, you can’t meddle.”

Apparently, Ricardo would never get a good image of Chuden. At the same time, he agreed that Anastasia had a promising future, and that’s why he suggested:

Ricardo: “Changing the subject a bit, this Company is growing a lot lately, don’t you think you need a little more security?”

Chuden: “How so?”

Ricardo: “I’m sure you understand that several matters, in the end, come down to violence. And no matter how much money you have, it will not shield you forever. Don’t you think it’s better to be prepared?”

Chuden: “Are you offering to be our bodyguard? I wonder what you see in this girl.”

Having understood the real reason behind that offer, the merchant grinned, and the answer came in kind.

Ricardo: “What I see… My future. The day she takes this collar off me and I become truly free… I think I can see how far I can go.”

Chuden: “Very well, we can sort the details later.”

And just like that, the two men shook hands, surprising the little girl that didn’t understand any of that.

Anastasia: “Hey, what did you two agree on?”

Ricardo: “That I’ll start working here too. There are a lot of thugs out there nowadays, you know? My presence alone will scare the weak ones.”

Anastasia: “Did you really want to be close to me that much? Wow, I’m really a bad woman.”

Once she understood what it all meant, Anastasia burst out laughing, and seeing this, Ricardo caressed her head, forgetting for a moment how strong he was.

Ricardo: “Giving dreams to someone like me… I guess you are a bad woman after all.”

Saying that, the big man laughed looking at the girl, pouting with her messy hair.

END

わしゃわしゃ

The Saga of the Great Duchess Crusch Begins: Blue's Studies

1

That suggestion from Fourier was abrupt as always.

The place was the Karsten domain in the Kingdom of Lugunica, in the guest room of Duke Karsten's mansion.

"You want Ferris to acquire skills from…a healer in the royal capital?" said a girl with long green hair after putting down a cup of black tea and tilting her head.

She looked gallant and had amber-colored eyes. She still retained the young appearance of a teen yet had a well-defined face, so she would surely be beautiful in the future. Her name was Crusch Karsten.

"Yes! Meckart has been asking for my advice for a while. I too highly value Ferris's healing skills, thus I brought forth this offer!"

The one who responded to Crusch was also a beautiful-looking young boy. He had blonde hair that shone like the sun and gemstone-like crimson eyes. A white fang popped out of the corner of his mouth when he smiled casually, making his reckless personality visible from his appearance alone. Even though Fourier Lugunica was like this, he was the fourth prince of the Kingdom of Lugunica, so it was something of a surprise.

"Father consulted Your Highness? Ferris's healing skills are something that I am proud of, but, keeping that in mind, what did Father consult Your Highness about?"

"Hm? It was about whether you want Ferris's healing skills to improve further or not. I am contributing to your swordsmanship training, but Ferris has a lot of room for growth… That is what Meckart assumes, at least. So I thought that she should be taught by the court healer in the royal castle."

“I see. As expected of my father and Your Highness. You have keen perception,” Crusch casually praised.

“Oh, it’s nothing! But I shall permit you to praise me more! Do praise!” Fourier exclaimed, laughing cheerfully while slapping his knee.

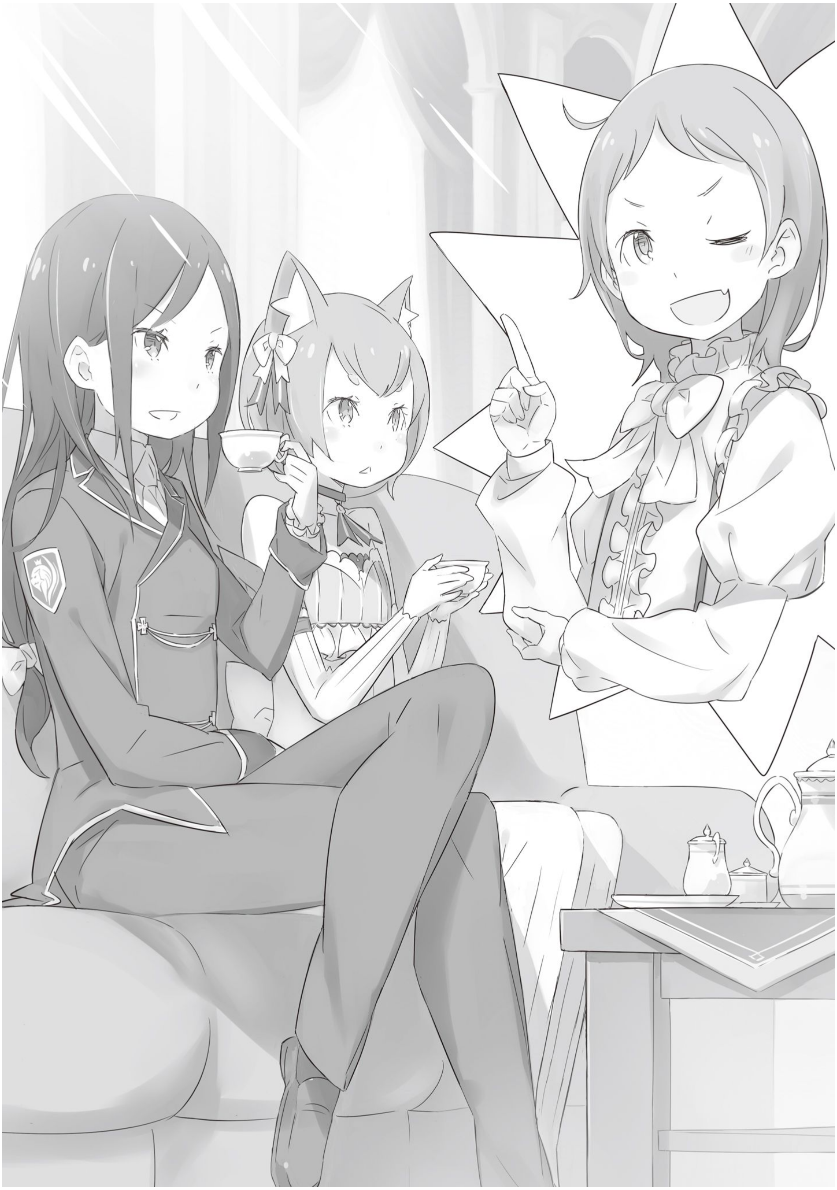
Crusch took a quick glance at the person remaining quiet next to her.

It was a girlish pretty boy who had neck-length chestnut-colored hair and round yellow eyes. His slender body was clad in female clothing, and as he had demi-human blood, he had distinctive animal ears and a tail. It was the person being talked about, Ferris.

Crusch looked at Ferris, who was looking down and sitting silently with his hands resting on his knees. “What do you think, Ferris? Do you intend on accepting His Highness’s proposal?”

“I am yours…Lady Crusch. As such, I don’t want to leave your side. But if you command me to go, then…” Ferris’s gaze wandered, and then he quietly looked at Crusch in an imploring manner.

Crusch went silent for a while at his weak attitude and then looked at Fourier. “You heard her, Your Highness. I personally think that I should leave it to the free will of the servant, but… Your Highness, can you command me?”



“Hm, what do you want me to command you to do?”

“Can you command me to order Ferris to go to the royal capital?”

She was playing with words. Ferris’s widened his eyes and Crusch smiled mischievously. And then…

“I do not quite get it, but alright. Crusch, I command you to order Ferris to head to the royal capital!”

“As you command, Your Highness. Ferris.” Crusch bowed reverently, then directed her amber-colored eyes at Ferris. He reflexively shrugged his shoulders, and then she gave him the order. “Do as His Highness says and learn from the healer in the royal capital.”

2

As far as Ferris could remember, this was the first time he had ever visited the royal capital.

“W-Woah…” Ferris stuttered, choking up with emotion, after getting off the dragon carriage that had picked him up and looking down at the city below the castle.

The sight was that overwhelming.

“It is magnificent, is it not? I also think that the view from here is superb.”

The person proudly crossing his arms next to him was Fourier, who he had ridden with on the way there. He was exceptionally carefree despite being royalty. It was unheard of for a royal to travel in the same carriage with someone else’s retainer while acting like good friends.

“Yes, it’s amazing. So this is the royal capital… The Kingdom of Lugunica’s largest city.”

“And it is also a place that has been under my family’s protection for centuries. It makes me proud, and I feel weighed down by all of the responsibility. Ha-Ha, even though I know that not much is expected from me!” Fourier exclaimed, saying something that was hard for anyone else to comment on.

“No, well, it isn’t…” Ferris replied, not sure how to respond.

As they stood blocking the entrance to the main gate of the royal castle, they heard a voice come from behind. “I am glad to see you have returned safely, Prince Fourier.”

Ferris turned around and looked up at the person who had said that and jumped in surprise. The man was tall, but his harsh, tense expression was a little too intense for a child’s heart.

Nonetheless, Fourier smiled cheerfully, showing off his teeth after confirming who it was. “Oh, Marcos! Well done welcoming us! Was it peaceful while I was absent?”

“I humbly inform you that we knights worked as one to maintain peace in the royal capital while Your Highness was away. Fortunately, there were no signs of unrest, and the people are living in peace.”

“Mhm, not bad! Oh yes, I will introduce Ferris to you too!”

